He was teasing her, she knew, yet his words cut through her so cruelly that she realized fully how tender the moment before had been. Unable to speak, she nodded. A smile parted her lips briefly, then it was gone. She was thankful for the waiter who came clearing off the soup bowls, bringing the steaks on the red-hot grills.

What is it? she asked herself, as the waiter bent in front of her, shutting Vic out. What is happening? In such a short space of time, between the moment she had first looked out the window at the fading afternoon and the arrival of the steaks, something was beginning to go wrong. A slow, almost imperceptible change was working through her, like the trees outside losing their shapes in the draining day. The Indian summer was false. It was only a herald of winter.

Vic talked as he cut into his steak. He talked about something that had happened years ago, as if he would put her at her ease again. The dining room reminded him of his fraternity house, the library especially with its paneled walls and open fireplace. He remembered a stag party when he almost fell into the fire. Lucy listened and began not to hear distinctly; only the sound of his voice came to her, not the words, and she tried to bring herself back to catch them, but they kept slipping away. She couldn't have put in a sensible remark if he had paused for one.

IT came to her so simply that she was not shocked. In the relaxed, easy sound of his voice she began to know what it was that was troubling her. She had thought it would be wonderful to be away with Vic, but it was not what she wanted at all. It was not enough for her. But, his voice said, it was enough for him. That which had baffled her about him grew clear. His very ease gave him away. This was a part of that experience that had been beyond her. This was not something new for him as it had been for her. It had happened to him before; and now, she thought frantically, it might happen to him again and without her. The room suddenly became too warm. She switched her eyes to the fire as if it were at fault.

"What's the matter?" Vic interrupted his story.

She veered back to him, not realizing that she had looked away. There was a slight impatience in his voice, as if he were annoyed to discover her thoughts had strayed. She shook her head. "Nothing." She cut into her steak again. "I just felt too warm."

He glanced at the fireplace. "It's too early for a fire. We're lucky not to be any closer to it. Do you want to take your jacket off?"

She began opening the top button of her blue suit jacket. Almost at once she was cold, chilled. "No," she said. "The soup must have made me hot. I'll be all right." And she began to ignore the matter, to busy herself with eating.

Vic took up his story again and she saw how far apart they were becoming. She was hot and cold, and he sat there with a steady, even temperature, telling his story she had to pretend to listen to.

They had finished their dessert and were sitting over their coffee when she told him. It was time to go out and check on the rooms, and she knew she could not put it off any longer.

She mustered what courage she could. "Vic ——"

"Yes?" He sat stirring his coffee. She watched his spoon circling the cup.

"Would you mind very much going up to Alice's for the week end?"

He was so unprepared for her question that he did not realize its content. He glanced at her sharply. "To Alice's?"

It was going to be difficult. But there had been no way to prepare him. She had drifted away until he had no idea where her thoughts were.

"I wish ——" she stumbled. "I thought you could go on up to Alice's and your week end wouldn't be spoiled altogether."

"And what in heaven's name are you going to do?"

She said it as quickly as she could. "I'm going home, Vic."

She knew what it sounded like: sixteen, frightened, silly, schoolgirlish; as if she were a foolhardy young thing on her first date running out on a situation she couldn't handle. But she was none of the things she sounded like. For the first time she saw everything in her past and in her future as clearly as if it were revealed to her in a crystal ball.

"Going home!" he exploded.

She nodded.

"Have you lost your mind, Lucy?"

A man is getting old when he walks around a puddle instead of through it.

—R. C. FERGUSON.

Wishing - - -

FOR A COMPLETE TABLE SERVICE OF CANDLEWICK?

The family coming home . . .
guests for thanksgiving dinner!
Be proud of your table setting . . .
use Imperial Candlewick hand-crafted table crystal because it belongs with traditional fine things treasured by every American family.
Candlewick's beaded edge pattern was inspired by the handicraft candlewick tufting of our colonial ancestors.

Fine stores all over the nation offer Imperial patent-protected Candlewick table-crystal in open stock. Collect it for a complete table service.

IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION
BELLAIRE, OHIO

Something borrowed, something blue . . . or palest yellow, pond green . . . or just a rose. These are Nature's gentler mood, borrowed for you by Berkshire to join our traditionally fine, cloud-white curtains. Use these subtle tones as draperies to bring the outdoors . . . indoors.

SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET, "Fashions in Windows." For the cleverest of the new ideas in curtains, and the sweetest of the old. Just send us your name and address on a penny postcard. Dept. LHJ-11, Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, Inc. 40 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

BERKSHIRE ALSO MAKES FINE COMBED COTTON FABRICS FOR MEN'S, WOMEN'S AND CHILDREN'S WEAR

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

"No." She turned to the window. It was night. "I know what you must be thinking," she said slowly. "That I'm acting like a schoolgirl." She faced him, her wide-apart gray eyes serious beneath the honey-colored hair. "But I've just now grown up, Vic."

He had no idea what she was talking about and he began floundering around hunting for a clue. "Lucy, have I said something, have I done anything ——"

She shook her head. "It's just me."

His mouth became firm. He wet his lips. "Do you mean that all this time I was sitting here talking to you, you weren't listening, that all the while something was working in your head?"

She nodded.

He pushed his coffee cup roughly away from him. "It's about as clear as mud."

"I don't know how to explain," she said helplessly.

He faced her accusingly. "You mean you want to run out on me—go home?"

She saw the anger come into his face, the surprise swallowed by the anger, and she became frightened at what she was doing because she knew she was going to lose him. But she knew, also, that she would lose him if she stayed. It would only take longer. That knowledge had frightened her more.

"I should never have come," she confessed.

He slapped his napkin on the table. "I thought you wanted to come," he said. "I'd no idea what was going on in your head. If you keep your thoughts shut up like that, how can I?"

"I'm sorry," she said, because that was all she knew to say. "I don't expect you to forgive me either." She looked at him a long moment as if she didn't expect to see him again. "Do you mind if we go now?" Outside on the pavement she stopped. "Why don't you go on up to Alice's? I can take a bus," she told him.

"Get in the car," he said curtly. "I'm driving you home."

They drove homeward without a word between them. In the silence she felt his anger against her growing into a steady dull resentment. She did not trust herself to intrude upon it.

She had an intense moment of regret when they stopped for a train and she looked at Vic for the first time since they left the inn. His face was turned away from her, but in the light of the approaching engine she saw the sharp line of his nose and the grim corner of his mouth, his chin rigidly set. She wanted to reach out to him and be taken back and be overlooked for having remained true to a point within herself that she could not deny, but she was held in a tight grip of futility.

JUST before they reached their town, he said, "I've certainly been a fool."

"What were you to think?" she said. "I agreed to go." He did not reply.

They drew up in front of her house. "Well, here you are," he announced, but she saw the anger had gone out of his voice.

She turned to him in a last attempt to clear the air. "I wish I could tell you ——"

He tapped his fingers on the steering wheel. "I thought you were in love with me."

"I was. I am. That's the trouble."

"You don't act like it."

"It's you who aren't in love with me, Vic." Now she could tell him. "The way I feel about you and the way you feel about me aren't the same thing."

He turned to look at her then. And he saw at last what it was that was wrong. He had not intended to lead her astray, he had no plans in his head to coax her into anything she didn't want, he was going to let the week end take care of itself. They had had a r good time together the past eight mo He knew she was serious, but women to be serious. There was no fun in game for them if they were not serious saw now that she was too young, tha should never have asked her to go away him. As he became angry with himsel having done such a foolish thing, he l out at her:

"I didn't lead you to expect anyt Lucy."

"No," she said sadly, honestly. "I bu all up myself."

SHE got out of the car and began wal quickly up to the house. He came up walk behind her, carrying her bag. He s down on the step, hung there as if he wa to say something more, then, as if he tho better of it, said good night and wa away. Lucy stood on the steps in the d hearing him drive off, not wanting t into the lighted house, but knowing she to go in. In the frost-tinged fall night began to cry.

A tedious mill ground out the days followed. The hours trod upon one ano with a slowness that drained Lucy dry. A Monday morni Saturday and Sun were impossible; took up her old again—the routin it, at least—w home, sleep, with interest, as if it w something she hac do and get over. felt that the wo had been broken i pieces and she co not pick the pie up. She could ne put them togeth The days contin to repeat themselv

She was certa that she would ne see Vic again, and she missed him w increasing intensi she tormented hers with the idea that she had been wrong. Wou she really have lost him if she had staye The possibility that she might not have d rupted her more than anything else. Oth women succeeded on the left. Why had s been such a little fool to listen to her head?

After several weeks passed she accept an invitation from a boy in the office. S went with him merely to pass the time. The took in a movie and afterward they stopp for something to eat, but it was no goo Lucy kept watching for Vic in the crowd restaurant, and once in a wild moment confusion she thought she saw him across th room. She kept her eyes on the tall dark ma in the gray suit until she was certain it wa not Vic, then she found she did not want th rest of her sandwich. She refused a secon invitation. It was easier to stay at hom Her family had taken her explanation tha Friday night she had come in so unexpec edly, that she and Vic had quarreled, an they had asked no further questions. Sh was safe and shut away at home.

At the end of three months Lucy reache a place where she knew she had to do some thing. She was throwing away her youth an it was senseless, and if she wanted to save i she must save it now. She decided to put Vi out of her life. He was already gone physi cally, but she had yet to put away the men tal ghost of him that haunted her. With car and patience she gathered up the threads that had connected him to her, the remnants of the single cord that had strung their lives together. She pulled them out of the corners and rolled them into a ball she could toss away.

How do you throw away the memory of a beloved face, a pair of eyes, a special look, the firmness of lips that yield to tenderness? Lucy thrust them away at the end of a final struggle one night as she lay in bed unable to

(Continued on Page 110)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Constant

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

You call my love inconstant,
A honey-bibbing bee
Reeling from bud to blossom
With careless perfidy.

Alas, you misinterpret
The heart's insatiate range.
My love is always constant.
Only its objects change.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

IT'S A SUNSHINE KITCHEN! And something new under the sun is the stove placed to make a step-saving work area—and to set off the breakfast alcove. The whole room takes its cue from that sunny Marbletone linoleum floor, pattern No. 0108. Terrace-type iron table and chairs, cheery yellow curtains, cool green Marbletone counter tops and "splash backing" make this kitchen fresh and gay as a June morning. There's a bright idea in that counter, too. No water can get back of it because it is sealed with Black Koroseal Cove Molding.

How NEW IDEAS make a kitchen modern

The better design and truer color of Sloane Quality Linoleum Products inspired these up-to-date kitchens

FIESTA GAY! From old Mexico come those hand-hammered tin trays, those colorful gourds, those hand-painted designs on chairs and pottery. From Mexican tile came the inspiration for that floor with its warm, friendly glow. It's a new Sloane-Blabon Resilient Enamel design, No. 5280, edged with Wedgwood Koroseal Cove Base.

*®B. F. Goodrich Co.

ook what happens when you do as decorators do—hen you start with the floor in choosing a color scheme. Vonderful new ideas—wonderful new rooms—seem to pring right up, when you have a new floor of Sloane Quality Linoleum Products to inspire you.

See your Sloane-Blabon dealer's wide selection of hrilling new designs in Inlaid and Marbletone linoleums .. Koroseal,* a Sloane-Blabon exclusive, the new hiracle plastic in Tile, Cove Base and Cove Molding vith jewel-bright colors that never grow old, never need vaxing . . . Asphalt Tile, that wears and wears and costs o little . . . Resilient Enamel Rugs, Floor Coverings and Wall Coverings. See your Sloane-Blabon dealer.

There's a new, easy way to buy linoleum products. It's the Sloane-Blabon "Treasure Island." Now you can picture how each pattern will look on your floor—before you buy!

Keep your floors bright and new with Sloane Quality Linoleum Wax

LET'S GO PROVINCIAL! Old-World charm is reflected in natural wood, in the gleam of burnished copper. Note how beautifully the Inlaid Linoleum, pattern No. 1645, ties together the colors in the room. Yellow Marbletone tops counters, protects walls. Cove Base is Wedgwood Koroseal.

SLOANE
LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

SLOANE-BLABON CORPORATION
295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

It's Automatic Washer's beautiful new PRESS-TOE with disappearing wringer!

Rub your eyes and look again! This is a wringer washer. The wonderful new PRESS-TOE. The only washer with a disappearing, now-you-see-it-now-you-don't wringer that hides away inside when not in use!

See what that means? When the washing's done, your PRESS-TOE doesn't look like a washer any more. Just a gorgeous, gleaming cabinet—counter high—with a smooth flat top that does double duty as an extra work surface. Lets you have your laundry in the kitchen if you like!

And does it wash! With Automatic's exclusive DUO-DISC agitator and new FULL-VIEW wringer it gets clothes clean with so little effort on your part!

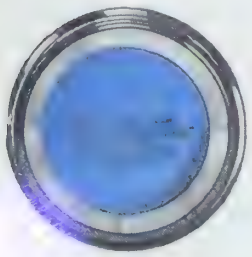
But here's the best part of all! Automatic's new PRESS-TOE will fit both your budget and your plans. So hustle down to your Automatic Washer dealer. He'll be glad to show you the PRESS-TOE—the finest and smartest-looking washer ever built. AUTOMATIC WASHER COMPANY, Newton, Iowa.



PRESS TOE—up comes the wringer! Just PRESS your TOE to the pedal in back—wringer and tub mechanism are automatically raised, ready for work.

DUO-DISC AGITATOR. For 2-way washing! Submerged, for quick, clean, gentle laundering of ordinary loads. Inverted for finest, safest washing of blankets, draperies, slipcovers and other bulky articles.

FULL-VIEW WRINGER. Another AUTOMATIC "first." Open view for greater safety. Fingertip start-stop-reverse control. Finger-touch double bar safety release (both rolls stop automatically).

Press-Toe

BY AUTOMATIC WASHER CO.

(Continued from Page 108)

sleep. Quietly she tossed the ball into the dark. It made no sound; she had no idea where it fell, she hoped it went out the window. Then she said aloud, and she heard her voice clearly in the dark room: "I'm going to forget you, Vic Kent. I am not going to let even a thought of you remain in my head, driving me crazy." She received a certain strength from the very saying of the words and she fell asleep shortly afterward, the first real rest she had known in three months.

The next morning she awoke with the knowledge that she was free to meet someone else. It simplified the whole day and she rejoiced in the new possession of herself. She plunged into her work as if to make up for the days she had given it only passive attention. She lunched with the girls again after so many lonely lunches at a drugstore counter, and she came home to spend the evening in the midst of the family instead of in her room. It was only when she turned out the light before getting into bed that first night, that she knew a moment of panic. Vic's face rose before her in the sudden dark. She shut her eyes as if with darkness against darkness she could close him out. The fortitude of the day came to sustain her and the face vanished. She got into bed and fell asleep immediately.

The second day went even better than the first and, cheered by it, Lucy bought an album of records after work. It was the first time she had bought anything for herself in months. She had just put the records on the phonograph and had sat down with the family to listen to them when the doorbell rang. No one got up. Her mother continued to knit, her father and sisters looked up from their reading as if waiting for someone else to answer the ring.

"Who could it be on a night like this?" her mother said, knitting needles clicking. "It's begun to snow."

Whenever a rat teases a cat, he is leaning against a hole.

Lucy got up at the second ring and went out into the hall to answer it. She opened the door cautiously as if she might encounter an intruder. Vic stood on the step bundled into an overcoat, his hat pulled down on his forehead, the snow falling behind him.

"Hello, Lucy," Vic said.

She stood staring at him, unable to speak.

"I should have called," he said. "But I wanted to be sure of seeing you."

She remained holding onto the doorknob. Then she opened the door wider and stood back to let him pass. He stepped inside and she closed the door behind him. Vic glanced about the hall, his back to her, then he turned around, his hands still hunched in his pockets.

"Look, Lucy, can I talk to you somewhere?"

The urgency of his voice compelled her against any stand she would take. Her eyes moved up to his face, stopped at the look in his eyes. "Wait a minute," she said quickly. "I'll get my coat."

SHE skirted around him and up the stairs. When she came back down she was wrapped in her black coat with the fur-edged hood. Her face was white and composed inside the fur-edged hood, as if the simple act of going upstairs and finding her coat had given her time to catch hold of herself. She put her head into the living room, said briefly that she was going out with Vic, and withdrew before she heard the surprise her announcement had created. She came toward Vic. He stood quietly waiting for her and she saw the change in his face since she had seen him last. There was something different about him, not too discernible, but yet it was there, as if his assurance had been disturbed. Before she had time to decide what it was, he opened the door and she followed him out and they began walking down the quiet winter street in the stillness of a world slowly being decked with snow.

They walked without speaking, as if held in the spell of the black-and-white night. The snow fell in great soft flakes, drifting down as gently as feathers, lightly brushing their faces, sticking to their coats. A tr fringe of snow began to gather on th fur edge of Lucy's hood.

"It took a long time for me to unders nd Lucy," Vic said finally. He spoke tho ght-fully, as if what he was saying meant a reat deal to him. "And a while to get over ing angry, at both you and myself."

She said nothing, walking along b side him as if she had said everything ther was for her to say and now it was his turn.

"I felt pretty flat after you walked o on me." He took time to light a cigarette. She watched the match go down into the sn , a tiny flare quickly smothered out. "B I suppose I had only myself to blame."

SO THAT was what she had seen in his fa there in the hall. Then all this time he ha not put her completely away from him, f gotten her; he had been remembering. A little smile touched her lips and was gi

"I don't think I figured on getting mar d at all—and you did," he went on. She fo t was difficult for him to admit this, tha was matching her honesty of that last ni now. "I wasn't ripe for marriage, I supp I didn't think much about it; it was so where in the future when I expected to m the right girl, the one I couldn't live wi out." He looked straight ahead through falling snow. "I don't know why I never s pected that it was you until after you w gone."

They crossed a street and went halfw down another block past a row of wh houses throwing their cozy lights out up the snow. She heard him breathe deeply, si but it was still his turn, she still had nothi to say. As they walk along she became co scious of a beginning wait again, of an expe ancy she had given up ho of ever knowing again; warm, slow waiting beg to take hold of her a she felt completely u hurried about its fulfillment, as if the tangle days behind would unravel themselves.

"I've been a complete and utter fool," h said, and rushed on without allowing her t comment: "I don't know why I had th colossal nerve to ask you to go away wit me when I should have asked you t marry me."

She had put him so completely away fron her, and now he was rushing back into he life as if he had never been absent. She mus have put only the image of him away fro her, the mold of his face and body, not the feeling at all. She was so overwhelmingly aware of her feeling for him in this moment that she had to stop walking and stand there and let it take complete possession of her He had been walking slowly, so that he stopped almost in the same instant she did. He stood over her and in the light reflected from the snow she saw his face broken into the pieces of his words, and everything he had just said was doubly written on his face.

"Do you have any idea how very much I love you, Lucy?" he said.

She stood very still, listening, the waiting almost through.

"I should have come weeks ago and told you," he said. His eyes were intent upon her and she thought she saw the blue color of them. "But I was stubborn, and then I thought—well, I thought maybe I'd get over it, the feeling I had about you." He threw away his cigarette. "I don't think I ever will," he told her.

The end of the waiting spilled out of her. "Vic," she cried, and it was an explosive little sound that came out with her frosty breath and hung a bit of frozen air between them before it vanished. Then she took her hands out of her pockets and he reached for them; and in the knowledge that he had been forgiven and accepted as he had forgiven and accepted, he shook her with his hands holding hers. The fringe of snow on the fur edge of Lucy's hood trembled and fell against her face. The cool snow melted on her warm skin, but it could not quench the warmth within her.

THE END

For every floor plan, there's a beautiful Youngstown Kitchen of white-enameled steel. And the price? Wonderfully low!

Luxury kitchens for dollar-wise people gnificent 66" twin-bowl Kitchenaider has one-ce top in finest acid-resisting porcelain-enamel. ant compartments, cutlery drawer, swinging faucet, se spray. Save yourself time and effort with a new ullinaider automatic waste-disposer unit. Fits all chenaiders. Ask for a free home demonstration.

ONE LOOK and you lose your heart!

And who wouldn't? Slick, smart, out-of-this-world Youngstown Kitchens are sensations that only the leader could produce. And they were made for you.

Just look at the dream features in the gorgeous, all-steel honey shown above. All the work surface you could want on two walls, with big handy cabinets to keep pots and pans above and below. In the middle, a stunning, work-saving 48" twin-bowl Youngstown Kitchenaider cabinet sink with an 11" extra-deep second bowl and fluted, sliding top.

Every Youngstown unit is gleaming, white-enameled steel—built to last a lifetime. Best yet, the kitchen above is only a hint of how you can arrange a Youngstown Kitchen to any floor area, old home or new.

Learn how you can own such a kitchen on a low-cost-per-month budget plan, including financing through your Youngstown dealer or local bank. Specify Youngstown Kitchens to your builder, too.

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

llinaider automatic waste-disposer nds away food scraps in a jiffy! Just rn on cold water, flip Mullinaider itch, then scrape waste into drain ening. Sold as extra equipment

For easier dishwashing and vegetable cleaning, swinging mixing-faucet, speedy rinse spray that reaches all parts of sink top; deep, no-splash bowls. See your Youngstown dealer.

SEND COUPON TODAY!

GET THIS EXCITING BOOKLET!
20 pages featuring beautiful Youngstown Kitchens in color. Full details on Youngstown units and tips on arranging a new kitchen. Enclose 10c in cash. No stamps, please.

Please send me your Youngstown Kitchen booklet. I enclose 10c in cash.

I plan to remodel ☐
I plan to build ☐
I want Free Home Demonstration of Mullinaider ☐

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-1148, Warren, Ohio

NAME (PLEASE PRINT)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE ★

Lady, learn the easy way—how to transform everyday dishes into extra-special treats. It's the delightful, appetizing ALL-tomato flavor of CONTADINA that makes the difference! Because concentrated CONTADINA is nothing but tomato: California's finest . . with skin, core, seeds removed and nothing added. More flavorful, more economical than tomatoes in any other form . . a little goes a long way!

Write for FREE RECIPE BOOKLET P.O. BOX 207-E SAN JOSE, CAL.

Contadina
TOMATO PASTE

HOW MUCH SENTIMENT AT YOUR HOUSE?

By Marjorie Holmes

"OH, but he's just a baby," a friend blithely dismissed our little guy's birthday, in urging me to attend a party the other day. "He won't know the difference if you're not there."

"No, but I will," I said. "And so will the other children—and so will he a few years from now. He's got to have a candle and a cake, and pictures to prove it, even if he is only a year. In fact, we'll probably sing Happy Birthday to him."

"Sing!" she hooted. "Darling, such sentiment!"

"Sure," I admitted cheerfully, hanging up, "such sentiment."

For I am—I do not blush to admit—a sentimental parent. I save stub-toed first shoes, and battered toys, and dog-eared books. My husband and I take snapshots by the carload. We bore our friends with home movies of our ducklings.

We love our little family traditions and foolishness. Pet names. "I-gotta-beat-it" kisses (snatched, whatever the hurry of the departing one). Sunday-night supper served in the living room before a leaping fire. The visit of the Good Tooth Fairy that magics a just-pulled tooth into silver. Notes from the Easter rabbit. All the exciting rites of Christmas. Our five-year-old's Friday-night pilgrimage with his dad to the grocery store. Things silly to outsiders, but important to our particular pattern of cozy, closely knit—yes, if you'd call it that—sentimental living.

Because we believe in sentiment for growing children. We consider it as important to them as spinach or Sunday school. It seems to us that in the years when children are most dependent, and most impressionable, they should be given love—and memories of love's activities to carry on through life. That a child raised in such a home won't wander too far afield from its principles. And that his capacity for enjoyment will be enriched both now and for all his days.

A SUNSET, a garden, a concert, good books, movies, poetry, art—all are more wonderful to the person who has enough sentiment in his make-up to be moved by them. He needn't be maudlin about it. He needn't pant and weep. But if his breath comes a little faster, and his pulses tap dance, and he feels an emotional response that does perhaps bring a tear—why not? Certainly he's getting far more out of life than the phlegmatic, the cynic or the coldly detached. That's why we don't stifle our own laughter, or our children's when something strikes us funny. Why we're not even ashamed to cry at a movie that—as our teen-age daughter giggles—is "good and sad."

That sentiment can also make a child easier prey to hurt, we freely admit. Only the other day our little girl's eyes filmed as she described some pictures she had seen of Europe's starving children.

"Well, you needn't bawl about it," a neighbor youngster jeered, "c'mon, let's eat."

"Thanks, I'd rather not for a while," Mickie replied. And when she did get around to her lunch, she refused the usual bread.

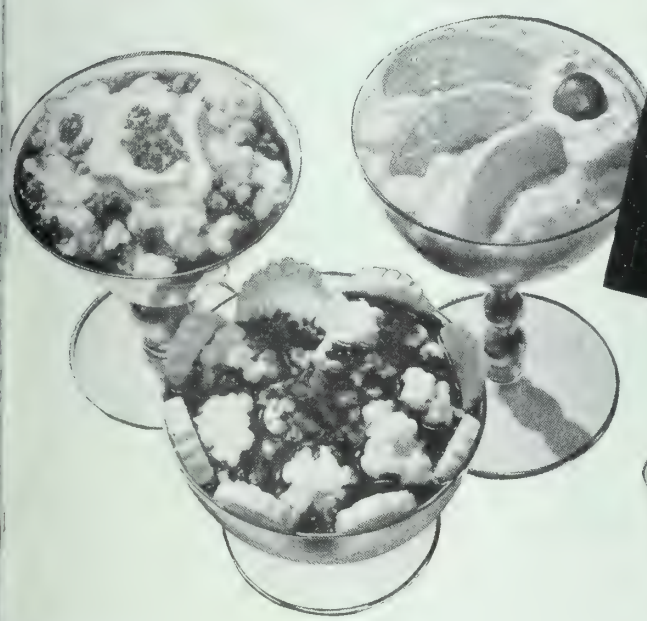
Impractical? Silly? I'm not so sure. For sentiment had bred sympathy. And sympathy, an urge to personal sacrifice. Personally, I'd rather raise a child with enough sensitivity to suffer, than a hard-boiled little meanie, however blasé.

I am thinking of the son of a friend of mine. This friend's philosophy and aim have always been to condition him to the inevitable blows of life by stripping is g to its facts from cradle days. No fai es e hid under his pillow. There was n San Claus and no man in the moon. His uild wounds were laughed off or ef ient treated, but never kissed. He was aug not to cry. And a more obnoxiou lit beast never cursed a neighborhood. e t mented dogs and cats. He bullied ung children.

But no coating of realism is ever su ici armor against love. When love stru hi realism only made him cumberso a doomed him from the start. He was b to the girl he really adored, because h never learned to be kind. He refused her the flowers and gifts he could well fo partly because such things seemed ent mental and silly, partly because "she ig go for what I could give her, instead o ne He was sardonic and ungentle. A th girl, who was very sensitive, quite na ral could not put up with him for lon St married someone else, and however f el he tried to hide it, it nearly broke his art

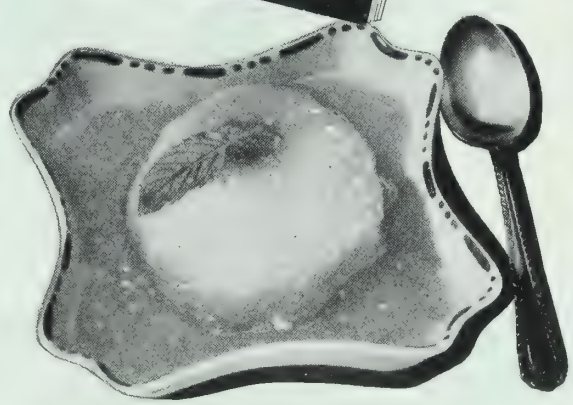
Now a little realism is fine in a hom W are sold on telling our children the s pl truth, as we see it, about sex and p tic and God. We believe in first aid for ild hood's accidents—and in laughing f good share. We do not hold to parent be coming so enrapt with their offsp g teething or arithmetic marks or da in prowess as to be able to talk and thi of nothing else. We go on parties and ke trips and often utterly forget our yo g

But it has long been our observation a a good many people who smile upon s ti ment as slightly absurd are motivated r marily by their own convenience. We e simply can't be bothered canning c d hood's treasures in scrapbooks; after ll they have to can pickles and preserves, c they? And then of course with all the w ing—and fancywork—and bridge Children who don't believe in the Ea bunny save a lot of trouble when it co s to coloring eggs. If Christmas Eve ha got itself all tied up with family traditio carols, secrets, a sandwich set out for Sa Claus, a family trip to church—you're e as a breeze to go eggnogging. And Christmas morning means nothing m ceremonial and festive to your clan t seeing what they got—to sleep off y headache the next day!



If you don't tuck little shoes away and tie up letters and little cards—well course your attic doesn't get cluttered, a you'll never be bothered shipping off bo of such mementos to grown children w may not appreciate them anyway. P sonally, I do appreciate them, and a thankful to have a mother-in-law who d Our babies have all been photographed their daddy's first bonnet, and clump about in his quaint little rubber boots. R cently his mother sent us a big box of h Sunday-school cards and homemade va entines. And none of us has ever spent gayer, more sentimental afternoon than th one when we squatted on the floor su rounded by those souvenirs. It gave th children glimpses of their father as h learned to print and spell and do all th things they do. It gave me a vision of th kind of little boy he was that I wouldn miss for a million dollars.

I know this isn't modern. It's as old fashioned and nuisancy as corsets or butto shoes. But it's also fun. It draws us close together. To us, sentiment is worth while



THE END

FREE! Wonderful New Recipe Book

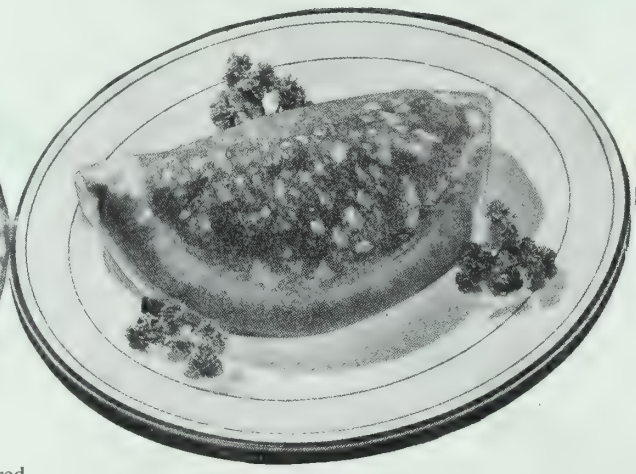
"Miracles with Minute Tapioca"

BRIDES OF TODAY . . . yesterday . . . and tomorrow! And you bachelor ladies, too! Here's the recipe book that will make your reputation as a super-special cook.

24 pages of tempting new ideas for Desserts—Pies—Meat and Fish Dishes—Egg Specialties—Soups—Casseroles—and so many other luscious dishes. Here's a whole new world of good things to eat!

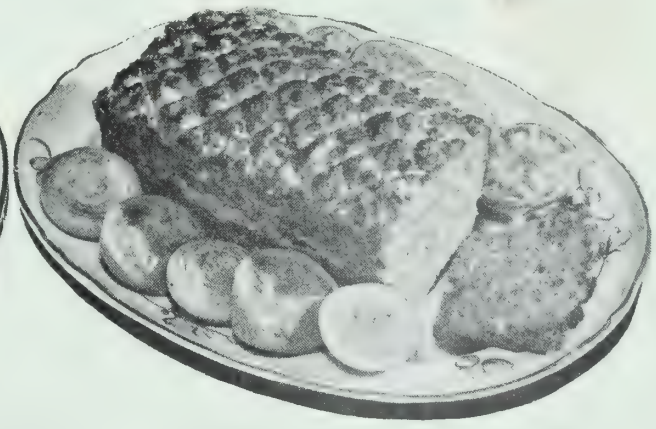
Send for your copy of this beautifully illustrated book today . . . "Miracles with Minute Tapioca." Discover all the delicious things Minute Tapioca can do for you!

Glamour Desserts that bring out the "genius" in you!



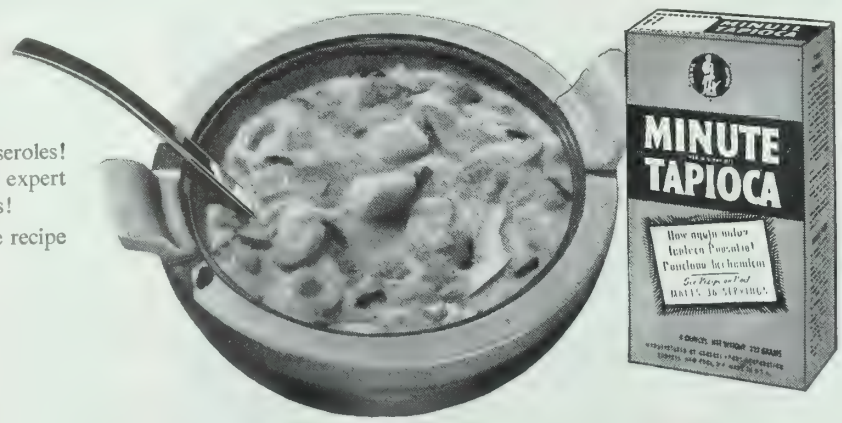
Scrumptious Tapioca Creams like Grandma used to make.

Luscious Fruited Tapiocas! Those shimmering jewel-like puddings that are so easy to fix, and such good news to your budget.



Juicy Fruit Pies that don't run! Have you ever wondered what miracle it takes to keep juice in the pie where it belongs? The miracle is Minute Tapioca.

For the best behaved fruit pies you ever smacked your lips over—send for this new, free book!



Omelets and Soufflés that won't sit down before company! You'll be famous for your high-wide-and-handsome omelets and soufflés—if you follow the Minute Tapioca recipes in this new, free book!

Juicy Meat Loaves that slice like a dream—but never crumble!

You can't imagine how many cooking miracles are possible with Minute Tapioca—till you try the wonderful recipes in this new, free book.

Rich Soups and Stews! Wonderful casseroles! Scores of Minute Tapioca tricks that expert chefs keep under their big white hats!

They're all yours in this new, free recipe book. Send the coupon now!

QUICK! MAIL TODAY FOR YOUR FREE BOOK!

LN

MINUTE TAPIOCA
Department S
Battle Creek, Michigan.
Please send me a FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca."

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Offer expires June 1, 1949. Good only in U.S.A.

A Product of General Foods

Conversation Piece

FROM here on through the Christmas holidays we're in the season of accelerated entertaining: family get-togethers, young people home from school and often with friends, house guests—yours and other people's—to be feted. In addition to the necessary parties there are irresistible excuses for plenty more. Banquet-size meals are apt to be a dime a dozen, and we all develop a tendency to groan at a groaning board. Not that I have anything against a big turkey dinner, the old-fashioned kind—I'd hate to give that up for the sake of my figure, digestion or any other consideration. But I always have a few extra-simple menus up my sleeve for this time of year; meals that are epicurean in quality, restricted in (Continued on Page 116) ambrosia department: spice your after-dinner coffee with cinnamon, cloves and a bit of orange peel.

As an appetite-whetter, try sea food, crisp raw vegetables and a highly seasoned sauce.

angy as autumn itself is this veal scallopini—eeping company with an imaginative green salad.

PHOTOS BY STUART

To top off the evening—plums with candied ginger, plus your favorite cheeses.

By Ruth Mills Teague

TOWLE'S FRENCH PROVINCIAL TOWLE'S MADEIRA
The gift that, like a woman beloved, never grows old but only grows lovelier
TOWLE
STERLING
TOWLE'S OLD MASTER
TOWLE'S SILVER PLUMES
TOWLE'S KING RICHARD
TOWLE'S CANDLELIGHT
A gift of Towle Sterling (solid silver), whether a single piece or a place setting, is not expensive.
For other Towle patterns and valuable hints on wedding plans, send for How to plan your Wedding and your Silver. Send 15c (in coins, not stamps) to TOWLE SILVERSMITHS, Dept. J-11, Newburyport, Massachusetts.
© 1948 Towle Mfg. Co.

Crisp! Tasty! Twin Treat

Crisp as sugar candy, this flavorful new Kellogg cereal makes a delicious, fortifying breakfast. Nourishing, ready-to-eat, it supplies vitamins, minerals, food energy, and body-building protein. The protein value of one ounce (⅔ cup) of Corn-Soya with four ounces of milk equals that of one egg with three slices of bacon. Get some at your grocer's and enjoy it soon.

Corn ...FOR FLAVOR AND ENERGY

Soya ...FOR BODY-BUILDING PROTEIN

(Continued from Page 114)

variety of dishes, a relief from overfeeding, and easy as pie to do.

Here's a special pet of mine—it has perfect balance, each of the dishes complementing what goes before and comes after, so that when you have finished you feel that your meal has had admirable form and not too much substance.

We'll start proceedings with crisp raw vegetables, some sea food and a sharply seasoned sauce for dipping. A more popular and refreshing appetizer I don't know, and it looks so pretty. A hollowed-out head of cabbage with a custard cup of sauce sunk in the top will occupy the center of the platter, with the many-colored vegetables and the sea food heaped around it.

The main hot dish will be scallopini of veal en casserole. This is a rich concoction, which is as it should be, because it shares that distinction with no other dish on our menu and it's not heavy. It's a blend of veal, chestnuts and a lot of other ingredients, including a surprising touch of dried apricot.

To accompany the veal we'll have noodles cooked with saffron and topped with fried croutons rolled in paprika. I like to make my own noodles, and always do—they're very little trouble and they taste so good—but if you don't want to bother you can buy them ready-made. A good salad of greens, tomatoes and thin slices of pickled Jerusalem artichokes will complete the main course except for bread.

I'm going to give you my recipe for icebox poppy-seed rolls, but here again, if you don't want to make the rolls yourself you can buy very good ones at the bakery. I don't say it's no trouble at all to make rolls—you wouldn't believe me if I did—but I do think that some kind of homemade bread is one of the most pleasant and impressive additions to a meal that you possibly can have. The rewards far exceed the effort involved.

The dessert will be a mélange of greengage plums, purple plums and slivers of candied ginger, and if you haven't tried this combination before, you're in for a delightful surprise. Why anything so ultrasimple should taste so ultraspecial I can't explain, but it's so. To complement the fruit and make your dessert perfect, we'll have a cheese tray. There is such a variety of delectable cheeses available now that I'd suggest having several kinds, with stacks of crisp toasted crackers to eat with them. Here's a dessert straight out of the store—all you need do is assemble it—and yet it will rank as a real production.

These recipes will serve eight people generously.

APPETIZER

For the vegetables around the cabbage head use strips of green pepper and cucumber, flowerets of cauliflower and broccoli, carrot strips, radish roses, scallions, French endive—any or all of these. Clean and cut the vegetables the day before, cover with ice cubes and store in the refrigerator so that they will be cold and crisp. Sometimes I use a rolling cooky cutter on the carrot strips to give them notched edges—a fancy touch that isn't necessary but quite pretty.

Select a perfect head of cabbage and a custard cup that will fit down neatly into it. Invert the cup on the center top of the cabbage head, mark around it with a sharp knife and then, using the marked ring and the shape of the custard cup as a guide, gouge out enough cabbage to make a well into which the cup can be sunk. The effect will be much as if the sauce had been poured right into the cabbage head, but the container is important to keep the sauce from seeping down into the leaves.

For sea food use shrimp or squares of limed fish. The limed fish are quite inexpensive and very popular at our house. Get a package of frozen fillets of haddock or halibut, cut into neat pieces about an inch square, cover with lime or lemon juice and let stand in refrigerator or equally cold place for an hour or two. The fish will become firm and white as if it had been cooked with heat. Rinse well in cold water, drain and store in refrigerator. These can be prepared the day before. Fresh, frozen or canned shrimp may be used. If shrimp are raw, drop them into rapidly boiling acidulated water and cook eight minutes. Cool and remove shells and veins.

Best new food idea in years

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan.

Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS!

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "Meal Makers" Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

U ALL NO Richardson's PRODUCTS

The Happy Ending of a Perfect Dinner

U-ALL-NO Richardson's AFTER DINNER MINT

Pure CANE Sugar plus Natural MINT for Flavor

10¢

Thos. D. Richardson Co., Philadelphia 34, U.S.A.

SAUCE

This sauce should be fairly thick—dribbling becomes a problem if a dip sauce is too thin. Homemade mayonnaise makes a perfect base, or you can buy mayonnaise and thicken it with a little whipped cream. To 1 cup mayonnaise add ½ cup chili sauce from which some of the liquid has been drained off through a sieve, 1 clove garlic, grated, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, ⅛ teaspoon cayenne pepper, a few drops lime juice and 1 teaspoon dehydrated horseradish moistened to a paste with a little water, or 1 tablespoon prepared horseradish. Make this the day before.

To serve, put the cabbage head containing the sauce in the center of a platter and heap the vegetables and sea food around it, separating them for the best color effect. Stick colored toothpicks into the pieces of fish.

SCALLOPINI OF VEAL EN CASSEROLE

Have 2½ pounds veal steak cut ¼ inch thick. Remove fat, put pieces of steak between two thicknesses of heavy paper and flatten with a wooden mallet or the flat side of a meat cleaver. Cut into strips about 2 inches long and 1 inch wide. Mix together ½ cup flour, 2 teaspoons paprika, 2 teaspoons salt and 1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper and dip each piece of veal into this mixture on both sides.

In a skillet put 5 tablespoons butter or margarine and 1 large clove garlic, minced, and when sizzling hot add the meat. Brown gently, stirring frequently, and be careful not to burn. Don't expect the pieces to be browned evenly on both sides. To do that we'd have to fry a few at a time and use a terrific amount of fat. I have a truly Gargantuan skillet I use for this sort of job, and even with that monster I get some darkish and some pale pieces. It's the browned taste we're after. Add ½ cup water, scrape bottom of skillet with a pancake turner, pour in 1 pint sour cream, lower heat to simmer.

Have ready 2 cups boiled chestnuts. To remove shells and skins of chestnuts, I have best luck with the following method. Make a gash in the flat side of each shell, place in a flat pan with 2 teaspoons salad oil and put under broiler for 5 or 6 minutes. Crack off shells and remove skins with the point of a sharp knife. Boil 15 minutes, cool and cut into halves or fourths, depending on size of nuts. We want fairly big pieces so that their texture will give a nice contrast to the softer ingredients.

Mix nuts with the meat, add 1 teaspoon dried sweet basil, ⅛ teaspoon rosemary, 1 teaspoon gourmet powder, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and 5 halves of dried apricot cut into tiny pieces. If you like, ¼ cup Marsala may be added for more flavor. Let the mixture come to a boil, taste for seasoning and thicken with 2 tablespoons cornstarch mixed with ¼ cup water. Pour into a casserole, sprinkle top with a few more pieces of apricot and cover. Before serving, bake from 30 to 45 minutes in a 350° F. oven with the cover on. The dish can be prepared a day in advance or any time up to the moment it is popped into the oven. If you do it in advance, add a little water before baking because the sauce will thicken overnight. The apricot pieces will swell up during cooking and their taste will permeate but not dominate the other flavors.

SAFFRON NOODLES

If you make your own noodles, mix together 3 slightly beaten eggs, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons water and enough flour to make a very stiff dough—about 2½ cups. I stir with a fork until the mixture makes a firm ball, then I knead in the rest of the flour with my hands. If the dough is too stiff it's hard to roll, so don't overdo the flour. Separate into 3 balls and roll each into a thin sheet on a floured board. Let them dry for a while on towels, but don't let them get dry enough to crumble. Fold each sheet into a long roll and cut, crosswise, into thin pin wheels. As you progress, shake out the pin wheels into long, slender noodles. They can be thoroughly or partly dry when they're put on to boil, so make them whenever it suits your timing. Usually I make a double batch at one time, use half, dry the rest thoroughly and keep them for weeks. Very handy to have around.

To cook, put 2 or 3 teaspoons saffron in a pot of boiling salted water, add noodles and cook, uncovered, for from 8 to 10 minutes. Don't overcook. Noodles should be slightly chewy — al dente, as in spaghetti. The saffron will give them a bright yellow color as well as an added flavor. Drain in a colander and transfer to a casserole. Boil noodles as nearly the last minute as you can manage conveniently and keep them hot in a barely turned-on oven, or on an electric hot plate, or set the casserole in a pan containing a small amount of gently boiling water. Just before serving sprinkle top of noodles with fried, crisp croutons that have been dredged with paprika. The croutons can be made far in advance.

SALAD

Make a tossed salad of a variety of crisp greens, sections of tomato, a few pickled Jerusalem artichokes cut into thin slices, and French dressing. The Jerusalem artichokes are highly spiced, sweet-sour, with the accent on sour, and will give a pleasantly sharp tang to the salad. Most fancy groceries have them, but if you can't get them, substitute sliced pickled onions.

ICEBOX POPPY-SEED ROLLS

Scald 1¼ cups milk, add 2 tablespoons shortening, 6 tablespoons butter or margarine, 5 tablespoons sugar and 2 teaspoons salt. Cool to lukewarm. Stir in 1 package quick dry yeast dissolved in ½ cup lukewarm water. Now stir in 2 slightly beaten eggs. Add 4½ cups flour, a little at a time, stirring and beating constantly. Beat for about 5 minutes in all, put dough in a greased bowl, spread top with grease, cover tightly and store in refrigerator. The dough should remain there at least 24 hours, and it doesn't hurt it to stand 2 or 3 days. When it has risen to double its bulk, remove cover and cut through dough in all directions to release gases. Cover again and return to refrigerator.

Two hours before baking time, transfer dough to a floured board, dip your hands into flour and shape the rolls. They can be molded into balls and put in greased muffin pans. The pans should be a little less than half full. This is very easy, but if you're willing to spend more time at the job you can make twists without too much trouble and the result will be gratifying. Here's how. With your hands roll and pull hunks of dough into 3 long round strands about ½ inch in diameter, fasten the three strands together at one end and braid them neatly. To keep the ends together until the braid is started, I either ask someone to hold them or anchor them under the edge of a heavy dish. Cut the braid at intervals of about 3½ inches, pinch the cut ends together and transfer rolls to a greased cooky sheet.

Don't make the strands so long that they are unmanageable, and don't worry that you will have to use quite a bit of flour in shaping them. This dough is wet enough to stand some flour. Spread tops of rolls—whatever their shape—with some softened butter or margarine and let them rise in a warm place for 2 hours. Just before baking, brush the tops with beaten egg and sprinkle generously with poppy seeds. Bake in a hot oven, 400° to 425° F., for about 20 minutes.

The rolls can be baked ahead of time, and whether they are your own production or the baker's, reheat by tying them in a paper bag or package and putting them in a 350° F. oven for 10 minutes.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Storm

By Elizabeth McFarland

Rain on the lashes
And rain at the door,
And which of us
Shall cry the more?

O sky, that knows so much of tears,
So much of sorrow,
Tonight is years and years
Before tomorrow!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hey Mom! The Best Ever!

You bet it is! And that goes for Welch's wonderful juices, jams and preserves, too—all made from the choicest pure fruit.

THE WELCH GRAPE JUICE COMPANY WESTFIELD NEW YORK

Simple-simply delicious-
THRIFTY
Heinz Sausage Pie
FOR SUPPER

Recipe
Fry ½ lb sausage until brown. Drain. Add to contents of a tin of Heinz Condensed Vegetable Soup (undiluted). Place in casserole. Top with mashed potatoes. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 30 minutes.

● Rich, delicious Heinz Soups—hit luncheon dishes and perfect dinner starters—are being used to make penny-saving casseroles that taste expensive! Heinz Soups have that kind of appealing, homespun flavor! For Heinz cooks them in small batches—brews in every wisp of flavor. How about Heinz Chicken Noodle or Cream of Tomato tonight?

HEINZ Condensed VEGETABLE SOUP
WITH BEEF STOCK
57 VARIETIES
H. J. HEINZ COMPANY

Taste the WONDERFUL DIFFERENCE in HEINZ SOUPS
57

MÉLANGE OF PLUMS AND GINGER

Get a No. 2½ can each of purple and green-gage plums of the best quality you can find, and let them stand in the refrigerator for several days. Cut candied ginger into slender strips to make ½ cup. A couple of hours before serving, empty the green-gage plums, with their juice, into your serving dish. Add the purple plums, without their juice, and sprinkle the candied ginger over the top. Très difficile, n'est-ce pas? A friend of ours who had that dessert here recently called me to say I'd simply have to write out the recipe for her—it was too divine, I said, "Well, it's pretty tricky, but maybe I can explain over the telephone. You just go to the grocery, get some—etc., etc., etc."

CHEESE TRAY

Gruyere is my favorite cheese, if it's to be eaten with fruit, and Camembert runs it a close second. But everyone has his own favorites, and if you want your cheese tray to look opulent, that's easy these days. There are Edam, Bel Paese, Port Salut and Swiss, to name a few, and I like to add some rounds of smoked cheese that comes in cellophane packages the size and shape of an overgrown knockwurst. Whatever varieties you choose, your tray will look attractive, and be sure that the wafers you serve with it have had a coating of butter or margarine and a good crisping in the oven.

COFFEE

There are many interesting tricks one can do with after-dinner coffee which will transform it from mere coffee into a very special drink. But the fundamental trick is to know how to make the coffee itself super before you

> It is not marriage that fails; it is people that fail. All that marriage does is to show people up.
> —HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

start any fancy business with it. Keep your coffeepot spotlessly clean and let it stand open to ventilate when not in use. Measure both coffee and water carefully each time, never guess, and make after-dinner coffee at least half again as strong as breakfast coffee.

Really superb coffee is good enough for me and plenty of others, but sometimes it's fun to vary the routine. Café diable, café brûlot and various kinds of spiked coffee demand special equipment and a rather long-drawn-out ceremony, but here's a way to fancy up the coffee which doesn't require an alcohol burner, a lighted match or the breathless attention of your guests.

Ten minutes before the coffee is poured into the pot in which it will be served—you'll need about a quart of after-dinner-strength coffee—add 1 cinnamon stick, 5 cloves and a small piece of orange peel—just the orange-colored part, no white. Rub small lumps of sugar on orange rind until they are well colored and have them on the coffee tray, at least two for each person to be served. Strain the spiced coffee into the pot and, if you like, add ½ cup heated rum or brandy. The orange sugar may be added to the pot just before you pour, or it can be put in the cups according to individual tastes.

Service. Here again is a meal that adapts itself to any form of service, from formal to the most casual come-and-get-it plan. But I do think it deserves a special party atmosphere—your best linen, silver, dishes, and your best thoughts in planning every step of the service. You're not going to be tired from a strenuous workout in the kitchen and you'll have plenty of time and energy for the important details that have nothing to do with cooking, and with or without help I can't see where you need mine on this deal—I don't want to be redundant.

Is this the easiest menu I've ever suggested—unless you choose to make the noodles and rolls? It seems so to me, and I hope you'll keep it in your files to whip out when the So-and-so's have week-end guests, you really should entertain them and you really want to, but you're head-over-ears busy. THE END

Baker's Coconut
Quickie #4

Plain cup cakes Jelly
Baker's Coconut

Spread tops of cup cakes with jelly—ar sprinkle thickly with beautiful, tender-mo Baker's Coconut. So wonderful—and glamorous! Keep Baker's Coconut handy use it often. Roll stuffed dates in its lusciou whiteness, or dip walnut halves in melt marshmallow and roll in coconut! Your gr cer has both Baker's Premium Shred ar specially moist Baker's Southern Style.

BAKER'S COCONUT
—SECRET OF 100 GLAMOUR TRICKS

Products of General Foods

SEND! New Recipe Book, "Coconut Glamou Desserts"—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut Box 27, Battle Creek, Mich.

QUICK...and EASY!
RECIPE FOR
POACHED EGGS with UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM

Here are eggs with a difference—and so simple to make! Just spread UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM on hot buttered toast. Then place a poached egg on each slice and serve immediately.
You'll want "repeats"!

★ Fine, selected whole hams, minced and seasoned to perfection, produce that superb flavor and zest that you find only in UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM. Always look for the Red Devil!

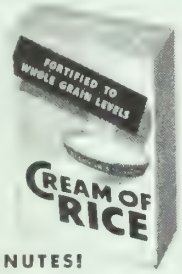
NOW I KNOW WHY CHILD SPECIALISTS PRESCRIBE CREAM OF RICE!

1. QUICKER NUTRITION



2. MORE ENERGY

3. EASIER TO DIGEST

advantages over any wheat, oat, or baby cereal* ves more nutrition faster. New life be- is to pour into the system in a few nutes! Gives more energy! And ...Vitamins B_2 and Niacin are ded—plus iron—for ch, red blood and tter growth! Is easier digest! Many doctors commend Cream of ice as one of baby's st cereals.

Test data available upon professional request.

EADY IN ONLY 5 MINUTES!

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS

GRAVY

Use KITCHEN Bouquet

Here's the gravy secret good cooks have known for over 70 years—Kitchen Bouquet offers the easy, never-fail way to get extra rich, brown, delicious gravy! Kitchen Bouquet adds no artificial flavor — simply steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.

I HAVE ACCEPTED CHARITY

(Continued from Page 77)

Strange, how a word, taken to oneself, can bring about a character metamorphosis! There is, I believe, a science of words. The good words. Such as faith and hope and love. The bad ones, like war, hate, atom bomb. Destitute is akin to the last, the misplaced, the ruined of the world. I don't need a dictionary to define it. It means: Without money. Without shelter. Without what is known in the Orient as Face. It means exposure to criticism and patronage. It means stripping the personality of its protective skin, leaving the ego raw!

Suddenly I understood the letters I had received from England and Germany: "Your wonderful gift box gave us such happiness. We sat in the dark, striking matches just to see them burn! Then we smoked your cigarettes, laughing like crazy fools. Then we debated: What should we eat first? The bacon? The chocolate? The soup? We finally decided to postpone eating to another day. And so we kept happiness in reserve a little longer. Happiness! You will never know, dear friend ——"

Now I knew! Not with my intellect, nor my imagination, but with my heart. I was kin to those myriad destitute people. Not so hopeless, not so hungry as they; but I belonged to their lodge.

Thirty days . . . hours, minutes that passed with the unreal speed of a nightmare. A strange woman came to measure for curtains and carpets. The front door was no longer a drawbridge across my private moat. It was a passageway into my public embarrassment. I stood revealed as a citizen in distress.

Thirty days became twenty days. Friends in New York, hearing of the crisis, sent enough money to act as a shock absorber. My neighbors helped in numberless ways. The tradespeople expressed sympathy and trust. There were countless last-minute miracles of generosity.

I AM trying to tell the truth. Was I grateful? I'm not sure. I think I was, simply, untrained to receive. The shoe, so long on one foot, didn't fit the other. I accepted—I had to—but in a sort of rebellious rage. I felt trapped. I crouched in a corner of my cage and snatched at the kindness thrust toward me through the bars.

Ten days. . . . The house must be dismantled, and myself, my mother and the pets installed elsewhere. Elsewhere! Today, this is one of the ominous words. Often there is no elsewhere. In my case, there wasn't.

"You can stay with us until you get on your feet," was said by many of my friends, and with sincerity.

I listened, without really registering their unselfishness, desperately unwilling to accept, and yet fearful of refusing. My mind swept like a searchlight, seeking possible shelter. An empty guesthouse. A barn. A tent. A cave.

I wanted my own home, my own things! Sanctuary? No! No! A thousand times, no! To tiptoe in another's house, to be afraid to sneeze, to cultivate a certain cringing deprecation. . . . "Might I use the telephone? Do you mind —— Is it all right if I ——" Oh, no!

The hunters were at my heels now. Bank. Credit bureau. Lawyers. Envelopes registered and demanding my signature. "You can't escape us! Just you try!" And along with the creditors, the amateur psychologists, who entered to offer sympathy and remained to turn me slowly on their griddles. It seemed that I had failed because I was not a "realist." This was the root of the evil: my insistence upon candles on the dinner table and wax on the drawing-room floor. I had been too clean, too orderly, too concerned with "shining plates, blue-rimmed." Deeply hidden in the jungle of my mistakes was another moral "blind spot"—an affection for animals not becoming to my checkbook. I cried hunger and yet spent borrowed money to feed a raft of critters! "You aren't consistent," the psychologists cried. "You aren't even honest!

Turkey, cooked for Thanksgiving...

delicious in June!

YES, your Philco Freezer makes it possible months later, to enjoy many a tasty dish prepared from the left-over holiday turkey. It keeps foods freezer-fresh for days, weeks, months. It enables you to avoid waste, add variety to your menu, shop less often. Your Philco saves time and money—gives you leisure as well as pleasure.

Says Mrs. Florence Muhleisen of New Orleans

"I seem to discover some new use for our Philco Freezer almost every day. Just how I'd manage without it, I'm not sure. It really does keep foods freezer-fresh."

Keep Foods FREEZER-FRESH*

*FRESH AS THE DAY THEY WERE PICKED, CAUGHT, OR BOUGHT.

PHILCO MODEL AV-75. Deluxe Upright; large 7½ cu. ft. capacity holds up to 300 lbs. of frozen foods. 3 compartments. Patented sloping shelves and 2 position drop doors conserve cold. Temperatures as low as 15° below zero. Built-in thermometer, door lock, temperature control and guardian bell. Hermetically sealed power system. Philco quality throughout.

PHILCO FREEZER

Famous for Quality the World Over

Magnanimous? Humane? Consider your debts!"

"Now," cried my friends, "let's fix these things! Let's face up to facts! First, your mother must go to the county hospital. Then you must find yourself a nice little room somewhere. Finally, you must get rid of your pets!"

It was as easy as that!

Five days. . . . I called my dear animals to me for the last time. They obeyed, and I gave them to a veterinarian to be "put to sleep." All except five. Before he took them, I blacked out and, for an hour, forgot my name and who or where I was.

The last morning. . . . The furniture disappeared quickly and efficiently into vans. Quite a few people dropped by to watch me keep my chin up. They said it was undoubtedly a healthy experience. The day would come when I'd be glad. I was "deserving," in spite of my mistakes. . . . It is always darkest just before dawn. . . etc., etc., etc.

Mother went out on a stretcher, but not to the county hospital. Her doctor staked her to a fortnight in a small sanitarium. And the five pets went to a kennel. I, myself, sweating cold fear, stayed with a friend three days, after which, bracing myself, I turned to charity.

Charity proved to be a gentle and deeply intuitive welfare worker in Hollywood. She listened to what I have just told you—only in greater detail and between bursts of uncontrollable weeping. She didn't once remind me that there are millions of homeless people in the world. She didn't mention extravagance. Or lack of judgment. The word profligacy never once passed her lips. I wasn't wrong; I was in trouble! There is a universe of difference between the two attitudes.

"First, you will go to the hospital."

"But I'm not sick. I must work! I must do something! I can't stop now! I wouldn't dare!"

I went to the hospital. Carrying my expensive rawhide luggage and wearing the last of my tweed suits. A charity patient. . . . From my bed I telephoned Hedda Hopper, and she boomed at me loyally, "They can't keep a writer like you down! Stay where you are! You're tired, that's all. You've taken some awful socks. Sleep. Pray your head off. We all believe in you!"

Four days later, I checked out of that hospital and took a train home. I had decided that I couldn't accept charity. I'd starve first.

The little city where I've lived for so many years looked unfamiliar when I arrived. I didn't "belong" any more. Out there, in the dark hills beneath the stars, was my dear house. Someone else was living in it. The freesia was in bloom. The roses I'd planted. The vines I'd trained. The trees I'd loved. They were all there—with strangers.

THAT night I walked up and down the main street, glancing blankly into the windows of shops where, in my time, I'd spent thousands of dollars.

"I don't know what to do!"

For a long time I sat in the post office, from which I had mailed so many manuscripts. Then I hid in a telephone booth. I was dirty and tear-stained. A tramp. I couldn't turn to the kids of my family—home from war, just starting out. Nor to friends who had already suffered too much anxiety and expense for my sake.

"I don't know what to do!"

My demon, Fear, was now joined by his twin, Pride. They trotted beside me in the dark. This was indeed extremity. I was profoundly ashamed because I owed money—lots of it—and couldn't repay it. I had failed in my duty to those who had believed in me. Suicide was, perhaps, the only solution. As the thought entered my mind, Fear nudged me with his sharp elbow. "You're afraid," he said. And Pride added, "You're too proud." I thought, "Afraid to die, and too proud to accept charity. What, then?" And the answer came: "Look outside of you! Let go of this problem. Let God hand it. He will—if you'll just step aside for a minute."

I walked back to the sanitarium where my mother was staying, and the night nurse let me sit beside the bed, holding my mother's hand. I explained in whispers—since the other patients were asleep—why I had come back. She understood that I was at the end of the familiar path; that I had come to a crossroads; and that the way to go would be pointed out to me. Finally, we both fell asleep. But before I dropped off, I had decided to call the welfare worker and to accept the aid offered me.

IT was not altogether self-seeking, although the need for safety is strong in all of us; nor was it, in the absolute sense, a spiritual rebirth. The truth lies somewhere between these two urges. I had come finally to a conclusion: that, for some reason, I had to be shaken out of my citadel; and that somehow, somewhere, I must find another—not necessarily the four walls of my home. The next refuge, or fortress, must be an indestructible intangibility . . . and to find it, to make it my own—was the challenge I must accept.

The welfare worker's gentle voice again offered the charity I had run away from. Six months' grace . . . mother cared for. . . . And I?

The good doctor has given me the use of a cabin in the mountains. And here I am, not alone. . . . No, not alone. The surviving past are with me. And the characters in the next story are advancing toward me out of the shadows of self-doubt. I am like one who has come safely through a bombing. All the familiar landmarks have been obliterated. Yet there is something salutary, heartening, about a whole new set of things to look at and deal with. A different window through which, in place of my garden, I see a dry river bed, and, beyond, a meadow where the rangers' horses graze. At night, owls and coyotes and frogs speak their lines, and occasionally a deer crashes through the brush. Otherwise, the silence is ponderable. I have in wood for the fireplace, and sit alone in the ruddy light, and slowly, slowly, the tense nerves relax, and the terror of failure recedes. At six in the morning, the sun—indifferent to the fact that I've always slept behind drawn silk curtains—strikes directly into my eyes. I have breakfast. And then I sit down to work . . . to try.

> Never be afraid that somebody will find out how to do something as well as you do it. If you can do only one thing, you're out of luck.
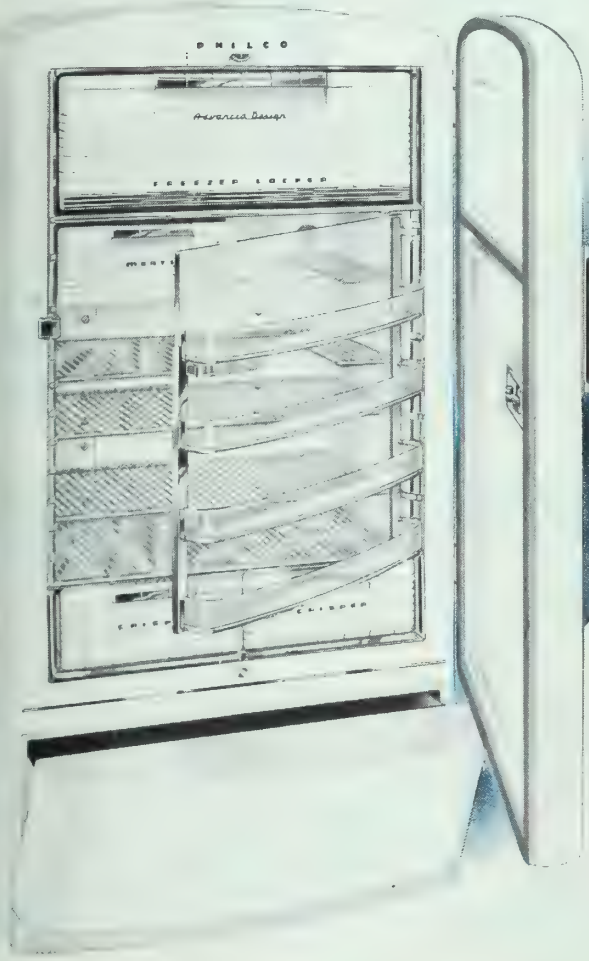
>
> —MAURICE SWITZER: Meditations of Marcus O'Ralius (Kelly-Springfield).

I have written my creditors and those who loaned me money, asking them to have faith in me. Some of them will accept this as a promissory note. Others will doubt my intention and will consider themselves bilked. Time will prove it, either way.

Every week the "relief" check comes. Thirty dollars for whatever I need. I need very little—mostly understanding of my experience. It would be easy to fall into bitter despair and lassitude and hopelessness. I believe I'm beyond that danger point. I realize that when I go down from this mountain I must have regained my "home." This is the challenge. It is both urgent and significant as it is, in fact, universal. Fear of the loss of material security is shared by all mankind today. We must rise from the rubble of our homes and "make do" with the bricks and mortar of the spirit. There is no other safety for any of us.



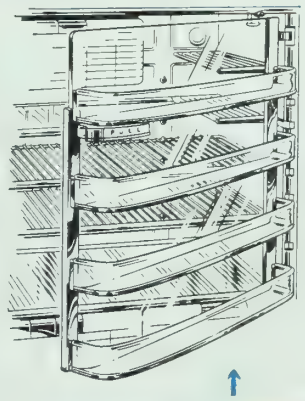
Yes, I have accepted charity. I am, indeed, changed by it. But, I believe, changed for the better. Do you remember the old adage: "There, but for the grace of God, go I"? I have rewritten it to read: "There, by the grace of God, go I."

Today I learned that the welfare worker who returned hope to me has serious troubles of her own. She has not once mentioned this to me. . . . I can conceive of no greater testimony of man's capacity for unselfish giving.

THE END

ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN PHILCOLAND

"What a HUGE Freezer Locker!" cried Alice...



"HERE's a feature," Alice said, "That adds to Philco's fame,
At last, a freezer locker really worthy of the name".
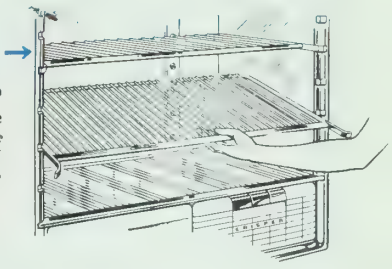
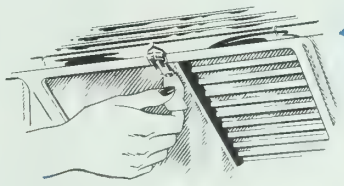
Huge space reserved exclusively for frozen foods galore,
Full width, full depth and all enclosed with insulated door.
Refrigerator, Freezer... both, in compact space combine.
Be sure to ask your dealer for PHILCO ADVANCED DESIGN.





It's a WONDERful Refrigerator!

Transparent Conservador
Exclusive Philco shelf-lined inner door doubles the front shelf space; keeps foods used most often at your fingertips.

Shelf-Control →
Shift the shelves to suit yourself; make space for foods of any size or shape.

← Summer-Winter Control
At last, you maintain balanced humidity that's just right in any climate or season.

It's a WONDERful Freezer!

PHILCO AV-75—Spacious 7½ cu. ft. upright home freezer. Holds up to 300 pounds of frozen foods. Fits small floor areas. 3 compartments. Temperatures as low as 15° below zero. Deluxe equipment; exclusive features. See it now at your Philco Dealer.

PHILCO

Famous for Quality the World Over

1948, Philco Corporation

WHEREVER THERE'S FUN!

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up!

AT HOME OR AWAY—
BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

When the band strikes up at a football victory dance, you can be sure that 7-Up will be in attendance. For cheerful 7-Up adds to the fun of the younger set as well as the parents in the chaperone line . . . just as it does when they're at home.

So, whether you're at home or away, let sparkling 7-Up play its part in your activities. With the first lively sip you "fresh up" —see why 7-Up is the all-family drink. Buy a case for your family where you see those bright 7-Up signs.

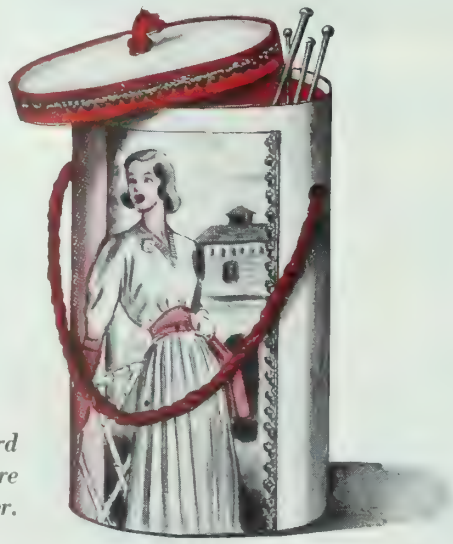
YOU LIKE IT IT LIKES YOU!

JOURNAL CUTOUTS

to make for Christmas

BY NORA O'LEARY

Metal wastebaskets from the dime store decorated with favorite Journal covers and exciting reproductions fit into any room.



Kitchen trays and individual sandwich trays lend themselves to the food pictures and favorite products in advertisements.

Journal reproductions of famous paintings covered with plain glass, edged with passe partout. Frame several, hang in groups.

The youngsters will love a lamp shade with Munro Leaf cartoons! Shades MUST be covered with heat-resistant coating!

Fashion touch for a dime-store pasteboard knitting box. Glue your favorite picture smoothly, and shellac. Add gold border.

Smooth all surfaces. Spread rubber cement on picture and surface it is

Fostoria

Lovely TO LIVE WITH

Stemware is for more than utility. It's the costume jewelry to sparkle your dining room, to glamorize china, silver and damask. Navarre, for instance, is a handlaid Fostoria "Master-Etching", a gem to set your tables aglow with charm and drama. For this prestige of perfect harmony, you'll find many jewel-like Fostoria goblets and a myriad of accessory pieces . . . all exquisite, at the better stores everywhere.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY • • • MOUNDSVILLE • WEST VIRGINIA

"Golden Glory!"

. . . this grand, nutritious Velveeta casserole

Here's how to make this Kraft Classic main dish

Cut 4 hard-cooked eggs in half lengthwise. Remove yolks, mash and combine with 4 tablespoons Kraft Mayonnaise. Season with salt and pepper and fill the whites. Cook one 8-ounce package of elbow macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and place in a shallow casserole.

Now for the Velveeta magic! In the top of a double boiler, melt one pound of this famous cheese food (two ½-lb. packages or half of the 2-lb. loaf). Into the melted golden Velveeta gradually stir ½ cup of milk. Combine about half of that gloriously rich, smooth Velveeta sauce with the macaroni. Arrange the stuffed eggs on top and pour the remaining Velveeta sauce on the eggs. Bake 20 minutes in a moderate (350°) oven. Place the casserole on a chop plate, surround with broiled tomato halves, and treat your folks to "golden glory."

Remember that besides the grand cheese flavor, Velveeta adds high quality complete protein plus other important milk nutrients. That's why Velveeta is such a good idea for main dishes as well as for cold sandwiches and snacks. Keep plenty on hand—to spread or slice or melt any time!

SAVE MONEY—Remember, ounce for ounce there is no other basic food that matches cheese for high-quality complete protein . . . for calcium, phosphorus and other nutrients from milk.

Copr. 1948 by Kraft Foods Company

The world's favorite cheeses are made or imported by KRAFT

MacLaren's Imperial is the aristocrat of aged cheddars, famous in this country and Canada for 58 years! A natural cheese—rich, sharp, "crumbly"—perfect!

It's mellow as old wine! . . . this natural golden Chantelle in the gay red coat. You will like it on crackers, in sandwiches, with fruit . . . and put it proudly on your cheese tray.

For salads, sandwiches and desserts always get the cream cheese that's guaranteed fresh. It's marked Philadelphia Brand. The genuine is made only by Kraft.

Kay Brand is mellow natural cheddar cheese made from pasteurized milk! A real triumph of Kraft skill. Buy slices or a block—or wedges—from the 10-lb. bar.

THE UNPOSSESSED

(Continued from Page 54)

had not yet convinced his father's old ends of the necessity for his New York con- t. And since his father's death it seemed him that some of them were not quite eager to finance him. However, Mabel oughton was still enthusiastic. The old girl oked like a sheep, but she was kind. Michael d long ago learned the exploitation value kindness.

He stepped hard on the gas and Sophie's op of shining hair streamed out behind em. He needed Sophie. He found relaxation der the flow of her inconsequence. Her ry unimportance rested him.

"Don't you mind when people disapprove you?" he asked curiously, apropos of Mrs. inner. For himself, approval was as neces- ry as food.

Sophie gave a crow of laughter. "Go faster, ike. Mind? Why on earth should I? It esn't matter."

Curled on the end of the old sofa in the ting room at his boardinghouse, she went ck to the subject.

"My father and mother died when I was tle and I had to work for my board at nt Ella's and wear gingham aprons to hool and the kids laughed at me. So you e, it's always been sort of me-against-the- wn. When Aunt Ella died, the Ladies' thena Club lent me money to take a library urse. So now"—she grinned at him—now I'm that poor little Campbell girl who so deserving. Unless you ruin my reputa- on. And that might be interesting. I'd a woman-with-a-past ——"

"You're a fool," he told her, kissing the p of her nose and returning to his practice. Sophie had, oddly enough, the gift of re- se. She could sit for hours, on her day off, erely listening, her gaze distant. His inter- inable scales or the monotonous repetition a phrase never seemed to bother her. It's cause she has neither sense nor temperament, Michael decided, grinning across at her.

"I made myself a song about the town ars ago," Sophie said, yelling above the iano. "Whenever they're snooty, I sing it myself. Look." She came to lean above im, smelling like clean hay and soap and arch. "Listen." With one finger she picked ut: Tum-ti-ti-tum-tum-tum-ti-tum. Tum-ti- -ti-tum-ti-tum. Bam! "The words are: This is the way you think it is. But this is he way it is. Bam!"

The tune had such an impertinent finality hat Michael shouted with laughter. "Why, aby, you're a composer," he said, and be- an fitting chords to the melody.

Sophie nodded complacently. "Aren't I? ell, I just sing it when they get pompous. t makes me feel they don't know every- ing and then I don't mind them."

She wasn't like anyone else at all, Michael ought. She was plain, she hadn't any ind, but she was, at the least, a refreshing change from the sultry females who seemed always to be falling in love with him. And she was the first person he'd ever found who could leave him alone and yet not lonely.

She accepted his light kisses happily. She seemed enchanted to be with him. But she did not cling. She made no demands. It was restful. It was free. It was exasperating.

"Don't you ever wonder if I'll come back tomorrow?" he demanded one night when she'd said, "'By, darling," and run up the porch steps of her rooming house.

"Oh, but you will, won't you?" she said, startled.

"You're too sure of me."

She stopped on the top step and, for the first time, he saw her look solemn. "Oh, I'm not, Michael," she protested. "Only"—she put out a hand and rumpled his hair—"you're too lazy to hunt you up another girl when none of us really count anyway. You see, you're a genius, dear. So you don't honestly care about anybody but yourself. And if—when—you don't come back, what can I do about it? Things happen and when you can't help it you just have to take it."

For a moment he wondered if she could possibly have more sense than he had thought. She'd had to take a good deal already. Then he remembered her constant chatter that never by any chance added up, and he dismissed the idea. She's just dizzy, he decided. She doesn't think, any more than a crazy puppy thinks while he's worrying at your shoelaces.

It was several nights after this that Sophie insisted upon stopping at a grocery store for a quart of milk. "Heat that and drink it tonight, Mike," she said mildly. "It will make you sleep just as well as whisky."

He was startled. This was the nearest Sophie had ever come to criticism. He had not thought she minded his occasional drinking. She would not mention it to anyone, of course, and, now that the contributions for his New York concert were in the bank, he was safe.

Still, he'd use control, he determined, as he left her and walked home through the scented darkness. Until recently he had almost quit drinking this summer. They had been so gay he had never needed it. But as the time for him to leave grew nearer, he began to be engulfed in moods of depression. He wondered, increasingly, if he might be just another mediocre pianist. When he remembered that soon he'd have to expose himself to the criticism of the world, doubt sickened him.

At these times, liquor was imperative. It made everything less immediate and made him feel adequate. Of course he should not have driven night before last when his head was spinning. But he had never driven better. The car swooped in long graceful flights,

"All right, dear, I'll pay you the regular caddy fee—now stop grumbling!"

"Beans with Cheese"

It's Mighty Man-Pleasing

You Can't Fail With . . .

WASHBURN'S Fancy PINTO BEANS

The Beans Selected For Finest Flavor—And So Clean You Don't Have To Rinse

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

No Others Are Like WASHBURN'S Naturally Finer Beans

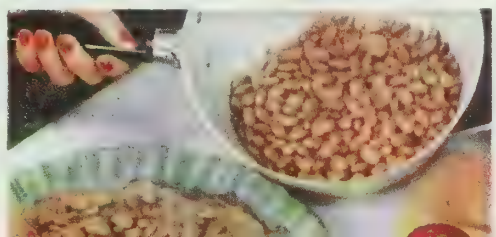
Here at Washburn's we start with the recognized top grade of beans. We sort these to discard all but the choicest beans. Then, believe it or not, we clean and polish every bean! You can get all your favorite varieties of beans in our Washburn's Fancy pack.

Our Washburn's brand means fine eating-quality in split peas, whole peas, lentils, pearl barley and rice, too. You get these foods naturally finer when you buy them in our Washburn's red and blue packages: 1- or 2-pound cellophane bags, or 1-pound cartons.

Copyright 1948 by Washburn's, Moscow, Idaho

1. MAIN DISH for 6 hungry people

1 lb. Washburn's Fancy Pinto Beans (or Red, Kidney, or Great Northern Beans)	2½ tsps. salt ½ cup bacon drippings ¼ lb. cheddar cheese 2 or 3 tomatoes



Add Washburn's Beans to 7 cups warm water in kettle and let soak several hours or overnight. Then add salt, cover the kettle, and simmer 2 hours or until tender. Drain, saving bean liquid.

2. Melt bacon drippings in skillet ove low heat, add half of the drained beans Cook for ten minutes, stirring fre quently; then take spoon or masher an mash beans gently in the skillet as the cook. Next, stir in the bean liquid slowly and continue to cook several minute more until mixture is quite thick.

3. Turn out the mashed bean mixture onto a heat-proof platter, chop plate, or oven-proof glass pie plate, and then spoon the unmashed beans on top. Cut cheese and tomatoes into thick slices.

4. Place cheese slices on top of the beans and tomato slices around edges. The put the whole dish under low broile heat until cheese is melted. Serve bub bling hot. Makes 6 to 8 big servings.

A Tradition that began with the Pilgrims

CRANBERRY SAUCE
FOR Thanksgiving

Ocean Spray
THE BRAND OF QUALITY

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE

himself scarcely conscious that he controlled it. He had not, actually, touched that passing sedan. It was bad luck that the fool driver had swerved into a field.

Sophie had been wonderful. She'd held tight to the door handle on the curves and been silent, uncritical. However, she had insisted on his taking the car straight to the garage and she had walked home with him.

Tonight, gazing up at the clear stars, he felt that nothing of what he dreamed was impossible. A life of work was all he wanted. To find in music the greatness that was there, and to give it to his listeners, was all.

In his room he heated the milk in his electric percolator, staring into the mirror with approval. Sunburn became him. He looked healthy after his summer with Sophie. She's a sweet kid, he thought, drinking the warm milk. Then he was in bed and almost instantly asleep, soothed by the promise of virtue.

But starlight and exaltation were not constant. The black moods recurred. He had long been superstitious as to his bad luck with music. When he was sixteen and about to be sent to Paris for study, the war which prevented it had seemed aimed directly at himself. He'd studied in New York instead, and the threat of being drafted seemed only a personal ruin. That forgotten spot on his lungs had saved him and he was glad enough to earn approval by playing at camps and hospitals. When he got his year in Paris after all, it seemed to him the Fates had relented. In Paris, living in a world of his own, it was easy enough to look ahead to a brilliant career in the far future. But now he had to prove it.

When he thought of that future, now almost upon him, it was with an elevator-dropping sensation in the pit of his stomach. At those times he drank quickly, waited with impatience for the effect. Driving helped. He could almost escape in speed.

It was after one of these nights that he woke with a body throbbing like a dynamo. Trying to lift his head, he fell back with a groan and fixed one eye upon the ceiling, which waved and swooped like the canvas of a tent.

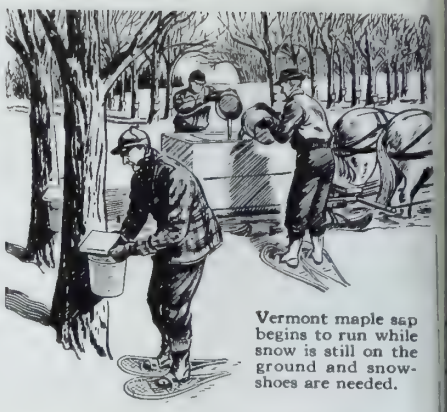
Sophie said "Hi," and he sat up suddenly. The resultant crash of whirling pain infuriated him.

"What are you doing here?"

Sophie, wound up in his white-crash dressing gown, came to sit beside him on the bed. She giggled. "You better be glad I am here. You were perfectly fine last night. Oh, my, yes. You only wanted to jump out the window. And when I locked it you kept complaining because you didn't have a private bath so you could slash your wrists and lie in warm water. Michael, you were perfectly crazy. You kept saying you were no good. The idea! I didn't dare leave you alone. Besides, I wanted to stay."

Michael said "Why?" eying her warily. For a moment he wondered. Sophie couldn't be putting him in a position?

"Oh, I just wanted to," she said. "Get up, lamb. We've got to hurry or I'll be late to work."



Wincing under the shower, toweling gingerly and shrugging himself into shirt and flannels, Michael gave way to increasing annoyance. Ma Tucker wasn't fussy about what went on in her house. But if the better women of the town got wind of it, they'd have a fit. Sophie had no sense at all.

When he returned she was dressed in the short white linen that made her look so childish. And if there were smudges under the gray eyes, Michael was in no mood to notice. He was only conscious that he must have been completely maudlin last night. Being seen at a disadvantage had always angered him. It was lucky that it had been only Sophie who had seen him.

"Hurry up, Mike, or I'll be late," she said.

He sat down on the edge of the rumpled sofa where Sophie had slept. "Look, Soph, you go ahead," he said. "I—I don't feel up to it. Besides, it would look bad for us to be seen coming out together."

"Oh, Mike, what do we care what anyone thinks so long as we know it's all right?

Vermont maple sap begins to run while snow is still on the ground and snowshoes are needed.

Captures real maple sugar flavor

Right in the maple sugar country—that's where we blend our Vermont Maid Syrup.

Our skilled blenders each year select maple sugar with unusually full flavor; then blend it with cane sugar. This blend makes the maple flavor uniformly rich and delicious.

You get real maple sugar flavor in every bottle of Vermont Maid Syrup—and at moderate cost. At your grocer's.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.
Burlington, Vermont

Vermont Maid Syrup

T-N-T
POPCORN for cozy evenings

BOWLING BALL!

YOU can easily win one of these nationally advertised Mineralite Bowling Balls, bored to fit your hand, within the next week!

Send us only eight 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions; or four 2-year Saturday Evening Post subscriptions, which you sell to persons living outside your home at the full price. Renewals count the same as new subscriptions. (2-year subscriptions L. H. J., $5.00; 2-year subscriptions S. E. P., $10.00.)

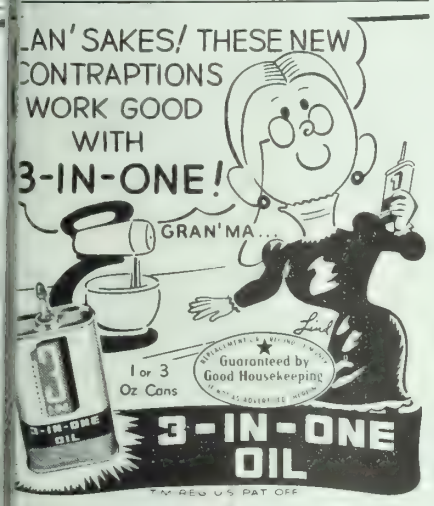
Write subscribers' names and addresses on plain paper and mail to address below, together with your name and address and checks or Money Order for $40.00. In return, we'll send you a gift certificate entitling you to a standard Mineralite Bowling Ball, bored to fit your hand. Your initials will be put on ball without charge.

This offer is good in U. S. only, until Feb. 1, 1949. Your own or your personal gift subscriptions will not count. Sorry, we cannot sell these bowling balls.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
792 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

AVORY LAMB LOAF

Mix 1½ lbs. ground lamb shoulder with ½ cups of bread crumbs that have een soaked in 1 cup of Herb-Ox Bouil- on. Add 1 cup cooked peas, ¼ cup inced onion, 2 tablespoons chopped arsley, 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon epper. Pack in well-greased loaf pan. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 1½ ours.



Herb-Ox adds rich, savory goodness to w, gravies, meat pies, casseroles—makes -cost meat taste like a million! Send for menu book. Write The Pure Food Com- y, Inc., Mamaroneck, N.Y. Dept. (LHJ-11)

First in Quality, too . . . as a delicious Consomme—cheerful start to any meal.

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

YARN FREE SAMPLES and DIRECTIONS
All wool 2-3-4 ply Knitting Yarns. Rug Yarns. Unexcelled quality; lowest prices. Buy Direct—Save Money.
BARTLETT YARN MILLS, Box R, Harmony, Maine

KVP Heavy WAXED PAPER

TIGHTEN WOBBLY CHAIRS with PLASTIC WOOD

EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty... and hardens into wood.

You're sweet to mind for me, but I don't care. Honestly. I—I'd be sort of proud."

Michael's skin crawled with irritation. She'd be proud! "You go ahead," he said again. "I don't feel hungry."

She stared at him for a long moment and Michael saw surprise and then, as she still stood silent, an acceptance in her face. It was the look of one who recognizes a fact. It was the way she'd looked when she said, "I couldn't afford shoes."

"Oh, the Methodist ladies," she said simply. "Well, 'by, darling. Lie down till you feel better." And she was gone.

He stood at the window and watched her march down the street, her thin shoulders straight, her feet seeming to walk to music. He fitted her steps to the rhythm that seemed to be running through his head: "This is the way you think it is. But this is the way it is! Bam!"

She'd said, "I didn't dare leave you alone." And she had not the imagination to worry. "I wanted to stay," she'd said. Well, then! If she wanted to waste herself upon a heel like him, what could he do about it?

The trouble with him, he thought moodily, was that he had no slightest illusion about himself. He was selfish and calculating and not dependable. He made use of his charm. But he was a musician. There and there only he was of some account. And the sooner Sophie admitted it to herself, the better.

Forgetting his head, he went down to the piano and was soon lost in Bach. It was some time before he could control the trembling of his fingers, but, once launched, his absorption became almost trancelike. When, much later, it occurred to him that Sophie had had not a cent with her to buy breakfast, he shrugged away the reminder as he would have brushed away a fly. He had a splendid day.

> Love is a beggar who still begs when one has given him everything. —ROCHEPEDRE.

He and Sophie had one final celebration before he went away. It was the night before he left.

"Tonight we buy you a hat," he told her. "We'll be very chic and go clear to Clay Center and you shall choose the very best. Nothing's too good for my girl."

"But I won't need a hat when you're gone," she demurred. "Oh, Mike! You haven't minded my not having one? I've tried and tried to save, but stockings cost so much. I haven't had a hat in years. Winters I just wear my fuzzy tam. And in summer nobody needs a hat."

Her shining hair hung almost to her shoulders and Michael took one hand from the wheel to stroke it gently. He was feeling surprisingly sentimental about leaving her. "It's a shame to cover up such hair," he said. "But you have to have something to remember me by. Besides, it's a disgrace, not owning a hat. Whoever saw such a girl?"

Sophie, it seemed, had definite ideas about hats. She shook her head while the fat saleswoman urged turbans and flat pillboxes upon her. "I've thought so much about it," she told Michael. "When you dream about a thing long enough I don't guess you ever do find it." Then: "Oh, Mike!" she breathed suddenly. "Do you think I could have that one?" Her awe, as she pointed, amused and touched him. "All my life I've dreamed of a hat with a plume."

When she tried it on, turning her head this way and that, Michael drew a quick breath of astonishment. The hat was a tiny poke bonnet, with a very small, deep gray-blue plume. Against it, Sophie's skin was luminous, her eyes the smoky tint of the feather.

"Oh, do you suppose it is expensive?" she said.

"You look like a baby Gainsborough," he told her casually, but in his mind astonishment grew. The girl had elegance. Tonight he saw that, with the proper dressing, that

FOR FABULOUSLY GOOD DESSERTS
Jell-O Puddings
Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corporation

Are you in the know?

When a gal's not "one of the gang"—why?

☐ She's shy
☐ She's a glow worm
☐ She's a vacuum cleaner

Shyness is only one reason why a cutie's out of the fun. She may be a glow worm (self-centered). Or a vacuum cleaner (picks up all the dirt). Any answer above can be right. The cure? Learn to get along with others. Good way's to join a dramatic club.

Be a good trouper, whatever the day—for Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Yes, new Kotex has wonder-softness that holds its shape. And the new Kotex Sanitary Belt is adjustable, all-elastic . . . so comfortable!

Do you open bobby pins with—

☐ Your fingernails
☐ Your front teeth
☐ Your left thumb

Why ught "bobbies" tooth and nail? Either approach wrecks enamel. Instead, hold curl with left fingers, bringing up pin with right hand. Open pin with ball of left thumb; keep apart with flesh of right finger . . . the rest is easy. And by the way, why don't you rest easy, concerning certain stubborn worries? Let Kotex rout those poise-wreckers!—with the extra protection you get with Kotex's exclusive safety center. It's accident insurance! You can skylark through "those" days—confidently!

Which improves outsize ankles?

☐ Massage
☐ Spike heels
☐ Roller skating

What with longer skirts, all eyes are riveted to your ankles! Got "steinway" stems? Try this. First, cream hands and ankles. Grasp instep firmly; rub up above ankle, lifting hand between strokes. Faithful massage helps relieve congestion—improve circulation (and ankles, in time). However, it takes no time at all to have the napkin size you want. Quickly as you can say "Kotex"—you can choose from 3 Kotex sizes. Remember, each has flat pressed ends that prevent revealing outlines.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

KOTEX COMES IN 3 SIZES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER outmoded word might describe her perfectly. "We'll take it," he told the clerk.

"And I'll wear it," Sophie announced. The hat looked absurd with her short dress and childish legs. But for once she wore stockings instead of socks. And for once, Michael discovered, he did not care what people thought.

"You look very grand, baby," he said, as they went out of the shop.

She smoothed the plume tenderly. "I do hope it isn't windy," she worried. "But I can take it off in the car. And I've got this box to keep it in." She skipped to keep in step with him. "Oh, Michael, you are so good to me. I don't know what I ever did to deserve you."

There was a street carnival in Clay Center that night and they rode the merry-go-round, Sophie's precious hat in its box, her hair flying up and down; they mounted high in the Ferris wheel while she screamed with laughter and excitement and clung tightly to him. With his arms around her, Michael felt his pulses beat faster. Tonight, for the first time, she had got into his blood. And, though she seemed not to notice, he saw color mount in her thin cheeks.

There is no man so poor as he who has only money.
—EDWIN PUGH.

But, after all, he was to hold himself in check. Going home late at night, he drove into the shadow of the elms along the river and stopped the car. When he snapped off the ignition and turned, she was in his arms and her lips parted under his and clung in long kisses that left him breathless. They had not kissed this way before. She met his need so simply that they seemed to move together in the same dream.

"My little love," he murmured, and for once the phrase tarnished by his use seemed right.

It was he who drew away, to laugh shakily, to light a cigarette with fingers that trembled.

"You are so sweet," he said. Then, because her abandonment to him had frightened him, he made his voice light. "I could eat you with a spoon," he said, and let smoke out in a deep breath. Better not—oh, much better not, he admonished himself. The kid was so innocent. And a man had to keep himself free.

Sophie sat up and rubbed her eyes. But she said nothing. After a while she reached behind her to open her hatbox, to set the new hat carefully upon her head.

Risking a side glance, Michael noticed that her face looked pinched now, almost haggard. He hoped she was not going to cry. Overwrought women who cried always angered him.

She did not cry. When they reached her house she said, "Good-by, Michael. Good luck, dear," and put up her face, as usual exactly as if they were to see each other tomorrow.

It was Michael himself, never able to resist dramatization, who said, "It's good-by for quite a while, sweet. It's been fun, hasn't it?"

He was to remember for some time how her voice sounded when she answered, "It's been heaven." She took hold of one of the buttons of his coat and twisted it in her pointed fingers, looking at it and not at him. "You're the only thing I ever had all to myself. The only thing that wasn't just something somebody else didn't want. All the other girls wanted you, Mike. You've no idea." She giggled a little then, sounding more like the Sophie he knew. "Or yes, I expect you would have, wouldn't you? But anyway, you're the first wonderful thing that ever happened to me." She stood on tiptoe and kissed his cheek. "Thanks for everything," she said.

That autumn in New York was always to remain in Michael's memory as a time of enchantment. Gol Bradford lent him an apartment off lower Fifth Avenue and he was, since he knew no one, able to concentrate himself wholly upon music. He rose early, had coffee and rolls and remained working, with pause only for an occasional cigarette, till mid-afternoon.

After a bath and shave he went forth to walk. Sometimes he tramped across Brooklyn Bridge, turning to stare back at the lighted ramparts of the city he was so soon to conquer. For his confidence was, at this time, surging high. He worked hard with Rosen, proud that the master had reluctantly consented to take him. It was a time of dreams and yet of mastery; a time, too, of hard-won self-approval.

He met Marcia Gallant at a tea at the Maillard School, where he had gone at Rosen's insistence. "Work is good," the old man said. "But it is not good that you see nobody. You will go stale and your concert will suffer."

The concert. Always they thought of that. Even this afternoon Michael drank weak tea, bent over the hands of matrons cascading with lace and fringe, and . . . thought

(Continued on Page 131)

Back and Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on Pages 62 and 63

Vogue Design No. S-4896. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. $1.

Vogue Design No. 6548. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 6415. Blouse. 12 to 20; 30 to 40. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6609. "Easy-to- Make" skirt. 24 to 32 waist. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6584. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 42. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 6551. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4912. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. $1.

Vogue Design No. 6540. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 6469. One-piece dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 6599. "Easy-to-Make" suit-dress. 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 75c.

(Continued from Page 128)

t his concert. Then someone said, "This ichael Thorne, Mrs. Gallant," and he ed up to see a woman, adorned in silver , whose brown-flecked hazel eyes met and held them.

We hear great things of you, Michael ne," Mrs. Gallant said, a hint of hter in her crisp voice. Michael bowed. er gaze plunged into his with a conscious gnition of adventure. Rosen was right. been a monk too long. When Mrs. ant left he fell into step beside her and walked half across the park in the light-gled dusk, engrossed in the game of ing acquainted.

ophie, who had lived in his mind like the singing of a small teakettle, who had ered along beside him in his walks, so gibly there that it had seemed redundant vrite to her, Sophie melted away like a ndly mist in the heat of his intimacy with cia.

Marcia had all the patter of the sophisti-s at her tongue's end. And Marcia was ortant as well as amusing. Giles Bern-n, whom he met at her house, and whose sic criticism set the taste of the town, was more important. The bureau had com-ed arrangements for his concert. It would him no harm to e her friends in udience. Michael, santly conscious imself every min-, was having a rl. And he loved it. ate afternoon be-Marcia's fire, re they could talk ly while he held fingers, kissing m now and then, ame their accepted e. Sometimes he yed for her, and comments were ays complimen-y.

Not like Sophie's, thought, grinning. at scatterbrain known nothing of sic. But, "Oh, that s fuzzy. Like lint der a bed," she d once.

Michael, never one to suffer criticism dly, had been incensed. "What do you an? You're crazy."

She hadn't been intimidated. "I'm not her. Your playing is always crisp and an, sort of. This wasn't. It was fuzzy."

The worst of it was that she'd been right. d he had worked until she—and more, till himself—had been satisfied.

But Marcia stirred no doubts in him. "You're superb," she told him. And Michael nd it pleasant to believe her.

HEIR afternoons always ended with her side him as he played to her in the dusk. he evening came soon when he turned to r at the poignant ending of a Chopin noc-rne. Their kiss was inevitable, and pro-nged. "I knew you'd be like this," she mur-ured, and he kissed her again, savoring the plication of her words. A woman like this et one as an equal in experience.

"My little love," he said, and then was gry at his own ineptitude. "You're arvelous" was better and she slid round, the piano bench, until she faced the room d he could take her in his arms.

From that evening their intimacy pro-ressed swiftly. Her expensive fragrance, r furs, her chic enchanted him. He was roud of his conquest, proud of her friends' miling acceptance. It made him feel a monstrous fine fellow," he admitted to his aving mirror. And if he sometimes wished e did not feel so smothered in perfume and urs, if he sometimes felt as if he'd like to pread his arms and brush Marcia farther way and get some air, still she amused and tirred him.

Once or twice, absorbed in his music, he id wish she were self-contained, like Sophie. Marcia kept you constantly aware of her. Even when she sat quietly, she was always conscious of herself and of you; worse, she made you aware of her consciousness. It was annoying.

Her possessiveness, though flattering, was annoying too. "We'd love to come," she'd say, when someone mentioned a party. "Of course I'm keeping Michael hard at it just now; his concert, you know. But we'll make it somehow."

She was keeping him at it! Michael's mouth would twist as he followed her out of a restaurant. But the stir her appearance always made would soothe his irritation. And he would remind himself that it did him no harm to have Mrs. Peter Gallant, Third, talking about his concert.

FOR himself, he tried not to think about it very much. He was ready, and even Rosen was dourly satisfied. They had wrangled over what he was to play, settling finally upon his beginning with a Scarlatti sonatina, a Bach prelude and fugue. The Appassionata of Beethoven and a group of Debussy preludes were to follow. It would be all right. It had to be.

And then the day of the concert was upon him. Michael, shaving with a hand that shook, felt that it was too soon. He could eat no breakfast. He tried to practice, found it impossible and flung himself out into the street. He walked all morning, lunched vaguely at a restaurant and, in the afternoon, stumbled home exhausted, with some idea of sleep.

He could not sleep, and as he lay staring at the ceiling he discovered that he could remember not one note of his program. Going to the piano, he found that panic shook him. Then, without volition, his fingers fell upon the first notes of the Appassionata and he swept into it.

Marcia found him, sunk fathoms deep, when she let herself in at five with the key he had, reluctantly, given her.

"Darling, I had to come. But what's wrong? You look so odd." Michael suffered himself to be kissed. In his concentration he could hardly remember who she was. "You poor sweet, you're dead," she protested, pulling him along to the sofa and hurrying to mix a drink.

Irritation crawled along his nerves, prickling his skin. He gulped his drink, staring inimically at her, waiting for her to go.

She sat down beside him, sliding her hand under his inert one and turning her fingers to hold his. "I knew you'd be working too hard. That's why I had to come. Oh, Michael, the most exciting thing! We're going away. Tomorrow. To Mexico. The Graysons' yacht is heaven and they're broad-minded ——"

Michael said, "Hah!" and glared at her. "What a fine time you pick. You're crazy. If the concert is a success I ought to get engagements for the entire winter."

"If it's a success!" she laughed. "Of course you'll be a success. You don't imagine I've been sweet to Bernstein for nothing. He knows what I expect of him. But you need a change, Michael. And it will do you no harm to cultivate the Graysons. They have gorgeous parties, you know, and when you've played in their house you can play anywhere."

"A sort of court musician. A traveling minstrel," Michael said unpleasantly. Rage mounted in him. Bernstein knew what was expected of him, indeed!

Marcia seemed not to notice his mood. "We can be together simply all the time, not in snatches as we are here. I told them we could sail by noon."

I Do Not Mourn

By Mae Winkler Goodman

The year will not be stayed . . .
not by an hour
Will it return the blossom to the stem;
And yet I do not mourn the fruit,
the flower,
Nor that man's dreams are stricken down with them,
Knowing how spring will resurrect
the root
To bear again the flower, the round fruit.

If you could see inside your drainpipe

YOU'D BE HORRIFIED to see the filthy sewer muck that collects in your drain. Slimy, greasy muck where nasty sewer germs breed.

Even if you use a liquid disinfectant regularly you cannot rid your drains of this filth. It takes Drāno to remove this mucky refuse as well as the germs that breed in it. Yes, if you could see Drāno at work . . .

You'd use Drāno every week

Drāno, you see, has a special churning, boiling action that loosens muck, flushes it away completely. Your drain is scoured clean, fresh and sanitary!

Remember, too, it's muck that slows drains. And Drāno's grease-chasing action keeps them fast-running. Also opens clogged drains quickly! So—get the smart Drāno habit . . .

. . . Put a tablespoon of Drāno in every drain once a week!

Drāno ®

removes germs as well as the muck where they breed

Harmless to septic tanks: Makes them work better—cuts down odors.

TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.

Copr. 1948, by The Drackett Co.

Something SPECIAL for SIMPLE suppers!

KINGAN'S CORNED BEEF HASH

So easy and quick to fix – so satisfying and delicious!
Kingan's Corned Beef Hash, lightly broiled, and served with scrambled eggs in toast cups, is a super dish that makes any meal a feast.
Generously filled with tender beef, choice white potatoes, and just the right seasoning, this tastier hash comes to you with all the flavor-freshness sealed in by Kingan's exclusive cooking process.
Keep a few cans on hand for quick meals.

Backed by over 100 years of Reliable Meat Processing
KINGAN & CO. Indianapolis, Indiana

"Nice of you to accept for me." Michael slid out from under the arm she had slipped round his shoulders.

"Isn't it incredible? Oh, Michael, just think of whole days together—whole weeks with no boring concerts or tiresome practice, practice, practice." She raised her face to his. "I'll go now. And tonight when you're playing you'll have this to look forward to—that you won't have to work for two whole months."

Michael rose with her, looking her up and down slowly as if he had never seen her before. "It's you who are incredible," he said. "It is incredibly impertinent of you to plan my life for me. As for the tiresome practicing and the blessed absence of concerts—I'm a musician. Hadn't you heard? It's—ah, a business, you know. I don't just drop it to run off and play." The look on her face drove him on. "As for two months of your delightful companionship—well, one may have a taste for occasional caviar, but as a steady diet it just might pall." That's done it, he thought, appalled at his own sudden and ill-timed honesty.

Marcia stared at him, incredulous. "Why, you cheap little piano player," she said at last. "You a musician! You amuse me." She laughed merrily. "Everyone knows I've made you. And I can do plenty about that too. Everyone will howl with laughter at you, going all heavy about your career. Everyone knows you haven't a thing but facility; facility and a cheap charm."

Shaking with nerves, Michael saw her turn, and heard, in a moment, the crash of the door. "Everyone knows ——" she'd said. "Everyone will laugh." . . . Everyone. Suddenly he knew he could not face an audience that night.

Wave upon wave of fear mounted in him. The thought of eyes, eyes everywhere, and the malicious whispering comments of Marcia's world, filled him with fear. Music receded and there remained only the world he had been living in, the world of personalities.

Somehow he dressed. Somehow he walked all the way uptown to the concert hall. The idea of walking across that famous platform appalled him. A hundred times on the way uptown he rehearsed that walk fro wings to the piano. Not a note of mu mained to him.

Somehow he was in the wings and so pushed him out upon the stage. He his progress toward a piano which s miles away. He turned his gaze once the audience. Marcia was there. He bled and she laughed, her laughter malicious in the quiet house. He sa whisper to Bernstein, saw the critic's c grin.

Then he was at the piano. But he not play. He knew that he could not.

It would have been better, he realiz most at once, if he had not. Mechani his fingers had fallen upon the familiar of the sonatina and he was playing Mechanically note followed note. He through the thing like an automaton, fo himself on because he did not know wha to do.

He progressed to Bach with scarc pause. And so, at last, he had plowed thr the first half of his program. When he fin and dropped his hands there was the sibi of many whispers, then a thin spatter c plause. Now he had to get back across mile of platform. He could, having ac plished that, go away and hide himsel ever. But first he must walk.

Brushing past Rosen, he had a glimp the old man's face. And then he was sa the dressing room, with the door closed He sat down at the shaky dressing tabl put his head on his arms. Here at last, little while, he was safe.

When he heard the knock he sat very holding his breath. Rosen, that woul It would be no use talking to him. both knew pianists who had had this c fear. It had ruined them. If you were a of your audience, you were licked. He ered deeper in his chair as the knock again. He heard the door open.

Sophie said, "Mike, what is it? Are sick?" Then her arms were round his sh ders and he was crying, great shattering He turned and buried his face against belt of her coat. Sophie held him and then she said, "There, there." Aft

(Continued on Page 134)

"Mind if I watch?"

FOR FASTER, MORE EVEN COOKING . . .

THE FIRST ALUMINUM COOKWARE WITH COPPER BOTTOMS

Crown Jewel Ware

FOODS COOK IN OWN JUICES

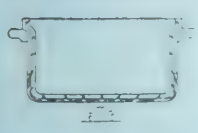
MODERATELY PRICED

SAVES TIME—SAVES FUEL

PERFECTLY BALANCED—EASIER TO HANDLE

RESISTS PITTING—STAYS BEAUTIFUL

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL COOKWARE EVER MADE. 14 handsome pieces of cookware of gleaming copper and silvery aluminum. You'll want to hang them out in sight—they're that beautiful! Specially polished, Crown Jewel Ware won't rust; it resists pitting and staining. And it's perfectly balanced, so even brimful pans are easy to handle.



THE TWO BEST HEAT-CONDUCTING METALS COMBINED. Now, copper joins aluminum to speed heat evenly over the bottom, to hurry heat up the sides. Now, for the first time, you can enjoy the advantages of both metals. No wonder Crown Jewel Ware cooks faster, more efficiently. No wonder it saves fuel, saves kitchen-time!

TRUE FLAVOR-SAVING, "WATERLESS" COOKING. Just wait till you taste the difference. Because of the extra heavy aluminum and the amazing "cushion-cover", the very least amount of water is needed for cooking. Foods baste in their own good juices, retain their precious vitamins and minerals, turn out plump and tender and garden-tasty!

Crown Jewel Ware, Inc., 11-105 Merchandise Mart, Chicago 54, Illinois.

"CRADLED" IN HEAT. No uneven, "blow-torch" heating, no spot-scorching! With Crown Jewel Ware, steady uniform heat flows over the bottom, up the sides.

"HANDCLASP" HANDLES. They fit your hand! Made of thick, sturdy plastic, they stay cool for all surface cooking. With a handy ring for wall-hanging.

EXCLUSIVE "CUSHION-COVER". New type lid rides on a "cushion" of steam. This action increases pressure. Reduces cooking time. Food tastes better.

THEY STAY BEAUTIFUL!

THE Right Tools

FOR EVERY KITCHEN TASK

GAY! MATCHED! STAINLESS!

Ekcoline

KITCHEN TOOLS

From 69c to 98c

NARROW SPATULA	LADLE	WIDE SPATULA
¼-CUP SCOOP	STRAINERS	PIE OR CAKE SERVER
HAMBURGER TURNER	MASHER	2-TINE FORK
BASTING SPOON	WHIP	3-TINE FORK
MIXING SPOON		CAKE TURNER

Non-skid, non-roll plastic hang-up handles. Stainless steel working surfaces, bright, mirror-polished — a cinch to keep clean. So handy, so attractive, in every kitchen.

The Ideal Gift every woman hopes to get. 7-piece set includes wall rack, in handsome gift box, ready for gift wrapping $4.95

9-Piece Set Includes Wall Rack—In Beautiful Gift Box, $6.98	11-Piece Set Includes Wall Rack—In Tube-Shaped Box...$8.98

Prices slightly higher in West

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO 39, ILL.

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

(Continued from Page 132)

while she loosened her arms to stroke his hair back from his forehead, her small hand gentle.

"I can't go back out there. I can't face them, Sophie," he said, over and over.

"It's all right, darling. Never mind them. It's all right," she repeated softly.

"They know I'm no good," he said. "Everybody knows I don't amount to anything. Why . . . I just don't amount to anything," he said again, incredulous, as he sat up at last.

Sophie put out her hand and touched his cheek. "You were scared, weren't you?" she said. "Why, Mike, you were just scared to death."

He nodded. "Out of my head. The faces, Sophie. All those eyes. And now I can't ever face any of them. They know I'm not any good."

"I expect they do," Sophie agreed, to his astonishment. She stood looking at him and Michael thought, suddenly, that he had never before seen tenderness in any woman's face. Desire he had seen, and excitement. But tenderness was new. "You've never been socked before, have you, Mike?" she said. "You never got knocked flat before? It never even occurred to you that you might not 'amount to something,' did it? Well, sometimes it's sort of fun." He snorted and she said, "Oh, I don't mean it's fun getting socked. But I mean it's sort of fun not being anybody special. You don't have to be so cautious all the time when you aren't important. When you don't think you're important you can just say, 'Here goes nothing,' and let things rip. That's fun," she told him.

He shook his head. "You're crazy. You were always nuts. But I've—why, I've missed you," he said, surprised that it was true. He had missed her, though he had not known it. She was like a drink of water when you were thirsty; like fresh air in a stuffy room. "I've missed you every minute," he said, believing it. "And what's fun about being nobody?"

"It's . . . kind of careless and free," Sophie offered. "I heard a man talking about refugees the other night, calling them the dispossessed. And I got thinking about me afterward. I'm not *dis*possessed. I've never had anything to lose. But I don't think I'm important, so I don't think about me, much. I just live. I don't have to live up to some picture I've made of myself. I don't have to toady and be nice to people to make a picture of myself for them, either. So I guess I'm the *un*possessed. I like being it." She looked speculatively at him round the plume of the elegant hat. "Your music isn't you, you know. It's bigger than that. It is something you have to give to people. But you oughtn't to be in it, at all." She stopped, then plunged. "Maybe if you weren't so busy out there on that platform, being Michael Thorne and thinking about being Michael Thorne, you might even give us some music."

It's just as well to forget your old troubles, because there are a lot more coming.

He stared at her and she stared back, her eyes very steady and with the accepting look he had seen in her face before. It came to him that he was relaxed and free with her just because she knew him for exactly what he was.

"The unpossessed," he said. He thought of his life, of how he'd traded on his charm and of what a hard bargain that had been. "The unpossessed. To go out there and not care ——"

"And play to please yourself, Mike, and not a lot of stuffed shirts ——"

"And give it to them cold and make them like it ——"

"What have you got to lose?" she demanded. "Don't you see, darling? When you touch bottom, any way is up."

It was absurd. It made no more sense than Sophie had ever done. But it was as if a great weight rolled off him. It was as if, as Sophie said, having lost everything, he stood alone, and free. It was frightening, but it was stimulating too. If you had nothing to lose, then you had nothing to fear.

He said suddenly, "Who ever heard of them, outside their own families!"

Sophie caught his hands, her eyes shining. "That's it! That's what I mean!"

"I'll give them music, Sophie. Give it to them if I have to cram it down their throats."

"And I'll be there," she told him. "Mike, if you really did miss me, maybe you'll buy me a couple of hot dogs after? On account of the truck driver—oh, he was swell, but he only bought me pie and coffee. And I'm starved."

"The truck driver?"

"The last one. He brought me clear down to the hall." She giggled. "You ought to have seen the Four Hundred stare when I climbed out of an oil truck." She started for the door and Michael saw that she limped, saw her wince as she set her foot down.

"WHAT is it, dear?" He was beside her, holding her.

"Tired," she said. She slid one heel out of her pump and looked down at it with regret. "New stockings too." He saw the great hole, saw that her heel was cut and bleeding where a blister had broken. "Well, I tried and tried to save and yesterday I still had only five dollars," she protested. "I bought my concert ticket weeks ago, but I don't get paid till next Saturday. So I rode on the bus five dollars' worth and then I walked. Oh, I got a lot of rides. And the last truck driver said, 'So long, sister. Give my love to your boy friend.' And all the people coming in to the concert laughed. And it was fun."

"You walked," Michael said stupidly.

"Well, it was my big night. Even if you never knew it. And you never would if it had been like I dreamed, with people standing up to cheer and everything. Oh, Mike, I'd have burst with pride."

"You walked to hear me play," Michael said. "Your poor feet ——"

There was a knock on the door. A voice said, "Five minutes, Mr. Thorne."

"I've got to run," Sophie said. She lifted her face and Michael put his hands on her shoulders, holding her off to look at her for a long moment.

"Bless you. I'll buy you the biggest steak in town. You'll wait?"

"Don't I always?"

He stood still, filling his lungs with a deep breath that pulled courage up from inside him. She had walked and thumbed rides and probably carried her precious hat in its box, to hear him play. And she would always be gallant and silly and gay and seldom make sense, and be the unpossessed until she died. Michael Thorne, untouched and untouchable, felt his throat ache.

He walked out upon the stage and, for the first time in his spoiled young life, he had forgotten himself completely.

As he sat with his fingers on the keys, waiting for silence, his eyes found Sophie, down in front. Warmth spread in him as she walked into his heart and made herself at home there.

She's my girl, he thought, surprised that it should have been she all the time and he not know it. She hasn't beauty or chic or brilliance. Not anything really. Not anything except loyalty and endurance and courage, he added.

"I'd have been proud," she had said. A sudden impulse overwhelmed him. To follow it would be impertinent. It would be unheard-of. But it was what he most wished to do.

Why not? "What have you got to lose?" he could hear Sophie say. He began playing and, at the first notes of the Scarlatti sonatina, a murmur swept the audience. Then, as the quality of his playing became apparent, the house fell silent. With the half-smile on his face, Michael played straight through the first half of his program. And he knew, with a quiet certainty, that seldom had that old hall heard better music.

Confident, now, of his audience, he gave them the Appassionata. The house rose to him when he had finished. Those in the back rows began coming down the aisles toward

(Continued on Page 136)

Gibson

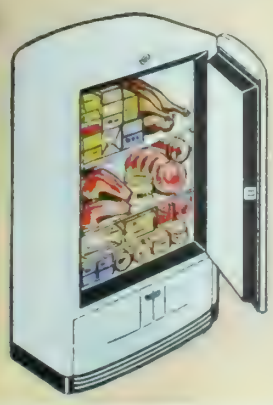
WITH UPS-A-DAISY*

COOKS EVERY MEAL EVERY DAY

Automatically!

AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC

BREAKFAST—Set Automatic Timer to control Convenience Outlet—plug in your coffee maker night before; place prunes and cereal and water in Kookall night before, turn Kookall to Simmer. Your breakfast will be ready when you arise. It's economical, too.



LUNCH—Set Automatic Timer to control Kookall—place in Kookall complete meal, like Boston baked beans, frankfurters and brown bread. Go out for morning shopping trip and come back to your lunch done to a turn.

DINNER—Set Automatic Timer to control Oven. Place in oven standing rib roast, potatoes, squash and apple pie. Go visiting or take a carefree afternoon drive—come home to your meal all ready for you.

SNACK—No need to interrupt your card game and leave the party to prepare the party snack. Just set Automatic Timer to control Oven before the party begins. For example, place chicken en casserole in oven—it'll be ready for you and your guests when you're ready to eat.

WRITE GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY FOR COMPLETE INFORMATION ON AUTOMATIC MEALS

GIBSON HOME FREEZER—
upright design for downright convenience. Saves floor space. Saves shopping. Saves money.

GIBSON DOUBLE FEATURE REFRIGERATOR—with cold modulation. Big enclosed Freez'r Locker for frozen foods; Fresh'ner Locker for fresh foods.

* UPS-A-DAISY!

Only Gibson Electric Ranges have UPS-A-DAISY. First, this means 4 surface cooking units. Second, by lowering the large back unit, you have a deep-well cooker. Either combination in a jiffy—automatic, too. Turns itself on and off.

Gibson also provides 2 balanced-heat insulated Ovens; Concealed Oven Vent; High Speed, Waist-High Broiler; Super Speed Cooking and 10 other famous features. See the New Gibsons at your nearby Gibson Dealer's.

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY

GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

Copyright 1948, Gibson Refrigerator Co.

Graciously Yours

Choose one of Reed & Barton's beautiful sterling patterns for your own . . . and have a future noted for gracious entertaining. Constant use only adds to the imperishable beauty of Reed & Barton Solid Silver, giving it the soft, rich patina that distinguishes really fine sterling.

HELPFUL HOSTESS HINTS—for [illegible] and sensible hostess: "How To Be A Gracious Hostess" sent on request to Reed & Barton, [illegible], Taunton, Massachusetts

IT'S SMART TO CHOOSE THE FINEST STERLING

Reed & Barton
STERLING

FRENCH RENAISSANCE
POINTED ANTIQUE
FRANCIS FIRST
MARLBOROUGH

GEORGIAN ROSE
STERLING

A Group of the World's Most Beautiful Sterling Patterns

(Continued from Page 134)

the stage, and Michael glanced at Sophie as he bowed.

She had stopped clapping and stood, her hands clasped against her breast, her [illegible] face, under the elegant hat, lighted as if a fire burned behind it. Michael saw, too, that Bernstein was clapping and calling "Bravo" while Marcia stood motionless.

Michael walked to the front of the stage and waited, smiling, for silence. When they saw that he would speak, the applause died.

"Thank you for your forbearance," he said. "You see, when I began I did not know that the most important member of my audience had come. I . . . was not at my best."

It was as if he took them separately and warmly into his confidence and they loved it. After some laughter the applause began again and the cries of "Encore, Encore."

Before he turned to the piano, Michael made his small bow directly to Sophie. She looked, he thought, oddly distinguished in the hat with a plume. But it was at her blistered feet that he laid his music and his heart. He sat quiet for a moment and then began playing Sophie's marching song. He knew that what he played was, from now on, their marching song against the world.

AS RUSSIA SEES US

(Continued from [illegible])

happen to this and to millions of other American workers' families when the inevitable crisis [depression] explodes?

"Things will be different after the Great American Depression," Russian writers tell their people repeatedly. The devastating depression to come, they believe, will be the turning point in the Communist World Revolution. Certainly there is no greater challenge to clean our own house and to move toward more freedom, rather than toward less, than the Russian example. If the Russian magazine were to reprint the entire How America Lives series (it has run, monthly, over eight years, portraying the lives of more than 100 families), its readers would gain an enlightening cross-sectional view of American life.

As he reads Gushchin's version of The Sullivan Struggle, Ivan, in Russia, must often scratch his head. Why—if the disclosure of these conditions is inimical to the interests of the exploiting clique for which he has been assured the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is the propaganda mouthpiece—why is the magazine permitted to publish them? Accustomed to writing according to governmental prescription, Russian writers can visualize our press only as working under like orders from some hidden sinister source. Ia. Gushchin comes to this conclusion:

The magazine printed the article on the Sullivans in March when it was apparent that the turnpikes of the antilabor Taft-Hartley Act could not check the indignation of the toilers in connection with rising prices and a progressing decline in the standard of living. The U.S.A. was standing on the edge of a new wave of strikes. And actually, in the middle of March, a month-long strike of several hundreds of thousands of miners began. A great strike of railroad workers was prevented only by government [illegible]ce. In May about 75,000 Chrysler wor[illegible]ed a strike. A strike of 250,000 workers of General Motors was voted (Tom Sullivan works in a General Motors plant).

The LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, in detail and with relish, depicts how difficult it was for the Sullivans at the end of 1945 during the General Motors strike which lasted four months. This motif runs like a red thread thro[illegible] whole article and it is clear that the aim of the magazine is to frighten families like the S[illegible] with the weight of a strike.

This snapper ending, which claps the lid on the pot before the reader can get a good sniff of what's cooking, makes the Russian article the astonishing piece it is. As every editor—even the editors of Little Flame—must know, the How America Lives series articles are planned as long as a year in advance and actual work begun about six months before publication. If any editor could foresee happenings six months in advance and plan a magazine's contents with [illegible]

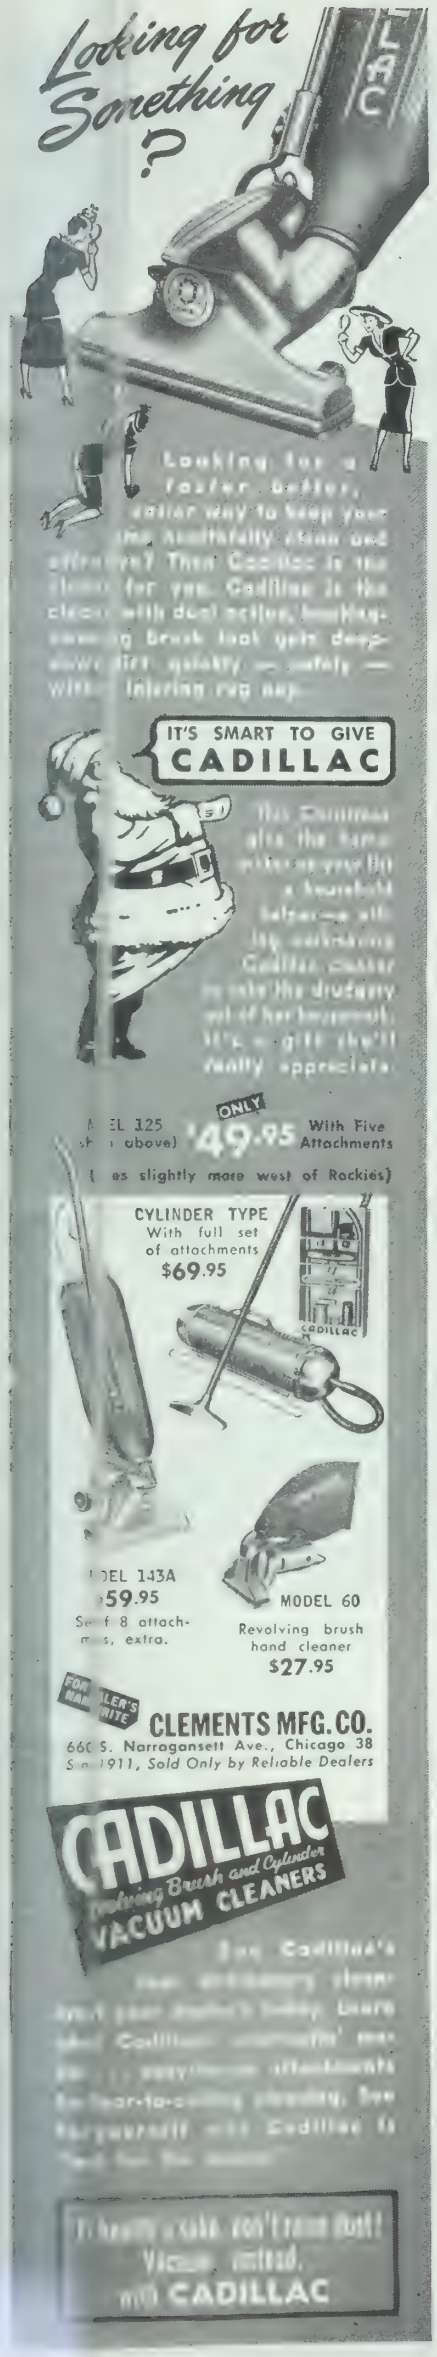
October hae-November

When Good Frie's get together—
You'll usually fin that HASKO TRA
Add Cheer in Ar[illegible] eather

A Wiener Roast o Tea-for-Two . . .
Or friendly Sip n Bite . . .
HASKO TRAYS-Yes, TUMBLERS
Will make your wk seem light

So get a set or two xt time
You're in your favite store
Just use 'em once- he chances are,
You'll wish you'd [illegible]rchased more.

Beauty unsurpass[illegible] Designs that fa[illegible]cinate! Quality th[illegible] has made Hask[illegible] the first name in Trays . . . and NO[illegible] sparkling HASKO [illegible]UMBLERS wi[illegible] designs to match e[illegible]y HASKO TRA[illegible]



See both Trays a[illegible] Tumblers at lea[illegible]ing Department, G[illegible] or Jewelry Store[illegible] . . . Specially gift-packaged, individuall[illegible] or in combination, or greater beauty[illegible] safe delivery.

HASKELITE MANUACTURING CO[illegible]
Dept. 143, 135 S. La Sle St., Chicago [illegible]

HASKO 4 pc.
LAP TRAYS
Chinese Design—(Red)
Matching Tumblers—8 in[illegible]

hasko TRAYS
AND ACCESORIES

he would be one whiz of an editor. Yet that is what he would have to do if he is to cooperate with the General Motors Corporation in coercing their workers to remain on the job when Chrysler workers strike. The fact that it is difficult to maintain a chummy connivance with the 21,967 preferred and the 408,408 common stockholders of General Motors, or that President Charles E. Wilson and his board of directors are not as familiar with women's magazines as they perhaps should be, would make no impression on Ia. Gushchin. Apparently he would overestimate even a woman's power to see into the future, but he underestimates the power of honest writing. —G. M. WHITE

How to Get Married

BY WEBB B. GARRISON

NOT a word is spoken during the wedding ceremony of the Negritos of the South Pacific. The youth who has made up his mind to "get it over with" simply takes his beloved by the hand and leads her to the chief of the tribe. That worthy knocks their heads together, and thereby unites them in marriage.

Most Korean marriages are arranged by the parents, and the bride and groom do not meet until the wedding ceremony. Even then, the lucky girl is denied the privilege of feasting her eyes upon the august person of her lord and master—for before the ceremony her eyelids are gummed together. The seal is not broken until the second day afterward.

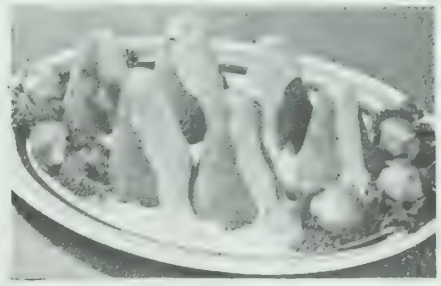
Rural Serbia has no newspapers in which engagements may be announced. So when a match has been definitely arranged, the bride-to-be embroiders the name of her fiancé on her apron in bold letters. She then frequents the village market until she is sure everyone has seen the apron.

The custom of protecting the bride's feet from contact with the ground is widespread. Its most unusual form is found in the Cook Islands, where the young men of a village lie face down on the ground to form a living carpet over which the bride walks from her hut to that of the groom.

It was long customary for the English bride to weep profusely as she took the marriage vows. The practice grew up in medieval times, when it was commonly believed that a witch could shed only three tears, and those from the left eye. The swain whose bride cried freely was thus assured that he was not taking a witch to wife.

The formal wedding ceremony of strictly orthodox Jews is concluded by the smashing of a wineglass, meaning that "as this glass can never be rejoined, so may the union never be broken."

Among the natives of French West Africa, a girl is not considered ready for marriage until she has proved herself capable of reproduction by giving birth to a baby. The child is formally adopted by her parents and reared by them.



In most of Central Europe, villagers preserve the time-honored custom of throwing crockery at the home of newlyweds. For seven days after the ceremony, the bride and groom are likely to hear dishes crashing against the front door at any time of day or night. It's supposed to bring them luck!

In many parts of the world, marriages are solemnized in the kitchen. The Javanese consider a man and woman to be married when they have eaten maize pudding from the same plate. Eating together was a common type of marriage ceremony in both old Russia and Scandinavia. Peasants in the outlying districts of Brazil still affirm that a couple may be married by drinking brandy together. THE END

SAVES food money every day!

SAVES money on baby food! Makes delicious food for baby from same foods you serve your family!

SAVES money on meat! Grinds meats for croquettes; makes jar of spread from 2 wieners, 1 pickle!

SAVES money on vegetables! Makes soups from leftover vegetables. Cost? Only a few pennies!

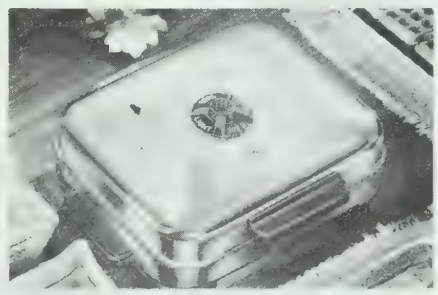
SAVES money on fruit! Makes pint of juice from one orange; delicious drinks from all fruits.

KM Liquidizer

PAYS FOR ITSELF IN NO TIME AT ALL!

Here's how! You need never throw away one bit of food! Almost magically, your Liquidizer turns bits of meat, cheese, vegetables into sandwich spreads; makes inexpensive mayonnaise; grinds, chops, grates—blends bar drinks; does countless chores no other appliance can do!

Does every job—in seconds!



Easy as 1-2-3! One, flip switch; two, put in ingredients; three, pour out the delicious results!

Modern Magic—here's some more! See them at your K-M store

K-M Corn Popper—Completely automatic! Pour in oil (measuring cup comes with it), watch corn pop! Ovenproof glass top, aluminum base. For deep-fat frying, too!

K-M Quad Waffle Baker—Makes 4 waffles in any of 3 shades. Signal light, current go off when waffles are ready. New grid (sold separately) fits baker...makes 4 sandwiches!

Knapp-Monarch Co.

ST. LOUIS 16, MISSOURI

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Mfrs. of Sparklets, Repel-A-Mist, Magik Mist. K-M Appliances also manufactured in Canada

ACTUAL PHOTOGRAPH OF A JANE PARKER FRUIT CAKE

M-m-m... U-m-m! Imagine!
Over 2/3 of every cake is fruit and nuts—
M-m-m... U-m-m... Yummy!

Jane Parker
AMERICA'S MOST POPULAR
FRUIT CAKE
AT ALL A&P FOOD STORES
MADE BY THE BAKERS OF QUALITY-RICH MARVEL BREAD

A&P

Come into my Kitchen

By Georgia Feeney

NO. 3 SERIES BY HOUSEWIVES

The day-by-day meals of actual housewives, cooking in their own kitchens, who have agreed to share the benefits of their experience with other JOURNAL readers. They make no pretensions, but do the best jobs they know how to do, to provide their families with healthful food, frequently on limited budgets.

PHOTO BY STUART

Icing a cake can be a family affair—good fun, and training for Bron and Griff.

WHEN we were first married, a neighbor called and we talked about budgets. "Ten dollars a week for food!" she expostulated. "You'll eat like kings." Only six years ago, you know—hardly even the good old days!

There are four of us now, and one large dog, and we struggle along on a hundred a month for food and most emphatically don't eat like kings! It's more headwork and foodwork than fun, buying and preparing meals these days. It is a challenge. Bob and I, and Griff and Bron and Woody, too, are meat eaters by choice. In our home daddy used to carve the Sunday roast and just keep on carving. The dog got the bone. Meat loaf and tuna fish were economy dishes to be served as seldom as possible. Bob's father fancied lamb chops or a small steak for breakfast. Don't we all?

No, it isn't fun any more. But we've grown to like our own crazy system for beating the budget man. Theoretically, it's possible to spend the $100 food money over the four weeks and eat reasonably well the whole time—inexpensive ground-meat dishes two or three times a week and substitutes the rest of the time. We've turned our backs on that dull existence. We eat very well the first two weeks in the month and very poorly the last two.

You don't think you'd like that? Well, let's say you decide to try our perverse system. Lots of people do it inadvertently, of course, but the returns in satisfaction are much greater if you do it on purpose.

You're sitting at your desk with your money, a vitamin chart and the store ads. You've decided to buy food values rather than quantity of food, and give up a lot of little things in order to have a few extra-special big things. You'll have spinach every night in the week if there's a ten-cent sale on frozen spinach, and your breakfasts are high in vitamins and calories and include plenty of cereals. You use only 100 per cent wheat breads for everything; margarine, of course; and you get the lowest grade of milk unless there's someone in the family who actually needs all that extra butterfat. You bake big potatoes and boil little ones and learn to eat the skins. You rarely serve bacon, or fruits and vegetables that are low in vitamins.

The Way We Do It

● Our deadliest household battle is not against dirt—it's against clutter. Best solution we've had is the recent purchase of two huge four-drawer filing cabinets, one for Bob and one for me. Wonderful for clippings, letters, magazines, all kinds of legitimate storage.

● I use the new sneezeless, mild "soapless" detergent not only for dishes and silks and nylons, but also for windows and baths and washing hair! At five o'clock I put Griff and Bron waist-high in glorious bubbles, and, believe it or not, by the time their dinner is ready they're soaked clean! Yes, even the grimy knees and heels. No ring in the tub, either.

● Three or four times a year I clean all our floors and tables and low bookcases and record shelves and then wipe on a coat of clear plastic lacquer. It doesn't have to be polished and can stand scrubbing, but it's truly clear and doesn't tint things yellow as varnish sometimes does. And it's hot dish and alcohol and everything else proof.

● We keep a Europe Box upstairs and down. Clothing the children grow out of, old-look coats and dresses, woolens, blankets we don't absolutely need are piled in the upstairs box as we come across them. We keep the box out in plain view so as soon as it's full we'll be sure to mail it. Then we start another. The downstairs Europe Box is for food. If we waited to save up some the day would never come, so instead every time we shop we buy an extra five pounds of sugar or a few pounds of shortening and stick it in the box—when it's full, off it goes! Even Grim Weeks wouldn't seem very grim in Europe.

These things don't seem so important when twice a month you can stick a big ham or leg of lamb in the oven and smell it cooking all afternoon. The first week in the month, buy a big roast. You'll plan to get at least four or five meals from it. So that you won't get tired of leftover meat, plan to cut off enough for half of the meals in advance. If it's a ham, freeze about three center slices. With pork, you might cut off enough for a Chinese dinner.

This week we'll take a leg of lamb. Cut off four chops—for the second week. (The second week you'll get another roast, and freeze part of it for the third week. That way only the orphan fourth week is left.) Then cut off an extra large piece for Shish Kabob. Roast the part that's left, have sandwiches the next day, and use the rest for Shepherd's Pie.

We always have liver once a week, too—not because we like it, but because it's such a good buy from a nutritional point of view. Beef and pork and lamb are as good as calves' liver for this purpose. Ground round of beef or frozen fish makes one or two dinners. Of course you know lots of ground-round dishes, but Norwegian Potato Soup is one of our favorites, and maybe it will be new to you. That leaves one night for macaroni or an egg dish.

Plan to have your husband bring guests on regular nights—during those first two weeks, need we add?—and plan the menus accordingly. Our nights are Monday and Thursday, because Bob hasn't early classes the next morning—your days will probably be the conventional week-end big-dinner times. (On company nights we have dinner at seven after the children are in bed, and they have their main meal at noon. Other days luncheons are very simple.) One nice thing about this system is that invitations for dinner usually arrive during that last week of beans and greens!

You may notice our menus are rather overburdened with tomato juice, applesauce and blueberry products. That's because we canned enough of those to last all winter. We will probably wish we had more!

Here are our menus for a Good Week, also for a Grim Week. Not so grim, either, when you

Here's "Go" for the Holiday Hustle

6-way nourishment

from ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

PROTEIN
To help build and maintain healthy body tissues

NIACIN
Helps keep tissues healthy and prevent pellagra

RIBOFLAVIN
An important vitamin for children's growth

THIAMINE
(Vitamin B_1) For healthy nerves, normal appetite

FOOD ENERGY
To sustain the pace of modern living

IRON
Helps build the red blood needed for health

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION

Nut bread, fruit bread, muffins . . . delicious breads are practically endless . . . at stores or to bake at home.

BREAD IS always in the foreground when it comes to the food energy you need these hurry-up days. So satisfying, so inexpensive, so easy to serve in dozens of ways. It's our cheapest source of food energy.

But that's not all! Read those flags up there. From modern enriched bread and from other foods made with enriched flour you get 6-way nourishment . . . six really valuable contributions to the all-round balanced diet you and your family need for buoyant health.

"IS BREAD FATTENING?" Not a bit more so than any other food of equal energy content. Nutritionists point out that the carbohydrates of bread are easily converted into energy which is then used by the body as needed.

HOT FROM YOUR OVEN come those homemade biscuits, muffins, cakes, cookies that delight your family and guests. At your grocer's, always buy flour labeled "Enriched" . . . be sure of that added 6-way nourishment.

SERVE PLENTY OF BREAD . . . every day: at mealtime, at snack time. It's delicious, and so economical. There's a panel that says "Enriched" on enriched white bread. Look for it on every loaf you buy.

WHAT EXCITING VARIETY your baker offers! New treats in breads, rolls, cookies! And they're all highly nutritious when enriched. Ask your baker when you buy, "Is this enriched?"

WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

Compliments of Wheat Flour Institute
309 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

think, that it is much better nutrition than lots of people whose food bills are higher ever get.

Good Week

MONDAY LUNCHEON

Chilled Tomato Juice
Cream of Potato Soup with Crackers
Frozen Apricots with Lettuce and Cottage Cheese
Milk

MONDAY DINNER

(Be prepared for guests)
*Shish Kabob on Skewers
Steamed Brown Rice
Bowl of Water Cress with small dishes of vinegar to dip into Rye Bread and Margarine
Cheese and Fruit
Coffee

Shish Kabob. Cut 1 pound lamb into 1-inch cubes. Marinate cubes in a mixture of 1 tablespoon salad oil, ¾ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Let stand in refrigerator at least 3 hours. Cut 2 large firm tomatoes into quarters or sixths. Peel and slice onions and cut 1 green pepper into 1-inch squares. Wash ½ pound mushroom caps. Save stems for next day's lunch. Alternate marinated lamb and vegetables on skewers (we make ours from old coat hangers). Season and broil 5 minutes. Turn and broil another 5 minutes on the other side.

A little stone often upsets a big cart. —DANISH PROVERB.

TUESDAY LUNCHEON

Grapefruit Juice
French Toast with Creamed Mushroom Stems (left over from Shish Kabob)
Lettuce Salad
Milk and Cookies

TUESDAY DINNER

Roast Lamb with Mint Jelly
(save all the gravy for Shepherd's Pie)
Peas and Carrots Baked Potatoes
Salad of Romaine and Endive
Blueberries and Cookies
Coffee and Milk

WEDNESDAY LUNCHEON

Cold-Lamb Sandwiches with Lettuce
Applesauce and Cookies
Milk

WEDNESDAY DINNER

Tomato Juice
Beef Liver with Fried Onions
Baked Potatoes Spinach
Applesauce Cake with Orange Frosting
Coffee and Milk

THURSDAY LUNCHEON

Tomato Juice
Liver Pie (leftover)
Spinach (leftover)
Applesauce Cake
Milk

THURSDAY DINNER

(Be prepared for guests)
Tomato Juice
*Shepherd's Pie
Broccoli
Blueberry Muffins and Margarine
Spongecake with *Easy Mocha Frosting
Coffee

Shepherd's Pie. Cut up leftover leg of lamb and heat it in leftover gravy. Chop finely ½ medium-sized onion and 1 small green pepper, seeded. Mix together. Add a dash of garlic salt and, if you like, a little red wine. Place in casserole and top with freshly mashed potatoes. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., for 25 minutes.

Easy Mocha Frosting. This is best if you have an electric mixer. Cream 2 tablespoons soft butter or margarine and ¾ cup confectioners' sugar. Add ¼ cup cream alternately with 1 cup more confectioners' sugar, creaming thoroughly. Then add 3 tablespoons cocoa and 1 teaspoon instant-coffee powder and beat until smooth. Flavor with 1 teaspoon vanilla and add a few more tablespoons confectioners' sugar to make it of good consistency for spreading.

FRIDAY LUNCHEON

*Vegetable Soup
Biscuits and Honey
Milk

Vegetable Soup. Made from leftover vegetables and water they were cooked in, plus can of tomatoes and a few bouillon cubes

FRIDAY DINNER

*Norwegian Potato Soup with Meat Balls
Pumpernickel with Cheese
Blueberry Ice Cream
Coffee and Milk

Norwegian Potato Soup. Peel 8 medium-sized potatoes and cut into quarters. Peel and cut 2 large onions into eighths. Wash and dice 1 bunch celery. Cook vegetables in 6 cups meat stock or stock made from bouillon cubes and water, adding 1½ teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Simmer 1 hour. Add 2 small or 1 large bunch carrots, scraped and sliced into rounds. Cook until tender. Add 1 beaten egg, 2 tablespoons milk and ½ teaspoon salt to 1 pound ground round steak. Shape into small balls, not quite so big as walnuts. Bring soup to a boil. Drop in the meat balls and cook 5 or 6 minutes. Reseason soup to taste. Serve in large soup dishes with lots of chopped parsley.

The colorful soup with orange carrot rounds, green parsley and rich brown meat balls makes an appetizing-looking dish. It's also very, very good and Bob says that to his taste it's even better the second day than the first.

SATURDAY LUNCHEON

Potato Soup (leftover)
Spongecake Blueberries
Milk

SATURDAY DINNER

Tomato Juice
Cheese Soufflé with Mushroom Sauce
Green Beans Baked Potatoes
Applesauce on Gingerbread
Coffee and Milk

SUNDAY BREAKFAST

(Late)
Orange Sections
Oatmeal with Milk
Fluffy Omelet
Blueberry Muffins
Coffee and Milk

SUNDAY SUPPER

(Early)
*Chile Con Carne on Rice
Green Salad
Fruit and Cheese
Coffee and Milk

Chile Con Carne. Peel and slice 1 large onion. Brown in 3 tablespoons shortening or salad oil. Add 1 pound ground round steak and 1 green pepper, chopped. Brown, stirring as meat cooks. Add 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes, 1½ teaspoons salt, 3 whole cloves, 1 bay leaf, crushed, and 2 tablespoons chili powder. (We like about 3, but that is pretty hot.) Cover and cook over low heat about 2 hours. Then add 1 No. 2 can red chili kidney beans and, if you like, ½ cup red wine. If you do not use wine and the mixture seems too thick, add a little water. Simmer 5 minutes more until well heated. Reseason to taste. Serve on fluffy cooked rice. This seems like an awfully starchy combination, but the bland rice is a good foil for the flavorful chili and you don't need to have any other starches in this meal.

Now for that Grim Week that comes between Good Weeks. It really is fun, you're getting all that satisfaction out of feeling economical and yet you can look forward to another roast next week!

Grim Week

MONDAY LUNCHEON

Pea Soup
Peanut-Butter Sandwiches
Cookies Milk

(Continued on Page 142)

Special Recipe

for families who "don't like hash"

Stuffed Peppers—Hunt Style

2 green peppers
1 (1 lb) can of hash . . . or
2 cups homemade hash mixture
3 tbsp. fine dry bread crumbs
1 tsp. horseradish
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce

Cut peppers in half, lengthwise, remove seeds, and cook in boiling salted water 5 minutes. Remove from water. Drain. Mix hash, bread crumbs, and horseradish. Fill into pepper shells. Pour Hunt's Tomato sauce into greased shallow baking dish. Place peppers in dish. Bake in hot oven (400°F.) 30 minutes or until browned. Five minutes before removing from oven, baste peppers with sauce. Makes 4 servings.

Hunt-for the best

Hunt's Fruits • Vegetables
Tomato Products
Hunt Foods, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.

IF YOUR FAMILY turns "thumbs down" to hash—here's your big opportunity! . . .

Just serve 'em Stuffed Peppers, Hunt Style, and watch the hash disappear like magic.

That's a good thing about Hunt's Tomato Sauce. It transforms so many low-cost, everyday dishes into family favorites. It adds delicious flavor that folks love.

For Hunt's is rich and thick and flavory. All tomato—kettle-simmered with fine spices and seasonings. All ready to use . . .

Yet it costs you only a few cents a can!

So keep Hunt's Tomato Sauce on hand always. Cook it into your stews, spaghetti, meat loaf, rice, fish, soups, eggs. Add it to gravies, sauces, and leftovers.

Better get six cans right away! For just a few cents a can.

The wonderful cooking sauce from California

Women like this will be HAPPY!

So will all the many people kept awake, made nervous or jittery by the caffein in regular coffee! For . . .

THE NEW IMPROVED SANKA COFFEE

—the "drink-it-and-sleep" coffee—now has a new, marvelous flavor to delight lovers of fine coffee! It has a truly wonderful taste—yet it's still 97% caffein-free!

FINER FLAVOR in Sanka Coffee is due to a brand-new flavor-saving process . . . a miracle method of taking the caffein out of the coffee.

Try Sanka Coffee today. See for yourself what a great flavor-improvement has been made. Sanka comes in two forms: Ground for drip or percolator; Instant Sanka, made instantly in the cup. Products of General Foods.

(Continued from Page 140)

MONDAY DINNER

Creamed Eggs on Toast
Spinach
Blueberry Muffins
Coffee and Milk

TUESDAY LUNCHEON

Onion Soup
Cheese and Toast
Blueberry Muffins, Toasted
Milk

TUESDAY DINNER

Boiled Pinto Beans with Tomatoes
Bread and Honey
Coffee and Milk

WEDNESDAY LUNCHEON

Tomato Juice
Poached Eggs on Toast
Milk

WEDNESDAY DINNER

Hashed Brown Potatoes
Raw Carrots
Peanut-Butter Cookies
Coffee and Milk

THURSDAY LUNCHEON

Hot Milk Toast with Cinnamon and Sugar Applesauce
Milk

THURSDAY DINNER

Macaroni and Cheese
Stewed Tomatoes
Applesauce Cake
Coffee and Milk

FRIDAY LUNCHEON

Potato Salad
Raw Carrot Sticks
Applesauce Cake
Milk

FRIDAY DINNER

Broiled Frozen Fish
Steamed Carrots Parsley Potatoes
Prunes
Milk

SATURDAY LUNCHEON

Cottage Cheese
Canned Apricots
Bread and Apple Butter
Milk

SATURDAY DINNER

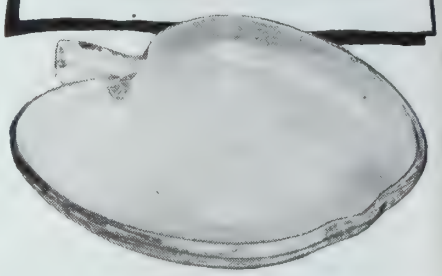
Baked Beans
Brown Bread and Cheese
Green Salad
Blueberries
Milk

SUNDAY LUNCHEON

Tomato Sandwiches
Green Salad
Gingerbread
Milk

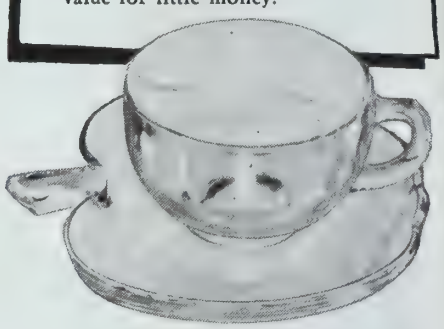
SUNDAY DINNER

Chinese Rice
(Rice with peas, ½ can diced luncheon meat and 2 scrambled eggs)
Applesauce on Gingerbread
Coffee and Milk



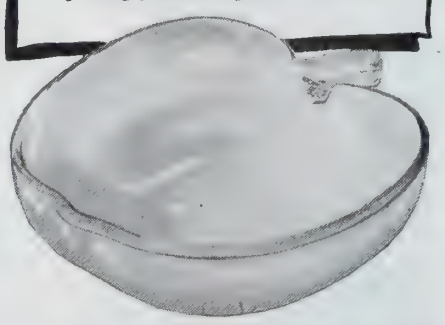
Among our most superinexpensive dinners are dehydrated pea soup with frankfurters cut up in it, a cup of dried beans simmered with a can of tomatoes and some salt pork or bacon or a ham bone you've been hoarding; plain spaghetti with lots of margarine and chopped chives; tuna-noodle casseroles that are mostly noodles. Carrot-and-potato steamed pudding is a surprise dessert! Pancakes and molasses, fried potatoes and hominy, cheese mush and fried scrapple have made us many a supper. Cold canned tomatoes on toast aren't bad if you pour over them a hot, tasty cheese mixture. Top this with bacon if you have it, or put a few strips of bacon on top of some canned baked beans, blended in a casserole with some catchup and brown sugar. Most of all, serve all kinds of spaghetti sauces—we've had it with everything, from soybeans to sardines!

And you can always dream of a week from now, when the beautiful smell of roast lamb with a clove or garlic in it will be filling your kitchen. THE END



Genuine Orchard Crystal!

Beautiful "Apple Design" Now Available at Popular Low Prices



8-Piece Apple 8 in. Salad Plate. Exquisite, water-clear crystal for parties, teas, cozy get-togethers. And at such an unusually low price.

16-Piece Cup and Saucer Set. You get 8 cups—8 saucers. Lovely enough for every occasion. Big value for little money.

8-Piece Apple Dessert Set. Designed by experts for ice cream, fruits, cereals, sea food—and surprisingly low in price.

These Beautiful "Apple Design" Sets Now at Popular Prices.

You get the same rich "Apple Design" . . . same glass . . . same quality . . . same workmanship as before the war, because public demand is so great these sets can still be produced at prices everybody can afford. Lovely on your table—yet easy to wash and dry. Easy to replace too, for it's always in stock. Sold by all leading department stores and gift shops.

NEWLAND, SCHNEELOCH, AND PIEK, INC.
1107 Broadway, New York

ORCHARD CRYSTAL

Penny Singleton

"Blondie" of the screen and radio

"America's No. 1 Housewife" uses Thermic Ray copper-bottom stainless steel cookware with the exclusive Norris Vapor Seal

Modern Thermic Ray cookware is the choice of "America's No. 1 Housewife" because, in no other line of cooking utensils can you find the outstanding advantages of

- Lastingly-beautiful, easy-to-clean stainless steel.
- Fuel-conserving, heat-distributing copper bottom.
- Quicker-cooking, flavor and vitamin protecting vapor seal.

Five-in-One Combination Cooker

Qt. Vapor eal Saucepan

12" Vapor Seal Dutch Oven

JUST COMPARE

FEATURE	NORRIS WARE	OTHER BRANDS
Ease of vegetable draining	YES
Will "nest" for easy storing	YES
Air-cooled handles	YES
Exclusive Norris Vapor Seal for
• Low water cooking	YES
• Low heat cooking	YES
• Faster cooking	YES
• Retaining minerals	YES
• Retaining flavor	YES
Scientifically proportioned for
• Proper heating	YES
• Fuel saving	YES

VAPOR SEAL Thermic Ray NorrisWare

T BETTER DEALERS EVERYWHERE

T.M. REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. BY NORRIS STAMPING AND MANUFACTURING CO., LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

WHAT MEN NOTICE ABOUT WOMEN

(Continued from Page 10)

or not. The next thing I try to notice is whether she thinks I am attractive or not."

—Michael Arlen

"For me there are two ways of looking at a woman, either as a picture or as a personality. In a restaurant, on the street and in public places I look at women primarily as pictures. In business and social groups I look on women primarily as personalities. There is no obvious key to a woman's personality. Her conspicuous characteristics may be completely misleading. Personality is measured by the extent to which a person has developed habits which interest and serve other people. What a woman does to others is far more revealing than what she does to herself."

—Henry C. Link

"At all pretty girls
I'm delighted to look,
But I always look twice
If they're reading a book."

—Howard Collins

"Mood is very important—sometimes a woman's attitude changes her entire appearance. I've seen women look so radiant you aren't aware of what kind of clothes they're wearing or whether they're blond or brunet."

—Guy Lombardo

"Very early in the game I divide those women whose role is being attractive from those who are more at peace with themselves and meet you as people rather than as manikins. The manikins are fine in their place, but an attractive woman who doesn't feel that she's entitled to a life pass to the ball park merely because she exists—she's a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Most of the time that's the first thing I notice, but if once in a while it's beaten out by something more spectacular, it is still sure to be place or show."

I am not one of those who do not believe in love at first sight, but I believe in taking a second look. —H. VINCENT.

—Budd Schulberg

"I am directed by my wife to say that I look first at a woman's eyes, and unless I find in them only evidence of sterling character and a complete lack of interest in looking back at me, I look the other way. This much of the comment has been approved by her. But I do actually look first at a woman's eyes. The eyes do tell more of anyone's character, intentions, and whether one would like to meet her."

—Hodding Carter

"I notice hands. Not the shape of them so much as the way a woman uses them."

—Victor McLaglen

"The first thing I notice about a woman is how she behaves to my wife. I look hopefully and often successfully for the lady to display an immediate warmth toward my wife. If, on the other hand, I detect in her an oblique, jealous-looking appraisal of my wife's ankles or costume or hairdress, I sense danger ahead."

—Herbert Marshall

"With no claim to either authority or originality, I believe the first thing a man notices in a woman is her figure."

—Eddy Duchin

"A look into a woman's eyes has always been for me a sort of laborsaving device."

—Eddie Cantor

"I always like to see them approaching and sometimes I like to look at them departing."

—Victor Moore

THE END

Meal Planning MAGIC!

with tasty, thrifty

WILSON'S

meats in cans

Into her busy shopping bag budget-wise Mrs. America today loads plenty of Wilson's popular canned meats. Meats ready for hearty main dishes. Clock-around meats for every meal—for lunchboxes, parties. Meats that are rich in flavor and in nourishment—that stretch today's meat money to the limit because there is no waste:

Wilson's 4 MORs . . . something NEW for a change . . . MOR Beef, MOR Lamb, MOR Veal, MOR Pork, for variety and economy. Wilson's "meaty and mighty good" CORNED BEEF HASH. Wilson's famous CHILI and DEVILED HAM and VIENNA SAUSAGE—and B-V, the nation's favorite gravy maker and meat flavor.

These are but a few of the timely Wilson's canned meats that homemakers are using today for economy of time and of money. You should always have them in your pantry. Look for them at progressive stores that feature the Wilson quality label.

WILSON & Co.

Brer Rabbit's new, easy PRALINE COOKIES with the sun-rich flavor of real New Orleans molasses

"A great baking discovery," you'll say. These cookies almost make you think you're eating candy—and the recipe is so easy!

But be sure to use real New Orleans molasses—Brer Rabbit—because it comes to you with all the natural goodness of southern plantation sugar cane.

TWO FLAVORS: Gold Label—light, mild-flavored; Green Label—dark, full-flavored.

Brer Rabbit's Praline Cookies

- ⅔ cup margarine (or butter)
- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup Brer Rabbit Molasses
- 2 eggs
- ½ tsp. vanilla extract
- 1¾ cups sifted all-purpose flour
- ½ tsp. baking soda
- ¼ tsp. mace
- ¼ tsp. salt
- 1½-2 cups coarsely broken pecan or other nut meats

Slowly melt margarine or butter; cool. Add sugar and molasses; mix well. Add eggs and vanilla; beat well. Sift together flour, soda, mace and salt; add to first mixture. Add nut meats; mix well. Drop by scant teaspoonfuls on greased and floured baking sheet 2" apart. Bake in mod. hot oven, 375°F., 8-10 minutes. Remove from pan immediately. Makes about 8 doz.

SEND FOR MY NEW COOK BOOK

FREE! 124 Delicious Recipes

50-page book. Washable cover. Illustrated. Mail this coupon to: BRER RABBIT, c/o Penick & Ford, New Orleans 7, La., Dept. J-2

Name_____
(Please print name and address)

Address_____

_____ Zone_____

BRER RABBIT New Orleans MOLASSES

—RICH IN IRON—NEEDED FOR GOOD RED BLOOD!

TEA WITH A LADY

(Continued from Page 71)

"Give me your things—I'll hang them up," he said.

But she let them lie; she went and knelt by the fireplace; she began to shake out her hair like a shaggy dog. The raindrops hissed on the coals and the tiles and the fender. She was very young, of course. She would have to learn.

"Rodney, I like your room."

It was well proportioned. These houses, converted now into shops and flats, had seen better days as city gentlemen's residences. The legacy—tall windows, gray-painted shutters, a fluted fireplace, an old-fashioned black-lead grate. Against which pleasing and vaguely period background Rodney had ranged, with precision, his tools for living. A tilted desk, a flexible lamp in metal, deep leather armchairs, and bookshelves along one wall. Only the spindle-legged, foot-wide octagonal table that stood between the fireplace and his armchair and that lurched at a touch (a table should stand four-square) had been added to the room less for use than for beauty. That, and the tulips on it, bought specially that day, which looked, now he came to think of it, unhappy, rammed down and overstiff in that tall glass vase. Lisa would see them—spread them out into beauty. He imagined her, bending down with a little laugh, hands moving cool and pale and perfect among them.

"Yes, Rodney," she said again, "I like your room."

Now she turned, looking up at him, smiling and happy; her head on one side, one long, thin hand at her throat twirling a strand of that silky hair round and round one finger—like a schoolgirl, twisting it into a little rope.

"How do you look," he said suddenly, "with your hair up?"

"How do I —— Oh!" She ran her hands through her hair, holding it up with fingers spread at the temples. "If I do it myself—just out of a bath," she told him. "If a hairdresser does it—like a night-club queen. I have to leave it the way it is, darling, really."

He felt himself flushing. He said, "I like it that way!"

"I'm glad you do." She was laughing—she hadn't minded.

He sat down in his usual armchair beside the fireplace. There was a second chair on the other side, but she sat sprawled out on the rug with her skirt spread round her, and that soft fair hair falling into her eyes.

HE shifted a little. "Have a chair, darling—be comfortable."

She looked up. Did she know that that was not what he'd meant? That what he had meant was "Sit straight. Try to be a little more grown up, darling. Be decorous!"?

"I don't want to move," she said. "Can't I stay here?"

Why not? In her tartan skirt and her yellow sweater she looked boneless and unself-conscious as a child. Not a hint in her pose of what, he knew very well, in another woman would have been careful-careless seduction. But . . . what other woman? he asked himself in surprise.

"Lisa, we've got to talk. Tea first, or tea afterward?"

She smiled. "Tea first, tea afterwa the same time."

He got up abruptly and went int kitchen, where the kettle had a momer started to boil. She should have come helped him, he told himself—surely? T the pot from his hand, making the tea a woman's touch, deftly rearranging t things. She didn't even get up when he br in the tray.

"On the table?" he asked.

"Oh, let's have it here," she answer

AFTER a pause, he put it down on the "Pour out, darling," he said.

"Pour out? Oh, yes!" she said. "Sha

She is very young, he said to himself; learn. But how blithely she turned, how lessly picked up the teapot—using one the other still on the floor to take her w It was really so inefficient, he thought.

"Pay atter darling!" he sa she started to and let the thin a stream slop int saucer.

He sighed. De his mind was a ent picture. It feminine ritual, ing out tea—to l ecuted with g with charm and elegance.

"Sit down, ling," said Lisa s "Here's your te

"I wanted to to you—and no teashop," he said ting down. "T why I asked here."

"Talk, then," Lisa, smiling.

It wasn't e "You understan the sort of thin say to your fath it happened you a father. You hav and so I have t it to you." Sa Savings. Insur policies. Prosp "You're not liste Lisa!"

She put a han his knee. "If yo it's all right, it's all right," she murm "isn't it? Because, if it isn't all rig wouldn't know."

"Well now, listen," he said. "I thou this flat for the present. With new curtai cushions, of course, or whatever you'd It isn't perfect, I know, but we're luck have it."

"I noticed," said Lisa, "the greengro downstairs. It'll be very helpful, if I f things."

He raised a reproving eyebrow. "And I thought, two years from now, say, a in the country ——"

"I could be happy anywhere with yo town. In the country ——"

"But, Lisa, listen," he argued. "We to talk things over. We have to make pla

"If you say so, darling. But things turn out differently."

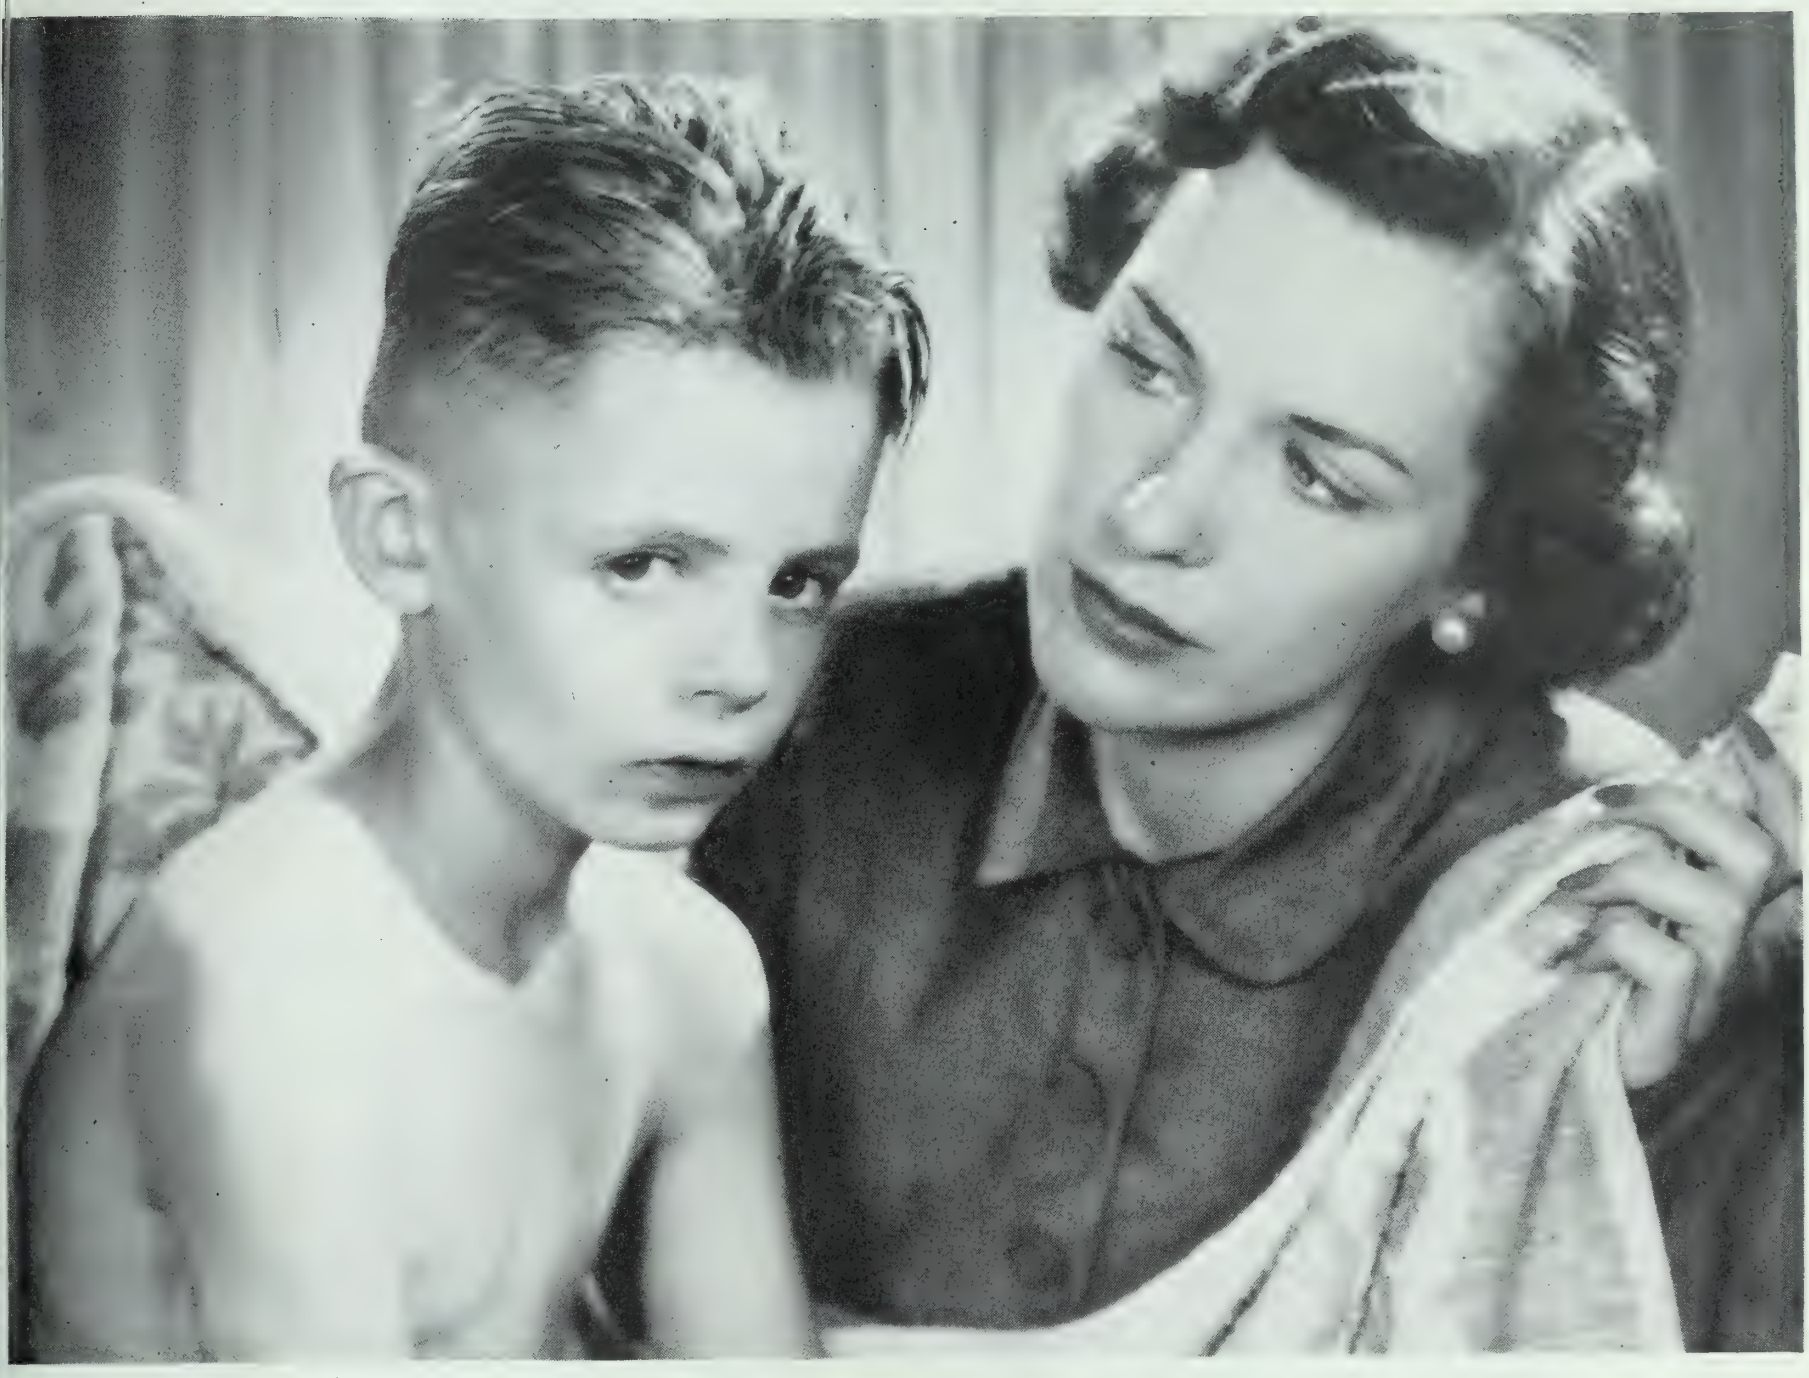
"Not unless you let them," said Rod "Not with me. Lisa, listen. I want to tell I take marriage seriously ——"

"Yes?" said Lisa.

"This is a difficult thing to say. I mea marriage isn't something that you get o if it doesn't turn out right. You can't se back to the shop, so to speak, and ch it. Like a hat. I mean—you have plan ——"

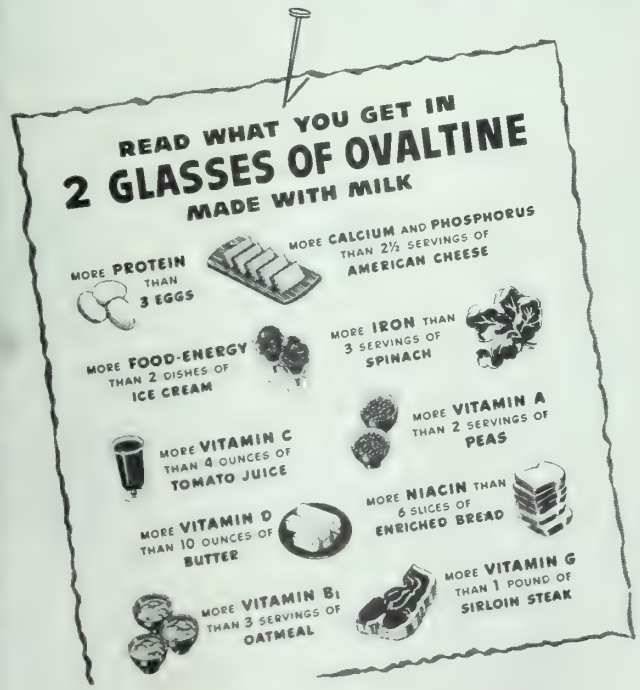
"Yes, all right, my darling," said L "Marriage is something that goes on for for me."

(Continued on Page 147)



To a Field Mouse and His Family

By Margaret Fishback



O fierce, uncompromising mouse,
We sought to bar you from our house.
What quarter-wits we were to hope
You'd wolf the poison, shun the soap.

Who named you "field mouse," anyway,
When clearly you prefer to stay
In linen closets, where you dine
On curtains that I thought were mine?

The fringe that once adorned my best
Bath mats has gone to make your nest!
You doubtless heard me when I squealed,
"The brutes will drive us to the field!"

What can I do to help him— for the Years that Lie Ahead?

HERE'S SOMETHING PRACTICAL YOU CAN DO -- BEGINNING TODAY!

When a child is frail and nervous or underweight, it may be due to a number of things. But the most common correctable cause is faulty nutrition. And this cause is one which you, the mother, can do something about.

In situations like this, many mothers are now turning to Ovaltine. Because Ovaltine contains a very wide variety and scope of food elements, both common and rare. Particularly those elements that are most apt to be lacking in the daily diet.

For Ovaltine, mixed with milk, is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes of an otherwise "good" diet. It contains, in addition to essential high-quality proteins and quick-energy foods, the important vitamins A, B_1, C, D, G, Niacin, and the valuable minerals Iron, Calcium and Phosphorus.

It is also important to know that Ovaltine is specially processed to make it very easy to digest. A child with a "delicate" stomach will usually digest and absorb Ovaltine very readily. Ovaltine even makes milk more easy to digest.

So when you give two to three glasses of Ovaltine a day, plus normal meals, you can be certain that you have done just about everything you can do to improve your child's nutrition.

A New Flavor

Ovaltine is available in plain and in an improved, sweet, chocolate flavor which children really like—an important consideration in getting children to take the nourishment they need.

So, why not give your child Ovaltine every day for 30 or 60 days and carefully note the results. When you consider all the food values which Ovaltine supplies, you will find it economical.

OVALTINE

SWEET CHOCOLATE FLAVORED AND PLAIN

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

Hair tends to be dry, oily, or normal. There are three Breck Shampoos designed especially for three quite different hair conditions. Whenever you buy a shampoo, all you have to remember is to mention whether your hair is dry, oily, or normal. You will be given the correct Breck Shampoo for your hair condition. A Breck Shampoo will leave your hair clean, fragrant, and lustrous.

The three Breck Shampoos are now available in an 8 ounce economy size for $1.00—Other sizes, 60c and $1.75

H BRECK INC • MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS • SPRINGFIELD 3 • MASSACHUSETTS
ADIAN ADDRESS • 310 SLATER STREET • OTTAWA

(Continued from Page 144)

'I want to say . . . I've been in love before, turally. More than once."

'Well, of course. I expect so," Lisa said. 'wenty-seven. It'd be very odd if you dn't. And, Rodney, I'd gladly tell you all out me. Only it doesn't seem to add up to ach, somehow. I suppose it's simply beuse there hasn't been time."

He frowned. "I've been in love before. But han't be, in future."

"Oh, I hope you will," said Lisa, laughing. With me!"

"It isn't a joke."

"I know," she said, "and I love you. I love u! Does it matter about the rest?"

Did it matter? Of course not! Why on rth had he mentioned it? Why on earth? hat a perfectly fool thing to say!

"Does it matter?" said Lisa.

Now she had turned away from him. She as half lying now, on ankles, calves and nees, her chin on her hands, her neck curved ack like a tulip stem. Her dark lashes lay e a child's on her pearly cheek. She was aring down at the floor—and as he watched er, she bent and started to trace with an le finger the intricate, faded pattern of the g. She had asked him—but did she care at l? Was she listening? She sat there smiling, ol, absent, remote, untouched by emotion, rmored in immaturity.

"No," said Rodney. "No—of course it oesn't matter." How could it, when it had appened so long ago? And et—as he spoke, along his erves ran swiftly the ttle, nagging pain of remembered hurt. "But . . . here was a girl," he heard imself say abruptly. Years and years ago. When I was young and reen."

Still Lisa didn't look up. Was she very beautiful?"

"She was and she asn't," said Rodney. "I on't know."

Was she beautiful? That ace, for years not seen, or years not thought of, ince long ago not even remembered in dreams—not emembered for years ith brain, with heart r with body—now suddenly formed in the ir and floated before him. And into the sience and stillness of the room a voice, unlike is own, was quoting poetry he didn't even emember that he knew:

'Eyes coloured like a water-flower,
And deeper than the—deeper than the ——"

He broke off. He couldn't remember. And what had he started?

Lisa looked down at the floor, not turning er head. Her voice fell low and slow, limpid nd lovely, a gentle rain touching a surging ea:

'Eyes coloured like a water-flower,
And deeper than the green seas' glass ——"

"No, no!" he corrected her. "That isn't ight. Not green seas. Deep seas."

"Green seas, I think," she answered. 'Yes, really darling. I know. I did it at school."

He looked at her stubbornly. "Deep seas—I'm sure!" he told her.

She met his eyes gravely. "Well, I expect you're right. . . . And she was lovely, darling—very lovely? You loved her, did you, darling—loved her a lot?"

But it wasn't that. It was more than that—less than that—different. Once again he felt the touch of an icy hurt.

"You see," he said, "I couldn't—Lisa, we couldn't ——"

"Don't tell me unless you want to," Lisa said.

"There are things that one can't explain."

"I know. Do you have to?"

He had to explain to himself. But "No," he said. "No."

She got up then. She sighed, she stretched, shook her hair back. She started to wander idly round the room. In a fret of uncontrollable irritation he watched her walk to the mantelshelf and take down his tobacco jar, looking at it and not seeing it, turning it—for what reason?—upside down, putting it back; and putting it back differently. She moved away. As she turned, her skirt swirled round her. He caught the octagonal table just in time.

"Lisa—be careful ——"

Her sleeve brushed by the tulips. One dropped from the vase and lay as if felled on the floor. And she didn't seem to care—she didn't notice. She was maddening—really maddening. She'd have to learn!

"I want you to understand," Rodney said. "It's all over. It was over years ago."

"Yes, I understand, darling," Lisa told him.

She didn't understand, and she didn't care. There she was, moving absently along the low bookshelves; taking a book out and opening it; leaving it out; letting another fall to the floor unnoticed. Really, she was the most maddening of maddening girls!

"Here," she said. "We can look it up."

Her hand on his Swinburne; that heavy, tooled-leather book on her two spread palms, opening out automatically to the place where he'd so often opened it. So often. So long ago. And yet not for years. Not for years. Not since he'd shut the letter away in it. It opened out now to the place where the letter lay.

He sat still. He could not move. The letter—that letter whose writing and paper shouted its sad little tale. Pale purple paper, scented; quick, slapdash writing, derisive laughter sounding from every stroke. "Darling," that handwriting said, "but really—poetry ——"

His nerves contracted. His eyelids without volition shut down against things it was better not to see. And out of the dark came Lisa's voice, slow and solemn:

"Eyes coloured like a water-flower,
And deeper than the green seas' glass ——"

He looked up. There she stood with her soft pale hair falling forward and her long thin hand slipped steadily under the page—so that the letter drifted down to the floor unheeded.

"Eyes that remember one sweet hour—
In vain we swore it should not pass;
In vain, alas."

She had closed the book. She had put it back very slowly. She had crossed the room and knelt now close at his side.

"Darling?" she said.

He could not speak for a moment. Something was happening to him, deep inside. Like being born. As hard, as fierce and as anguished.

He was looking deep into those limpid eyes that missed so much, but that saw and knew what they had to. Young as the morning and ageless in wisdom, those eyes. Her sweetness and sloth, her blindness and understanding—he knew it now—had finally mixed and merged into the sure integrity of the well-beloved.

He buried his face in her hair; she held him tight. Her arms had gone round his waist, to rest him, to keep him. Darling—my darling, it's going to be all right! her body said.

With one hand, he held her away from him With one hand, he touched her eyes, her cheek and her hair.

"Please marry me very soon," he said—"if you think you can stand me."

He bent to kiss her. His foot caught the table, the vase crashed, the tulips lay scattered. The tulips lay scattered—and Rodney didn't care. THE END

WITH THE CHILDREN

"You know 'May I?' and 'Can I?' that I used to couldn't remember which one to say? Now I know. When it is awfully important to do something you say 'May I?' and when you know you can't anyway then you say 'Can I?'"

"The thing I do not like about some mothers is they think they know everything and they really don't. Mothers were never boys so that is something they don't know about being."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON

New Upper Story!

Munsingwear is doing the most exciting things about bras! They've divided their miracle-makers into three individual style groups. You'll find A, B and C cups in each group. Fabrics galore from satiny to sheer! A range of new ideas for each style, like stitching under each cup for firm support and that high-proud-bosom look. A center insert for young separation. An elastic strip for diaphragm comfort. Pick the bra that does the most for you from one of the three groups...in a bright or light color. $1.50–$3.50

At fine corset departments everywhere.

Bras by MUNSINGWEAR
REG U S PAT OFF

THE DOROTHY GRAY GALLERY OF FASCINATING WOMEN—ONE OF A SERIES

Mrs. Clement Cleveland III of Oyster Bay, Long Island. Mrs. Cleveland is the former Suzanne Park, daughter of Mrs. Samuel Park of Texas and the late Mr. Park who was for many years in the American Consular Service at Biarritz. Portrait by the celebrated painter, Ben Stahl, winner of numerous significant art awards.

1. Cleanse

Dry Skin Cleanser for dry skin, $1 to $4. Salon Cold Cream for normal skin, $1 to $4. Liquefying Cleansing Cream for oily skin, $1 to $3.50.

2. Stimulate

Orange Flower Skin Lotion for dry or normal skins, $1 to $3.75. Texture Lotion for oily skin, $1 to $3.75.

3. Lubricate

Special Dry-Skin Mixture for dry or normal skins, $2.25 to $8. Suppling Cream for oily skin, $1 to $2.75. (All prices plus tax)

Beauty Basics . . . for skin with kiss-appeal

Kiss-inviting skin isn't a matter of years alone. You may lose it at 20 . . . you may have it at 40. But you can have it . . . you can keep it! Follow the famous Dorothy Gray "One . . . Two . . . Three" Beauty Basics Skin Care: (1) Cleanse, (2) Stimulate, (3) Lubricate your precious skin with the Dorothy Gray products created especially for your skin type.

Dorothy Gray

THE DOROTHY GRAY SALON • 445 PARK AVE., NEW YORK

THE SPRINGS

(Continued from Page 34)

o statues; no marble benches to sit on. The rees were too big for anybody to work on, as ney did on the trees over here. They stood ke sentinels about the house and on the wn, and then marched off into the woods.

"Do you remember the trees at all, Roderick?"

"Not specially; what kind were they?"

"Oaks, poplars—what we call poplars. I vish you remembered them."

"I wish I remembered lots of things. Sometimes it seems to me I do, when you talk about them. Was there any water around?"

"Not what you would call water; only ittle streams that would be easy to forget."

All but the one in the ravine where the springs were; that one had a sandy bottom, nemorable for bare feet. The Macgowan children waded there all summer long—Alice, Rose, and a brother before he outgrew such childish things. She had been Alice.

The springs were what fed the stream, but they were hardly distinguishable from other wet places in the ravine unless one took the trouble to part the ferns and poke away the leaves. Then they were really seen to bubble a little, like the beginning of a fountain in the sand. They used to put their faces down to drink and get sand in their mouths and noses. They found new ones every summer, or maybe just forgot the old ones. By the summer the improvement started, they had found them all.

"You might go on with your book, Roderick," Mrs. Howard said, "and I will work some more on the poem. I don't suppose you want to help with it?"

"I'll criticize it, if you call that help," Roderick said.

"You might suggest a name for it. How would Garden Eros do? Count Andrea says you could tell it was meant for Eros because the arm that is broken off was supposed to be holding a bow; or maybe he said a torch; something symbolic, anyhow."

It took longer than she thought it would to finish. The garden was very still; they could hear the water whispering below them, and the little sound she made with her eraser, and Roderick turning the pages of his book. She read at last:

There is a fountain for the dolphin's child,
A greensward for the dancing girls,
But he has nothing; all the while
He stands there idle by the ilex tree.
I have put roses on his mildewed curls—
He will not smile.

He is an imitation of a god
Once favorable to this spot;
Here olives sweet and bitter grew for him,
Pomegranates cold and hot—
Gelida atque ardenta poma the letters say;
Though all was done that men could do for him
He would not stay.

"I decided 'pomegranates' sounded better than 'apples,'" Mrs. Howard said.

"Maybe," Roderick agreed doubtfully. "But why do you put, 'He would not stay'? The inscription doesn't have that."

"I know," she said. "But he wouldn't; he never does—in any garden."

The improvement started when somebody discovered the medicinal value of the springs. Men with bottles began coming down and taking the water to be analyzed. Analyzing the different peas in a pod, Mr. Macgowan said, but he was interested; they all were; and when the talk about an electric car line started, and a summer hotel, they were no longer interested in anything else. Especially Alice; that was the summer she was fifteen. Rose, who was three years younger, still liked things the way they were, and Roddy was already away at school most of the time.

There was no school to distract Alice. The problem of her education had always been permitted to loom lightly and had become less of a problem every year. She and Rose had already gone through the little school that was the only accessible seat of learning, and now, with all the wonderful things that were happening right at their door, there seemed less reason than ever for them to be sent away—unless they went to Europe. Their father had always talked of sending them abroad to finish their education, and now the price of land would be going up.

It was a wonderful summer; a wonderful year, really. Surveyors, architects and landscape gardeners followed on one another's heels, and everything they touched was changed. The springs had concrete basins now, with cups chained to them. They even had little pergolas and kiosks built over them, and benches, so people could sit there and go on drinking when it rained. That was the first thing after the car line was finished. Then came the hotel, three stories high, with long verandas, and some of the corners round instead of square, like towers, topped off with fancy shingles and a weather vane.

And any time now the world for which it was intended might be expected to arrive: the world in a collective, social sense that Alice had not thought of before and would now be confronted with for the first time. No doubt some of the people they knew already would be coming too: Colonel Bodley, for instance, said he might try it instead of the Blue Ridge, but it was not for them that it had been prepared. Alice felt that she knew very well the kind of people for whom the hotel was not intended; she had to imagine the appropriate ones.

We don't like people for the merit they discover in themselves, but for that which they find in us.

—BYRON.

She walked through the parlors, now completely furnished with carpets and lace curtains, and even sat in the untarnished chairs. Mr. and Mrs. Deering, who were going to run it, were from Chicago and very friendly. They showed her the dining room and even the kitchen. Immense. Alice recognized a lot of the servants; there probably wasn't a darky for miles around who wasn't going to try to work there this summer. There was still a great deal to do, Mrs. Deering told her, before they could have the formal opening.

Late one afternoon when she and Rose were coming up from the ravine, just as they got to the foot of the long flight of steps, they saw a young man about to come down. He didn't try to pass them, but stood at the top and waited for them to pass him, whistling softly to himself.

"Did you hear what he was whistling?" Rose asked her as they walked on.

"Yes; it's from Florodora. 'Tell me, pretty maiden ——'" Alice hummed the words.

"He was doing it on purpose," Rose said.

"On purpose for what?"

"To make you notice him."

"But I had; I saw him there before we even started up. I have seen him several times before; he is one of the civil engineers that built the car line. His name is Mr. Clayton. Mrs. Deering is letting him stay at the hotel before it opens."

Staying at the hotel before it opened kept Mr. Clayton from seeming quite like a guest. Once introduced, they saw him all the time, and he amused them more than anybody they had ever known. Mr. Clayton was out of a job now. He was waiting for more improvements to start somewhere. The South was waking up, he told Alice—or maybe just falling out of bed; anyhow, he was going to stay around for a while. This gave him plenty of time to do what he wanted to, and they spent hours taking pictures with his camera and practicing target shooting with his .22.

"I believe you'll be sorry when the hotel opens," Rose told her. "Have you ever counted the pictures he's taken with you in them? Suppose you had fallen off that log just as he was taking you, and landed in the branch. On your head too."

Daniel Green hits a high note in High-Front Slippers

Majorette—dress-parade frogs span the high front of this smart style; in royal blue, poppy red, heaven blue, blossom pink, wine, white or black satin. $6.00

Tutu—brand-new idea in a scuff-style, this graceful slipper is built up high-in-front; in wine, royal blue, blossom pink, heaven blue, poppy red, black or white satin. $4.50

Frou-Frou—the luxuriously full jabot of this high-front style is echoed in its shirred, elasticized heel sling; in blossom pink, heaven blue, poppy red, royal blue, wine, white or black satin. $8.50

Daniel Green

COMFY SLIPPERS... Famous since 1882

AT BETTER STORES EVERYWHERE

Sealy is so smooth, I sleep better and feel better

Run your hand over the top of the new Sealy Tuftless Innerspring Mattress. It's so smooth—not a button or bump or tuft. And Sealy's modern flange construction will keep it smooth for years and years.

You will find it easy to keep clean, too, with no buttons to catch dust or come loose.

Your doctor would approve the firm comfortable support you get from Sealy's balanced Durolife innerspring unit.

Ask your dealer how Sealy adds to your sleeping comfort with Miracle Mesh and quilted felt insulation.

Start now to enjoy smooth, soothing Sealy sleep.

Sealy Tuftless Innerspring mattress now only $59.50

"SLEEPING ON A SEALY IS LIKE SLEEPING ON A CLOUD"

Sealy

INCORPORATED
666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE
CHICAGO 11, ILLINOIS
FACTORIES IN PRINCIPAL U. S. CITIES

Ask your dealer about Sealy's 10-year guarantee

© 1948, SEALY, INC.

Alice laughed, but she did not like to suppose it. Even if she had not landed on her head she would have ruined miles of white ruffles. "Seems like you has twice as many clo's in the wash as you used to." Melvina had told her that just yesterday. But even if he did take pictures of her, Mr. Clayton had never said she was pretty.

"Do you think I'm getting better looking as I go along, or worse?" she asked Rose; they were up in their bedroom combing their hair. Alice's hair was darker than Rose's, but it had its own store of gold that gleamed when the light fell on it from anywhere: from sky or candle, or even if anybody struck a match to light his cigar.

"Better," Rose said firmly.

Alice studied her reflection in the glass. Maybe she was still too fat. Plump, people called it—the old friends. Her complexion was what counted, she supposed, and her eyes; she was not smiling—nobody had told her about her smile. Nor had anyone ever mentioned in her hearing the extraordinary softness of her voice, though every now and then somebody would ask her if she sang. She couldn't—not to amount to anything; Rose was the musician of the family.

It was much later than Mr. Deering had intended when the hotel finally opened; one third of the season was about over, he said; but it was lighted up now in the evenings from end to end, with people strolling on the verandas or out on the grounds. The walk leading down to the steps and the ravine had lights at intervals, and the little kiosks and pergolas had them too. It was hard to remember how dark and dewy it used to be at night in the ravine.

Alice and Rose walked down pretty nearly every evening to see what was going on at the hotel; with their father and mother when they felt like going, or with Mr. Clayton, who always felt like it. He wasn't staying there any longer, though; he was boarding with Mrs. Giddings and her daughter, Miss Norma, about half a mile up the road. On Saturdays there was always music in the main parlor: piano, cornet and violin. Later on there would be regular dances, Mrs. Deering said, with canvas stretched over the carpets; but a few people danced now, on the verandas, when they could get Mr. Heinman, the violinist, to play a waltz.

They were meeting more people all the time now. Miss Sallie Kent, a boarding friend of their mother's, introduced them to all the nicest ones she knew, and Mrs. Deering kept bringing up strangers. "Everybody wants to know who the two girls with the wonderful hair are," Mrs. Deering said.

"How does that make you feel?" Ro said scornfully as they were going home.

"Did you ever think of cutting it off? Mr. Clayton suggested. "Or you might tea up with the Sutherland Sisters and get ric If I don't get another job pretty soon I'm g ing to have to do something on my look Grow a beard and be one of the Smith Brot ers, maybe. I know a girl who went t Vassar—that's another college—right in th same town with the Smith Brothers."

"Do you suppose that's the girl Mis Norma was talking about—the one wh writes to him all the time?" Rose asked a they were getting ready for bed. "I wouldn' be in the least surprised if Miss Norma read the letters—finding them lying around tha way. It would be a great temptation to any body as romantic as she is."

When the regular dances began they were not a great success. Alice felt that having t keep her mind on the two-step was a grea drawback. It was hot, too, in spite of the electric fans.

"I know a girl who could give you the hang of it in no time," Mr. Clayton told her when they went out to cool off. "She's wonderful at all the new steps."

Alice thought about Vassar and the letters. She was sure Miss Norma must read parts of them anyway—especially if he left them lying outside the envelope that way. Miss Norma said she "suspicioned" they were engaged. "And I believe she's worried because he hasn't come back up there this summer. She keeps asking him about his work. I don't suppose they can get married till he gets another job."

Among the things the landscape gardener had done were the beds of cannas and geraniums, lighted so that the colors were as bright as they were in the sunlight.

"Want to walk down there toward the springs?" Mr. Clayton suggested.

They went as far as the steps leading into the ravine and sat down on the top one. The music was lovely at a distance that way. They were playing music from Florodora.

"That means the intermission," Mr. Clayton said. "We must go in and get some ice cream." But he didn't move, and neither did she.

"Tell me, pretty maiden,
Are there any more at home like you?"

he sang with the music, and Alice joined in:

"There are a few, kind sir,
A very, very few.

"I love that," she said.

(Continued on Page 152)

"I wish it were less cash and more carry!"

Nashua

the "magic" blanket

...warmer than many costing up to twice as much!

Cool nights call for a Nashua Purrey† blanket—the "magic" blanket that's cloud-light, yet cozily warm. This remarkable blanket—the result of years of research—is warmer by test than many blankets costing nearly twice as much! A patented blend* of scientifically processed rayon fibers and wool gives you perfect sleeping comfort.

And that's not all! Nashua Purrey blankets are moth-resistant, too—make old-fashioned moth protection unnecessary!

Nashua blankets are featured by leading stores everywhere. Notice the soft, expensive-looking colors, the rich, rayon satin bindings, the remarkably low prices. Ask for Nashua blankets at your favorite store today.

*Patent 2,208,533 †Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

ALL these advantages, too!

Money back . . . if your Nashua Purrey blanket is damaged by moths

Warmer than many blankets costing nearly twice as much

Deep, "frosted" nap—light as a feather

9 gorgeous colors—and white that stays white

Rich rayon satin binding

Washable in mild suds

In 3 sizes: 72 x 84—$6.95
72 x 90—$7.95
80 x 90—$8.95

Only $7.95 FOR 72" x 90" SIZE
SLIGHTLY HIGHER IN THE WEST

NASHUA MILLS, DIVISION OF TEXTRON Inc.,
ALSO MAKES BLANKETS OF COTTON AND MIXED FIBERS • COMBED PERCALE AND MUSLIN SHEETS • INDIAN HEAD† COTTON • SHOWER CURTAINS • HOME FASHION FABRICS

You'll be happier with a HOOVER

*REG U S PAT OFF.

Isn't this about all you need to know? You'll be happier with a Hoover because it does a better cleaning job. It keeps your home brighter, your colors fresher. It prolongs the life of your rugs. It is made by the world's leading specialist in electric cleaners—over seven million Hoovers have already been made and sold. And there are now two great types of Hoover Cleaners to choose from. Why take anything less? See your Hoover dealer now.

THE HOOVER COMPANY
North Canton, Ohio • Hamilton, Ont., Canada
Perivale, England

New Hoover Triple-Action Cleaner, Model 28, with the exclusive Hoover cleaning principle... it beats... as it sweeps . . . as it cleans.* Keeps colors fresh. Prolongs rug life. Light, easy-to-use cleaning tools in handy kit are available for Model 28.

HOOVER RUBY JUBILEE
1908-1948
Hoover's Fortieth Anniversary this year celebrates forty years of leadership.

New Hoover Cylinder Cleaner, Model 50, cleans by powerful suction. A new idea in dirt disposal — exclusive Dirt Ejector — your hands never touch dirt. Complete with cleaning tools in handy kit, including Mothimizer and sprayer.

(Continued from Page 150)

"Did you know I've got another job?" he asked her.

"No—what?"

"The bridge for the new highway, east of here."

"Aren't you glad!" she exclaimed, thinking again about the girl.

"I really am," he said. "It's the best thing I've had; but it doesn't start before fall. That will give me time to go home and see everybody." He got up and held his hand down to her. "Come on before they eat it all up," he said.

The summer was over all too soon. Alice could hardly believe it when she saw all the embellishments of the parlors coming down or up, as the case might be; it seemed such a little while since she had watched them going up, or down. Mr. and Mrs. Deering pronounced the season a success in spite of the late start and talked expansively of another year.

Alice couldn't imagine the hotel with nobody in it. It was the first week in October; a beautiful day, and some bright leaves were blowing along the veranda where people used to dance. She imagined it in the rain, the doors and windows shut. It was so much sadder than it ought to be. Well, at any rate, she would not have to come and look at it; there were plenty of things to do at home. She had hardly done any reading this summer, but now she would make up for lost time. Her father thought she could begin Vergil if she wanted to; he had time to help her so much more when it got dark early and they all had to be inside anyhow. Rose had already gone back to her music.

As usual, the long stretch of the winter did not begin until after Christmas, and it ended, also as usual, in hopes deferred. The January jasmine bloomed and froze repeatedly and the burning bush was quenched under a February snow. The only reliable promise lay in the lengthening afternoons. Alice noticed the difference on every sunny day: the glass and silver winking in a long strip of sunlight on the supper table, and not having to light the lamp on the bureau to fix her hair. And this year she noticed it particularly coming out from town on the streetcar. She seldom went to town, but she had gone oftener this winter because the cars were so convenient—especially for the Christmas shopping. It had been the nicest Christmas she could remember, with Roddy at home again and everything so gay. Mr. Clayton had married and brought his new wife to stay through the holidays, and they had danced in the evenings and had all sorts of fun with them.

The trip to town took exactly an hour and Alice always tried to remember to bring along a book to read. There wasn't any scenery, not even many houses; and now in the winter with the hotel closed, there were very few passengers. Sometimes there would be only the conductor and the motorman. One of the conductors was a boy they knew, Alonzo Hill, who lived up the road about a mile from them. He was really an adopted son; Mrs. Hill had adopted him when he was little, and in the summer he helped her with her farm, but in the winter of course he could do something else. Alonzo said he would a lot rather conduct a plow than a streetcar.

"I wouldn't be surprised if this is the last nickel you'll be giving me before next winter," he told Alice when he took her fare one February afternoon. "You won't see me in these clothes again after next week."

Alice started to ask him if he wasn't sorry; he looked so much nicer in his conductor's uniform than he did in his own Sunday clothes, but she decided not to let him think she noticed how he looked. Mrs. Hill had adopted him in the first place because he was such a beautiful little boy with curly hair. His father was supposed to be Spanish. So Alice asked him instead if they were going to plant a big garden this year and sell vegetables to the hotel as they had done the year before. That started Alonzo off and she had to try to look interested while he outlined a plan he had for a truck garden that would supply the hotel with everything they needed. Nobody had ever said he was lazy.

Ideal for small homes
Handy for all homes

Hoover, Junior

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

It's light, low, trim, and smart. Easy to roll. Easy to store. Hoover builds it—you know it's right. "It beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans," for only $59.95 cleaning tools extra

Cleaning tools for the Hoover, Junior Cleaner plug in the front—the cleaner rolls right along as you use cleaning tools.

THE HOOVER COMPANY
North Canton, Ohio
Hamilton, Ontario, Canada
Perivale, England

The only other passenger on the car was a gentleman she had never seen before. He kept looking over at them and smiling. Then, when they got nearer to town and more people began getting on and Alonzo couldn't sit by her any more, the gentleman came over and took his place.

"Our conductor seems to be quite a farmer," he said pleasantly, and Alice smiled. "Friend of yours?"

She started to say yes, but—just what exactly did he mean?

"Nice country for farming," he went on, looking out. "First time I've ever been down here."

Alice decided he hadn't meant anything.

"A man I know in Chicago, T. H. Deering—you know him? I thought you would, if you live out there where you got on."

Alice, her smile restored, told him she knew Mr. and Mrs. Deering both. "Our house is the one —— Did you get off the car?"

He shook his head. "I only rode out to the end of the line. I'm down here on business and that was the only place I'd heard much about—the hotel out there and the springs. Pretty place; must be dull right now, though, with everything closed. Do you come to town very often?"

"Not very," she said.

"Sort of tiresome trip, isn't it?"

"I don't mind it. I generally bring a book to read."

"Ever spend the night in town?"

It was right at this point that—whatever it was—began to happen. Maybe she hadn't really looked at him before; but she knew now that he had no business to be talking to her—asking her things. She looked out to see just where they were; she even looked around for Alonzo; but in all those directions she must have looked different from the way she felt, for his voice went on:

No man who is always in a hurry is quite civilized. —WILL DURANT.

"Why couldn't you come to dinner with me? Then afterward I could get a nice team and drive you home a whole lot quicker than the car ——"

He must have said that, for she couldn't have made it up, and yet she could never be sure she had actually heard the words. The car was only at Second Street, but she was getting off; she could walk up to Main ——

What she did was nearer running, and she knew how red her cheeks must be by the way they felt, and the way people looked at her. So this was it, she kept thinking, even after she was inside the store and was buying the things she had come for. This was the nameless evil. She had always known that something of this nature was abroad in the land seeking what it might devour but, never having met it in any shape or form before, it had not occurred to her to ask why it was so greatly to be feared. She asked it now. Suppose he did invite her to dinner and offer to drive her home? All she had to do was to decline. Yet here she was, scared to death, her knees fairly shaking under her at the ribbon counter.

"He ought to have been put off the car!" her mother said emphatically when Alice told her. She had waited until Rose went to bed, and that was funny too. Why didn't she want to tell it before Rose? They had better not tell her father either, Mrs. Macgowan said. He wouldn't want her to go in town by herself.

"But why?" Alice asked her. "There wasn't anything he could do, with people all around like that—unless I was a perfect idiot, and then I wouldn't be allowed to go by myself anyhow."

"Well, just forget about it," her mother said. "Don't tell anybody."

There was a screw loose somewhere in all this, Alice decided. The world was supposed to be full of conflicts between innocence and villainy; and certainly the books were. The unsuspecting girl and the designing adven-

(Continued on Page 155)

Are You as Smart as Mrs. Smith?

THE NEW IRONRITE IS A LIFETIME INVESTMENT IN MONEY-SAVING AND LABOR-SAVING . . .

Betty—Harry, Sadie's not coming any more.

Harry—That's too bad. Laundresses are hard to find these days.

Betty—But I'll not try to find another. I'll save that $6 a week.

Harry—Well, that's grand—I guess. But how about the ironing? Remember last time you did an ironing?

Betty—My rotten disposition! Yes, I know. But now I'm going to get an Ironrite to help me save that $300 a year. Washing is no trick with the new washers, and with Ironrite, ironing is a quick trick, too. Ironrite irons everything. You just sit and let Ironrite do all the work.

Harry—Everything?

Betty—Yes, everything! Shirts, sheets, ruffles, pleats—Sis has an Ironrite you know . . . Harry, wouldn't you like me to save $300 a year, every year?

Harry—Certainly!

Betty—Then come with me to the Ironrite dealer's store. I'll show you that wonderful new Ironrite right now!

Harry—Let's go!

Of all ironers, Ironrite saves you the most work because of its patented and exclusive "Twin-End" Roll. No needless twisting, turning, reversing of garments.

Ironrite pays for itself in time, labor, health. Costs a little more, worth a lot more. A lifetime investment. Unique Free Home Instruction Service makes you an expert Ironriter quickly. Convenient budget plan! See your Ironrite dealer today. (Yellow pages, phone book.)

THE IRONRITE IRONER COMPANY, MOUNT CLEMENS, MICHIGAN

They're carpeting their dining rooms...with MOHAWK

It's practically a trend among young-marrieds to want wall-to-wall floor covering in their new homes. Modern room-proportions very often do not lend themselves well to the 9 x 12 rug size. Spacious effects are achieved by continuous carpeting of hall-living room or living room-dining room.

BRADLEE, Mohawk's embossed Wilton weave, is a happy dining room choice.

Mohawk

MOHAWK CARPET MILLS, INC. • AMSTERDAM, NEW YORK

(Continued from Page 153)

er—their meeting was the great adven-e. And now that it had happened to her felt more discouraged than she had ever over anything.

She didn't look forward to having the hotel n nearly so much after that. She had ndered about the people she would meet; ether the same ones would come back and here would be many new ones. She had nced the two-step a lot while Roddy was home and she had got so she liked it better an the old-fashioned waltz. The dances at hotel were another thing she had been king forward to. Would Mrs. Deering be t to introduce her to a man like that?

The bridge was about finished now. The aytons would be gone before the hotel ened. There were a lot of things to keep is summer from being as nice as the last e.

But the spring itself, and darkies with kes cleaning off the canna beds and burning aves in the ravine, promised something she d never known to fail. Every day now she w some new preparation going on for a rld with which, she knew by experience, l was always well. Even if nothing hap-ned—if no people came—she had never en unhappy without them. Was that what e was expecting to get out of the hotel—me new kind of happiness?

"This year we are catering specially to the elta clientele," Mr. Deering said. "That's hy we had to open from two to three weeks rlier. Those planters like to get their wives d children settled for the summer before gets hot and mosquitery down there." e was talking to Miss Norma, who had ined the hotel force in e capacity of house-eeper. Rooms were being t ready for Mr. and Mrs. rry Dupree and family, om Feliciana Parish, ouisiana.

"And then if Mr. Du-ee only stays over Sun-ay"—Miss Norma took p where she had left off—"she probably on't want the extra room. She'll more than kely want to take one or two of the children with her, wouldn't you imagine?"

Miss Norma was not only liking her job, e was being good at it. "There's only one ing," she told Mrs. Macgowan on an after-oon when she had run up for a breathing ell. "I'm going to get me some shoes with wer heels, and a different corset, before the eather gets really hot."

"I would, if I were you," Mrs. Macgowan id sympathetically. She and Alice and ose all glanced, briefly and politely, at the et of the figure that was supposed to have on Miss Norma so much admiration back the past.

"Mrs. Dupree wears the La Vida Long-ip," Miss Norma told them. "That's the ost expensive corset you can buy. I saw it ying on her bed. And she certainly kept her hape, in spite of"— she remembered about lice and Rose and said—"everything."

"And aren't they lovely children?" Mrs. Macgowan said. "The nurse was up here esterday with the two littlest ones."

"They say she's always been considered a eauty herself, down where she lives," Miss Norma said. "I never cared so much for that ig-eyed, washed-out-looking type; but the hildren do look like her. And do you know, nside of the first week that baby would turn ight around in his nurse's arms and try to ome to me. Just give me time and I can ake any child away from its own mother."

Time in Miss Norma's case was certainly acking, but Mrs. Macgowan did not think she would meet with much resistance where Mrs. Dupree was concerned. Her generosity with her offspring had been the subject of considerable comment.

"Have you seen 'Lonzo Hill's new turn-out?" Miss Norma asked them as she got up to go. "It's their same horse, but he has bought a brand-new buckboard to bring his things to the hotel in. I'll tell him to drive up here someday and let you all see it."

She must have told him the very next morning. Alice, coming out of the garden, saw it in front of the steps, resplendent in the sunlight; on the seat beside Alonzo were two boxes of strawberries he was bringing them, and two of the Dupree children.

"How beautiful!" Alice exclaimed, taking the strawberries and extending her admiration to include the buckboard, from which the two little girls had immediately descended. They were approximately five and six years old, and they were beautiful too.

"Wouldn't it be wonderful," Mrs. Macgowan said that evening at supper, "if Alonzo could make enough money to lift the load off of poor Mrs. Hill's shoulders? Adopting a child is a terrible risk, but when it does turn out right, there always seems to be something providential about it."

They were having the strawberries with cream for dessert. They were a new variety—the Sharpless—and fine enough to make them feel optimistic, not only about Alonzo but about agriculture in general.

"I wish you had seen him," Alice said. "He must feel that he has to dress up to go with the buckboard. Anyhow, he certainly looked prosperous."

"I must go and see Mrs. Hill," Mrs. Macgowan said. "I haven't been for a long time, and I have hardly ever seen her when she was not in trouble of some kind. I would love to hear her quote the Bible over something pleasant at last—poor thing!"

"Do you suppose the house would ever look cheerful, even if they did have some money?" Rose asked.

"It's those cedar trees," her mother said. "She doesn't realize how big they have been growing all these years. The parlor is terribly dark—a sad place anyhow; I always try to get out into the garden, or at least out on the porch, as soon as I can. This time I will tell her I came to see the strawberries."

That which is striking and beautiful is not always good; but that which is good is always beautiful.

—NINON DE L'ENCLOS.

The strawberry season was over before she made her visit, but she still managed to make it out-of-doors. She saw Mrs. Hill's sunbonnet around the corner of the porch and intercepted her approach to the front steps.

"Let's don't go inside," she said. "What is it that smells so sweet—honeysuckle?"

Mrs. Hill, also inhaling, confessed she found it difficult to distinguish one fragrance from another at this redolent season. She was a tall woman, and the skirt of her gray gingham dress had the dignity a great deal of starch confers. Her language was like that, too, Mrs. Macgowan reflected, walking beside her and listening to what she had done about the perennial phlox and the polyanthus roses; it was a symbol of something.

"I want to see Alonzo's vegetables too," she said. "I hear he has the earliest of everything this year."

"But I must not deprive him of the pleasure of showing them to you," Mrs. Hill said. "I am expecting him at any moment. He went to the hotel again this afternoon; they needed an extra supply of squash and onions. I believe I hear him now," she added, turning toward the gate.

Mrs. Macgowan turned, too, in time to see the buckboard approaching at a pace more suggestive of the turf than the delivery of squash and onions. A lady in a white dress was sitting beside Alonzo, holding a little girl on her lap; another little girl was standing between them. It was not the first time she had seen Mrs. Dupree, but she never did find out, she said when she got home, whether Mrs. Hill had seen her before or not.

"It's hard to tell with anybody as formal as she is whether people are friends or strangers. It's quite possible that she takes the children out there just the way she brings them here; but she can walk up here, and out there Alonzo must have to take her. Of course this time I brought her back."

"What is she like—I mean to talk to?" Alice asked. "Every time I have seen her she has been with somebody."

(Continued on Page 157)

A BEAUTIFUL PIANO WITH A MAGNIFICENT TONE

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

88 keys to happiness

The ability to play the piano is a priceless heritage that gives moments of deep happiness throughout life. It is the passport to social success for both children and adults.

A fine instrument adds immeasurably to the joy of playing and the Lester Betsy Ross Spinet is truly a fine piano . . . famous for exquisite tone, responsive touch and full volume.

With inner quality to match its outer beauty . . . it is compactly sized . . . available in traditional and contemporary models.

See, hear and play the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc. . . . builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

Sold by America's Foremost Piano Dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

ONE name quality price

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., INC., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone No ___ State_____ 3-F

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

Your Christmas stocking color is Mistletoe

from Berkshire's

Age of Elegance

color album

Delightful combination of mistletoe green and taupe . . . fabulous color to give, to wear with the rich fabrics of the winter season.

sheer sheer Berkshire stockings for the loveliest legs in the world . . . by the world's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned stockings

(Continued from Page 157)

d started down the front steps, but now r. Mason stopped and looked at her.

"I'm surprised at you," he said, "holding is nature against him that way. Don't u remember about 'Tiger, tiger, burning ight'?"

She shook her head again.

"Let him come, then, and I will recite it you. I'll look out for pigs too.... You're t old enough to have had many dogs," he id when Thor had joined them. "Maybe hor is the only one you can remember."

"We had a collie, too, but he died. His me was Rob Roy."

They walked on a little while and then Mr. lason said, "People are always telling you out losing their dogs, but I don't believe ey ever really do. I'll bet anything you still e your collie in all the places where he ould belong—that path there, for instance; ppose we take it."

"I do sometimes," Alice said after they d taken the path, "especially in the fall. e was just the color the woods, and his il would wave so."

"I know; a collie is n autumn dog. My ogs—the ones at ome, my father's ally—were the kind at come back in the arly morning. I hear em in the ravine ometimes when I ake up, out here at e hotel. You have o idea how I like it."

"Thor always arks in the night," lice said.

"Yes, and some- ay, years and years om now, you may e in another part of he world and hear a og bark in the night, nd you will say, 'That's Thor,' and urn over and go to leep again, feeling so ice and safe. Or ou'll read some- hing, maybe in a ook that hasn't been vritten yet, that ome man says about dog, and you will now it was Thor he vas writing about."

"Maybe by that ime I will have for- otten all about the pig," Alice said. 'Maybe Thor will look like a thoroughbred nastiff to me."

Mr. Mason nodded. "He will; more thor- ugh than any mastiff you ever saw. The logs of the past are a noble breed."

This was the first walk they had taken ogether, but he must at odd moments have old her more of his personal history than he ealized; he was beginning to notice how nany things she seemed to know about him.

"Who lives there now—where you used to ive—where the dogs were?" she asked him when it had turned out to be too hot for walking and they had sat down in the shade.

Her voice was another thing. He could remember it, but not how it made him feel; the response was as immediate—as physical—as the vibration of a string. It was a voice to hear the most exquisite things in; he wanted to answer them instead of what she said.

"NOBODY lives there," he answered now. "The darkies are supposed to look out for things; but you know what that means. My father goes down whenever he can; but even if the wheeled chair could go, the dampness would kill my mother. That's why she had to come away in the first place. Some of these days, Miss Alice, I'm going to make a whole lot of money; enough to have her garden weeded, and her piano tuned, and to fix some way to keep her warm when the wind blows off the river."

"Is the house very big?" Alice asked him. "Is it ever so much bigger than ours?"

"It is bigger than anybody's," he said. "People don't live in houses that big; only bats and owls."

It sounded sad, she thought, but he didn't look as if he were feeling sad. He had picked up some last year's acorns and was chunking them at a squirrel on a limb over their heads. How long did it usually take a man to make a lot of money? He was thirty-five already; twice as old as she was.

"I'M going to show you some pictures," he told her, "or maybe a map. Anyhow, I'm going to explain to you sometime how things are in my part of the country. Those rice plantations, where all the money came from, are nearer to Pharaoh's time than they are to ours."

A place that she had never seen; a part of the world where she had never been. Would she ever see the place he was describing to her now as they walked home? He was startled at the sudden clearness with which he saw her there.

"It sounds lovely," she said—"like Europe." She had already asked him about Europe and knew that he had never been there, but there might be things in this country, too, that were old and romantic. "Doesn't it seem funny to you," she asked him, "that I have never seen anything in my life that you could actually call picturesque? Just woods, and the ravine, of course, and the springs. None of the really beautiful places."

"If you will wait until I make that money, I'll get them all and bring them to you."

They walked through the ravine and stopped at the biggest spring for a drink. Alice told him how it used to look, back in the days when they waded there, with the water barely bubbling up through the sand.

"And it tasted better, didn't it?" he said. "Nice and gritty. Do you ever want to go back and be a child again?"

"I don't believe so," she said. "I don't notice very much difference, except when I come down here—and the hotel, of course."

"And naturally you wouldn't want to give that up—all the nice people that come. Where are they, by the way? Why aren't they down here drinking?"

"I expect they've all gone in to dinner—lunch, I mean. There are Mr. and Mrs. Dupree going up the steps."

The dance had been two weeks before, and this was the first time Mr. Dupree had been back since. Miss Norma had made what she could of that, and it had been so much that Alice thought she would probably be sorry to see him today, not only back, but acting as if nothing had happened. He had his arm around Mrs. Dupree, going up the steps that led out of the ravine, and they were both laughing at something. She looked beautiful—her figure did. She had on an organdy dress with bunches of pansies on it, and a lavender hat. Melvina, the laundress, said it took more than an hour to get around the ruffles on one of Mrs. Dupree's skirts.

Roddy was at home now, but not in spirit. He was going to spend the last half of his vacation with a classmate whose family had a cottage in the mountains. Last summer he

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Secret

By Catherine Haydon Jacobs

We are the only ones who will remember;
We are the only ones who have ever known
How far this autumn is from last November;
We two alone.

Wind, and the bitter taste, the disillusion
Of courage whittled thin, the dulling pain
Of questioning what was right, the heart's confusion,
Frost and cold rain.

Today the meadow glistens green at dawning,
And every step is firm beneath the sun.
The world is beautiful this autumn morning;
We two have won.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

CHEN YU

CHEN YU "REDS" BEAUTIFY YOUR HAND COMPLEXION!

Chen Yu has the red... shining, subtle or brilliant... each an exclamation of the superb excitement Chen Yu created-colors give your lips, your fingertips, your costumes!

Sun Red—ivory-toned skin
Chinese Red—rachel complexion
Oriental Sapphire—rosy-toned skin

LACQUER .60 LIPSTICK 1.00
*"CHINA TEA" 1.60 plus tax

*You'll love collecting and using these Ming-toned bowls for tea, soup or rice!

"HALGAR'S
Bu·Tee·Wave
HOME PERMANENT IS SENSATIONAL!"

it's guaranteed by
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Say enthusiastic users who have made millions of glamorous curls with this amazingly new and different HOME PERMANENT.

Bu·Tee·Wave IS THE MACHINELESS HEAT METHOD
IT IS NOT A COLD WAVE!

THERE'S NO NEUTRALIZING—NO GUESSWORK—NO TURBANS—
NO TIMING—NO ODOR—NO SOAKING YOUR HEAD FOR HOURS

Women from coast to coast are adding their seal of approval to this highly endorsed home permanent. You, too, will acclaim Bu-Tee-Wave for its wonderful speed, ease, simplicity and amazingly thrilling results.

ONLY 24 CURLS required for a complete and glamorous permanent.

With Bu-Tee-Wave's lanolized solution, curls and waves are gently steamed into your hair . . . and no reconditioning rinses are required.

Bu-Tee-Wave gives you a complete permanent IN A LITTLE OVER TWO HOURS FROM START TO FINISH. Just unwind the curlers and comb your hair into gorgeous natural waves which will give you months of "permanent" satisfaction.

Make a Test Curl
Money-back guarantee, if not satisfied!

Complete Set $3.98 Plus 5c Fed. Tax

Refills for Future Waves
$1.20 Plus 5c Fed. Tax

At leading drug and department stores, also Ward's catalog. If not yet available in your city, send remittance. Shipment will be made via parcel post prepaid.

HALGAR, INC., 277 E. GRAND AVE., CHICAGO 11, ILL.
Available in U. S. A. only had talked all the time about the scenery, and the cool nights, but this summer he told them more about the people, especially a girl he called Miss Wellford—when he could remember not to call her Bella. One day when he was looking at a magazine he showed Alice a picture that he said looked like Miss Wellford. It was Lady Hamilton, in a swing, by Romney.

"I do hope he isn't going to do anything foolish; at least not until after he graduates," her mother said when Alice showed her the picture.

Her father looked at it too. "Must be Armistead Wellford's daughter," he said. "He married a mighty pretty girl; prettier than this one."

Even the greatest artists couldn't paint a girl as beautiful as the ones people remembered. It reminded Alice of what Mr. Mason had said about the dogs of the past.

"I used to mind it when people said I would never be as pretty as my mother was," she told him one day when they were talking. "I minded it not only for myself but for her too; it sounded as if the family was deteriorating."

"Whoever said such an absurd thing as that?" he asked her.

"Everybody did, if they remembered how she looked when she was young. That picture in the parlor doesn't do justice."

"All the same, it's absurd," he said. "Now, in my case, my mother really was a lot prettier than I am, and someday I'm going to show you the little picture I have of her. She had poetry written to her too; I'd like to show you that. If I were to write you a poem, I would probably have no end of trouble getting it published. Or an acrostic; maybe you would like an acrostic better."

"That is a sort of charade, isn't it?"

"Much harder. The idea was to be as cryptic as possible; so that your rival, or the lady's husband if she happened to have one, would get discouraged trying to read it."

Alice thought about Mrs. Dupree. It was easy to imagine somebody writing her a cryptic poem, but she didn't believe Mr. Dupree would worry about it, whether he could read it or not, the way he did about the dancing. Alice wondered if Mr. Mason had heard anything about that. He hardly ever mentioned anybody at the hotel. She didn't even know whether he thought Mrs. Dupree was beautiful. Roddy didn't. He thought she danced better than anybody, but he said a woman had to have a brain about her somewhere before she could be what he called beautiful. He thought it was funny for her to let Alonzo drive her around the country in his buckboard. He had seen them two or three times. Alonzo was a big fool to be doing that sort of thing, Roddy said.

MRS. Hill was not so long as usual in returning Mrs. Macgowan's visit. Months often went by without friendly interchanges between them, but this summer, what with all the coming and going occasioned by the hotel, the neighborhood was more sociable; people seemed to have more in common.

"But I can't stay long," she announced, getting out carefully on account of the buggy's wheels, which were muddy, and her skirts, which were so far immaculate.

"The road must be dreadful!" Mrs. Macgowan exclaimed. "Did you ever hear such a downpour! The garden is a wreck—I am not going to even let you see it—and my peonies were just in their glory too. When I went out there this morning, the last one of them was standing on its head in the mud. Let's sit here on the porch and I'll tell Annie Sue to bring us a cup of tea."

"Where are the girls?" Mrs. Hill inquired, glancing through the open door into the hall.

"Both gone to town," Mrs. Macgowan said. "Sit here in the rocker; I'll be right back."

"I presume you can see the hotel from this point of vantage when the leaves are off the trees," Mrs. Hill remarked when her hostess had returned and was drawing up a small table for the tea.

"Not much of it; only one corner. It's really funny how completely we forget about its being there, in the wintertime."

Now...smooth beauty soothing relief from Varicose Veins

Here's new beauty and new relief for you if you suffer from the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins or swollen legs.

Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings are practically invisible under regular hose. And their firm, comfortable, scientific support gives great relief and smooth, even control.

Two-way stretch, lightweight and cool, neutral in tint, they have long-wearing lisle heels and authentic fashioned leg and instep. They'll withstand repeated launderings.

Ask your doctor's advice . . . then be sure you get Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for the finest combination of relief and beauty.

EXPECTANT MOTHERS—to help ease the discomfort of swollen legs and forestall developments of surface varicose veins, many women rely on Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings.

FREE! Write Dept. HJ for new booklet "New Comfort and Relief for You."

Elastic STOCKINGS

At drug, department and surgical stores

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company
2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16 ou can say "yes" to Romance

because

Veto says "no"
to Offending!

Veto says "no"—to perspiration worry and odor! Soft as a caress . . . exciting, new, Veto is Colgate's wonderful cosmetic deodorant. Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use, keeps you safely all day! Veto stops underarm odor instantly, checks perspiration effectively.

Veto says "no"—to harming skin and clothes! So effective . . . yet so gentle—Colgate's Veto is harmless to normal skin. Harmless, too, even to filmy, most fragile fabrics. For Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. No other deodorant can be like Veto!

MUST ALWAYS TO VETO
YOU VALUE
OUR CHARM!

"Have you made the acquaintance of many of the guests?"

"Not as many as Alice and Rose have. I dare say Alonzo can tell you more about that than we can."

Mrs. Macgowan smiled; her reference was intended as a light introduction to the topic she imagined must be uppermost in Mrs. Hill's thoughts, Alonzo's continued prosperity. It was uppermost in her thoughts too. She knew he was doing well, but she wanted to know how well; how much had he made already—how much did he think he would make by the end of the season? She could not hear Mrs. Hill answering her except in a figure of speech. But even this imperfect satisfaction had to be postponed, because Annie Sue was coming with the tea.

"How are you, Annie Sue?" Mrs. Hill asked her.

"Jus' tol'able." Annie Sue went on to say she had fixed them some cinnamon toast instead of plain bread and butter.

"I hear Melvina is now regularly employed at the hotel," Mrs. Hill said when the amenities were over and Annie Sue had retired. "I see her occasionally."

"We see her too. She stops in sometimes on her way home." At any rate they were still talking about the hotel. In a minute, Mrs. Macgowan thought, she would get back to Alonzo.

"Have you had occasion to see anything further of the lady you were kind enough to take back with you the afternoon you came to call?" Mrs. Hill inquired after a pause of some duration.

Mrs. Macgowan found her hesitation puzzling for a moment, then suddenly too clear.

A man who boasts only of his ancestors confesses that he belongs to a family that is better dead than alive. —ANON.

It was not Alonzo she wanted to talk about; it was Mrs. Dupree—or maybe it was both.

"Why, yes," she said. "She and the children walk up sometimes. They look at the flowers, and sit here on the steps. Have you seen her again? It's too far for her to take the children out there, I should think."

"You are a friend of such long standing," Mrs. Hill began, "and already conversant with the circumstances of my life ——" She stopped.

Mrs. Macgowan leaned over and laid her hand on the stiff folds of gingham that were its nearest approach to Mrs. Hill's knee. "Do tell me what it is that troubles you," she said. "Tell me quite plainly, and I will tell you plainly what I think. And first of all I want to say that Mrs. Dupree impresses me as a pretty woman with very little sense; I don't believe she has any idea of causing trouble. Is she flirting with Alonzo—is that it?" This was not a figure of speech, but if they had to begin away back in the circumstances of Mrs. Hill's life!

"Of Alonzo's history, too, you know enough"—Mrs. Hill was not to be deflected—"to make it possible for you to understand how apprehensive I must be when I see him subjected to temptation of this nature. The blood that flows in Alonzo's veins is not my blood; I must remember his inheritance." She had disregarded the hand still resting on her knee, but Mrs. Macgowan could feel that the knee was trembling. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge," she said.

Which was a figure of speech and, as such, impressive enough, but it seemed to Mrs. Macgowan to be only broadly applicable to Alonzo, whose behavior struck her as being very much what that of any other very young man of limited experience and not unlimited intelligence might have been. It was the first time she had ever heard Mrs. Hill mention the sour grapes, which no doubt went back to the same source as his exotic appearance.

"But falling in love is something every boy is bound to do sooner or later," she suggested; "and in this case at least it can't last

(Continued on Page 163)

If your hair looks like THIS

. . . when it should look like THIS

use HELENE CURTIS

Suave*

the Cosmetic for hair . . .
greaseless . . . not a hair oil

WHAT SUAVE IS . . .

The amazing discovery beauticians recommend to make hair wonderfully easy to arrange and keep in place . . . cloud-soft . . . romantically lustrous . . . alive with dancing highlights . . . control-able even after shampoo . . . safe from sun's drying action! For the whole family, men-folks, too. Rinses out in a twinkling.

WHAT SUAVE IS NOT . . .

NOT a greasy "slicker downer" . . . NOT a hair oil, lacquer or pomade . . . NOT an upholstery "smearer" . . . NOT a dirt collector . . . NOT smelly . . . NOT drying; no alcohol . . . NOT sticky . . .

some pronounce it "swahv" . . . others say "swayv" . . . either way it means beautiful hair.*

AT YOUR BEAUTY SHOP, DRUG STORE, DEPARTMENT STORE

Florist with a Flair

FAMOUS FLOWER-STYLIST

Judith Garden

AGREES:

"Whether you're arranging flowers or choosing a cigarette . . . EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER!

"I tried and compared many brands—and I learned that cool, mild Camels are the cigarette for me!"

A few lemon-tinted carnations, a sweep of delicate foliage—result: a fine-arts arrangement! "It's experience—not expense that counts," says Miss Garden.

Simple French marigolds with a handful of green leaves take on a sophisticated air when they're arranged with the touch of experience!

● Into a brilliant ballroom ablaze with fabulous flowers walks a brisk, little brunette. She stoops to tilt a creamy petal; adjusts a straying leaf; nods with satisfaction. Miss Judith Garden has just set the stage for a dazzling social debut! Later . . . in her Manhattan shop (at left) . . . she designs a tiny masterpiece from a handful of ripe-red fruit, a few blossoms in a 10-cent-store container. "It isn't the cost of the blooms," says the talented Miss Garden. "It's experience and taste that counts."

More people smoke Camels than ever before!

MOST people, like Judith Garden, know that experience is the best teacher. That's why millions of smokers who tried and compared different brands of cigarettes say, "Camels are the choice of experience with me!" Let your own "T-Zone"—T for Taste and T for Throat—tell you about Camels. Let your taste tell you about Camel's marvelous flavor. Let your throat discover that wonderful Camel mildness and coolness. See how your own experience tells you why more people are smoking Camels than ever before!

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

[illegible] 113,597 doctors were asked by three independent research organizations to [illegible] the cigarette they smoked, more doctors named Camel than any other brand.

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

(Continued from Page 161)

r long, because she will be going away. I; just another case of Satan finding some nchief still ——" Was that in the Bible to? At all events, Mrs. Hill sat in silence for awhile and then said:

I have a request to make of you—unusual is nature, but still I hope that you will not rse. I am going to ask you to speak to Ms. Dupree on this subject; I want you to l before her ——"

Mrs. Macgowan waited for something that wld give her an idea of what she was exted to offer Mrs. Dupree as a reason for a erent line of conduct from the one she saw o pursue at present with regard to Alonzo. ppeared, however, that she was to be left hout it. She would just have to promise at she could.

"Very well," she said, "I will explain to that she is interfering with Alonzo's work. an tell her how well he has been doing—d how much depends on his doing well. ere are really a lot of things I can say to ke her realize—at least to make her stop d think about the harm she may do in a e like this without intending it." Her face ghtened. "There are Alice and Rose now, t coming through the gate. I didn't hear car, did you?"

On an afternoon a few days later, Alice d Rose, each holding one of Mrs. Dupree's le girls by the hand, had gone down to the nd in the pasture to show them the baby cks. "Take them off somewhere and keep m while I talk to their mother." Such d been the injunction laid upon them, and ce and Rose kept wondering what was go- on in the garden, where their mother had en Mrs. Dupree. She ght to be an easy person talk to, since she talked little herself; but what out? Could it be any of things Miss Norma had en saying?

Mrs. Macgowan had ned to the garden instinctively, as to a ld she knew, as she did whenever any- ng had to be met, or escaped from—or th. Mrs. Dupree, in a white embroidered iss and a floppy hat, did not impress her being anything formidable to meet, but was Alonzo who would have to do the es- ping.

"Suppose we sit here and look up at that ud of pink," she suggested, indicating the nch by the rose trellis. "It's the Lady Gay; suppose you have it too."

Mrs. Dupree did not answer, but she made objection to sitting down, or even looking . Her eyes were lovely.

"I am glad you came up this afternoon," rs. Macgowan pursued cheerfully; "there something I have been wanting to say you."

Mrs. Dupree made no objection to that her. "Is there?" she said. "What about?"

Talking little herself did not make her an sy person to talk to, but Mrs. Macgowan gan. "It's about Mrs. Hill, and Alonzo—r son. You remember the day I met you ere ——" It was not really a question and rs. Dupree did not answer it, so she kept : "I don't know how much you have seen them since you have been at the hotel, but have known them a long time, and I would ke to tell you a little about them—things u would not be apt to have found out."

"Do you mean about him being her dopted son? He told me that," Mrs. Du- ee said.

Yes, but did he tell you about how much e has done for him—all the sacrifices she as made; and how much she has hoped he ould be to her when he grew up?"

This was a question, and Mrs. Dupree nswered it with a shake of the floppy hat. We were not talking about anything like hat," she said, "not about anything special. was just asking him how he happened to ok so different. His eyes; they are quite emarkable-looking—don't you think so?—r a boy like that."

"But all sorts of boys have handsome yes," Mrs. Macgowan said. "It isn't always a good idea to tell them so, however. That is exactly what I wanted to talk to you about—that you ought not to let him see that you think he is good-looking. He is too—too inexperienced for that sort of flattery. A woman like you ——" She stopped; it would do no good to offend Mrs. Dupree.

She was not offended; she even smiled. "What did he say about me?"

Mrs. Macgowan looked at her in astonishment. She had prepared herself to cope with stupidity—a stupid woman might blunder; but a woman as vain as this one might do anything. She might even let herself become infatuated with the admiration of an ignorant country boy.

"He has said nothing to me about you," she said quietly, "but I am sure he admires you—as we all do. It is always a pleasure to us to see you, and to see the children."

"Thank you," Mrs. Dupree put in politely, but the smile had gone.

"And I believe," Mrs. Macgowan continued, "now that we have had this little talk—now that I have explained to you how we all feel—that you will not want to do anything to make us feel differently—to make us admire you less. . . . We must cut you some roses," she said. She was not changing the subject; she was giving up. "Where did the children go?"

Alice and Rose, coming up with the little girls and seeing Mrs. Dupree with her flowers, were sure the talk, whatever it was about, must have ended pleasantly.

"Did she say anything?" they asked their mother as soon as it was safe to ask.

Mrs. Macgowan was watching the three white figures go off under the trees. "Somebody had to talk to her," she explained to Alice and Rose. "She really has very little sense. She is carrying on some kind of a flirtation with Alonzo, and poor Mrs. Hill is worried about it."

My motto is, "Contented with little, yet wishing for more." —CHARLES LAMB.

They listened with interest. "Do you mean ——"

"I mean she is taking his mind off of his work. But whatever we do, we mustn't say anything before Miss Norma; or Roddy either," she added, knowing just as Alice and Rose knew that all they had to do was to wait until Miss Norma and Roddy should say something before them. Unless Mrs. Dupree went home or somewhere.

They were almost afraid she would, but she had not done so several days later when Roddy saw her out driving in the buckboard again. "No children along, either, just her and the toreador. He looks more like the picture on a cigar box than ever, with that mustache."

"Alonzo!" Alice exclaimed. "Why, when did he ——"

She had never thought of Alonzo with a mustache; and it had been such a little while since he brought the strawberries. It had never occurred to her before what a curious thing it was that a boy could change himself into a man all at once that way. She tried to imagine her father's face smooth like a boy's. Or Mr. Mason without that dark line that followed his lip and turned up at the corners when he smiled.

They went walking in the woods a good deal these days and he always took off his hat under the first tree, as if they were going into church. The last walk they took he had just had a letter from his father. It was headed: "From the Battlements at Elsinore."

"He's at home now," Mr. Mason explained, "down in the country; he says it always makes him feel like a ghost, to go back. Heaven knows what he feels like in town, in that apartment. Comfortable. But they don't want to be just comfortable. Would you? A lot of people these days use that word to explain the way they live, and the things they live in—a comfortable flat—a comfortable apartment. They even take you around and show it to you—'and here is the kitchenette.' You are never going to have a kitchenette, are you? You couldn't; it

(Continued on Page 165)

World-renowned stage star says...

"For dream hands, cream your hands"

Try her method for just three days . . . a 12-second hand massage with non-sticky, non-greasy

Pacquins Hand Cream

...morning...night...and after hand-roughening household chores

TRY THIS simple hand beauty treatment and you'll see why Pacquins is the largest-selling hand cream in the world!

Your own two hands will tell you why! How smooth they'll be! Softer . . . lovelier . . . really romantic!

A regular Pacquins hand massage is even more important these "servant-problem" days, so keep that jar of Pacquins within reach. Smooth it on your rough, chapped, dry hands. Snowy, fragrant Pacquins leaves no greasy afterfilm. For hands to be proud of . . . truly dream hands...take your cue from stage star Gertrude Lawrence...cream, cream, CREAM your hands with Pacquins!

VIRGINIA KENT, R. N.
"I wash my hands thirty to forty times a day! Having tried many other preparations, it's Pacquins for me!" (Pacquins was first created for nurses and doctors.)

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins Hand Cream are:
GLADYS SWARTHOUT
RISË STEVENS LYNN FONTANNE
VERA ZORINA

Also, for extra dry skin, Red Label Pacquins—contains Lanolin

ON SALE AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

A new, two-fruit pie leads the KARO* holiday parade. It's called "cran-apple"...combining tangy cranberries with luscious apples. It's festive, delicious, different...just like these other KARO treats.

See for yourself how KARO Syrup adds to the looks of each dish... just as it gives 'em all top flavor...more appetite appeal. All are easy to fix ...and inexpensive, too.

THE KARO KID

1—"CRAN-APPLE" PIE

¾ cup sugar
3 tablespoons corn starch
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup KARO Syrup, Red Label
¼ cup water
1½ cups cranberries
1½ teaspoons grated orange rind
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1½ cups chopped apples
1 recipe pastry

Mix sugar, corn starch and salt in saucepan. Gradually add KARO Syrup and water; mix well. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly until mixture thickens slightly and comes to a boil. Add cranberries and cook until skins are broken. Remove from heat; add orange rind and butter or margarine. Cool. Add apples. Roll ½ of pastry ⅛ inch thick. Line a 9-inch pie pan. Pour in filling. Arrange lattice of pastry strips across top. Seal edges well. Bake in hot oven (450°F.) 10 minutes; reduce heat to moderate (350°F.) and bake 40 minutes longer, or until crust is brown and apples are tender.

2—CRANBERRY SAUCE

Wash 4 cups (1 pound) cranberries; remove any soft ones. Drain. Combine 1½ cups KARO Syrup, Red Label, ¾ cup sugar and 1½ cups water in saucepan. Bring to a boil; boil rapidly 5 minutes. Add cranberries and boil 10 minutes—until skins are broken. Chill thoroughly. Makes about 4 cups.

3—BROILED GLAZED FRUIT

Place ⅓ cup KARO Syrup, Blue Label, and 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine in shallow baking pan. Arrange well-drained canned peaches, pears, apricots or pineapple slices in syrup. Place pan about 5 inches from heat and broil about 5 to 10 minutes on each side, basting frequently until fruit is well glazed and lightly browned. Arrange fruit on serving dish; garnish with watercress. Serve hot as an accompaniment to cold sliced meat.

4—KARO BUTTER

Place 1 cup of KARO Syrup, Blue Label and ¼ cup butter or margarine, in saucepan. Bring to a boil and stir until blended. Serve this delicious syrup hot over pancakes or waffles, fritters or French toast. Makes about 1¼ cups.

5—CANDIED SWEET POTATOES

6 sweet potatoes, medium size
¼ cup butter or margarine
½ cup KARO Syrup, Blue Label
2 tablespoons water
¼ cup brown sugar

Wash potatoes and partially cook in boiling water 15 minutes. Drain and peel. Place all ingredients except potatoes in heavy skillet. Arrange potatoes on top. Cook slowly, basting occasionally, until potatoes are tender and well glazed.

Corn Products Refining Company • 1948

*KARO is a registered trade-mark. For other KARO recipes, write Home Service Department, Corn Products Refining Co., 17 Battery Place, New York 4, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 163)

would turn into something else the minute you put your foot in it.

"Where'er you walk cool airs shall fan the glade, Trees where you sit shall crowd into a shade," he sang. "Why don't you take off your hat? You wouldn't get any freckles under here."

She took it off and laid it on the ground beside her.

"All that hair! And nobody ever sees it, I suppose, except when it's being combed—or laundered. How do you manage about drying it? Hang it on the line?"

"On the grass; I bend over." She showed him. "Rose's is longer than mine."

"Fabulous. No wonder all the fairy tales are tangled in it. But to go back to our plantation. A lot of things have got to be done to the house before I let you see it."

"Did you forget about the pictures you were going to show me?"

He shook his head. "I didn't forget. I got scared. I said to myself, 'Suppose she didn't like it; what would you do then?'"

Alice was sure she would like it, though, if it was the way it sounded. He seemed to her to belong in just that kind of place; not the battlements of Elsinore exactly, but certainly not the Cotton Exchange.

In Miss Norma's opinion matters had now reached a point where Mr. Deering might be expected to take a hand. Though it would perhaps be better if he let his wife do it, because she could talk to Mrs. Dupree, which naturally he couldn't.

"How much longer is she planning to stay?" Mrs. Macgowan asked.

"Well, of course their arrangement is by the month," Miss Norma said, "but the way I look at it, she ought not to have been left here in the first place with nobody but a nurse and children. A woman as slack-twisted as that needs to have somebody to look after her. Not but what Alonzo Hill needs looking after too. I wonder how much Mrs. Hill knows. Even the darkies could tell her."

"Let us hope they don't," Mrs. Macgowan said. "She is the one who would really be hurt if Alonzo's conduct should be criticized at the hotel. She has so much pride."

"Yes, and it wouldn't be only her pride that would suffer if Alonzo got himself criticized off the premises," Miss Norma said. "Those two people can't eat all the things he's raised out there. I told Mr. Deering this morning he ought to stop Alonzo from coming around before Mr. Dupree gets back again. I'd keep all the distance I could between them, with the talking that's going on."

"I can't claim to see very much myself of what goes on in the evening, after the day I've had," Miss Norma went on. "The thing I'm interested in is doing something that will rest my feet, and that's not going up and down those steps to the ravine. But there's several have told me they've seen her and Alonzo down there at night."

They all saw now. Alice and Rose looked at their mother, waiting for her to say something; hoping it would not be, as it so often was, that she just didn't believe a word of it. And it was not quite so bad as that, though they could see that Miss Norma was disappointed. For even now their mother said the people at the hotel were just summer people, and Mrs. Hill and Alonzo were neighbors. "They will be here after the others are gone and forgotten."

Alice wondered what Mr. Mason would say. He never talked about the summer people; after all, he was one of them himself.

But the next time they went walking he did talk a little about Miss Norma. "Our Miss Giddings, who looks after us all so beautifully," he called her, "she is on the go most of the time, but she stops and talks to me, if nobody else is doing it. She doesn't like to see me abandoned to a book."

Alice laughed, but she was wondering what Miss Norma talked about—if it could ever have been about Mrs. Dupree.

"Sometimes she talks about you," he said. "She was telling me the other day how long she has known you, and how you used to look back in the pinafore era."

"Did she tell you she was the one who made the pinafores? She used to help mamma make our clothes before we got old enough to sew. Miss Norma is awfully smart; she can do practically anything."

"So I imagine. And has everybody's interest at heart. She wants us to be not only happy but good, Miss Giddings does."

Alice laughed again. "I know; she comes up and talks to us too."

"Then I hope she tells you about me—how good and happy I am," he said.

Alice looked at him and smiled because she knew he meant for her to. She was thinking that he really did look happy, in the serious sort of way she had noticed before; she had never thought about whether he was good.

"And so," he said presently, "you stopped wearing pinafores, and changed yourself into a young lady in a long dress, without ever going away anywhere. I thought it was more trouble than that; I had an idea a lot of people had to work over it."

"Maybe they still have to," she said. "I'm not supposed to be through. Rose and I are supposed to travel, and study music, and learn languages. Papa has always talked about sending us to Europe."

"I know about women. What I want you to tell me is how to shave."

ARRANGE layer of sliced, boiled yams and onion slices in bottom of 2-qt. greased casserole • Sprinkle with ½ tsp. ground cloves, 1½ tbsp. brown sugar, dot with butter • Repeat layer • TOP with SPAM slices as pictured; pour ⅔ cup fruit juice (apple, pineapple or other) over all • BAKE in moderate oven (375°) 25 minutes or until heated through.

FUN ON A BUN. On toasted bun halves, lay SPAM slices and a slice of cheese. Slip under the broiler till SPAM browns, cheese bubbles. Any time is SPAMwich time.

PERFECT MATES are SPAM and eggs. Simply slice SPAM ¼ inch thick and grill both sides in a little fat. SPAM's unmatched flavor brings the family to table on the run.

5-MINUTE FONDANT

Candy without cooking!

So Quick! So Easy!
n 8-year-old can make it!

It's short-cut magic with EAGLE BRAND!

5-MINUTE FONDANT

(8 Varieties)

⅔ cup Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar

Blend Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk and vanilla. Gradually add confectioners' sugar, mixing until smooth and creamy. Result: 1⅓ pounds of real homemade candy.

Enjoy it plain, or in any of the following varieties: Use fondant between nut meats or as a stuffing for dates. Or form into small balls and roll in chopped nut meats, shredded coconut, grated chocolate, or candied fruit. Or color fondant with vegetable coloring, and flavor as desired with oil of peppermint or oil of wintergreen or lemon, orange, or almond extract—and form into round flat creams; top with nut meats or cherries.

ems almost too good to be true—that you can ake candies without cooking, frostings without gar. Pie fillings that never run. Glamour des- ts that are ready in a twinkling. Ice creams at always come out smooth.

But you can—you can do it with Eagle Brand, e original Sweetened Condensed Milk, made Borden's. A ready-to-use blend of creamy-rich ole milk and sugar. Smooth—timesaving—sted to give perfect results!

REE! Eagle Brand Magic Recipe Book—70 mpting dishes that will make your fingers itch cook—your mouth water to taste! Send post d with name and address to Borden's, Dept. -08, P. O. Box 175, New York 8, N. Y.

© The Borden Co.

"And how do you feel about it?" he asked her. "You told me you never wanted to go back and have the past over again; are you in any hurry to have the future? Do you think much about the kind of future you want it to be?"

"Yes, I believe I do—quite a lot. It's really feelings, more than thoughts, that I have about it. And certainly having them about the past wouldn't do any good; I couldn't change that anyway."

"You'd be surprised," he said. "There is nothing we can change as much. I've worked on mine until I've made it into something I don't believe I'd recognize if I saw it. You see, I've had a lot more past than you have; that makes a difference."

She looked at him, trying to imagine the difference that had been made. What would he be like with no more past than hers? The long legs stretched out on the grass, and the dark hair that he kept pushing back, and his gray eyes would have been about the same, she supposed; but she knew she would not have felt about him the way she did now: as if he had been somewhere that she had always dreamed of going and could tell her about it. Some books were like that, but she had never known a man before who was.

Melvina was wrapping something up in an old newspaper when Alice came into the kitchen.

"Show Miss Alice what you got this time," Annie Sue said. "She's been tryin' to get Mrs. Dupree to give it to her all summer, an' now she's got it. There ain't nobody's dress Mel can't get into once she gets into this!"

Alice looked at the pink satin garment lying on the newspaper. Its interminable lacings and its determined bones measured up to Miss Norma's description of the most expensive corset you could buy. She looked at Melvina's "shape" and thought about Miss Norma's—both of them expecting somehow to be poured into this mold.

"Of course you can let the strings out a whole lot," she told Melvina.

"I 'spec she can't hardly wait for Sunday to get here befo' she shines out in it," Annie Sue reflected when Melvina had departed.

MELVINA had almost had time to get home before they found the letter lying under the table.

"Mel 'bout dropped it out of the paper when she was rollin' her corset back up." Annie Sue retrieved it and handed it to Alice. It was carefully sealed and addressed in a large flowing hand to Alonzo Hill.

"That silly woman!" her mother said when Alice took it in and showed it to her.

"How can we get it to him? Or maybe it would be better to just give it back to her," Alice said.

Mrs. Macgowan held the letter in her hand, thinking. "Give it back to Annie Sue," she said, "and tell her to give it to Melvina the next time she comes by."

Upstairs in her room, Alice wished she could lay the matter before Rose. But Rose had gone into town to go to a concert and spend the night with Miss Sallie Kent. In spite of what her mother had said, Alice still felt that they ought to do something a little better than just giving the letter back to Melvina. Even if Mrs. Dupree did write to Alonzo whenever she felt like it, that didn't keep this one from being important.

Those were the longest days. There were hours of daylight after supper when they could sit on the porch and talk, or even read, without having to light a lamp. But the hotel was always a blaze of electricity.

"They miss all the prettiest part of the day," Alice said when she and Mr. Mason had wandered down on the lawn to where they could see the people sitting on the veranda.

"Yes, don't they?" he said. "But everybody has to see what everybody else is doing, and they can't do that in the gloaming. This evening especially. Has Miss Giddings been up with the news? Did you know that Othello showed up shortly after lunch without telling a soul he was coming—not even Miss Giddings? I mean Mr. Dupree," he said, for Alice was not smiling.

"Does everybody at the hotel believe he is so jealous, or just Miss Norma?" she asked him. "Sometimes I think she must have been married to a sort of Othello—you knew about her being married, didn't you?"

"I know everything," he said.

"WELL, couldn't that be the reason she expects other people's husbands to behave the same way? Mamma thinks she can do a lot of harm, saying those things to just anybody."

"Yes, but think of the pleasure she gives! This evening, for instance, one of the waiters dropped a tray, or maybe it was a fork, during dinner, and everybody jumped and looked around exactly as if a gun had gone off."

Alice laughed, but all the same she was wondering if Mr. Mason knew about the letter, whether he would think that was a joke too. Or if her mother knew Mr. Dupree had come back suddenly this afternoon, would she still think the letter was not important? The more she thought about it, the more she believed that something depended on Alonzo's getting it. If there were only some way for Mrs. Dupree to be told without somebody having to tell her.

"Maybe you will think I am as bad as Miss Norma," she said suddenly, "but something happened this afternoon. You know who Mr. Dupree is supposed to be jealous of, don't you?"

"I told you I know everything."

"Well, Mrs. Dupree wrote him a letter this afternoon—it must have been after Mr. Dupree came—and he never got it."

He looked at her. "You seem to be the one who knows everything," he said. "Who did get it? Not Miss Giddings, I hope."

"Nobody got it. The person she sent it by, Melvina Ford, dropped it; it was under the kitchen table."

"Nice safe place. Can the cook read?"

"That's not what I'm afraid of. I'm afraid she might have been trying to send him some word about not coming to the hotel."

"Maybe she carries letters all the time. This one needn't have been anything special."

"That's what mamma thought, but I'm almost sure it was, because Melvina showed me what Mrs. Dupree had given her—I'm sure it was for being careful to give him the letter."

"Which is still under the kitchen table, I gather?" He smiled at her; she knew she must sound like Miss Norma—so intense.

"I can't help it," she said. "I know I'm going to think about it in the night, if I wake up."

"We mustn't let that happen," he said. "After all, I'm not there at the hotel for nothing. Who do you think I'd better keep my eye on—Othello, or Desdemona, or Cassio? You don't want to walk over there a little while yourself and see what's going on? It looks pretty quiet from here."

She shook her head. "No, but I'm glad I told you, whether you laugh about it or not."

They walked back to the house and talked about so many things that Alice almost forgot about the letter; but he did not.

"I'd better be getting back to help Miss Giddings," he said when he took his leave. "Don't you wake up in the night, and whatever you do, don't think."

He seldom went down to the springs. But it occurred to him, walking back to the hotel, that he might at least check on the contingency of a broken rendezvous; in case of which he would be likely to find half of it somewhere waiting around. He went down the steps and walked to the upper end of the ravine, where the springs and the lights gave out, and even the benches. The final spring, with one rather small light above it, and one bench, was still ahead of him when he saw

(Continued on Page 168)

One person with a belief is a social power equal to ninety-nine persons who have only interests.
—JOHN STUART MILL.

Research by 19 Universities* proves you can beat high food prices!

How to Eat Well and Spend Less

Here, for example, is a square meal that serves four eager eaters for only $2.49

Canned foods have always had a proud reputation for keeping food bills down. Yes, even in these times of high prices. Research proves it—research by 19 American universities.* The facts boil down to this: Penny for penny, canned foods in general give you more food for your money, as well as more nutritional values. Most foods in cans not only cost less than the same foods in other types of containers, but less even than the fresh foods—and far less than frozen foods.

And just think of the extra convenience of using canned foods! All messy cleaning, trimming, peeling and scraping is done for you. All you do is the "masterminding." And, of course, canned foods are never out of season! Besides all that, you can always count on good taste and nutrition. For each steel-and-tin can is really a miniature "pressure cooker" that seals in fine flavors and precious nutrients.

The big reason why canned foods give you so much more and cost you so much less is—the can itself. Cans are sturdy, dependable, safe. And they're so inexpensive that more of your money goes for what's in the can. Thank goodness for this modern container!

Can Manufacturers Institute, Inc.
60 East 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

WHAT A MEAL FOR FOUR!
—AND ONLY $2.49

(Based on typical retail prices advertised in September, 1948)

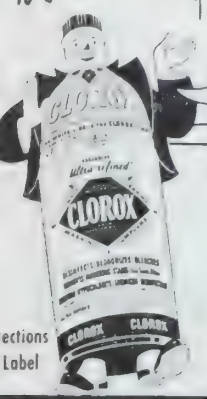
Vegetable soup; crackers; corned beef hash and sweet corn relish for "crown"; green peas; sliced beets for salad; peach halves and evaporated milk for delicious "Velvet Cream Dessert"; coffee; cookies—and they all come to you in cans! (Write for your FREE copy of the "MENU-MAKER"—giving suggestions for 25 meals at a cost of about $1 each—to serve 4 people.)

Recipe for CORNED BEEF HASH "CROWN"—Pack 2 cans of corned beef hash into well-greased ring mold. Bake in 350° oven for 30-35 minutes. Turn out onto serving dish or platter. Fill center with sweet corn relish. Surround with hot canned green peas.

BUY IN CANS AND BE PROUD
PROUD OF YOUR SERVINGS
PROUD OF YOUR SAVINGS

*For full details see "Comparative Cost and Availability of Canned, Glassed, Frozen and Fresh Fruits and Vegetables" in the April issue of the Journal of the American Dietetic Association.

You can't find a Gentler Bleach than Clorox!



THERE'S NOTHING BETTER THAN CLOROX FOR MAKING WHITE COTTONS AND LINENS SNOWY-WHITE (OR BRIGHTENING FAST COLORS)! FOR CLOROX IS FREE FROM CAUSTIC AND OTHER HARSH SUBSTANCES...IT IS MADE EXTRA GENTLE BY A PATENTED FORMULA USED EXCLUSIVELY BY CLOROX! AND BESIDES BEING GENTLER, CLOROX LESSENS RUBBING... THUS CONSERVING FABRICS TWO WAYS. GIVE YOUR LINENS THIS DOUBLE ADVANTAGE. ALWAYS LAUNDER WITH CLOROX!

Clorox gives you greater disinfecting efficiency, too!

CLOROX HAS POSITIVE GERM-KILLING POWER. AND BECAUSE CLOROX IS FREE FROM CAUSTIC, IT WORKS FASTER IN KILLING HARMFUL GERMS. CLEAN DAILY WITH CLOROX! GIVE YOUR FAMILY THIS EXTRA MEASURE OF HEALTH PROTECTION!

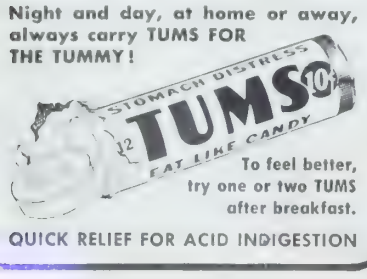
More Housewives use Clorox than any other Bleach and Disinfectant!

USE IN LAUNDRY . . . . . KITCHEN . . . . . BATHROOM

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

There's only one CLOROX . . . it's always uniform . . . always dependable!

ections Label



OON, made by the makers of Clorox, is another "first-aid" to easy housecleaning. It wipes away t and grease quickly, easily from washable surfaces. Cleaning with BOON is simplicity itself!

When you Take a Trip take heed Take TUMS

To travel in comfort, travel with Tums! Then, if strange food, fast eating, smoking or hurry brings on acid indigestion, slip Tums in your mouth. Almost instantly Tums neutralize the excess acid—you feel better fast! No baking soda (bicarbonate) in Tums. No danger of over-alkalizing! No acid rebound! Get Tums today.

Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS FOR THE TUMMY!

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

QUICK RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION

ANOTHER DIFFERENCE when you wear a SONOTONE!

Better Hearing's "Town Meetings"—In 1148 regularly-held Hearing Centers across the United States, Sonotone's users from smaller towns and farms get the same skilled care as Sonotone's city users. This continuing care is so vital that it often makes the difference between good hearing and not hearing! Your hearing deserves the best.

THE NEW MINIATURE SONOTONE "900". Again Sonotone is outstanding! Tiny, beautiful batteries inside. Nearly as easy to wear as a wristwatch . . . yet with great hearing ease!

Your hearing deserves SONOTONE

Sonotone, Box 219, Elmsford, New York

I want ☐ appointment for FREE consultation
☐ your FREE illustrated booklet

Name _____

Address _____ Apt. ____

City _____ State _____

(Continued from Page 166)

that somebody was approaching from farther up the ravine. He whistled casually; whoever it was, he wanted to seem casual, and if it was Alonzo he didn't want to seem Mrs. Dupree.

It was Alonzo; they reached the bench at practically the same moment and sat down on it, one at either end.

"I believe I have seen you at the hotel," Mr. Mason said as he did so. "I am staying there. My name is Mason."

"Mine's Hill." Alonzo took off his straw sailor and smoothed his hair on either side of the part; he gave, too, a little touch to his mustache. Mr. Mason had almost forgotten that a young man was so young.

"Pretty country you have around here," he said presently. "Just where does this ravine come out?"

"About a mile farther; not far from where I live," Alonzo told him.

"Then it's shorter for you than coming around by the road, I imagine. I might find a shorter way to get up to the hotel than going back to the steps."

"There's a path," Alonzo told him, "only there don't many people use it. It goes right up through that clump of cedars—excuse me for pointing—and comes out by the powerhouse and the annex."

"I see," Mr. Mason said. "Looks steep from here. I'll try it sometime when the weather is a little cooler. Does it ever get any hotter than this?"

"Not much—not around here. In town it's hotter," Alonzo told him.

"Or down the river, I suppose. I was talking earlier in the evening to a man from Louisiana—Mr. Dupree; he got in this afternoon, and I believe he's going back tomorrow or the next day, but even so he says it's worth the trip, it's so much cooler here than it is down on his plantation. Everything is a matter of comparison. Well"—he stood up—"I'm glad to have met you, Mr. Hill."

A word to the wise, he thought as he walked away; but Alonzo was another matter: had he used words enough? He looked back when he came to the bend in the ravine and thought he saw a white straw hat. He couldn't see a blue serge suit at night, and Alonzo's face might still be turned toward the clump of cedars that the path ran through. "Excuse me for pointing."

"As quiet as a millpond," Mr. Mason said. "Othello left yesterday, and Miss Giddings was too busy even to notice it."

"Do you think Alonzo realizes what might have happened if you hadn't told him Mr. Dupree was there?" Alice asked.

"What might?"

"Why, he might have come up to the hotel that night, maybe, and he would have been sure to come the next morning ——"

"And been challenged to a duel? Just what is it we have all been expecting—swords, pistols, horsewhips?"

"All the same, even mamma admits now that the letter might have been important. She is glad I told you. We are both awfully obliged to you for taking all that trouble," she added formally.

"You are both awfully welcome," he said, smiling. "It was a pleasure, I assure you. Meddling in other people's business always is a pleasure, don't you think so?"

It was Sunday morning again, with a delightful change in the weather. "You don't think the ground is too damp?" Mr. Mason asked her when they came to their tree. "I would hate for you to spoil that dress; I believe it's the prettiest one of all."

"Anyhow, it will wash," she said, spreading it around her on the grass.

"Aren't you ever afraid, coming out in new dresses all the time, that you might frighten off some really deserving young man who knew he would never be able to pay for them?"

Alice laughed. "Maybe if he got to be very deserving I could tell him how little they cost, when I make them myself."

He laid his hand on the edge of blue muslin lying near him. "Clothes are a wonderful thing. Sometimes they strike me as being more wonderful than anything else about to relieve coughs—aching muscles!

Made ESPECIALLY For BABY'S CHEST COLD

Child's Mild Musterole is made especially for the average baby's tender skin. No other rub gives faster relief from coughs and that miserable aching feeling of chest colds. Musterole also breaks up congestion in upper bronchial tract—bringing truly amazing relief.

Child's Mild MUSTEROLE®

Callouses

Pain, Burning, Tenderness Quickly Relieved

You'll quickly forget you have painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use thin, downy-soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads! Instantly lift pressure on the sensitive spot. Speedily remove callouses when used with the separate Medications included. Cost but a trifle. At all Drug, Shoe, Department Stores and Toiletry Counters. Insist on Dr. Scholl's.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Find Of The Year

On call to appear before the camera at a moment's notice, lovely honey-blond Nancy Shelby—New York model, famous for her clear, sparkling, photogenic complexion — says her find of the year is Edna Wallace Hopper White Clay Pack. There's nothing like its quick beauty pick-up when you have to look your loveliest in a hurry. See for yourself how fast this luscious, cream-like mask smooths away the day's strain lines, lifts your tired face out of its slump, and makes skin glow with a new look of sparkling radiance! Get Hopper White Clay Pack today! And for everyday care, use Edna Wallace Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. At cosmetic counters.

32 STAMPED PIECES for EMBROIDERY 1.98 SEND NO MONEY

Think of it! 32 lovely pieces of stamped material which you can easily and quickly embroider. Costs only $1.98 yet you would expect to pay much more for these many pieces. A sensational bargain! Large scarf for dresser or radio, 7 pc. refreshment set, large center, end table or flush tank cover, doilies, samplers, pot holders, bibs, whisk broom holder, 3 pc. chair set, 3 pc. vanity set, 3 pc. buffet set, etc. etc.—32 pieces in all on fine white art cloth for only $1.98 plus postage and C.O.D. handling. FREE to Anyone—Embroidery hoop free, generous assortment six strand floss. Also free, amazing new invention fits on any sewing machine easily, quickly. Makes button holes, quilts, sews on buttons, attaches zippers, darns stockings, mends tears, etc. Sells elsewhere regularly for $1.00 but sent to you free. Satisfaction guaranteed, or your $1.98 refunded. You keep free gifts regardless. Could anything be more fair? Just mail a card today!

KNIGHT MAIL ORDER CO. Dept. 3742-T 3140 12th St. Chicago 12, Ill.

KNITTING YARNS

SEND TODAY FOR NEW FREE SAMPLE BOOKLET

POSTAGE FREE! MONEY BACK GUARANTEE! Direct from our own great factories

YARN HEADQUARTERS, Dept. 'L'
718 CHESTNUT ST., PHILA. 6, PA.

Now your most Delicate Curtains
n be laundered

, even your most delicate curtains can fely laundered,—if they're Wat-a-set ed.

t-a-set is the ORIGINAL lasting fin-or cotton, rayon and nylon curtain s,—made possible by one of the new ical discoveries in this "miracle" age.
er washing does not entirely remove ring the normal life of a curtain. Even licate open marquisette weaves it s the threads in place, reduces shrink-minimizes crinkling due to moisture, s rayon eating silverfish, and helps ed curtains to hang straight. Only ary care in washing is required, per ctions on the Wat-a-set label.

t-a-set is the name of a finish. It is a brand name for a curtain. This is available on many different brands rtains in all price ranges at leading in stores from coast to coast.

e dry cleaning costs. Keep your curfresh and new looking.
Wat-a-set finished ains. MOUNT
PE FINISHING
North Dighton, achusetts.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Wat-a-set
IE ORIGINAL LASTING FINISH
R COTTON AND RAYON CURTAINS

people; this dress, for instance: I am as certain as I can be that if I am alive fifty years from now I will see it just as plainly as I do this minute."

"Then you aren't going to change it in the meanwhile, the way you told me you are always doing with the past?"

He took his hand away, but not his eyes. "It won't be the past," he said, and added rather suddenly: "I had another letter from home yesterday."

"From the battlements at Elsinore?"

"Yes. I wish you knew my father. He is one of the things I want to show you. I keep thinking up new ones all the time. I want to show you poor old Charleston. I know you would like the water, especially in the evening, from the Battery. I want to catch a little fishing boat with white sails and let you hold it in your hand."

She looked at him, not quite sure whether to smile or not, and decided not to.

"Is it very hot there—worse than here?"

"There's a breeze; you see, we are only about sixteen miles from the ocean. My father doesn't mind the heat, but this summer there has been a lot of rain, and it is what he calls the blessing of fecundity that he would pray to have withdrawn."

"I know what it's like here when we have a wet summer," Alice said. "The darkies say it's hard to keep the cotton in sight, on account of the weeds."

"But there it's not only weeds; it's bushes—trees, even the beautiful ones with white flowers; it's veils of Spanish moss—all the lovely vistas blotted out, my father says. Sometimes he feels that it is hopeless. He says, 'Whatever people mean by Southern ease and indolence, they are what it took to create the thing that used to be here. The question is, can business ability restore it? The work without the dreaming would bring back something, but not that.'"

When love and skill work together, expect a masterpiece. —RUSKIN.

Alice looked at him with serious eyes. "Did you, or your father either, ever think that maybe you might fall in love with a girl who had a lot of money and who would ——"

"I know," he broke in; "I've heard of girls like that. They drive out from Charleston occasionally, in search of romance; they want to marry somebody and restore something. Restore it to what? Do you know, Miss Alice, I wouldn't trust even myself in there with a million dollars?"

"But it must be so lovely the way it is, all veiled in moss, with the white flowers. Why does so much have to be done to it?"

"Because it has to be not only lovely, but livable. It's the difference between love in a dream and love in reality; which is a bigger difference than you would be likely to imagine. I can't have it waving veils at me and being elusive and mysterious. The thing I want to have back is something I have had already; and certainly it's the only thing I would ever want to offer to anybody else."

"Offer to show it to them, do you mean—'here is the kitchenette'?" she asked.

"Offer to share it—offer it to a girl to come and live in." He looked at her meditatively. "When I think about the kitchen at home, and how it used to look to me—and especially how it used to smell —— Did you ever think very much about smells? Kitchen odors. They are terribly looked down upon these days; but at home they would draw you from anywhere. Your mother's kitchen is like that; I smelled the gingerbread in the yard when we were starting for our walk. Asking a girl to leave that kind of home for a slice of a house in town would be like asking a queen to abdicate. I don't see how a man would go about it.

"'Come live with me and be my Love,
And we will all the pleasures prove ——'

"A gas stove and can opener and sending all our things to the laundry. You don't call the

(Continued on Page 171)

See all you get in this brand-new FRIGIDAIRE REFRIGERATOR

See how beautiful this new Frigidaire Refrigerator is in this kitchen. It will be just as stunning in yours!

See how much food it holds. Frigidaire's new design gives up to 50% more food storage space in the same kitchen space. Super-Freezer Chest holds up to 50 lbs. of frozen foods.

See these wonderful features! Full-width, glass-topped Hydrator for fruits, vegetables; sliding Basket-Drawer for eggs and small packages; Quickube Ice Trays; many more.

See how many models! Three different types (shown here is the Frigidaire De Luxe) . . . 9 models in all.

See why Frigidaire Refrigerators serve so long. They're powered by the Meter-Miser, simplest cold-maker ever built!

See your Frigidaire Dealer. Find name in Classified Phone Book; or write Frigidaire, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

More Frigidaire Refrigerators Serve in More American Homes Than Any Other Make.

Listen to Frigidaire's new LUM 'N' ABNER show. See newspaper for time, station.

You're twice as sure with two great names

FRIGIDAIRE

MADE ONLY BY

General Motors

(Continued from Page 169)

s hanging out over the grass 'things'; e washing, it's beautiful."

e laughed. "I've always liked the coun- ter too; not on account of the wash- ough. And I don't know what a flat ke; that's another one of the things I t to see."

ll, that's one I am not going to show e said. "At least not if I can help it."

aughed again with perfect unconcern; she didn't realize she was being made , after a fashion, or she thought the was funny. He was continually being d to break up that way she had of at him—to make some kind of splash, e, in her clear gaze. But it wouldn't enteen was too young for any but the traightforward dealings, and she was even for seventeen. A girl of her in- ce should know a good deal more than new, about more things. Young and nt, then; which left beauty still to be ed with, and love. He had fallen in ith her right away, he supposed—from y of the dogfight; and he could not re- er a time when beauty was not a thing l to reckon with. That was why he d to show her things, to tell her things— te her things; it was not to enlighten ut them. And never saw you ed and died a l, there it was. there was the e of Usher ling about his nd his mother ather and the n Exchange. he was seeing s clearly, he keep his eyes on was more than k before Miss a had time to up and tell them relieved she had to have Mr. ee go away as d.

made sure some- had put a flea s ear, but it s to have been a business trip. ared her, but she ought to be scared." omething certainly should have hap- d to bring her to her senses," Mrs. Mac- n said. "Maybe now she will let that silly boy alone."

ss Norma did not say anything. Alice, was sewing, looked up just in time to see ous change take place in her expression; us, yet familiar. She had seen it all her all sorts of faces, and it always meant people knew something they were not to say while she was there. Alice had ys taken it for granted that a time d come when they would stop doing it— they would just go on with what had to say and not be so mysterious t it. Certainly by the time a girl got gh reading Shakespeare and Byron wasn't anything she didn't know, or dn't imagine. Only when it came to people you naturally stopped short of things.

That's what I mean when I say she has tle sense," her mother explained after Norma had gone. "When a woman has iscretion and starts people to talking t her, they never know where to stop. ar as her reputation is concerned, there ry little to choose between being bad being silly."

was early in the morning a few days Miss Norma's visit—long before break- and really not very long after daylight— n Alice was awakened by the sound of aming. Melvina was running through yard calling somebody. Alice in her tgown at the window could hear her —"He done shot Mr. 'Lonzer, he done him daid!"

"Stop that noise, Melvina"—her father was at his window too—"and come over here where I can talk to you."

Melvina came, but talking to her was another matter; all they could do was to listen while the noise went on.

"How do you know all this?" Mr. Macgowan asked. "You say it happened at the hotel, and you have not been to the hotel."

SHE was on her way there now, Melvina said. "One of the gen'lemen done come out to tell his ma, an' a doctor from the hotel done come to tell her Mr. 'Lonzer was plumb daid, an' they was fixin' to bring him home."

"She is certainly making the most of it, but it may still be a mistake," Mr. Macgowan said. He prepared to follow Melvina on her way to the hotel.

The rest of them were dressing, and Annie Sue had already made the fire in the kitchen stove and was cooking breakfast. The smell of the coffee coming in at the window through which the screams had come seemed like waking from a dreadful dream, Alice thought. Melvina's tale could not be true.

But it was true. Her father told them briefly that Mr. Dupree had come back unexpectedly again, at night this time, and found his wife with Alonzo down in the ravine—"by that last spring." He had taken a pistol from his pocket and shot him—killed him instantly, her father said. They found out later that Mr. Dupree hadn't done anything to Mrs. Dupree except to take her back to the hotel; and after that it seemed he hadn't tried to run away—he had just waited until the sheriff came. It was all terrible, but so strange, too, that it was hard to realize anything except the strangeness.

Alice wondered how her father could be so quiet about it; and even Mr. Dupree had apparently been quiet. Her mother had gone to Mrs. Hill's as soon as she finished breakfast and didn't know when she would be back. That was something they always hated to hear her say; it sounded so endless. What would be happening there at Mrs. Hill's? Would their mother be crying?

If she had been, it was not enough to show. "So many people began coming that I thought I wouldn't stay this time," she said when they met her. "I can go back, and I do want to send her some more flowers."

They wanted her to tell them more about Mrs. Hill than that she didn't have enough flowers. It seemed strange that she would care about anything like that. They didn't know much about what happened when people died—even in the ordinary way. Naturally she wouldn't be screaming like Melvina, but their mother sounded as if she were just the way she always was. And Alonzo ——

"Where is Alonzo now?" Alice asked. Her voice was shaking a little in spite of all she could do to make it sound as if Alonzo might be just anywhere.

"I didn't see Alonzo," her mother said. "I sat with Mrs. Hill in her room awhile, and talked to some of the people and then came on home. One of you go see if Annie Sue can have lunch a little earlier. We must have eaten breakfast before six o'clock."

Late that evening, after the sun had been off the garden long enough for the flowers to stiffen up, they went out and cut everything white they could find, and even put in some pale pink roses.

"We will put them in something deep and leave them out where the dew will fall on them," Mrs. Macgowan said. "Then in the

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

First Song for Alison

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

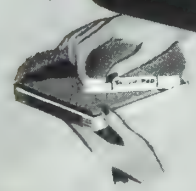
Robert is a sturdy elf,
Strong and growing tall;
Can reach the table when he tries—
But Alison is small.

Robert's learned his way around,
He has his language, too;
Can hold his spoon, and stand alone—
But Alison is new.

Less and less in need of me,
Free and doing fine,
Robert is the world's child—
But Alison is mine!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Look How Easy BRUCE Makes My Floor Cleaning!



Bruce Doozit and Bruce Floor Cleaner wax as you clean... standing up!

1 Pour a small amount of wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner on your wood floor or linoleum. Then use the Doozit with its magic Pad to loosen dirt, erase spots and marks.

2 Drop a cloth under the Doozit Pad and wipe up dirt, leaving the floor surface thoroughly clean, ready for polishing.

for wood floors and linoleum

3 Replace the moist Doozit Pad with a dry one, then polish. The non-slip wax film left by Bruce Floor Cleaner polishes quickly.

Just these three easy steps, that's all there is to complete floor beauty care when you use the modern Bruce method — standing up. No more sore knees, no more tired backaches — no harmful water and strong soaps to destroy the beauty and lifetime of your floors. You can get Bruce Floor Products at stores everywhere. The Bruce Doozit costs only $1.89. Long-wearing, easily replaceable pads are 19c each. Bruce Floor Cleaner, 68c qt., $1.15 half gal., $2.10 gal.

BRUCE floor products

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Bruce Tuf-Lustre Wax

Bruce Paste Wax

Bruce Self-Polishing Wax

E. L. Bruce Co., Memphis, Tenn. • • • World's Largest Maker of Hardwood Floors

Club Aluminum

HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

How to make roast pork full-flavored and juicy

Here's How... Drop in a small piece of fat. Put cover on the Club Aluminum Oval Roaster, and place over medium heat on top of range, until the over is sizzling hot (test with moist finger). Put in meat, nd brown slowly and well on all sides. Then put cover on nd reduce heat to low. Do not add water. Roast about 30 minutes per pound. Season when nearly done. Set cover ajar last 15-20 minutes to crisp outer crust. When you lift the lid, you'll know by the wonderful aroma what "Full Flavor" means. Club 15-in. Oval Roaster shown; 18½-in. Oval Roaster also available.

ER CLUB PIECES CHOOSE FROM

Aluminum Dutch ns (covers fit frying), 4½-qt., 6-qt., and sizes available.

Aluminum Covered epans: 1½ qt., 2-qt., , and 4-qt. sizes.

ILLUSTRATED — Chicken rs: 10-in., and 11¾-in. Open Fry Pans. 6¼-, 8¾-in., 10-in., and in. sizes. Handled 10-in. size.

FULL FLAVOR

Heats evenly. Flavor-laden steam rises to the moisture-sealed lid, falls back again to flavor, reflavor food. Vitamins, minerals stay in. Low-heat method saves fuel.

How wonderful it is to be sure of tender, juicy roasts every time. "Full Flavor" cooking in Club Aluminum Hammercraft Waterless Cookware makes the most not only of meats, but fruits, vegetables and poultry. This waterless, top-of-stove way of cooking doesn't dilute the natural flavors—and saves vitamins, minerals, fuel and pot watching.

Millions of women now cook this "Full Flavor" way and take pride in the beautiful "jewelry store" hammered finish of their Club Aluminum.

Now, with 18 basic pieces to choose from, you can start your Club Aluminum set, round it out, or select one or more choice pieces for wedding or birthday gifts. At many good retailers.

IUM ALUMINUM PRODUCTS CO., CHICAGO 14, ILLINOIS

Other distinctive Club lines: Club Glass Coffee Makers

Club Coffee Dispensers . . . Club Pot 'n' Pan Pads . . . Club Aluminum Hot Dish Pads morning, if you want to, you may both drive over and take them to her."

The cedar trees looked actually black against the morning sky when they drove in and stopped in front of the house. There were two or three other vehicles standing in the yard, their horses hitched to other trees.

"Do you think we had better tie Kitty?" Alice asked. "We will only be just a few minutes."

"I am not going in," Rose said. "You get out and I will hand you the flowers."

"But mamma wanted us ——" Alice protested, though she had obeyed and was already standing on the grass.

Rose handed her the big flat basket. "Aren't they beautiful with the dew still on them like that?" she asked.

Alice turned with the basket in her arms and went up the steps. Mrs. Hill was in the parlor, sitting beside Alonzo. She got up and took the flowers and said something, but Alice was looking at Alonzo. She would have known right away that he was not asleep; but if she had not known that he was dead, she would have thought something wonderful had happened to him.

Mrs. Hill took a white rose out of the basket and laid it beside him. "My boy looks beautiful, doesn't he?" she said, looking down at him; and then she said in a different voice: "The Lord gave, but now the Lord hath taken away."

Alice got back in the buggy with no idea that she was going to cry. She was feeling strange, but not the least bit sad. It was when she saw Alonzo's horse in the lot, looking over the fence toward the house, and the buckboard standing by the stable with the shafts on the ground, that her throat began to feel queer, and then before she knew it she was sobbing so she couldn't even answer when Rose asked her what was the matter.

"Didn't he look just like he was asleep?"

Alice shook her head.

"I expect he looked more like a statu the way Rob Roy did."

Alice wiped her eyes. "But Rob R looked like a statue of himself; as if he had changed a bit by dying. You were sure if could come back he would be just the sar Alonzo didn't look that way at all; you kn the minute you saw him that he would ne even want to come back."

"Well, anyhow, don't start crying aga You have no idea how you look." Rose dr up in the shade of a convenient tree a inspected her sister. "I believe everybo would have been better off if the hotel h never been built and the springs were t way they used to be," she said.

> If people did as much as they said they did, there would be no time to talk about it. —VIRGINIA B. LECKIE.

The way they used be: little bubbles in t sand. And that la spring—Alice remember the day they discover it, practically hidden the grass. If anybody ha told her then what wi going to happen right the where they were wading, how would she ha felt? Rose was probably right about the being happier the way they were. And yet they could go back, Alice was sure she didn want to go. It would just all be to learn ov again—the things she knew now about peop and the way they acted, and how different seemed to you after they were dead. Alon couldn't have looked like that if he had bee bad and low-down, the way she had bee thinking he was; and maybe Mrs. Dupr was not either. It was still something sh couldn't understand, but she knew now sh didn't have to feel so ashamed if anybod mentioned it. It was a tremendous relie

Having a thing like that happen would b bad for the hotel, people said. Mr. and Mr Deering were worried when so much about came out in the newspapers; but none of th people who were staying there left on accoun of it. Except the Duprees, of course; the RADIANTLY BEAUTIFUL—Exciting, decorator-styled shades...pastel to deep jewel tones!

EASY TO CLEAN—Most soil and smears disappear with a damp cloth!

AMAZINGLY STURDY—Stands up to scuffing, peeling, fading. Flame-resistant, too!

AND SO COMFORTABLE—Petal-soft to the touch . . . with plenty of gentle "give"!

Insist on the Duran tag—your protection—your assurance of genuine Duran all-plastic on the furniture you buy.

Send for sample and free informative folder today

Endearing Charm... Enduring Beauty

Duran all plastic UPHOLSTERY COVERING

THE MASLAND DURALEATHER COMPANY, 3278-90 AMBER ST., PHILADELPHIA 34, PA.

d all gone home the next day. Mr. Du-ee, too, though he would have to come back r the legal formalities, which couldn't be ything very bad, from the way everybody oke of them. Nobody even mentioned nging Mr. Dupree. Alice had heard of the written law and was now told that it was r cases like this that it had not been written.

Another thing that had turned out differ-nt from what she would have expected was liss Norma. It was exactly as if she had ever said anything bad about Mrs. Dupree, wanted anything to happen to her or lonzo. Mr. Mason said he didn't know how nat poor woman, or the children, could have ot along without Miss Norma; she had just one everything for them. She was quiet all f a sudden too. She hardly talked to any-ody about what had happened.

"Tragedy is supposed to have that effect n people," Mr. Mason said. "The last act—hen somebody has to pay for everything, whether he was to blame for all of it or not—nakes the audience feel pretty sober for a while. But unfortunately it doesn't last. The uman situation, Miss Alice, seems to call for lot of sacrifices. Something, somewhere, has always got to be settled with. We talk about forgiving people for their misdeeds, be-ause they are dead, or because we are Christians. If we were good consistent pa-gans we would know better than that. We would probably put a stone or an altar of some description down at that last spring to remind the passer-by that a debt had been paid there, a part of the universal obligation."

The summer was almost gone now; the leaves had not turned, but there was a gold wash over everything. Last year at this time Mr. Deering had begun to talk of closing the hotel, but this year he was thinking of keep-ing it open. There were a good many people who liked the country better in the fall than any other time of the year.

"I told him I thought I knew one he could count on staying," Miss Norma said, looking at Alice very much in her old manner, and Alice looked back, smiling very much in hers.

"I think it is exceedingly sensible of Mr. Deering to do that," Mrs. Macgowan said. "He can have big wood fires in the evening and make it look cheerful and homelike."

"And if Mr. Mason stays, I tell you some-body else that won't be leaving in a hurry," Miss Norma said, "and that's Miss Kitty Kirkman and her mother. She may not be ahead of you in looks, Alice, but they tell me she's one of the richest girls in Nashville, so you better keep your eye on her."

"I think she's perfectly beautiful," Alice said. "I was trying to describe the way she looked in that yellow dress to mamma. I never thought about yellow being becoming to a blonde, but it made her look gold all over. Do you suppose Mr. Mason knows about her having so much money?"

"I can't see any use in her hiding a thing like that from him, when she's doing every-thing else she can to catch him," Miss Norma said. "Of course she's too well brought up to brag about it, but it's easy to see they have always been used to everything."

Miss Kitty Kirkman and her mother had been at the hotel about a week now; they had been out in Colorado all summer and were on their way back home. They were much the nicest people who had come yet. Miss Kitty's dresses were all colors and every one becom-ing to her complexion. She had a lovely way of speaking, too, and probably knew foreign languages; they had been to Europe twice.

"Do you know whether she went to col-lege too?" Alice asked Mr. Mason.

Mr. Mason did not think Miss Kirkman had been to college. "She is very much edu-cated, though; one can see that," he said.

"She has studied music, too," Alice said; "she sings. Have you heard her?"

He shook his head. "We must ask her to sing for us. She and Rose can get together on that."

"I think she's the most beautiful girl I ever saw," Alice said earnestly.

"Well, I wouldn't say that."

"We call her the golden girl. I mean the Here's How...

1 Club Coffee Dispenser measures exactly. Each flip of lever gives you correct amount of coffee for one cup.

2 Upper bowl of Drip Coffee Maker measures water exactly—by cup markings.

3 Filter-timer measures drip-time exactly—uniform speed-per-cup.

The Club Coffeeware Combination—Glass Drip Coffee Maker, 4-8 cups, $5.95; Club Wall Coffee Dispenser, $3.00; both packed as a set for $7.95 (a $1 saving).

Also—Club Aluminum Hammercraft Dri Coffee Maker with aluminum dripper, $6.9

CRYSTAL-CLEAR CLUB GLASS COOKWARE

2-qt. Whistling Teakettle.....$2.95
6-cup Teapot.....$2.95
2-qt. Saucepan.....$2.45
1½-qt. Double Boiler.....$3.95
9-cup Percolator.....$3.95
8-cup Vacuum Coffee Maker (2 Covers)..$4.45

ALSO

Club Pot 'n' Pan Pads, package.....$ .25
Club Aluminum Hot Dish Pads 3 for $2.00

Yes, you can do it—make the same good coffee ever time—thanks to this new coffee-making system Exact measure—triple control—is the secret.

The handy Club Coffee Dispenser gives the righ amount of coffee for one cup at each flip of the leve The markings on the upper bowl of the coffee make measure water exactly. And most important of al Club's patented flavor-filter measures brewing tim exactly. That's why you get the same full-flavo coffee every time.

Put the Club Coffeeware combination—the Clu Coffee Dispenser and the Club Glass Drip Coffe Maker—to work in your home, and from this da forward enjoy the same full-flavor goodness in ever cup of coffee. Get it at leading retailers.

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS CO., CHICAGO 14, ILLINOI
Makers of famous Club Aluminum Hammercraft Waterless Cookware

Set No. 3462/5. Table size 34 x 62" extended; 34 x 50" closed. Choice of colors: Table: white or canary. Chairs: seats and backs richly upholstered in canary, red or black; seat and back panels in gleaming white Arvinite.

New features, styling, comfort

Arvin provides the utmost in beauty and convenience

New "Miracle" Slide-Away Extension Leaf

Completely concealed, yet ready for instant use. Automatically stored just below the table top. Operates so easily that a child can raise or lower it with one hand from either side. The most convenient table-leaf ever developed.

DE LUXE ARVIN Metal Chrome-Plated DINETTE SETS

THE NEW EXCLUSIVE FEATURES that are yours with a genuine Arvin De Luxe Dinette Set bring the thrill of added beauty—and far greater practical convenience. The "Miracle" Slide-Away Leaf is the first major table-leaf improvement in 25 years! The gracefully styled, richly upholstered chairs, with form-fitting backs, covered with scuff-proof Vinyl fabric, are a revelation in luxurious comfort. With the table extended you'll have ample room for serving eight. The brilliantly lustrous, long-life Arvinite finish resists chipping, cracking, acids, alcohol and boiling water. The exquisitely designed semi-oval table, providing extra knee and leg room, the lovely colors, the sparkling lustre of chrome-plated metal legs and trim, will give you endless delight. And Arvin quality means lasting satisfaction.

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC.
Columbus, Indiana

...al Chrome-Plated Dinette Sets • Metal Outdoor Furniture • All-Metal Ironing Tables

one in the fairy tale," Alice added quickly; "I wasn't thinking about her being so rich."

"Is she?"

Alice nodded. "Her family is. Papa used to know them in Nashville. She is descended from one of the Presidents."

"Was he rich?"

"I didn't mean that; I meant her family was aristocratic."

"I see," he said. "But what I don't see is why you are making it so clear to me. If you are trying to make me admire Miss Kirkman more than I do already, you don't have to bother. Or maybe it's not me you are thinking about, maybe it's you; you may be trying to get rid of me. Are you?"

She waited a little before she laughed at that—to be sure; and he went on:

"If you are, then come out and tell me so, and don't try to buy me off with rich families and Presidents' granddaughters and things like that." There he was again—throwing his pebbles into the clear pool. It wouldn't do. "That's a joke, Miss Alice. She is charming."

The moonlight in October was wonderful, and the nights still warm, and by that time they had become so well acquainted with one another that Mrs. Kirkman and Kitty would come up almost every evening with Mr. Mason and Colonel Bodley. Alice looked at her, leaning back in the low chair right under the moon. Her neck and arms were white, like marble, through her thin dress, and her diamonds sparkled more than ever.

Kitty didn't like to sing at the hotel, but there in the moonlight all they had to do was get her started. Rose tried playing her accompaniments loud enough for her to sing without having to come inside, but it didn't go very well.

Then Mrs. Kirkman remembered about the guitar. "Go get it, Kitty; you remember which trunk it is in."

"Nobody wants to hear me that bad, even if you knew where the key was," Kitty said; but Mr. Mason pulled her up from the steps where she was sitting and told her to come on.

"If you can't find the key, I'll bring the trunk."

When they came back he had the guitar slung across his shoulder by a wide ribbon, and standing there in the moonlight they looked exactly like something in an old picture, or a play—Gaily the troubadour touched his guitar. Kitty didn't know that song, but she seemed to know almost everything else anybody had ever heard of.

When she stopped singing and they went back to the hotel it was almost midnight, but neither Alice nor Rose wanted to go in. It was the most beautiful evening they could remember.

"I would rather sing like that than do anything in the world," Alice said. "It must be so wonderful to have even a few people feel about you the way we were all feeling about her. Of course a lot of it was the way she looked; nobody could take eyes off her."

"Of course you didn't notice where Mr. Mason's eyes were," Rose said.

THE next afternoon Alice lay in the hammock trying to keep awake over a book of poetry and finding it difficult because of the night before. Even after she went to bed she had stayed awake—on purpose, because she was trying to hold on to things, to keep them from slipping into the past. But it wouldn't be the past; Mr. Mason had said that about remembering her blue dress, and that was how she felt about last night: she didn't want it ever to be the past. But of course it kept getting more so every minute—the moonlight and the music and the way everything had looked—and the daylight put the finishing touch on it. Maybe if anyone went blind and didn't have the outside changes to contend with, it would be possible to keep the feeling of enchantment longer. She closed her eyes; she could hear Kitty's voice—"Moon of the summer night"—and see her sitting on the steps with her guitar. She opened them and saw her coming across the lawn from the hotel; so that was the end of that. She jumped up and went to meet her.

"Are there still some muscadines there?" Kitty asked as they walked past the grapevine swing in the edge of the wood. "Mr. Mason wanted to shake some down for us last night in the moonlight, but mother thought it was too late."

"We can see if there are any we can get." Alice veered off from the path. "You really can't shake them down, though; you have to chunk them, and I doubt if either of us can throw high enough."

They couldn't; but their hats fell off and Alice's braids fell down, and it was too hot anyway, so they gave it up.

"You sit in the swing," Alice said. "It holds me, so I know it will hold you. I'll sit here." "Here" was the ground. "I wonder why the ripe ones always have to grow so high." She was gazing up into the tree, unconscious of how she looked to the girl in the swing, who was watching her in an unusual silence.

"I SHOULD think you would feel like a couple of enchanted princesses, living out here this way. And wasn't it wonderful to have the hotel just suddenly spring up at your gate? You don't have to bother to go after your princes. Have there been many of them, so far? I'll ask Rose. I saw her watching you last night—and Mr. Mason. She knows he's in love with you, as well as I do, whether you've told her or not; whether he has told you or not. Has he? No—really—there's one thing I want to ask you: are you going to marry Mr. Mason?"

You will make more friends in a week by getting yourself genuinely interested in other people than you can in a year by trying to get other people interested in you.
—ARNOLD BENNETT.

"Goodness no!" Alice said. "I'm not going to marry anybody. There are too many other things I've got to do before I can do that."

"Is he going to wait for you, then? You'll admit that he is worth waiting for. Mother and I both think he is one of the most attractive men we have seen in a long time." She looked at Alice in silence for a minute. "How old do you think I am?" she said. "Guess."

Alice looked at her seriously. "I'm going to guess twenty."

"Add four. That gives me one more year to go, and then I enter the old-maid class. Nobody could have made me believe when I was your age that I wouldn't be married by the time I was twenty-five."

"But if you wanted to ——" Alice began.

"Why didn't I? That's a long story. Have you told Mr. Mason what you just told me—about not wanting to marry anybody?"

Alice shook her head. "I haven't told him anything. And besides ——" For some reason she stopped before she said that Mr. Mason couldn't marry anybody either because he had too many other things to do first. A few months ago she would have told Kitty that. She would have told her a lot of things she wouldn't tell her now. She would not have paid the slightest attention to what Miss Norma said about her trying to catch Mr. Mason. But now, "Let's go on to the house," she said. "We can get Annie Sue to make us some lemonade." She got up; the sudden suspicion that the way people looked to Miss Norma might be a good deal like what they really were made her so unhappy that she had to put off thinking about it.

"All the same, I would like to be around sometime when he is really making love to a girl. He has had plenty of practice; don't let anybody fool you about that."

The beautiful days went on, but the moon was rising later all the time.

"I told mother if she would just let me stay the moon out, I would go on back to Nashville with her," Kitty said. "I am going to be homesick for this place, Alice. When I think of you all doing everything just the same without me, I can hardly stand it."

"But it won't be just the same," Alice said. "You know that. We are going to miss

(Continued on Page 177)

Bake More...
Broil More with 2 Big Sealed
Heat Ovens

HOTPOINT PRESENTS

New Double-Oven Range with New Pushbutton Cooking!

Here's Hotpoint's Back Panel where each cooking unit has its own set of simple Pushbutton Controls. All you do is push a button for fast, accurate, measured heat!

HERE'S a modern kitchen marvel—Hotpoint's big new Double-Oven Electric Range, with Pushbutton Controls and "Talking Colors" for accurate Pushbutton Cooking.

● ● Into this wonderful new kind of range, Hotpoint has built two of its famous Sealed-Heat Ovens. Both ovens are complete—you can bake or broil in either or both—and there's enough oven space for a full dinner for 20 people.

● ● AND up on the beautiful back panel are Hotpoint's amazing new Pushbutton Controls. Just choose the cooking speed you want for any unit. Then—push a button. Presto! You get accurate, measured heat, and a colored light shows you what unit is on—at what speed!

● ● Ask your Hotpoint dealer to show you Pushbutton Cooking and all the other wonderful features of this great new Double-Oven Range! It's so practical! So speedy! So accurate! So convenient! It's made by Hotpoint—America's leading electric-range manufacturer.

HOTPOINT INC. (A General Electric Affiliate), Chicago 44, Ill.

Pushbutton Controls and "Talking Colors"
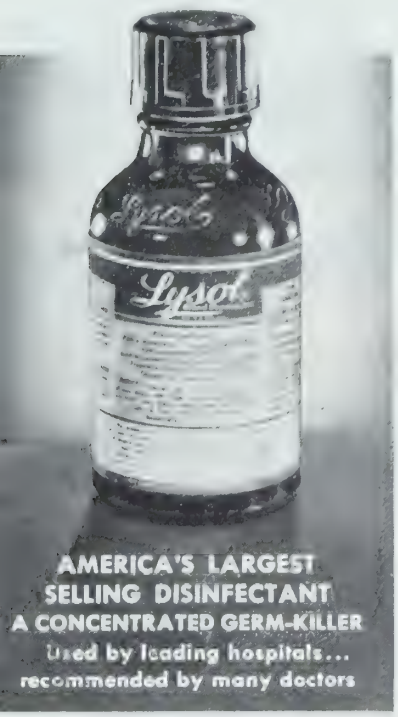
Make Cooking So

Everybody's Pointing To

Hotpoint



Automatic Electric Ranges

THIS MONTH

FLU VIRUS* THREAT BEGINS

Guard your family against the dread flu virus, now becoming such a widespread threat. Here's the startling, menacing fact about this potent virus: Scattered by an infected sneeze, it can continue to live in house dust . . . infect your family with flu weeks later when stirred up by sweeping. So—disinfect daily, as you clean—with "Lysol"—the powerful disinfectant that quickly kills the flu virus on contact! Add "Lysol" brand disinfectant to the cleaning water every single time!

*When scattered by an infected sneeze, the potent flu virus (medical laboratory tests prove) can dry out in house dust . . . live to cause flu infection even 6 weeks later.

Every Day . . . As You Clean Kill Disease Germs with "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. • Product of Lehn & Fink

ATHTUBS and showers demand constant gienic cleansing. And don't omit toilet at, bathroom floor and walls. Use 2½ blespoons of germ-killing "Lysol" to each allon of cleaning water, as for all general sinfection.

ALL WOODWORK, doors, stair rails, baseboards, furniture, call for "Lysol." They may harbor the flu virus—scattered by an infected sneeze or cough, and living in house dust. "Lysol" kills this potent virus—won't harm paint, varnish.

LAUNDRY TUBS, WASHERS need careful, hygiene cleaning . . . especially when flu is going the rounds. Disinfect with "Lysol" as you clean. Highly concentrated, highly economical . . . A little "Lysol" goes a long way.

WASH MOPS, brooms, brushes, cleaning cloths regularly with "Lysol." These are your tools for the hygienic cleansing of your whole house. Keep them "Lysol"-disinfected, clean and sweet-smelling at all times. Never risk a less efficient germicide!

IMPORTANT "LYSOL" CLEANING USES: Bathroom tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor—kitchen sink, drainboards, garbage pail. • Laundry tubs and washers—closets, cellars, stairs, storerooms, shelves. • All woodwork, floors, walls, doorknobs, rails—children's rooms and furniture, diaper pail. • Sickrooms, including bedding, utensils and linen—cleaning rags, mops, brooms, brushes.

(Continued from Page 174)

ı more than we ever have anybody. You re talking about how nice it was to have hotel bring people here, but they never y, and that is a terrible drawback; it keeps from being quite happy even while they here—the ones we really like, I mean."

"But Mr. Mason is going to stay; he told that if they let anybody do it, he was going stay until he went home for Christmas. other invited him to stop and see us, either his way there or his way back. When can u come, Alice? For a real visit, I mean. If have you there, Mr. Mason will be sure to ow up sooner or later. What do you really ean to do about him? Haven't you ever en in love with anybody yet?"

"Maybe a little," Alice said after thinking.

Kitty looked at her. "Of course you are vfully young—you are young even for your e—but how you can sit out there night ter night, with him looking at you the way does, and even his voice being different hen he says anything to you! I think you ust have a stony heart. I simply can't bear he thought of going away and maybe never eing him again. That is the plain truth and might as well tell it—to you, I mean. Sometimes I wish I was the kind of girl who would st go ahead and tell him; not for any good would do me, but I don't seem to care bout that either—even if it did me a lot of arm I would still want him to know."

Alice was glad she had never told Kitty bout the battlements at Elsinore, and about Ir. Mason's father and mother having to ve in an apartment, and especially glad she ad never mentioned his not being able to et married. She could see exactly how that ould affect her: she would think then that he only thing to do was to tell him how she elt about him; she would have a wonderful xcuse. But it would not do any good.

On the last evening the moon was full—a ircumstance that was generally supposed to ring a rain. On this occasion, however, it ad not brought even the tiniest cloud. They vatched the perfected splendor swim into n empty sky, rolling fantastic lengths of hadow up, until the earth seemed empty, oo, of all but light.

"Mother was too tired," Kitty had explained when she and Mr. Mason walked up alone. "She never lets me help enough with the packing; we thought it would be better to come up in the morning to say our real good-bys."

"And until then we will just forget there is such a word in the language," Mrs. Macgowan said.

Everybody tried to be cheerful, but nobody really felt like talking. Fortunately, they had refused to let Kitty pack the guitar; they would say good-by to that in the morning too.

"If you could see the way you look, sitting there like that—not to mention the way you sound," Alice told her, "you wouldn't talk about our forgetting you. You are a dream!"

"Yes, and we all know what happens to dreams," Kitty said. "Vanish like a dream; go out like a light; what else can I do?"

"You might reappear in the darkness," Mr. Mason said; "but before we come to that, I want to hear—I want to see—Juanita again. I even want to sing it."

"It's a man's song," Kitty said, waking the strings. "You ought to do it by yourself; I'll help you in the high places."

It was Alice's favorite too—or almost her favorite; she thought their voices were lovely together:

"When in thy dreaming Moons like these shall shine again ——"

Kitty had stopped helping him; her fingers kept on, and he kept on, pretending not to notice, but they all knew what had happened.

"That's enough for tonight," she said in her usual voice when they got to the end. "Take it, and take me back to the hotel. . . . I'll see you in the morning, Alice. It may be morning now; I don't even want to know what time it is."

Alice sat down on the steps again and watched them go off across the lawn, along the path to the fence. They went very slowly, stopping every now and then to look back, or to look at each other, or up at the moon. Would she tell him after all? Or did she even have to tell him? He must know already how she felt.

Love, who to none beloved to love again
Remits . . .

Kitty, poor silly Mrs. Dupree—apparently they had the same thing to contend with. It must be terrible, Alice thought.

"The thing I miss the most, living in the interior this way, is the water," Mr. Mason said. "On a day like this we ought to go down

"This is our dance, but we could get a second helping of ice cream and cake instead."

Get finished fast ...fresh!

the new HAMILTON BEACH Floor-to-Ceiling Cleaner

THIS ALL-PURPOSE beauty not only makes your rugs come clean, but handles those scores of pesky tasks that always take forever. It's a wonder on draperies, upholstery . . . even lamp shades and linoleum. Dust and dirt just can't get beyond its reach.

THE NEW HAMILTON BEACH is packed with power, yet quiet. Its double-action floor nozzle gets dirt and lint the first time. Four-wheel carriage locks for safety on stairs. Lots of other "extras" make Hamilton Beach your one best buy.

SEE IT at your dealer's now. Try it and you'll take it home! Hamilton Beach Company, Division of Scovill Manufacturing Co., Racine, Wis.

See the De Luxe Upright. Its big, bright headlight shows up dim-corner dirt. Balloon tires make it a breeze to move. Balanced handle ends back-strain.

HAMILTON BEACH Vacuum Cleaners

"Serve my lovely Party Cake

. . . so delicious and so thrifty!"

SAYS AUNT JENNY

FESTIVE FRUIT AND NUT CAKE WITH LUSCIOUS CRANBERRY CREAM ICING—TRY IT!

Get compliments on all your cakes . . . use

SPRY WITH CAKE-IMPROVER

ARE Spry cakes different? Better? You just taste one! No other type shortening has Spry's Cake-improver secret that makes cakes better-tasting, lighter, finer-textured. They stay fresh longer, too. And Spry's easy One-Bowl Method saves you two-thirds the usual mixing time! Be an all 'round better cook. Use Spry for all baking, frying!

FESTIVE FRUIT AND NUT CAKE

- 2 cups sifted cake flour
- ½ cups sugar
- ½ teaspoons soda
- ½ teaspoons salt
- 2 tablespoons cocoa
- ½ teaspoon each cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg, allspice
- ½ cup Spry
- 1½ cups unsweetened applesauce*
- 2 eggs, unbeaten
- ½ cup each seeded raisins, currants, dates, cut in small pieces
- ⅓ cup citron, diced
- ¾ cup filberts or walnuts, chopped and toasted

If sweetened applesauce is used, use only 1¼ cups sugar.

Sift flour, sugar, soda, salt, cocoa, spices into mixing bowl. Drop in Spry. Add applesauce, beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed). Scrape bowl and spoon or beater. Add eggs, beat 200 strokes. Add fruits and nuts, mix thoroughly. Bake in Spry-coated 8½-inch tube pan in moderate oven (350° F.) 1 hour and 25-35 minutes. Or bake in Sprycoated 10 x 10 (or 12 x 8) x 2-in. pan at 350° F. 55–65 minutes. Cool, spread with Cranberry Cream Icing; garnish with more chopped nuts.

Cranberry Cream Icing—Blend together 2 tablespoons Spry, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 teaspoon vanilla, ¼ teaspoon salt. From 3 cups sifted confectioners' sugar take ½ cup; beat in. Add 3 tablespoons bottled cranberry juice alternately with remaining sugar, beating well. Add 1 tablespoon scalded light cream, beat well. Makes enough frosting to cover 8½-inch tube cake. Wonderful with the spicy cake!

WITH CAKE-IMPROVER

Another fine Lever product

Save money—get Spry in the economical 3 lb. can the river in my boat. But we ought to start a whole lot earlier than this. When I woke up this morning, there was a star still shining in the palest kind of sky, out over the ravine, and I actually thought for a minute that we could go. Do you like to get up early?"

"I never do," Alice said. "Somebody always has to wake me."

"Somebody is going to wake you, then, for I don't want to go without you, and the time to start is before anything in the world has begun to stir. We are right on the river, you know; the garden has steps going down into the water. My mother's flowers, that early, with no shadows anywhere, used to look as if they were painted on a picture card. I don't suppose you ever thought about it, but a river is really the only way to get into a stillness like that without breaking it. Going along a forest path makes a big commotion compared with going down a stream in a boat."

"Don't the oars make a noise?"

"Downstream you don't have to use them. We will be going toward the sea. A sleepy world of streams. That's another poet I promised to read to you. I get really homesick once in a while for the water; I would even like to go down to the branch and wade, the way you used to do."

"Who was the poet you promised to read to me?" Alice asked him. "This one, I mean. You keep promising to read me things."

"I am going to read you all the poetry in the world, and sing you all the songs," he said. "Don't you know that?" This was no pebble; this was going too far. This was going where he wanted to go. He felt his own color rising as he watched her face.

"When are you going to begin, then? You did a little singing when Kitty was here, but you have never read me anything yet. I used to feel terribly uneducated sometimes when you were talking to her—and especially to Mrs. Kirkman."

"Did you? What did we talk about?"

"A girl like Kitty gives you a tremendous jolt; or maybe I mean a tremendous inspiration," she said. "She has done every one of the things a girl is supposed to do: she has been to school and graduated, and been to Europe, and made her debut in Nashville and visited in a lot of other cities. Compared with me, Kitty has had almost as many lives as a cat." She stopped. "What I am really thinking about is me. We used to talk about it—about Rose and me living out here this way, like enchanted princesses—that is what she called it—but all the same I know she thought it was queer, and I am sure you must think so too."

"Shall I tell you what I think?"

"Not until I finish," she said. "This is something I have had on my mind ever since Kitty went away. As I say, knowing her has made a tremendous change in my outlook. At first I made up my mind to really study more—to go on and finish the Aeneid, and all the rest of the course of reading papa has laid out for me; but the more I think about it, the more it seems to me that all the books in the house are not going to give me what I really need at this point."

"And what is that?" he asked without smiling.

"I need more experience. I am just beginning to find out the first thing about people—about life—and I believe if the hotel had never been built out here, I might never have learned even the little I know now."

"And how do people seem to you, from what you have found out? Very different from what you thought?"

"Entirely. The only two views on the subject that I ever knew much about were my mother's and Miss Norma's; I have listened a lot when they were talking, and I always knew what my mother was thinking, even when she didn't say. She always thought—we all of us did—that Miss Norma's ideas were way off; that they were terribly exaggerated. We used to laugh over them."

"And your mother's?"

"That is what I have been thinking about," Alice said. "You see, mamma and

DEEP SEA DAVE'S COOKING SCHOOL

ECONOMICAL . . . EASY TO PREPARE

CODDIES RECIPE

So easy to prepare! "Coddies" come ready mixed with potatoes — you simply shape into cakes and fry in hot fat! Serve piping hot! Garnish with lemon wedges and parsley.

Delicious also with tartar sauce and cole slaw, with baked beans and brown bread, with creole sauce, or as an "extra" with deep-fried seafoods!

Other Davis Bros. Seafoods:
ATLANTIC OCEAN MACKEREL, FLAKED FISH, MACKEREL FILLETS, CLAM CHOWDER, Cocktail Style MACKEREL in Oil, SARDINES with Tomato Sauce

Easy-to-prepare recipes on every can!

DAVIS BROS. FISHERIES CO., Inc., Gloucester, Mass.

papa never could bear to hurt our feelings about anything; even when they read us stories, they would always tone them down. I never knew until I could read myself that the Babes in the Wood were dead and not just asleep when the birds covered them with leaves. That was one reason I was so impressed with what you told me about the tragic ending for things—do you remember, the last act?"

"I remember," he said.

"Well, if you hadn't pointed that out to me, I don't know what I would have done this summer, with people behaving the way they have. Naturally, I knew about religion, but this is different. Just what, exactly, would you call it?"

"It has been called so many things, Miss Alice. It has even been considered a substitute for religion. Poetic justice—art—it doesn't matter, so long as it helps clear up the muddle; if it makes it easier for you to stand things the way they are—or even the way Miss Norma thinks they are."

Kitty had been gone almost two weeks now, and this was the first real walk they had taken since. The rain had begun with the good-bys, after the night of the full moon, so there had been no more sitting out-of-doors either, a state of things that had left Alice time for a variety of reflections, which she had enjoyed setting forth at some length, now that they were back in the woods again.

Mr. Mason had had time for thinking too. He had been wondering how much longer he could go on this way. There were many reasons why it was out of the question for him to ask Alice to marry him. But the reason he did not ask her was only one. He could take advantage of her inexperience and rob her youth, he could borrow and could spend with all the arrogance of love all her beauty had to give. It was what he had to give her in return that made it impossible for him to ask her anything. He could not offer her a share of the burden that had descended on his own youth: the load of debt that still appalled him, the weight of illness and age and care that constantly increased. He should have to wait for these things to change. But there again—he knew that asking her to wait, if it meant anything at all, meant something he did not want; and on the other hand, to ledge himself and leave her free would only be absurd. Pledging her the last drop of his life could not hold him more than he felt himself already held, nor would it leave her free; it would only give him the right to say the things that would bind her to him forever. The question before him now, as clear as she was before him herself, sitting there on the grass, was how much longer would he find it possible not to say them without the right; what compact could he make, with his spirit or his flesh, whereby he might hold his tongue? Surely there were other things to point to in the picture that he had continually before him. She would know only what he showed her; he would be a fool at this juncture to show her love.

Children have more need of models than of critics.
—JOUBERT.

"Did you ever know an Englishman, Miss Alice?" he asked her as they were walking home.

"Not that I remember. Why?"

"We have one at the office now, come all the way over from Liverpool to learn about cotton. They really do seem to be surprisingly like they are in the books they write about themselves. This one at the office came out with me yesterday and is staying at the hotel until tomorrow. I thought I would like to bring him up awhile this evening, if your mother will be at home."

"I'm sure she will," Alice said. "Is he old or young? What is his name?"

"Brian Howard. He's around twenty-five or -six, I imagine. Is that young or old?"

It seemed to Alice, after the hotel finally closed for the winter, and Mr. Mason had Greasy pan? Zip—tear off a ScotTowel! Absorbent, soft—a ScotTowel soaks up grease fast . . . dishwater stays sudsier . . . plumbing keeps free of grease.

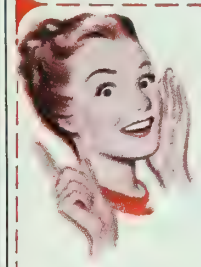
Want less washing and ironing? Then use ScotTowels for drying hands, draining lettuce, drying pots and percolator. You'll find ScotTowels handy for dozens of uses. Made of thirsty cellulose. 150 to a roll. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

MADE STRONG TO WORK HARD!

Trade Mark "ScotTowels" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Who wears the beard in your family?

Santa Claus' beard, that is. He's wondering what to give you, right now — so clip this ad and pin it up. He'll stop fretting — you'll have the finest Christmas ever — and you'll both enjoy your KitchenAid every day for years to come.



Hint #1.

"I want a KitchenAid Mixer"

"KitchenAid, mind you—no other. KitchenAid has the most power—the most thorough Planetary mixing action—the greatest range of accessory attachments (for everything from freezing ice cream to shining silver)—sturdiest construction. There's lots of extra value for the little added cost because it's built by Hobart—the biggest, oldest food machine manufacturer in the world. Come on, Mr. Claus—surprise me with a KitchenAid!"

Hint #2.

"A KitchenAid Coffee Mill for me"

"You like coffee—I like coffee—so let's have the finest coffee that there is! Everybody knows that coffee's best when freshly ground, before precious flavor can escape. Here's fresh, fragrant, full-flavored coffee in our favorite grind—stored in the handy hopper—ground and measured at the flip of a switch. Let's have some Christmas morning,—hmm?"

Hint #3.

"I want 'em BOTH!"

"Don't you? Just look 'em over at any department, hardware or electrical appliance store—see the difference for yourself. There are 3 Mixers and 2 Coffee Mills—and I'll be happy with any KitchenAid you choose."

"P.S.—YOU WILL TOO!"

KitchenAid

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

The Finest Made

KitchenAid Division • THE HOBART MANUFACTURING COMPANY, TROY, OHIO
World's Oldest and Largest Manufacturer of Dishwashing, Food and Kitchen Machines

Glorify Biscuits—make them with "Bisquick" —serve with LAKE SHORE HONEY

The TOP GRADE HONEY that comes with the No-Drip Table Dispenser

Thousands of women have discovered a way to be sure of getting pale gold honey that's uniformly delicious in flavor.

This way is to order Lake Shore Honey—the brand that comes in the Honeycomb Jar. We produce this honey under controlled conditions. Hence we can guarantee it to be of uniform flavor.

Lake Shore Honey always comes with the improved no-drip pouring spout—the spout that saves 3c to 4c worth of honey by preventing usual dribbling and waste.

Grocers are featuring Lake Shore Honey and Bisquick. Ask for them today.

"BISQUICK" is a product of GENERAL MILLS, INC.

ASK FOR Lake Shore "HONEYCOMB JAR" PURE STRAINED •HONEY•

NEWEST TREAT
HONEY MELLOWED
COCONUT
Fancy Shred

Never before coconut so rich in flavor, so tree-fresh. Honey prevents drying out—yet adds no more sweetness than in usual treating of coconut with sugar.

gone home for Christmas, and she had more time to think about it, that it was very remarkable for the two men she knew the best and liked the most, so far—not counting Mr. Clayton—to be so entirely different from each other. And Mr. Clayton was not much like either one of them," Rose reminded her, though of the two he had more in common with Brian Howard. They were nearer the same age, for one thing, and they were both engaged when they came.

Brian had told her about Angela the second time she ever saw him, when he was describing his family and where they lived, in England. He had three brothers, all younger than he, and Angela lived in the same neighborhood; she was the nearest thing to a sister they had ever had. Neither Alice nor Rose, nor their mother as far as she knew, had ever seen an English girl, and the pictures Brian had of Angela didn't show her as being pretty, but he talked as if she could do practically anything. "She's a good sort," he said, putting the pictures back in his pocket.

They were getting used to the things he said by this time, but at first a lot of them had seemed terribly funny. For instance, when he asked them if they planted the maize at the same time they did the cotton; he had heard it was extraordinarily good to eat.

"You mean green corn," Mr. Mason told him. "'Give my love to green corn'—an Englishman I used to know put that in a letter he wrote to me after he went home. 'Give my love to maize'—if he had said that I would certainly have wondered who she was."

The weather before Christmas was perfectly beautiful and they took really long walks. Even Rose condescended to go on them. She was a tremendous help to Brian with his nature photography—almost as big a help as Thor was a hindrance. They nearly drove themselves crazy trying to get pictures of all the different kinds of American birds. It seemed to Alice she and Rose had never been so happy as they were that autumn.

SUNDAY was naturally the best day for Brian and Mr. Mason both, but they hardly ever sat down and talked anywhere; there was always some special place they wanted to go to, and they generally had to hurry to get back before dinner or before dark. Once when they were going through the woods, she and Mr. Mason stopped under the tree where they used to spend so much time talking, and it made her feel a little strange. In spite of all you could do, and no matter how happy you were, things were always slipping. You never could hold on to them; you just had something else instead.

"It seems so long ago, doesn't it?" she said.

He had taken off his hat and stood looking up into the tree, but now he looked at her. "How can it, when you've never been in any long ago? That's a place you are never going with me. I've told you that."

"Do you mean you can really hold on to things—in your mind—so that you don't feel sad about them?"

"Maybe they hold on to me."

"This place, for instance?"

"This place. But I have had you here with everything green around you. Stand over there and let me put the colors in. Without your hat."

She stood quite still, helping him to get the picture he wanted to keep; then he let her go and they walked on.

"You mustn't ever worry about the past, Miss Alice," he said. "It hardly ever lets you down. As a rule we like it better and better as we go along, or we can keep working on it until we do. Remembering is all right; it's looking forward that is tricky—that business of the future. It seems to take so much good solid past to bring us to where we can get the flimsiest glimpse of the future. And then look at the way we go plunging into it!"

"I don't plunge," Alice said. "At least I don't want to; I would rather hold back. I always like the present so much. I hate to see it change into anything."

"But you want a lot of experience; you told me that, don't you remember? Experience

If you agree with master chefs that French Dressing needs a touch of garlic, Miracle French is the kind for you. Kraft quality ingredients; superbly seasoned.

Miracle FRENCH DRESSING by KRAFT

Note: If you don't want even a "leetle" garlic, get Kraft French Dressing. Perfectly delicious; immensely popular.

Just as good... Tomorrow!

WAXTEX
HEAVY WAXED PAPER
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
MARATHON CORPORATION
MENASHA, WISCONSIN

FOLEY SIFTER

Jr. Miss of sifters, holds 2 cups. Cone shaped, sifts right into your measuring cup . . . Aluminum . . . 69¢ at DEPT. HDWE. STORES or send coupon

FOLEY MFG. CO., 3443 N. E. 5th St., Minneapolis 18, Minn.
Enclosed is 69c for one "Jr. Miss" Foley Sifter, postpaid.
NAME .....
(Write address plainly in margin)
"Be FOLEY Equipped" with FOOD MILL, CHOPPER, SIFTER, BLENDER

Baker's Coconut Quickie #10

Waffle batter Baker's Coconut Butterscotch Sauce

Heap crunchy-wonderful Baker's Coconut on waffle batter just before you close your waffle iron. Serve it with butterscotch sauce for cream dessert! Keep Baker's Coconut handy —use it often. Sprinkle it on berries or fruit cup, heap it high on Jell-O, rice pudding, chocolate ice cream. Your grocer has both Baker's Premium Shred and specially moist Baker's Southern Style.

BAKER'S COCONUT

SECRET OF 100 GLAMOUR TRICKS

Products of General Foods

SEND! New Recipe Book. "Coconut Glamour Desserts"—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut, Box 29, Battle Creek, Mich.

BEST! bar none!

And with hands who know their brands... it's

Gebhardt's CHILI CON CARNE

★ MORE MEAT AND BETTER MEAT

Flavor-rich with Gebhardt's original Chili Powder. A meal in itself. Just heat and serve. Try Gebhardt's Tamales, too.

REAL Mexican flavor
TRUE American quality

Made in San Antonio—Home of Chili Con Carne and Tamales brings on very fundamental changes—the way you look at things, the way you feel about them."

"But just thinking does that too," Alice said. "I feel differently about a lot of things since I have known you; I have told you that before."

"Maybe I am experience, then," he said, smiling; "had you thought of that? I should like to be, you know."

Brian, who had not been to college, talked less about books than Mr. Mason did. His main interest seemed to be in pictures and plays, and everything out-of-doors, of course. He had gone with some of his family every summer to some part of the Continent and had climbed the Alps any number of times.

There were more good plays than usual in town that winter after Christmas, and he took her and Rose to practically all of them, though there wasn't one of them he hadn't seen before, in London or Paris or somewhere. They saw Joe Jefferson in The Rivals, and Rose Coghlan in Forget-Me-Not, and several others. And one opera—Emma Eames in Ernani.

Doing things in town this way made the winter seem entirely different. Mrs. Kirkman and Kitty had kept on inviting Alice to visit them, but her mother thought she had better wait. For several reasons, she said, but the main one was the expense. It would probably take more than a hundred dollars to get her the dresses she would need in Nashville, even for a short visit. This seemed a disappointment at first, but it soon turned into a sort of relief. Alice was not at all sure she would be as happy in a gay city as she was here at home; she would have liked to have

---

The value of a quarrel is yet to be ascertained. —RUSH C. HAWKINS.

---

the experience, though. She realized all the time how little experience she was getting.

It was when she sat down to answer Mr. Mason's letters that this came over her particularly. She always began by telling him any interesting thing that had happened and what she had thought about it; but she knew when she read it over that it was not the kind of letter she would rather write him. His were perfectly delightful; they were exactly the way he talked. He hadn't come back after Christmas because his mother was worse. He said she hadn't told him about it because she didn't want to worry him.

Alice read Mr. Mason's letters over many times, trying to decide what it was that made her want to do that very thing. Nothing interesting seemed to be happening to him; he didn't describe things very much either, or send snapshots of them. He had never even shown her the pictures he had already of the battlements at Elsinore; and yet every time he wrote to her about going down there, he made her feel exactly as if she had been along. "I was in the library this afternoon getting down a book I wanted, when you came in, leaving the door open behind you. The sun was behind you, too, just on a level with your hair." That was a letter he wrote her when the days were getting longer. There was a pink camellia in bloom already outside the window where she sometimes sat with her sewing, he said. But he didn't say when he was coming back, or even that he wanted to come.

In February, Ada Rehan came in She Stoops to Conquer, and this time they had to go at night because there was no afternoon performance; and that meant they would have to come home on the last car after it was over, and Brian would have to stay all night at their house. Then Rose's cold got worse instead of better and she couldn't go at all. It looked for a while as if the whole thing was going to fall through, and by the time reason at length prevailed and Alice was allowed to go with Brian alone, she had worked herself up to such a pitch of expectation that Miss Rehan and even Mr. Goldsmith did well to keep up with her. When she was notified by a firm hand on her arm that the margin rich as Butter Cake . . .

More tender than Angel Food . . .
Amazingly easy to make!

Imagine a cake that surpasses other cakes in lightness, in flavor, in volume . . . yet is easier to make than ordinary cakes! That's Betty Crocker Chiffon, biggest cake news in 100 years!

This moist, delicate Diamond walnut loaf version of Chiffon is another Softasilk triumph! Never before have walnut meats remained so evenly spaced throughout a light, fluffy cake. The recipe was perfected for Softasilk, the Betty Crocker Cake Flour. Softasilk is especially milled to get greater rising action from baking powder and eggs. That's why it gives Chiffon Cake unique height, glorious texture. For perfect Chiffon results, use Softasilk—and no other!

General Mills

Betty Crocker Bit O' Walnut Chiffon Cake

Betty Crocker Chiffon Cakes were perfected for the Betty Crocker Cake Flour—SOFTASILK. If you use any other flour with this recipe you risk a cake failure.

Preheat oven (see pan sizes and corresponding temperatures below). SIFT an ample amount of SOFTASILK Cake Flour onto a square of paper. Chop nuts very fine.

STEP 1 . . . Measure (level measurements) and sift together into mixing bowl:
- 1⅛ cups (1 cup plus 2 tbsp.) sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
- ¾ cup sugar
- 1½ tsp. baking powder
- ½ tsp. salt

Make a well and add in order:
- ¼ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola
- 2 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized)
- ⅜ cup (¼ cup plus 2 tbsp.) cold water
- 1 tsp. vanilla

Beat with spoon until smooth.

STEP 2 . . . Measure into large mixing bowl:
- ½ cup egg whites (4 whites)
- ¼ tsp. cream of tartar

Whip until whites form very stiff peaks. They should be much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. DO NOT UNDERBEAT.

STEP 3 . . . Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended! DO NOT STIR!

Sprinkle over top of batter ½ cup very finely chopped Diamond Walnuts, gently folding in with a few strokes.

Pour into ungreased pan immediately.

Bake in . . .
- 5x10x3-in. loaf or
- 9-in. tube, 3½-in. deep—325° 50 to 55 min.
- 8x8x2-in. or
- 9x9x2-in. square pan—350° 30 to 35 min.

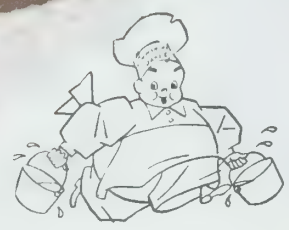
. . . or until top springs back when lightly touched. Then, immediately . . . turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle, or resting edges of square or loaf pans on 2 other pans. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen.

ICING. Melt in small saucepan ¼ cup shortening (part butter adds flavor). Remove from heat. Blend in 4 tsp. SOFTASILK, ⅛ tsp. salt. Stir in slowly ¼ cup milk. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Boil 1 min. (Don't be alarmed if it curdles.) Stir in 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, ¼ cup brown sugar (packed in cup). Remove from heat. Stir in ¼ tsp. vanilla. Garnish with Diamond Walnut halves.

Betty Crocker Chiffon Recipe Book! Dozens of Chiffon cake and icing recipes—fillings, serving tips. Illustrated. 20 pages. Only 15¢. (Order several.) Write Box 1450, Minneapolis, Minn., today.



Softasilk and "Betty Crocker" are reg. trade marks of General Mills. Copr. 1948.

The finest ever made!

The original cream-filled chocolate cookie!

HYDROX has never been matched. The fresh chocolate taste of HYDROX cookies, and the velvety smoothness of the cream filling is the secret of Sunshine Bakers alone . . . the reason why it's America's all-time favorite at tea time with desserts or between meals. Order HYDROX from your grocer today . . . in the pantry package or the handy cellophane bag.

Sunshine HYDROX

CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIES

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES

Sunshine Biscuits, INC. © 1948

between the last curtain and the last car was likely to prove a bit narrow, her stricken face at being taken away might have been thought reward enough for any performance. Brian at least knew how she felt.

"I gave your mother my word we wouldn't miss it," he said as they made their way through the still-applauding crowd.

The few other passengers on the car, all more or less drowsy, got off before they had gone very far, and the conductor settled himself comfortably in a corner for the rest of the run. Alice, feeling that she never wanted to sleep again, rocked on with Brian into the night, recalling excitedly the splendors from which she seemed as yet to be imperfectly withdrawn. Then, quite suddenly, in the midst of the country darkness, the car stopped. On the track in front of them there was another car, partially off the track, and its motorman and conductor were resignedly awaiting the only help that was at all likely to arrive at that hour. Their own conductor gave Brian the option of taking the lady back to town with them or taking her somewhere else. It was about a mile and a half to the springs.

"Why, we'll walk," Alice said, laughing at his troubled face. "I know right where we are now, and it's such a lovely night."

"I suppose there's no chance of getting a lift of some sort," Brian said, looking around, when they found themselves in the middle of a dirt road, with the lights of their car rapidly receding.

"Goodness, no," Alice said reassuringly. "We don't want to wake up anybody at this time of night. Besides, nobody around here would have anything but a wagon, and we can outwalk that. Come on." She slipped her free hand through his arm.

"If I hadn't been so frightfully positive about it," he said when they had gone a little way in silence. "I am afraid your parents will never trust you with me again."

"But how could you help it? They can't possibly think it was your fault."

"But won't they be frightfully worried when we don't show up?"

"Of course they are bound to wonder," Alice said.

"But you make a difference between that and worrying?"

"Don't you? You can wonder about all sorts of things. Take that star up there—'how I wonder what you are'—but I certainly don't worry about it."

THE moon was not yet below the treetops in the west, so Alice could still see where to put her feet. It was an unfamiliar time of night; coming into it this way out of the dazzling scenes in which she had been reveling, and which were unfamiliar too, it had a confusing effect on her imagination. After that warm and splendid show of life, the cold stillness and the stars seemed as different as death could be; and if she had been happy then, why was she happy now? She was, though: so happy she didn't want to talk any more than she did in the theater; and Brian, who had not been saying much either, said now he knew she must be tired.

"But aren't those trees we see just beyond the bend in the road the ones that grow along the ravine?" he asked her. "Suppose we take the path that leads down through it. It's quite a bit shorter than keeping to the road."

"I know it is," Alice said; "and we can go through the fence from the hotel grounds. But I am not the least bit tired; I'm just as happy as I was; it's been lovely to walk. What time do you suppose it is? No, don't look; I don't really want to know; I just want it to be after midnight."

"It's been that for some time, I imagine," he said. "If only your parents aren't worried. I like it so much myself, you know, that I'm sure there must be something wrong somewhere."

The ravine, unlighted now, looked dim and mysterious and the springs were wells of darkness, but the sandy path that ran beside the little stream was plain enough and the hotel loomed visibly ahead of them. The electricity had been turned off everywhere and the only beacon was a window in the annex where the Negro watchman slept.

"There he goes now, I believe," Alice said. "You might say something to him, so he will know we are all right."

THIS reassurance, however, the watchman was not destined to receive. He looked around, and seeing what he had no doubt been long expecting to see—a lady and a man coming out of the ravine at midnight—he turned again and fled.

"How extr'ord'nary!" Brian exclaimed. "What in the world does he take us for?"

"Burglars, maybe," Alice said, surprised at how much good it did her to say it, ridiculous as it was. "But just look at the way our house is lighted up! They evidently haven't given us up and gone to bed."

They were through the fence now, and she was surprised again at how glad it made her to see the lights. Never before had she thought of being shut out, like a wanderer in the night—a ghost coming back from the past.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

That Settles It

By Evelyn Wade

Lelia, Cornelia, Cecilia or Polly?
Sonia, Sidonia, Amelia or Molly?
Melissa, Clarissa, Ophelia or Maisie?
Naomi, Salome, Bedelia or Daisy?
Oh, choosing a name for a girl makes us loonier—
We'll just have a son and relax with a Junior.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It was just a little while after this that Mr. Mason's mother began to be worse, so that he hardly ever left her to go anywhere. He was the one, even more than his father, he said, who seemed able to make the darkness lighter for her, by bringing back to her the time when there wasn't anything she didn't like—by reminding her of "all the little things, the frequentest, the dearest; when we were three people together. Almost everything I say to her begins 'Do you remember?' Wasn't I right about that being one of the priceless gifts?" His father had to be away a great deal looking after things at home. Now was the time when they had to get things started down there. "We begin plowing long before you do," he said. "I wonder at my father—down there alone. Alas, poor ghost!"

Alice read the letter over and over, and got Shakespeare and read Hamlet over too. She had never realized before how Hamlet loved his father. There seemed to be all these different kinds of love.

"Did you ever see any of the really great actors in Hamlet?" she asked Brian.

"I saw Sarah Bernhardt."

"Was she Ophelia?"

"She was Hamlet; she was the Prince of Denmark—the only one of our time, or anybody else's time, so far as I am concerned," Brian told her. "I do want to take you sometime to see something like that. To see that, I should say, for there really isn't anything else like it."

It seemed to Alice that, judging from the men she knew so far, they were more carried away by the things they liked than girls were. Mr. Clayton and Mr. Mason, and now Brian, were always telling her about something they wanted to show her.

Brian was going back to England in June. He said some things had come up that he had to talk over with his family. Alice and her mother both thought he was maybe planning to get married sooner than he had expected to. They didn't like to ask Brian, but one day when he was talking about it, Alice did ask

(Continued on Page 185)

Hospitality Starts Here

Such a simple thing, this hospitality. The purpose is to put your guests at ease, make them happy to be where they are. The pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola is such a way of making folks feel at home. Delicious . . . refreshing . . . friendly. Serving Coca-Cola serves hospitality. Coca-Cola is easy to take home. You can get it in the handy 6-bottle carton or in the 24-bottle case.

Ask for it either way . . . both trade-marks mean the same thing.

COPYRIGHT 1948, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

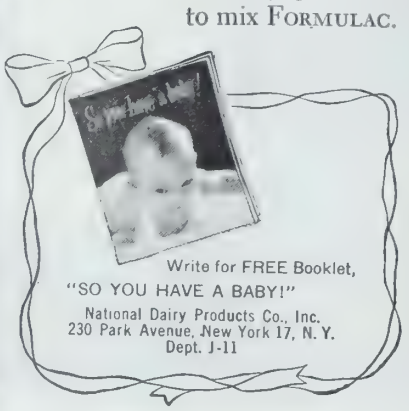
Formulac tips on bringing up baby lis place in the sun! Like flowers, babies need sunshine to grow. Even in inter, you can give baby a sunbath. If you have ultra-violet glass windows, simply ut him in the sunlight. If not, open the window and allow sunlight to fall on aby's skin. (Keep room warm, protect baby from wind!) FORMULAC Infant Food, hen fed in proper quantities, contains all the vitamin D (sunlight vitamin) a ormal baby needs for proper growth.



Playtime for parents! Playing teaches baby how to use and strengthen and control his muscles. Set aside a time for play. Before the bath, before the bedtime feeding are excellent times. But don't let baby grow overtired from playing. By the way, it's child's play to mix FORMULAC. Add sugar and water, as your doctor directs. Easy!

inner's over! He's fed and he's sleepy, but he needs to be bubbled. old him close to your shoulder. Gently pat his back until he brings o air swallowed while he was taking his bottle. This helps prevent olic. Note: Put a napkin on your shoulder as protection. FORMULAC uts baby's vitamins in his bottle—and that's protection too!

ACCEPTED
COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION
AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Formulac Infant Food is a milk product that contains all the vitamins and minerals a growing infant is known to need. A normal baby needs neither vitamin B nor vitamin C when fed FORMULAC in proper quantities, because he gets his vitamins where he gets his milk—right in his bottle! Easy, efficient, sure—this convenient product is in liquid form, homogenized and sterile. Your doctor will tell you that FORMULAC has been clinically tested and proven. You buy it at grocery and drug stores everywhere.

Formulac

—A PRODUCT OF NATIONAL DAIRY RESEARCH distributed by Kraft Foods Company and National Dairy Products Co., Inc.

(Continued from Page 182)

n whether he was planning to come back the fall, and he said, "Rather."

The thing he seemed to be looking forward more than anything else in England, not nting his family and Angela, was fishing the river that ran near where they lived. e things Brian knew about fish! And out boats too. His first year at Eton he d got "in the boats," and seemed never to ve got out again, as far as his feelings were ncerned. He probably felt like Mr. Mason out missing the water. But he missed the y sports too; the ones you played with a ll.

Alice had never even heard of polo, or at ast it had made no impression on her, until ian described it to her. Playing it on rseback made it so much more picturesque an baseball or football either; it seemed most like jousting. She even enjoyed hear- g about some of the accidents and the hair- eadth escapes Brian kept wishing she could ve seen; and the time the head came off his ick when his side was already two goals to thing, right in the hottest quarter of the me. It was really more fun talking to rian than to anybody they had ever known.

During the summer, Brian didn't write as ten as Mr. Mason did, but he said a good al more about coming back. Two or three mes already he had mentioned his sailing ate: August 29. He seemed to want her not forget it, though why, she had no idea. It dn't have anything to do with Angela, as r as she could make out. He didn't say a ord about getting married. It had seemed Alice, the last time she saw Brian before left, that he might be going to tell her some- ing more confidential bout his plans. At least he ad asked her something bout hers; he wanted to e sure she would be there hen he got back.

"What made you think wouldn't be?" she asked im.

"Well, with a girl, I thought perhaps one ight never know," he told her. "It's een so awfully jolly, being here with you— ith all of you, in fact; one hardly dares trust one's luck. I'm a bit like that, I'm fraid."

"But it's been lucky for us too," Alice aid. "You might trust our luck; mine es- ecially. I've never had any that was bad." he was smiling, but he still looked serious.

"Perhaps I shouldn't ask you," he said. I may be wrong, but even if I'm right, you till might not like it; in fact, you might like even less ——" He waited; they both did; he couldn't imagine what it was, and he ever did come right out and tell her, but it ad something to do with Mr. Mason. He eemed to think, just as Kitty had, that she ad some idea of marrying Mr. Mason. And f course she wasn't going to explain to him ither, any more than she had to Kitty, that Mr. Mason couldn't marry her even if she anted him to. And Brian was so sort of ague about it that she really didn't have to ell him anything. "It's just that I know he's uch an extr'ord'narily fine chap."

MRS. CLIFFORD LEE was at the hotel that ummer. She was one of their old friends, ut she had a summer home in Canada, at ort Coburn, and this was really the first ime they had seen very much of her. She ouldn't go to Canada because she had fallen own the steps of her house in town and roken her hip. "She will make a nice back- round for you while Miss Sallie Kent is not here, if you want to go down in the eve- ings," Alice's mother said. She was another ne of the people who had been beautiful when they were young. Alice tried to imagine Mrs. Lee and all the others, standing in a ong row, beautiful and smiling—even Miss Norma, with her small waist and her little eet. If they could see what was going to happen to them, would they still smile? she wondered.

Mrs. Lee talked a great deal about her son, Clifford, who seemed to have grown up since Alice saw him. He was at their summer home now, but next winter she wanted him and Alice to see each other a great deal. "You must come in town and stay some with me. I'll talk to your mother about it."

One of the people she introduced to Alice was a cousin—Mr. Lee Clifford; her husband's name, turned the other way. They both seemed to think that meant something special. He lived in Baltimore and was here for only a few days, on business; cotton too. Mrs. Lee asked her if she didn't think he was very handsome. "He is considered so," she said when Alice hesitated, so of course she said yes; but the trouble was his beard—his Vandyke. Mrs. Lee said he looked much more distinguished with it, though older, of course; but it kept Alice from forming any idea of how old he was at all, or even of how he looked.

THERE was a dance while he was there, and Mrs. Lee asked her to come to dinner and stay for it. It turned out that he really was a beautiful dancer, and he probably did look distinguished, judging by the way people noticed him. Then after a while he asked her to go out and walk on the veranda with him, and when they got to a sort of corner where nobody else was walking, he asked her to stand over by the railing with him and look up at the moon. It was while they were looking at it that he suddenly began to talk to her in an absolutely different way—asking her if she knew how beautiful she was, and things like that.

"The face that launched a thousand ships," he said. "Don't you even care what it does to a man to stand here and look at you and to realize that by this time tomorrow night he will be five hundred miles away?"

She was too surprised to say anything and in a minute he began again:

"You look just like that girl up there in the moon; did you know that? And just as cold and faraway as she does too. . . . No, don't let's go in yet—I hear the music, but there's something I want to ask you. Can you guess what it is?"

It seemed to Alice, after all this, that it was easy enough to guess, and she wanted to get it over with. "But I'd rather you wouldn't—that is, if you want to ask me to marry you, because I can't; I never could. I'd a whole lot rather not talk about it; I'd rather talk about something else—or dance—or go back to Mrs. Lee."

It was a great relief to her when he made not the slightest objection to doing all these things, in the order named. That way, as she told her mother when she described the evening to her, it was easy to keep Mrs. Lee from knowing anything disagreeable had happened.

"Are you sure he meant for you to take it like that—so seriously?" her mother asked. "Sometimes a man—I mean, some men say things like that just to be flattering, to be agreeable. You don't have to show them that you don't like it. Why not just listen?"

"But it sounded so—so ——"

"I know." Her mother smiled. "It wasn't particularly good. But sometimes they get better as they go along."

Alice did not pursue the subject. She was remembering what Kitty said that day about Mr. Mason having had plenty of practice. Was that how he got it? she wondered.

When Brian got back in September it was almost the hottest weather of the whole summer, but he didn't seem to mind it in the least. It had been cold and rainy in England, and that had kept him from enjoying the fishing and all the other outdoor things he had been counting on. There had been quite a good deal of business too—matters that had come up in the year he had been away—to be settled with his family.

"At first it looked as if we might be going to have no end of a row," he said, "but it's all right."

He certainly looked all right himself. It seemed to Alice she had forgotten a lot about his appearance; he looked so strong—so sort

(Continued on Page 187)

What is the test of good manners? It is the being able to put up pleasantly with bad ones. —IBN GABIROL.

"On the Quality Testing the best is Fieldcrest"

Quality Testing

Fieldcrest blankets are quality tested at 24 points during manufacture to give you extra luxury, extra wear.

Fieldcrest Blankets Deep-Napped and Woolly-Warm

Such luxury! Touch the fleecy surface of a Fieldcrest all-wool blanket. Fold a corner in your hand—notice how the supple fibres spring back as you open your palm . . . Imagine the deep, restful sleep you'll enjoy under a blanket as fluffy-soft as this!

Fieldcrest blankets are as wonderfully practical as they are luxurious, too. That's because all Fieldcrest blankets — from these all-wools through rayon-wool-and-cottons to all-cottons — are subject to strict Quality Testing. At your favorite fine store.

ALSO LOOK FOR: Fieldcrest Towels • Sheets • Bedspreads • Lace Tablecloths • Thermostatic Blankets • Curtains • Hosiery • Rayons

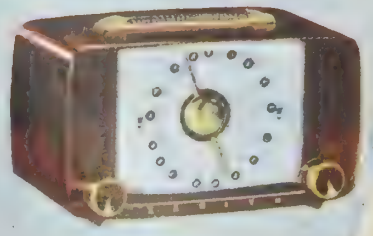
FIELDCREST MILLS, Division of Marshall Field & Company, Inc., 88 Worth Street, New York 13, New York

Zenith Shatters all Previous Value Standards in Table Radios!



THE NEW ZENITH "TOURNAMENT"

A masterpiece of smart modern styling, with new, exclusive Zenith "Consoltone" circuit for "big-console" tone, with improved Wavemagnet, Alnico-Dynamic Speaker specially built by Zenith, Flexo-Grip handle for carrying ease, illuminated "Z" on-off indicator, rich Roman Gold trim. Walnut or black plastic cabinet, or white plastic cabinet at slight extra cost.

THE NEW ZENITH "ZEPHYR"†

A superb musical instrument of exceptional sensitivity. Super-powered for long-distance, highly selective performance. Extra-large Alnico-Dynamic Speaker specially built by Zenith. Exclusive Zenith "Consoltone" for big-set tone richness and volume. Improved Wavemagnet. Flexo-Grip handle for convenient carrying. Roman Gold trim. Walnut or black plastic cabinet, or white plastic cabinet at slight extra cost.

Models from $19.95 to $675.
West Coast prices slightly higher.
Prices subject to change without notice

† REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

COPR. 1948, ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

The New Zenith "Pacemaker"

Now, with one great forward step in radionic engineering and modern styling, Zenith wipes out all former ideas of what your dollar can buy in a table radio!

The New Zenith "Pacemaker" is typical of this totally new conception in table radio value. Not just another model built to a price, but a full-toned, full-powered radio built to be the unquestioned quality leader in its field. With advanced and exclusive features that NO OTHER RADIO AT ANY PRICE can give you—including new, improved "Consoltone," Zenith's exclusive method of achieving "big-console" tone richness and volume; improved, exclusive Wavemagnet, more effective than a 50-foot outside aerial; Alnico-Dynamic Speaker specially built by Zenith for new power and tone fidelity. And there's a note of tomorrow in the Glamorous New Styling of its sparkling black plastic cabinet.

No wonder Zenith challenges comparison! Your Zenith dealer invites you to come in and discover what thrilling new enjoyment and convenience can be yours with one of these new Zenith table radios for any room in your home. See, hear, compare—and you'll agree, no other compares with a Zenith!

ZENITH
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
LONG DISTANCE RADIO
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

OVER 30 YEARS OF "KNOW-HOW" IN RADIONICS EXCLUSIVELY ALSO MAKERS OF AMERICA'S FINEST HEA

(Continued from Page 185)

sunny. "Haven't you done something to ur hair, or your mustache?"

"I don't think so," he said a little anxsly. "At all events I hope not, if it's someng you don't like."

"I do, though; I think you look simply e."

He had brought them the most lovely esents—"A few things we still make rather tter over there." A carving knife and fork her father, made in the town of Sheffield. have forgotten the exact date for carving ur national bird," Brian told him, "but I nember it was quite cold last year." The oyal Worcester plates, he told her mother, re for her wonderful ice cream—given in nembrance, but a little, too, in hope. ose's present was a beautiful portfolio for r music, from a place where they made ther goods "by appointment to Her Majty the Queen"; and Alice's, a dozen little sh-linen handkerchiefs with her name emoidered on them. They had a regular celeation opening the packages. Brian had en there several days by that time, and t one word had he said about Angela.

"I have something else that I got in New ork for you," he told Alice when she went t on the porch with him as he was leaving. Could you walk out on the lawn with me a tle way?"

They walked the little way and then rned around to walk back, and presently ian said:

"I can't tell you how many times I have en this house, in my mind, looking just as does now, with the light streaming out that ay. I used to be horribly afraid I would ver see it again in ality.—I seem to be ther like that. Let us sit er there on the bench a nute. I have something want to say to you—mething to ask you, ally. I wonder if you ow what it is?"

The example of the parents is the most important book which children can read.
—CHRYSOSTOMUS.

Brian did not look the least bit like Mr. e Clifford, nor sound like him either, but ose were Mr. Clifford's words, and this ne Alice was not going to risk a guess. She ook her head.

"I love you so terribly," he said. "I simply n't dare to ask you if you feel that you uld ever be my wife; but if you are sure at you can't—that you never can—for aven's sake tell me right away and let me least begin to face it."

"But, Brian ——" This was something altgether new; it did not sound like practice, ough. "But, Angela ——"

NGELA was all right; he had known all ng how Angela would be. His parents, wever, had surprised him; his mother escially. "She is very British, you know," he ally brought out, as if that covered the ound as well as anything that could be ated in so few words. "But all of that was at I went back for," he said, "and now I e how small a part it was of what I have to . The thing before me now is to manage mehow to make you love me, and I knew e minute I saw you again how poor a ance I must have."

"But how could you know it, Brian?" she id. "You had never even mentioned it to e—not before tonight."

"And you don't think it will be boring if I ep on?" he asked her. "There is so much want to tell you. On that ship—I think I ust have walked a thousand miles around e decks, thinking of all the things I wanted say to you. I was very happy. I thought w jolly it would be for us to be together on ship someday. And, then, when I saw you ain ——" He stopped, and began again in different place. "You know, when a man ants a thing so terribly it makes him feel at he may have been living in a fool's paraise—at all events, it makes me feel that ay. But as long as you will listen to e ——"

She was listening now, with deep attenon. Something was happening to her that ad never happened before. She had never ought of being loved by anyone in just this way; and certainly not by Brian. He had always seemed so free somehow—so able to take care of himself; and now he made her feel as if she could absolutely kill him, without even meaning to.

"Of course I will listen to you, Brian," she assured him. "I can't help being a little surprised, though."

"And I may come, then, whenever I can?" he asked hopefully.

"Why, of course you may," she said, getting up and turning with him toward the house.

The next day he showed her the ring he had bought for her at Tiffany's in New York, and it looked exactly like one of Mrs. Kirkman's that she had especially admired. She would have loved to try it on, but she didn't want Brian to see her do it—not until she finished making up her mind—and she certainly didn't want him to leave it.

THERE was a lovely change in the weather after this; it was cool—almost bracing—and the elm trees began to take on their golden look again. Brian never missed coming a single day. He was really delightful. He had settled down now to be more the way he was before he went back to England.

The biggest change Alice noticed in him was, of course, the way he kept trying to make her care about him enough to say she would marry him. No matter what subject he started to talk about, he always got back to that. That always made him serious, but the rest of the time he seemed to be so happy and everybody liked him so much. It would be dreadful, she thought, if she didn't ever want to marry Brian. Rose, and even her mother, wondered why she didn't want to already. She was the only one who knew why.

Mr. Mason's mother was getting better now. The last two letters sounded as if he didn't have to be there all the time any longer.

One afternoon when she had been walking with Brian and they were coming back rather later than usual, they saw the new moon—not through the brush or over anybody's shoulder, but right out in front of them—a curve of silver in a pale pink sky.

"Stop a minute and say 'howdy' to it," she said, making a little bow to the moon, the way the darkies did. "It's for good luck," she explained, turning to see if Brian understood.

But he was not looking at the moon; he was looking at her, and in a minute he said, in a voice that was quite different from his usual one, "If you would let me kiss you, Alice, I think perhaps it might help you make up your mind." His face was flushed all the way to the roots of his blond hair; he stood very still.

It was such a surprise that at first she thought she must be shocked, but then she realized she wasn't; she held her face up for him to kiss her without any idea in the world of what it would be like. When it was all over, she didn't know in the very least what she ought to be thinking now. But Brian didn't seem to be at all confused over the way he had kissed her—or over anything, in fact. He even remembered about the ring, which was in his pocket.

Rose was the first one to notice it when they got home, but she didn't say very much. They all seemed to have taken it for granted that she would finally decide that way; and from now on she wore it practically all the time—at home. She always remembered to take it off if anybody came, though, especially Miss Norma.

The hotel was keeping open that fall too. Mr. Deering had got out a new prospectus, as he called it, advertising the springs as a between-season resort, especially for people who liked to go duck hunting. Brian was more enthusiastic about it even than Mr. Deering. Some of his friends from the office came out all the time now and brought their dogs along, to stay over Sunday and go hunting with him. He brought back ducks to eat until Annie Sue said she was going to

(Continued on Page 189)

Do Your Curtains Beautify Your Home?

Are they an asset or a liability? For curtains that retain their crisp loveliness, their sheer beauty, after repeated laundetings, ask to see Queentex Washable Rayon Curtains. They wash like a handkerchief . . . no starching, no stretching, no special care in ironing.

Write for free Queentex Rayon Curtain Booklet now! QUEEN VALLEY FABRICS, INC., P.O. Box 634, Pawtucket, Rhode Island. For 20 years weavers and manufacturers of rayon curtains exclusively.

Queentex

QUEENTEX® Washable RAYON CURTAINS

new art pottery of surpassing beauty!

Wincraft

Exquisite new shapes . . . fresh, lovely color tones . . . charming decorative motifs! The high-luster mottled glaze, unique with WINCRAFT, is an achievement in fine ceramics. Forty-nine art pieces . . . in Apricot, Chartreuse or Azure Blue. Featured at gift shops and department stores.

"How to Decorate with Art Pottery" send for this booklet

24 pages profusely illustrated with outstanding examples of tasteful art pottery settings. Send 10c for this valuable booklet.
ROSEVILLE POTTERY, INC.
Dept. L-118, Zanesville, Ohio

Roseville decorative art pottery

Supercale is best . . .

FOR THE BEST OF REASONS!

The very finest of long-staple cottons . . . extra-combed for extra strength and smoothness . . . Equi-Tension woven for extraordinary fineness . . . with a thread-count that yields to none . . . and a standard of inspection that is the wonder of the textile world . . . all backed by experience that dates from 1846 — that's *Supercale! And these are the good and sufficient reasons why today, yesterday, always . . . There is only ONE Wamsutta!

VICTOR KEPPLER

Look for Wamsutta's new Color Coordination Chart in your favorite fine store. Actual swatches show you how to "decorate" your bedrooms with sheets, blankets, towels and throws — all in a single harmonizing range of smart new colors.

There's only ONE Wamsutta!

WAMSUTTA MILLS, New Bedford, Massachusetts
Distributors of Wamsutta-Somerset Towels, "The Three Weavers" Throws
Now available — Wamsutta Batistes, Organdies, Lustercale* and Lustersheer*

Wamsutta

WAMSUTTA Supercale

Supercale

* REG U S PAT OFF

SHEETS & PILLOW CASES

(Continued from Page 187)

a feather bed out of all the ones she icked.

ce didn't like to think of Brian killing nany of anything, but he evidently took granted that ducks were meant to be —just as her mother did about the g-size chickens—and it seemed better o bring up that side of it. Especially it was the only side she didn't like. It dn't do any good to talk to him about she felt; he never bothered about things hat. If England should ever have a war , Brian would probably be the first one t into it. He would look beautiful in his rm, too, going off to shoot a lot of other exactly as if they were ducks.

e thing Alice liked about the hunting was that having Brian go off on them her so much more time than she had having since he came back. Not for hing special; just to think in.

was the most fortunate thing imagie that he had gone off on a hunting trip Sunday Mr. Mason came; especially it was the only Sunday he would have. as lucky, too, that Mr. Mason hadn't anybody he was coming, because then n might not have gone and they couldn't sat in the woods and talked.

r. Mason looked just the same. It was use he was in favor of sameness that he been careful to avoid any innovations in ersonal appearance, such as new clothes, had timed his coming with a view to the th and almost to the moment of certain eriences he had carried over from a year He could hardly have ordered a Sunday e like the one he had kept before him as setting for his picture of Alice in the au- n woods.

I told you you would stay, you remem- "

And even if I had known you were com- I couldn't have spread more crimson n for you to walk on than this, could I?" asked him.

No; and I couldn't be more afraid to walk t." He looked at her thoughtfully, and said, "And speaking of the gods—and desses—and their ways with mortal men; know when a lady wears a ring, espey one that doesn't come off easily, she 't always get out of it as quickly as she ld like to and put it somewhere else. ere did you put it when you saw me? didn't swallow it, by any chance?"

lice hated to think what must be hapng to her face while he said this. He had given the faintest indication of seeing take the ring off. She had put it inside the neck of her dress, but she couldn't tell him that. Her throat felt too queer for her to tell him anything.

"I gather that for some reason you didn't want me to see that ring," he said. "But now that you know I have, maybe you will tell me what the reason was."

"I was afraid that you would—that you might be sorry about it."

"And now that you know I am, will you tell me whose ring it is? Is it Brian's? That's my guess, anyway, and even if it's a good one I can't claim a great deal of credit for it. I expect you've told me a good deal more about Brian than you realize, in those beautiful letters you have written me. But whosever it is, I want to hear about it from you first, so tell me."

That made it easier—going back to the time when Brian first came. She told him about the way he had gone home, and come back, without ever saying why he was doing it, or telling them anything about Angela. Of course Mr. Mason knew he was engaged to Angela, but what he didn't know was how he had broken it off, and how he had had to bring his family around, as he said; especially his mother.

"Do you know exactly what he meant by saying she is very British?" Alice asked him.

"Whatever it means, I don't think you have to worry about it," he told her. "Do you remember the song I used to sing you—'Where'er you walk'? You are always going to be happy, Miss Alice." His voice was not a bit solemn, but the way he looked at her was.

"And are you praying for me to be happy?" she asked him. "Even if I have to be it away off somewhere? You used to talk about all the things we were going to do—all the things you wanted to show me. You said you wanted to show me yours first."

"I did," he said; "I do. I shall never want anything else. But they are away off somewhere too. I couldn't ask you to wait."

"But I would have," she said. "I will now, if you still want me to."

He shook his head. "Impossible, Miss Alice. Impossible, my darling—I call you that all the time anyway, so it doesn't matter. You would be like the lady in the old ballad who climbed her tower for so many years watching for her lover to come back from the wars. This war would be too long; you wouldn't know me when I got there."

"Would you know me?"

"That's a different question. I will always know you because you are never going anywhere."

(Continued on Page 191)

"Use the triangle fold myself."

Picture your home decorated in America's Most Desired Colors!

Why be satisfied with "just imagining"? You can "re-do" room after room now—easily and inexpensively—with Pabco Floors in colors voted loveliest by thousands of women who comprise Pabco's nation-wide board of style advisors!

Choose either Pabco Linoleum or Printed Floor Coverings—you're sure to get the "whitest white," "truest blue," and many other outstanding colors! Plus Pabco long wear and easy cleaning*!

Luxurious Pabco Linoleums (Patterns No. 9047 and 9003 shown above) are Soil-Sealed to resist dirt. Pabco Printed Floor Coverings—in rugs (No. 9811 shown below) and wall-to-wall styles—have the famous "Stainless Sheen" surface!

Send ten cents in coin for "Decorate with Pabco"—sixteen full-color pages—to Dept. 638 L nearest office below.

Pabco* Inlaid Linoleums and Printed Floor Coverings

Doubly Easy With Pabco Linoleum Cleaner and Pabco Floor Wax

THE PARAFFINE COMPANIES, INC. · NEW YORK 16 · Chicago 54 · San Francisco 19

Styled in California . . . Approved by all America!

"7 years and 3 babies later"

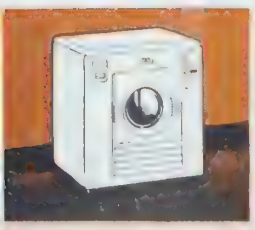
A Bouquet from Mrs. A. D. Eastman of Akron, Ohio—plus facts you want to know about the only washer in the world that can put in its own soap!

"Anne, our first, at 10 months old was a full-time job. She ruled the whole household, but meanwhile the laundry couldn't wash itself. Or could it? We bought a Bendix, and -- miraculously -- there was time for the Baby and some left over for myself. Now, seven years and three babies later, I still bless the day that Bendix Washer came to work for us. It paid for itself long ago with the money it saved on soap and water, and it's still going strong. It does all the work, while I spend my time with Anne -- the boys -- and Baby Susan."

Mrs. A. D. Eastman

Now the Bendix can do an extra step-saving job no other washer can do. The secret is a new invention—the Bendix Automatic Soap Injector.

This "almost human" feature of the newest Bendix Washers can actually put in the exact amount of soap needed to get your wash sparkling clean.



So you just set the controls once—then go anywhere and do anything you want, while your Bendix soaps, soaks, washes, rinses 3 times and damp-drys the clothes all by itself.

Expensive? No—just the opposite. You can buy a Bendix for as little as $199.95. Much less than other automatic washers. Hardly more than an old-fashioned hard-work washer! And the Bendix is so thrifty with water and soap.

No other washer is used and wanted by so many women as the Bendix. It's the world's most popular washer. It's the only automatic washer backed by 11 years of trouble-free work-saving service.

Put a Bendix through its paces at your nearby dealer's store. Then choose the model that suits your house and pocket-book best. Bendix Home Appliances, Inc., South Bend 24, Indiana.

Models S-101 and B-201 are also manufactured in Canada and Mexico.

Bendix automatic Dryer ends weather worries. Clothes get fluffy-dry in minutes!

Bendix automatic Ironer has many new features not found in other ironers.

BENDIX automatic Washer

WORLD'S FINEST WASHER. The new Bendix Gyramatic . . . doesn't have to be fastened down.

(Continued from Page 189)

She looked at him without speaking for a while, then she said, "Were you much surprised—about the ring, I mean? You hadn't forgotten about Angela, had you?"

"No, I hadn't forgotten about Angela. I don't know exactly how much I could depend on her, though." He was smiling, but when he spoke again he was serious. "One never knows about those things—for other people. They can be very cruel. It depends on who holds the sharp edge of the knife. And even being cut doesn't always make them let go."

Alice looked at him anxiously. "Do you think I ought not to have let him do it? Maybe I ought to have thought more about how Angela was feeling, and not so much about the way he felt. Maybe I shouldn't have listened to all those arguments Brian used."

"But you did listen; doesn't that mean you wanted to hear them? You were meant to hear them—from the time the world began."

She said, "And of course, now, if I did anything—if I said anything ——"

He shook his head. "The sharp edge, my darling. You can't throw Brian over now; not for Angela, not even for me. And least of all for any of the things I can give you. Shall I tell you what they are?"

The softness of her silence answered him.

"Dreams, Alice; cloud-capped illusions; forgotten music, a forgotten language, a lost world. This is your world—this one here and now. You are its music, its song, its summer—looking at me with those grave eyes!"

Heaven help him, would he have the strength to leave her as he found her, wearing her bright ring and not the mangling chains of love? There was something pathetic about the sheer perfection of her face as she sat there, her color changing, her lips parted, hanging on his words. That she should be, with a weapon like that, so helpless in his hands! Why, instead of showing mercy, was he not praying for it? Well, he was; but not from her.

"Do you remember," he asked her, "that time, here in the woods, when we were talking about the difference between the past and the future—about how the past belongs to us and the future belongs to God knows whom? I am sure you do; you said something about it in one of your letters. I told you about Aeneas and his shipwreck; well, this is mine. I am wondering what I ought to do—what I can leave undone—to make it something that someday it will 'rejoice me to remember.'"

She followed this with deep attention, not altogether sure of its full meaning; then waited for him to go on. "How long does it take," she asked him finally—"I mean how long ought it to take, to get over missing something that you had been caring about more and more all the time you thought you were learning to get along without it—if you have to give it up entirely, I mean? If you have to go where you are never going to have it any more? You say that you can hold on to things; but suppose you couldn't; suppose you felt—suppose it was somebody you couldn't bear never to see again ——"

These words, not too intelligible, and spoken in a voice that was anything but clear, showed him nonetheless with sufficient clearness where he stood—where he had stumbled from the path he meant to keep. He must find his footing or be lost.

"Just what do we mean by giving up entirely?" he asked her.

"I mean going back and being the way you were before."

"But I don't believe anybody ever wants to give up that much, do they? They always want to save something out of it all; something they have learned from it. Don't you remember what you told me about wanting to have experience?"

"I know," she said. "Only I thought about it all the time as gaining something. I didn't think about losing. I never imagined feeling the way I do now. Do you remember the time I wrote you about, when I came home with Brian and we had to walk from where the car stopped, and Andy, down at the hotel, thought we were ghosts and ran away from us?"

"I remember," he said.

"Well, I had never thought before how terrible it would be to come back from—wherever it is—because there was something you couldn't bear to give up." She had taken out the little handkerchief with Alice on it and was wiping her eyes. "I don't want to start crying," she told him. "Rose says I haven't any idea how it makes me look; she says nobody would even know me."

"Rose is mistaken," he said. "You were crying the first time I ever saw you, and I knew you then, didn't I? And, by the way, where did Thor go?" He whistled, and they heard somewhere an answering rustle in the leaves.

"I had forgotten all about him," Alice said, putting the handkerchief back.

Mr. Mason looked at his watch and whistled again. He stood up and held his hands down to her. "Come," he said.

Sitting on the terrace overlooking the Mediterranean and talking to Roderick about the way things used to be at home, Mrs. Howard recalled the last time she had seen the springs. They looked entirely different: the cups were gone, and a good deal of the concrete, and not many of the little pergolas where people used to sit were still there. The hotel, considerably shorn and chastened architecturally, was now a girls' school, and it was harder than ever to think what the springs could still be used for. Pierian they had never been; and in any case, they no longer looked sanitary enough to drink of. Very likely the only thing that could still be said about the springs was that they were still there.

Lord, grant that I may always desire more than I can accomplish.
—MICHELANGELO.

How easy it would be, she thought now, looking at Roderick beside her, in that romantic spot, to spin him a little idyl of her romantic youth, taking those actual springs as a sort of symbol of her own beginnings. Experience could usually be traced back to some beginning, and social experience was particularly traceable. Certainly if it had not been for the hotel she might never have met what she could now, if she wanted to, call her fate; and the hotel would never have been built there if it had not been for the springs. But if she went off on that tack she might as well leave herself out, and after all she was the thread the sequence was strung on. Whether things happened outside of her or within, she was still the mysterious oneness that held them all together; their pattern, if they had a pattern, was the one she had drawn.

Looking back on that old, that young, time, when she made her grave decisions so lightly, she wondered what it was that had presided over the transaction. Was it what she knew or all that she never knew that had most influenced her choice? She had been so ignorant and had been left so free; an elemental freedom, such as winds might have, or wishes. Freedom to choose, and the world to choose from. Only there was a catch in it. The world had a way of being a little late, or one's choice was made a little soon; so that it was made in ignorance after all. Knowledge had to be of what one had already chosen—or failed to choose.

"You will always be happy." Mr. Mason had told her that; he had seen her choosing happiness. She knew a great deal about happiness by this time; almost all there was to know. About what she had not chosen, she naturally knew less—and all in retrospect. It was like looking back on something she had dreamed, or imagined. And it really was something that would always have had to be taken on trust if it had not been for Mr. Mason, who had given her direct evidence of it. She had been everywhere since then, and seen everything, but he had showed her that first.

THE END

NEW Rinso WITH SOLIUM

...the scientific Sunlight Ingredient

PUTS SUNSHINE IN YOUR WASH

...even on rainy days!

Only New Rinso with Solium...

1 WASHES WHITE CLOTHES WHITER THAN BRAND NEW

2 MAKES WASHABLE COLORS BRIGHTER THAN BRAND NEW

No other soap can give these results because no other soap contains Solium

THINK of it! On rainy days or sunny days . . . whether clothes are hung indoors or out . . . new Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, puts a new brilliance in your wash—a brilliance never known before!

Results will amaze you! You'll even see yellowed and grayed clothes made whiter than brand new! No other soap can do this because no other soap contains Solium.

And, the oftener you wash your clothes with new Rinso containing Solium THE WHITER AND BRIGHTER THEY GET! Get a package of new Rinso with Solium today!

Solium . . . the miracle Sunlight ingredient . . . is an exclusive development of wartime scientific research by the world-famous laboratories of Lever Brothers Company.

SO SAFE FOR CLOTHES . . . SO KIND TO HANDS

Rinso is used by more women than any other washday soap in the world

To me he is wonderful...and I'm not afraid of spoiling him!

"When I pick him up, cuddle him, it makes him feel secure. Because he knows he is loved and wanted, the world will seem friendlier to him. That's what my doctor tells me.

I'm going to give him special physical care, too, by providing him the important help he needs to build a straight, strong back...fine, full chest, a well-shaped head, straight legs, and sound teeth."

Nothing is too good for your baby

In providing the Vitamin D your baby must have to build sound bones and teeth, choose Squibb Cod Liver Oil—a dependable and time-proven source. It is scientifically tested source, preferred by many physicians. Given regularly every day, Squibb Cod Liver Oil will help your baby build a well-proportioned framework and sound teeth right from birth. Get Squibb Cod Liver Oil for your baby. Give it regularly.

For older children, grown-ups, get the pleasant Mint-Flavored! It will be a valuable help for the whole family if you keep Squibb Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil on hand. As children add inches and pounds, they need the extra Vitamins A and D it provides. Fine, too, for grown-ups. Today, get the Plain or pleasant Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil!

SQUIBB cod liver oil

preferred by more mothers than any other cod liver oil

The means of preventing whooping cough are available at any doctor's office. It is up to mothers to use them.

Let's Banish the Whooping-Cough Menac

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

SINCE the vaccine which prevents whooping cough was discovered more than ten years ago, the number of cases has been dropping steadily. Yet this disease, for which there is an effective preventive measure, still kills more babies every year than dreaded, baffling poliomyelitis does! I can say without hesitation that doctors fear whooping cough as much as any other disease.

If the patient is a baby less than a year old, the risk to life is many times greater than it is in older children: of the tiny babies who are ill with whooping cough, nearly one third die as a result. (Bronchopneumonia, which often develops as a complication of whooping cough, causes most of these deaths.)

Plainly, this is a case where knowledge can save lives and prevent suffering. When mothers know what to do to protect their infants, and it is done at the right time, their babies rarely get whooping cough.

How can you protect your little one against the menace of whooping cough? First, by seeing that he is immunized against it. Given in a series of two or three injections, preferably between the ages of three and six months, the vaccine for whooping cough may also be combined with injections of diphtheria toxoid, and often tetanus toxoid as well, so that immunization against all three of these dangerous diseases is built up during the early months of life (though such combinations are best started when the baby is about eight months old). Your doctor will usually know whether or not there is whooping cough about. If there is, he will probably wish to give the whooping-cough vaccine at once. Otherwise he may advise waiting until the three can be given together. But no baby should be allowed to reach his first birthday without immunization against the disease, still so serious when it attacks tiny folk.

A few mothers have the mistaken impression that the vaccine injections will cause the baby to suffer and may even be dangerous. In some cases, a day of slight soreness at the site of injection may make the baby fretful, but compared with the hazard of whooping cough itself this is not worth mentioning.

Whooping cough attacks the membranes of the nose, throat and mouth and is passed from child to child on the droplets of moisture that are sprayed into the air when an infected child coughs or sneezes. When a healthy youngster becomes infected in this way, or by picking up the germs from a drinking cup, utensil, napkin, handkerchief, towel or other contaminated object (which happens rarely), a period of seven or ten to twenty-one days passes before the symptoms appear. During this incubation period the germs are multiplying and spreading.

For a few days before the cough starts the child may have signs of an ordinary cold—running nose, sore or scratchy throat and sneezing. As in the case of measles and other children's diseases, this is a dangerous time. Whooping cough is contagious during this stage: a child can give the disease to others before he is noticeably sick himself. So here is an important second rule: Whenever there is any whooping cough in your community, watch your child closely and isolate him at the slightest sign that anything is the matter.

The first identifying symptom of whooping cough is a dry, hard cough which grows steadily worse (Continued on Page 194)

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1340, sells for 0 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

For your Gerber Baby, too! Savory ARMOUR Meats

Latest additions to those good, good Gerber's Baby Foods. Delicious beef, veal, liver—all lean, selected meats from Armour with complete high quality proteins.

All ready to heat and eat. No scraping! No cooking! No waste with these fine quality, government-inspected meats. Prepared with the same scrupulous care that goes into all Gerber's from the three Cereals through the thirty-five Strained and Junior Foods.

Is baby young enough to enjoy smooth Strained Meats? Or old enough for tiny tempting particles of Junior Meats? Either way you pay one low price for Gerber's. Here's the economical way to provide first-rate meats for baby. Several servings of Armour Beef, Veal or Liver in every can!

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
Fremont, Mich.—Oakland, Calif.

3 Cereals • 20 Strained Foods • 15 Junior Foods • 3 Strained Meats • 3 Junior Meats

.....and to all a good NITEY NITE

Mother's best gift to her darlings is health . . . Nitey Nite* Sleepers guard them through the cold night. Petal-soft fabric for rose-petal skin — healthful, absorbent, pure cotton. Sturdily tailored, their smooth flat seams are nine-thread sewn and reinforced at every point of strain. Their sweater cuffs hug little wrists and provide four inches of adjustable sleeve-length.

Nitey Nite Sleepers have a "bootee" foot with a double sole for double comfort, wear and warmth. Gripper fasteners end button problems and their back has a full-fashioned seat with elastic to encourage self-help. Long to wear—easy to wash — they hold their shape and their gay sudfast colors rise from the tub blossom-bright.

Two-piece style, with extra pants, sizes 0-4. One piece style, sizes 4-8. Your choice of four gay, blossom colors — Rosebud, Lotus, Delphinium, Buttercup.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS

MADE BY GLENDALE KNITTING CORPORATION • PERRY, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 192)

for several days and is likely to be especially troublesome at night. The cough may be accompanied in some cases by sore throat and fever.

As the disease progresses, the coughing spells become more violent and prolonged. In mild cases there may be a half dozen spasmodic coughing episodes a day. In severe cases there may be several times this number. Usually the coughing fit ends in a drawn-out whoop as the suffering child fights to get air through the bronchial passages, which are plugged up with sticky mucus. In many cases of whooping cough, however, the typical whoop from which the disease takes its name is missing entirely. Sometimes the coughing spell results in vomiting, and often the child will cough up large quantities of the infected mucus.

The severe coughing commonly lasts for about three weeks, although in many cases it continues, with somewhat diminished severity, for considerably longer.

The period of convalescence is dangerous because the child is weakened from the strain and exertion of constant coughing and is consequently susceptible to other germs that attack the respiratory area, such as those of influenza and pneumonia. An important part of the mother's responsibility in the care of a child with whooping cough, therefore, is to protect the child adequately throughout convalescence.

These are the chief factors: Keep the child in bed as long as fever lasts. See that he has several extra hours of rest every day after he does get up. Guard against exposure and fatigue. Get the doctor's specific approval before allowing the child to return to school and other normal activities.

During the early stage of whooping cough, or following a known exposure, the doctor may wish to inject one of the protective substances now available, in an effort to lighten or shorten the attack. However, the principal burden of care in whooping cough in the home must be carried by the mother and is aimed at making the sick child as comfortable as possible and conserving his strength.

Clean bed linen and night clothes always add to comfort, as does sponging and, if the doctor permits, bathing the child daily—being careful, of course, to avoid chilling. Aspirin may be given to reduce fever and aid relaxation; the doctor will say how much and how often. He may also prescribe a cough medicine, and possibly a sedative if the child is very disturbed.

Since the spasms of coughing are aggravated by nervous tension, every effort must be made to keep the child relaxed. In the case of a small baby, of course, there is not much a mother can do except to remain calm and composed herself to avoid communicating nervousness to the baby. With older children, reading aloud is first choice in diversions, though it makes heavy demands on mother's time. Games must be selected carefully for the maximum pastime value and discarded if they require effort or bring excitement.

Often the infant with whooping cough will get along better if cared for in a hospital, particularly if home conditions are not suited to the quiet surroundings and constant attention needed.

Plan the sick child's diet to build strength as rapidly as possible. While severe coughing lasts, simply prepared bland foods (soup, milk, milk toast, soft-boiled eggs, cereals, custards) are desirable. When coughing is followed by vomiting, try to persuade the youngster to take small amounts of food immediately after each coughing spell. When the cough is subsiding the doctor may recommend a vitamin preparation to speed recovery.

Devoted and intelligent care will pull most sufferers through. But the important thing is not to let your child get whooping cough in the first place. A good preventive vaccine exists. See your doctor at once about giving your baby or small child this protection. The means are at hand to avoid all the hazards and suffering of whooping cough. It is up to mothers to use them. THE END

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD EST. 1826

The Carriage for the Most Important Baby in Your Life

See the "Carriage with the quality seal on every wheel" at your dealer's now.

Learn the Meaning of Your Baby's Name! Our 32-page book gives the meaning of 500 boys' and girls' names. Send 10c for it to Heywood-Wakefield, Dept. LH-11, Gardner, Mass.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MATERNITY DRESSES

WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon at low budget prices. Charming fashions with concealing lines for the mother-to-be. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie

FALL STYLES

CRAWFORD'S DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE. Kansas City 6, Mo.

A Higher I. Q. for Your Child

Playskool Toys

Child behavior authorities agree that I.Q.s can be raised by the right influences. You can stimulate your child's mental development while he plays with famous PLAYSKOOL toys. Designed in cooperation with leading child psychologists, PLAYSKOOL toys increase muscular control . . . eye-hand co-ordination—shape and color distinction. There are PLAYSKOOL wooden and plastic toys for children from six months to eight years . . . you can choose the "right toy for every age." Rounded corners, harmless colors make every toy absolutely safe. Available at leading department and children's stores.

Send for FREE CATALOG

Mail coupon today for illustrated catalog of all PLAYSKOOL toys. Contains important facts on the proper selection of your child's toys . . . valuable information on child training by leading authorities.

PLAYSKOOL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
1752 North Lawndale Avenue, Chicago 47, Ill.

Send me FREE Playskool Catalog.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

TWINS OK

mother's switch to cushion weave diapers

THESE CUTE TWINS started out wearing ordinary diapers. Then their mother, Mrs. Bela Fhagan of Long Island City, N. Y., tried an experiment. She began using CHIX diapers for just one baby. "I was amazed," she said. "The soft gauze seemed much more comfortable for Cheryl's sensitive skin. The cushion weave absorbed moisture better. And CHIX were so much easier to wash and dry than heavy, bulky cloth. Naturally I soon put my Bonnie in CHIX too. Soft, cushion weave gauze makes the best diapers we've ever used."

Your baby will appreciate these softer diapers. 20 by 40 inch size adjusts as baby grows. At leading stores.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE DIFFERENCE IS IN THE SOFT CUSHION WEAVE

MORE GOOD NEWS!

Use disposable Chix Liners inside regular diapers. Diapers are pleasanter, easier to wash because Liners catch soil, reduce stain. Soft, cottoned surface goes next to baby. Around 1¢ apiece . . . and what a worksaver!

Chix
COTTONED
DIAPER LINERS

KITCHEN WITH A FUTURE

(Continued from Page 79)

planning and there was careful consideration of their ability to pay, with a margin for illness and insurance.

The L arrangement of the kitchen was not only a step-saving one; it was a cabinet-cost saving one, too, and proves that you do not need to fill every inch of a kitchen with cabinets to have it convenient. There is ample storage here, but every cabinet counter top does double duty—the space between sink and refrigerator serves both, as does that between range and sink. Whereas if the refrigerator and sink were on separate walls there would have to be extra cabinets, at more expense, to provide a convenient place to work.

By placing the range and refrigerator at the ends of the L, should there come a time, ten, twenty or thirty years from now, when they need to be replaced, new models can easily be installed without ripping out cabinets.

Although the kitchen is not a large room, this arrangement of equipment gives a feeling of space, with the laundry equipment placed in an enlarged and useful entry, handy for the quick jobs, light and pleasant to work in.

In fact, this 12′x12′ room seems almost like two rooms, for the eating space with its pleasant window is ample for four, and, pending the use of the future dining room, this is important. Wallpaper hung horizontally looks like half-closed shutters and gives this area a light, airy and charming personality of its own, set quite apart from the cooking area. This paper is washable and so are the gaily flowering potted plants, which are wallpaper designs cut out and placed between two panes of glass and framed.

This wall treatment is the kind of creative idea I especially like. For next year or next winter, the designs can be changed and the whole room given a new character, without changing the basic wall covering at all. In shades of blue with accents of coral in the curtains and accessories, the whole kitchen has a young and happy look, a fitting setting for a gay and pretty bride.

That the plan was practical and really worked I soon found out, for the table was set, grapefruit made ready, waffles were stirred up and ready to bake by the time I finished admiring the new cooking utensils that were wedding presents. In jig time from scratch the meal was served with less traveling to and fro than many other kitchen plans require. But, I thought, the light feet of Esther wouldn't get tired very easily in any case. Not in that daisy-fresh cottage and working in that brave new kitchen!

I felt very happy as I said good-by and went out the back door. The front door was all right, I suppose, but back doors are more interesting. I felt that the day will come when little cottages on every Maple Street will be ready to move into, too, for all of Young America. THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Love's Weather

By Dan G. Hoffman

Hickory hearth smoke ties two hearts together.
Let fall the rains, and shudder, trees,
at wind shake!
Oh, blow your burliest, wind, for love can make
Its own sweet seasons out of any weather.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

YOUR CHILD Needs Balanced Foot Action!

It's important that you should know why so many mothers insist on Poll-Parrot Archmakers for their children. They're designed and built to give gentle, firm support and keep young feet in position for natural, balanced tread. And they're pre-tested so you know they're right. See Poll-Parrot Archmakers and see the difference.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND
Division of International Shoe Company
St. Louis 3, Missouri

Buy Pre-Tested

Poll Parrot

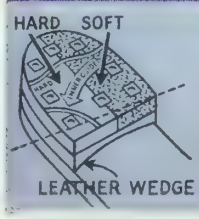
Archmakers

FOR BETTER POSTURE, BETTER FOOT HEALTH

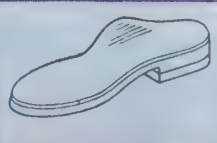
Also Star ★ Brand Shoes . . . At Lower Prices!

Archmaker
Style 9173

Archmaker
Style 9190-1

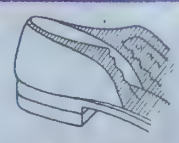


Tested and Commended by PARENTS' MAGAZINE



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer see Classified Phone Directory or write us.



Here's How ARCHMAKERS Help Your Child

Softer outer half absorbs shock. Harder inner half with extension corrects tread. Leather wedge gives extra support. Heel wears evenly!

Moulded insole, plus tempered steel shank, supports arch bones and muscles gently but firmly!

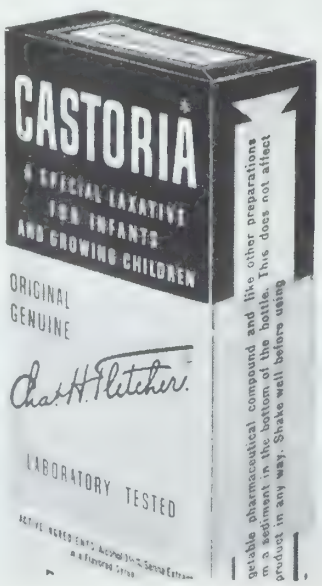
Extra long counter adds extra heel and ankle support. Helps maintain natural foot balance.

When baby's sobs mean

"Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your baby is tearful and fussy... when she sobs because of "Childhood Constipation"...it's wise to know what to do. Give her Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drugstore today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

NO GREENER GRASS

(Continued from Page 67)

coming to spend all her vacations with Margaret and her father; when she reached college age she had come to live with them all the time. After years of being alone with her father in the big, silent house, Margaret found it wonderful to have a companion. They were the same age, and most of the courses they took at the university were the same. They sat together in class, since their last names were the same, and they took to dressing alike as much as possible, and they were always delighted and amused when people took them for sisters. In a way, because they both had lonely years behind them, they were closer than sisters.

In spite of being so much alike in so many ways, they were very different. Frances believed in all or nothing; Margaret had always known how to compromise. They were the same size, and they often sewed together, each acting as a model for the other. Margaret's dresses were invariably finished long before Frances' were; once she had the effect she wanted, she was willing to let it go and not bother with the details of finishing. Frances was different; every last inch of the dress had to be perfect, and if a collar did not seem exactly right she would sit up half the night, taking it off and patiently putting it on again, never giving up until she was really satisfied. Her dresses were always considerably better than Margaret's, but Margaret had more.

In her senior year, Margaret met Dan Berry. He was tall and quiet and he smoked a pipe; the very smell of his tobacco smoke, caught in a room after he had left it, was enough to make her dizzy with the thought of him. He was taking a postgraduate course in history; he wanted to be a teacher, and he wanted very much to be a good one.

She couldn't make out, at first, whether he came to see her or her father. He would come and spend a quiet evening, sitting by the fire, talking to the professor, to her and to Frances. The old man liked him; when Dan was around he actually grew talkative. But it was torture to sit there and look at him, loving every line of his lean face, every turn of his head, and not know whether he cared if she was there or not.

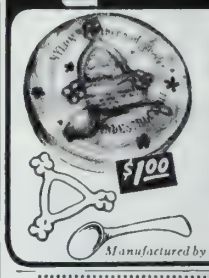
AND then there was one night when Frances had a date and her father was sick in bed and Dan, not knowing it, came anyway. Seeing him coming up the walk, she went cold with excitement and terror. For tonight, now that they would be alone, she would surely find out how he felt about her.

The evening was horrible. They sat by the fire, but there was nothing cozy about it. They talked, but their conversation was stiff and unreal, and sometimes there were horrible gaps when neither of them had anything to say, and the silence that grew between them was not companionable. She sat there, aching with her misery, only wishing that he would go, so that her heart could break in peace.

"We could pop some corn," she said at last, brightly, hating the sound of her voice, and they went into the kitchen and got the corn popper out. She was so ill at ease that her hands were awkward; she dropped the box of corn and bent clumsily to pick it up. And Dan bent, too, and as they bent their heads bumped.

It was not too bad a bump. But she had been holding in her misery for too long, and the surprise of the bump was too much for her, and she burst into tears. Childish sobbing tears, like a little girl's. And then she was in his arms, with her head against his shoulder where she had so often dreamed it would be, and he was kissing the bumped spot, touching it softly, brushing at her tears with his gentle finger tips. And then he was kissing her lips, kissing her as passionately and hungrily as she was kissing him.

He ended it suddenly, almost pushing her away. "Oh, I've tried not to!" he said. "You know I've tried not to!" He sat down abruptly on the kitchen chair, resting his head on his hands, staring at the floor, while she

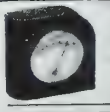


Winter's Coming! Treat You Youngsters to Toasty Warm GENE AUTRY SWEATSHIRTS

Children need no coaxing to don these warm, healthful, Gene Autry sweatshirts...they love 'em! Make up a varied sweatshirt wardrobe...a famous character for every school day: Red Ryder, Captain Marvel, Dick Tracy, Gene Autry, and Little Beaver. All are spring-needle knit for quality. At leading department and chain stores. White or colored; sizes 4 to 14, about $1.25 each. Or write...

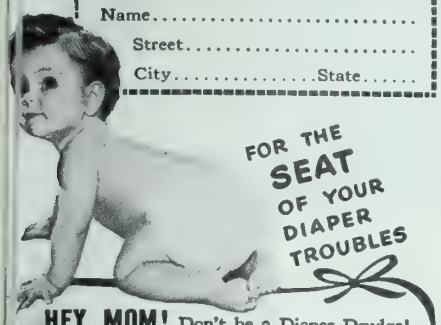
J. T. FLAGG KNITTING CO., INC.
Makers of High-grade Knit Goods
Mills: Florence, Alabama
New York Office: 93 Worth Street

2 NEW "BABY'S TREASURES"
Dr. Claflin's Teether and Feeder



MOLDED OF NYLON
...CAN BE STERILIZED
...INDESTRUCTIBLE
$1.00
Scientifically designed! Teether is safe...easy to grasp...cannot be swallowed; helps reduce gum distress. Feeder fits baby's hand; spoon bowl—shaped to avoid back-side spilling—is at correct angle to simplify self-feeding. Set comes smartly packaged in clear plastic reusable gift box.
At your favorite baby shop or department...
Manufactured by Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 45, U.S.A.

TO DISCOURAGE NAIL BITING
USE THUM TRADE MARK
50¢ easy to apply
use like nail polish
ASK YOUR DRUGGIST



Color Prints & PICTURES
Hundreds of exquisite full color reproductions for HOME & OFFICE. Birds, florals, landscapes, Currier & Ives, etc.
Sets — Pairs — Singles
GIVE PRINTS AS GIFTS
SEND 25c IN STAMPS OR COIN
CRESTE-ANDOVER CO.
Dept. C 205 E. 85 St., N.Y. 28, 32 page catalog
25c PPD.

MIDGET THERMOMETER
Accurate and practical! Use in bedroom, nursery, kitchen, etc. Mahogany finish wood frame, 2" square. Gift boxed, prepaid..... $1.25
Write For New Gift Catalog!
MEREDITH, INC., Evanston 1, Illinois

STOUT WOMEN'S SHOES
FREE Style Catalog
Smart, Youthful Styles plus Comfort. Widths C to EEE. Sizes 4 to 11. Prices from $8.95.
KUSHNER'S, Dept. B5, 733 South St., Phila. 47, Pa.

Dennison, Dept. L-1, Framingham, Mass.
FREE Please send me a whole day's supply of Dennison Diaper Liners.
Name.....
Street.....
City.....State.....

HEY, MOM! Don't be a Diaper Drudge! Dennison Diaper Liners reduce unpleasantness in changing and washing my diapers. Just fold a Liner inside diaper next to my skin. When soiled, flush away. No hard scrubbing. Sanitary. Helps prevent diaper rash. Costs only a few cents a day. DELUXE: 180 for $1; CRADLE TIME & DOWNEESOFT: 180 for 69¢.

Dennison
DIAPER LINERS
Wherever Baby Goods Are Sold

Knitted for Softness
Turknit
BABY BATH BLANKETS
Towels • Wash Cloths • Bibs
Absorbent, economical, fast drying.
Protect child from drafts after bath.
Won't chafe tender skin.
At leading stores
Turknit matched gift sets make ideal presents.

A copy of our 36 page pictorial booklet "How to Bathe and Dress Baby" will be sent you for only 10¢.
PUTNAM KNITTING CO.
Dept. L, Cohoes, N. Y.

EXTRA PAY DAY can be yours each week. Thousands of men and women earn up to $1.50 an hour by accepting subscriptions to Curtis publications and others. Write to M. E. NICHOLS, Manager of Agents, CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 790 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

NEW!
HOLGATE
PICTURE
PUZZLES
. . . masterpieces in wood!
Nothing like putting together the pieces of a Holgate Picture Puzzle to speed your child's power to concentrate . . . to think constructively. Beautifully illustrated, like all Holgate Toys, they're safe, sturdy, colorful. Subjects include: Rock-A-Bye Baby; 3 Little Kittens; Rain, Rain, Go Away; Humpty Dumpty; Little Boy Blue; Baa, Baa, Black Sheep. Each $2.00
FREE Holgate Toy Folder showing large assortment of Holgate Toys. Or send 10c (to cover mailing cost) for complete 24-page large-size catalog, including toy selection chart for choosing toys most suitable for your child.
HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.,
Kane, Pa., Dept. L-118
Name.....
Address.....
City Zone State
HOLGATE TOYS train as well as entertain holgate toys stood and stared at him. "I can't afford to be in love," he said at last, in a flat voice. "I'm in debt; I had to borrow the money for this last year's work. I won't ever make much money. I can't afford to be in love with you."

She found that she was kneeling on the floor beside him, pushing his hands away from his head, touching his face as though she needed to get the feel of it into her own hands. "But I couldn't bear it if you weren't."

And after that nothing else mattered, nothing else was important at all, because she was engaged to Dan Berry. Just walking down the street alone could be exciting; she would find that she was smiling to herself, remembering some little thing he had said, remembering the way he looked at her. Wherever she went her happiness walked with her; it was something tangible, that you could almost see.

She knew all the inconveniences of trying to live on a teacher's salary; she had done it all her life. And her father was a full professor; it would be a number of years before Dan could hope to be anything more than an instructor. She knew that life with him would never be easy financially, and she knew that he was the only man in the world she would ever want to marry.

She was so happy, those first few months of being engaged to Dan, that she hardly had time to notice anything else. She noticed only casually, for instance, that Frances was having a lot of dates and was talking very little about them; that she stayed out later and later and yet seemed to be increasingly clear-eyed and happy in the morning. She was going around with a boy named George Harding; he had a roadster and a lot of money and he was considered wild. He was also considered by far the most attractive man on the campus.

A woman never forgets the men she could have had; a man, the women he couldn't.
—AUGUSTA DOCKERY.

And then, through the blur of her happiness and her deep interest in herself and Dan, she realized that Frances had not had a date for some time. She stayed home and studied and sewed, and she went to bed early, and in the morning there were shadows under her eyes and she jumped if you spoke to her too suddenly. She would not talk to Margaret about it, and there was nothing Margaret could do. Until the night when, waking for no apparent reason, she realized that what had wakened her was the sound of someone crying.

She got up and padded through the cold hall into Frances' room. Frances sat up in bed and glared at her; she looked disheveled and tired and very angry. She said, "I'm not crying, and anyway it's none of your business what I'm crying about." And then, suddenly, she was crying again, and Margaret was sitting on the bed beside her, getting her a handkerchief, patting her head and making little soothing noises. It was strange to see Frances cry; she was always so self-possessed, so sure of herself. "I'm sorry," she said at last, and sat up and blew her nose and pushed the wet hair back from her face. "But I just—sometimes—oh, why'd I have to fall in love with somebody like that?"

"You mean George?" Margaret said.

"I mean George," Frances said grimly. "I haven't had a word from him for three weeks now. And what's more, I probably never will."

Margaret sat beside her, deeply troubled. Knowing what George Harding was like, and knowing how many girls he had rushed and dropped, she knew it was perfectly possible that Frances never would hear from him again. But she hadn't any idea that it would matter so much; that Frances was really in love with him. Deeply in love, that is, the way she was with Dan. George was very attractive, of course, and exciting, too, with his dark good looks and his quick way of

(Continued on Page 199)

How does your baby compare to Babs Coqueron?

3 MONTHS. Cute, little Babs Coqueron lives in Westfield, N.J. When she was 3 months old she was chosen (with her doctor's permission) for a special test to show how babies thrive on Clapp's. Babs was started on iron-rich Clapp's Baby Cereal. And my, how she grew and gained!

10 MONTHS. Isn't she a bonny baby! Babs now eats Clapp's Strained Foods, in addition to Clapp's Baby Cereals. She has added an inch to her height every month, and, on the average, a pound to her weight. It's fun to watch Babs eat—she enjoys every morsel of her Clapp's!

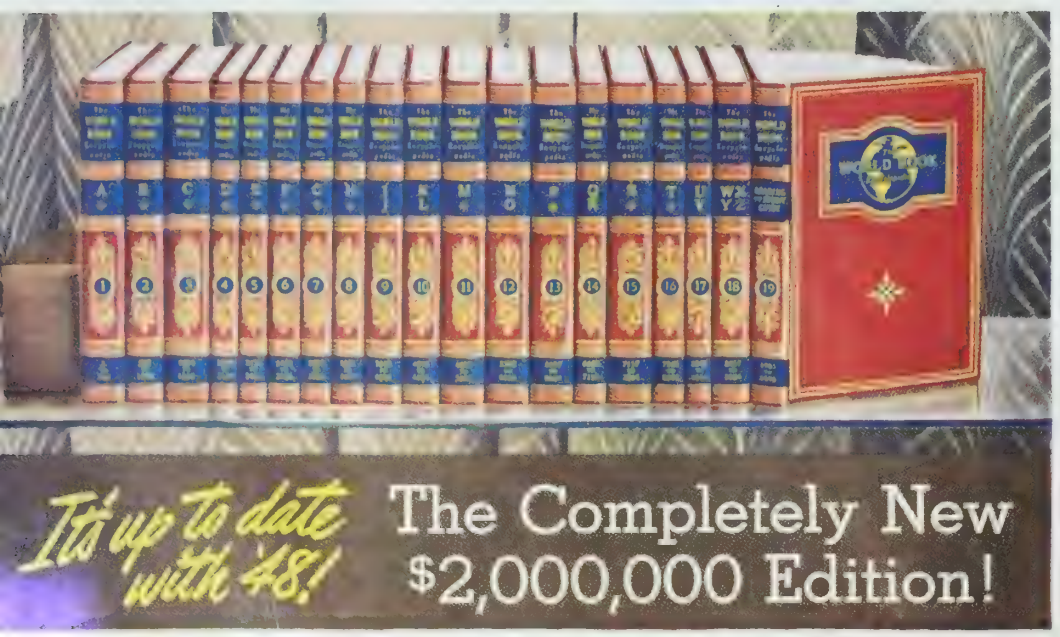
19 MONTHS. Babs has graduated to Clapp's Junior Foods. They are just what she needs to build a strong body and healthy teeth. Clapp's, you know, are pressure-cooked to help retain vital vitamins and minerals. It's wonderful to see Babs so strong and healthy on Clapp's!

AT 13, Babs is a sweetie. Her nature is sunny, she's a whiz at her studies. Her vitality is unlimited—after the fine start Clapp's gave her when little. Her mother is so glad Babs was chosen for the Clapp's test! Why not start your baby on Clapp's right now—for his lifelong health!

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS
THE FIRST BABY FOODS
Products of American Home Foods

His Report card

Up From "C" to "A" in only 3 Months!



Stricken by polio and rheumatic fever, brave young Allen Couch made a thrilling comeback in school with the help of his WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA

"My son, due to attacks of infantile paralysis and rheumatic fever, found it difficult to hold his own with other children of his age. He developed an inferiority complex which affected him academically as well as emotionally. His report card showed an average of "C" (just passing). I was advised to get the World Book by several of our well-known educators; so we gave him a set for Christmas. Immediately after, we noticed an amazing change. He was enthusiastic about his books and this soon extended to his school work. His marks jumped in the first quarter after receiving the World Book to "A" in most subjects. He is happy in school, has acquired poise and self-confidence. All this since he received his present of the World Book!"

—From an unsolicited letter written on August 27, 1947, by Allen's mother, Mrs. William Couch of Nyack, New York.

9 out of 10 families report their children advance more rapidly with WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA

It's up to date with '48! The Completely New $2,000,000 Edition!

Not every child can make the heroic progress of Allen Couch as the result of having the World Book. But so many unsolicited letters, like that above, have been received from proud and happy parents that a national survey was made. In the survey, parents were asked if their children had benefited from having the World Book. Nearly 9 out of 10 said "Yes"! They reported that their children had received better grades in school, were encouraged to hunt for facts, had built the habit of wanting to know. And the habit of knowing forms the habit of success.

Parents enjoy World Book, too, because every one of the 10,000 pages is as bright and interesting as the latest magazine. Over 18,000 illustrations, with 1500 in full color!

Educators and librarians have recommended World Book for over 30 years. Talk to them and you'll feel that World Book will make a perfect Christmas present for all the family.

Write today for free booklet containing actual pages and pictures from the new World Book. No obligation. The World Book Encyclopedia, Department LA-11, 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois.

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Time Payment Plan—World Book Encyclopedia may be purchased on convenient monthly terms.

World Book Encyclopedia is sold only by authorized representatives. There may be an opportunity to represent WORLD BOOK in your community. Dignified, profitable employment if you qualify. Free training. No investment required. Write Manager Mr. V. William Miller, WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA, 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois.

(Continued from Page 197)

speaking and moving. But there was something restless about him, something resistant, so that she could not imagine just being quietly happy with him, the way she was with Dan.

"Does it matter so much?" she said at last.

"Yes," Frances said flatly. "That's my guy. The only one." She stood up abruptly. "Go back to sleep, chick. I'm going to wash my face and get some sleep myself." She paused a minute at the door. "I'll get over it, I guess," she said.

Margaret went back to bed, but she could not go to sleep. She knew Frances too well; she did not think she would get over it. And she knew that if Frances could not get the one she wanted, then she would never want anyone else. She hated to think that Frances, who had already been so lonely, might have to be lonely again for the rest of her life.

It didn't work out that way. Frances, apparently, was one girl that George Harding could not quite manage to drop. Because the very next night he was there in his roadster, sitting and blowing his horn without bothering to get out. It did not matter; at least he was there. And Frances, who usually was quite stiff-necked with pride, went running out as though she had done nothing for three whole weeks but sit at the window and watch for him. And she was out so late that Margaret was asleep when she got home, and in the morning she was up early, looking clear-eyed and happy again.

The year rolled on toward spring, and toward commencement day, and George Harding's roadster was outside waiting for Frances almost as often as Dan Berry was walking up the path to see Margaret. And Frances' eyes grew so bright they seemed to light up the room; looking at her, Margaret knew that Frances was feeling just the way she was, and she felt a little frightened for her.

She need not have. On the last day of April, Frances woke her up when she came in; she was almost too excited to talk, but the diamond on her finger told Margaret all she wanted to know. They could do nothing for a few minutes but hug each other in silence, and then they did a mad little caper around the room, the way they had when they were little girls and Frances came to visit.

"A double wedding," Frances said. "A beautiful, beautiful double wedding. With flowers and bridesmaids and everything that goes with it."

And they spent the rest of the night in the same bed, talking softly, laughing often, making plans.

THE double wedding never took place. Two weeks later George cracked his roadster up against a tree, breaking a leg and injuring his head. Margaret and Frances sat together through half an agonizing night in the hospital, until the word finally came that the skull was not fractured, and that the leg had been successfully set.

"I suppose," Frances said once, "that I'm going to have things like this to go through all the rest of my life."

Fatigue and worry had made Margaret sharp. "You are," she said shortly, "if he doesn't learn to drive like a sane human being."

Frances' eyes were remote, and Margaret knew that they were not talking about quite the same thing. "Well, I can't help it," Frances said at last.

George did not bother to finish school. The accident kept him out for over a month, and almost as soon as he got out of the hospital he and Frances drove to the next town and got married.

"I thought I'd better marry him while I could," Frances said, "before he broke his silly neck." And she laughed, as though it were funny, but Margaret knew that no amount of laughter could ever make her forget the way Frances had looked that night in the hospital.

MARGARET and Dan were married in the middle of the summer. It was a beautiful wedding, though considerably quieter than the one she and Frances had so hilariously planned. In a way, she was glad; a wedding was such a precious thing that she did not want to share it, even with Frances. And there was not one small thing to mar the day, for Frances and George were back from their honeymoon in time to be matron of honor and best man, and Frances' happy face was in itself a sort of wedding decoration.

George and Frances took a small, chic apartment in the East Fifties in New York; a year or so later George's father died, and they moved into a large, chic apartment on Park Avenue. George became interested in the theater; he backed one show that made money, backed three more that lost money, and in general enjoyed himself hugely. One of Frances' deep worries was painlessly removed; now that they had so much money they had a chauffeur, and George seldom bothered to drive himself.

When Patty was born Frances came home for the christening; she was, of course, to be godmother. She held the baby on her lap and laughed so merrily that the baby actually laughed too—her very first smile.

"What about you?" Margaret said. "You seem to have a way with babies. Now it's your turn."

"One of these days," Frances said. "If I can find the time."

She did not find the time for quite a while. In the meantime Dan had applied for an instructor's post at Columbia; Margaret had to admit that part of her pleasure in his advancement was the fact that she would now be living near Frances. When she heard that Frances was going to have a baby she was even more delighted. Of course, Patty was four by that time, and it wasn't as nice as if y had children the same age. But maybe, she had thought, they could time the second ones better.

But for Frances there had never been a second, only Jimmy, and for Margaret there had been two more. Living in New York hadn't turned out to be at all the way she had thought. She knew it was an opportunity for Dan, and she had never regretted it, but she sighed many times for the green lawns and shady trees of her childhood. It wasn't easy, bringing up three children in the city, especially with Danny and Phyllis so close together—one three now, and one two. It kept her so busy that there wasn't time for anything, and all the exciting things about New York—the theaters, the concerts, the museums—might just as well have been hundreds of miles away.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Remembered Day

By Ann Batchelder

I feel that Woodstock town
Will like to think of me
When the silver flakes come down,
Snow that I cannot see.

Never Thanksgiving Day
Will dawn up there for me
With frost where, willful, play
The gnomes I used to see.

Woodstock, I'd love to know
That every single tree,
Laden with winter snow,
Will still remember me.

And now the day draws near,
The day I love the best,
The treasure of the year
Hidden in my breast.

Oh, little village of my heart,
Why did we ever have to part?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

QUAKER OATS HELPS GROW

"Stars of the Future"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition!

Your youngsters get more growth, more endurance—your grownups get more energy, more stamina from nourishing oatmeal than any other whole-grain cereal! That's why Quaker Oats is recommended for a better breakfast! According to a recent survey, only 1 school child in 5 gets the kind of breakfast he should have. So doctors say, the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! Help your children be a success by serving Quaker Oats!

A GIANT in Value!

Delicious Quaker Oats helps keep grocery bills down. Saves precious time in the morning, too, because Quick Quaker Oats cooks in 2½ minutes!

A GIANT in Flavor!

People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Tempting recipes on the package. Remember to buy delicious Quaker Oats.

Still Less than 1¢ a Serving!

QUAKER OATS

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

Know your child's weight, Mother, and you'll know the correct size underwear to buy!

Weigh your children BEFORE you buy their underwear—then you'll surely get the right size E-Z undergarment. E-Z Underwear, for babies as well as for older children, is plainly marked with WEIGHT as well as age and size, so you can't go wrong. And E-Z Underwear is styled and finished for long, hard wear, as generations of satisfied mothers have known.

To help you get the right size underwear for all your children write for our FREE booklet, "Let the Scales Help You".

E-Z MILLS, INC. 57 Worth St., New York 13, N. Y.
E-Z UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY 'for any Child of any Age'
OTIS UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY for Men and Boys

Except that, every so often, she did manage to get away for an afternoon with Frances. They would have lunch and go to the theater; Frances' story was always the same—somebody had given her the tickets, so of course there could be no question of Margaret's paying for hers. And before lunch she invariably said, "This is my treat, pet. After all, I called you." Margaret knew she was being thoughtful, and she did not mind. They both knew it would have been wrong to spend Dan's money on something so unnecessary as a really expensive lunch.

"And how is the lobster Newburg?" Frances said. "No, no, don't tell me. My lamb chops were delicious."

"The lobster," Margaret said, "is really fresh. But the best part of it is the sauce—just creamy enough, and just lobstery enough ——"

Frances threw a small bread crumb at her, and Margaret stopped, laughing. "You are a beast," Frances said. "I never knew you had a mean streak. Now then, to change the subject subtly—how's Dan?"

"He's fine," Margaret said, and the little worried frown came back, making a crease between her eyebrows. "Except that he's working too hard. He's working for his Ph.D., you know. He teaches all day and studies all night."

"Doesn't sound healthy," Frances said.

"It isn't," Margaret said. "I feel like a heel, leaving him to take care of the children all afternoon. He usually gets such a lot done Saturday afternoon."

"Nonsense," Frances said. "You need to get out once in a while."

And how would you know? Margaret found herself thinking. You can get out any time you please. You aren't ever needed at home. You haven't any idea what it's like to be tied down to three children, what it's like to do the same thing day after day, week after week, year after year.

She put the thought away from her almost angrily, though she could not stop herself from taking an almost spiteful pleasure in taking one more roll and buttering it heavily.

Frances was stifling a yawn. "Oh, but I am tired! What's it like to go to bed early?"

"Dull," Margaret said. You're tired, are you? she thought. I could use a little sleep myself. Three nights running I've been up half the night because of Danny's cough, tiptoeing around so I won't wake Dan, getting back into bed and just dropping off when the poor baby starts coughing again. What's it like to get enough sleep? How would I know?

"George never gets tired," Frances said. "It's three or four o'clock every night before he even thinks about bed. I don't know what he's made of."

So it's three or four o'clock? Margaret thought. But you can stay in bed till noon. Which gives you two hours more sleep than I ever manage to get.

"What do you want for dessert?" Frances said, and Margaret was horrified to hear the real grimness in her voice as she answered.

"The ice-cream éclair," she said, "with whipped cream."

It was a good show. Margaret was glad of that; it occupied her mind completely, and there was no room for the angry thoughts that had bothered her so at lunch. There was no time, either, for them to do any more talking; they kissed good-by outside the theater with real affection, and real regret.

"I hardly feel as though I've seen you," Frances said. "Next time we'll do it differently. I want you and Dan to come for dinner, and we won't ask anybody else, and we'll have the whole blooming evening for talking." She kissed Margaret again. "In a week or two," she said. "I'll call you."

That'll be nice, Margaret thought. You call me. And you needn't worry about getting me. I'll surely be in. Unless I'm at the grocer's, in the park with the children, or some other place just as riotous and exciting.

She fought her way into the subway, and by a miracle, found a seat. The car was

(Continued on Page 202)

MARK EVERYTHING WITH 12 DOZ. $3.50 Cash's 6 DOZ. $2.40
WOVEN NAME TAPES
Order from your dealer, or write
CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.

FREE! TO STOUT MEN
STOUTFITTERS
Dept. L 216 West 79 Street New York 24, N.Y.

High Styling FOR THE HIGH CHAIR CROWD

TWO TONE CREEPERS
STRIKE A NEW COLOR NOTE

White tops with blue or yellow pants, buttons on shoulders and Dot snap fasteners at crotch. Pants button on top.

Interlock knit of superb "Durene"* yarn—they just love the laundry. Sizes: 0, 1, 2.

About $2.49 at your favorite store or phone Western Union Operator 25 for name of nearest shop.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

APCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY CHICAGO 22, ILLINOIS

THIS IS A DRY-WASHER

By Munro Leaf

As you can easily see, a Dry-Washer is very hard on towels and doesn't get clean at all. When you tell one to go wash, it goes into the bathroom, turns the water on and then just lightly sprinkles a tiny bit of water near its face and hands. Then it rubs and blots a little with the towel. A Dry-Washer treats soap as though it were poison and it never fools anyone. It comes out almost as dirty as it went in, and the towel is always a mess.

WERE YOU A DRY-WASHER THIS MONTH?

From experience comes faith . . .

You are looking at a young man who already has faith. His age is in months and days, not years. But even now, experience has shown from whom comes help and comfort and love.

A child's horizon of experience is a room. Later it will be a house, a city, a world.

Out of each new experience wisdom is gathered. Comparisons teach which things are constant, where to place trust.

By comparison, man learns also the value of things unseen, things in which he can finally put his faith.

E·R·SQUIBB & SONS

Manufacturing Chemists to the Medical Profession since 1858

Anesthetics • Biologicals • Antibiotics
Sulfonamides • Endocrines
Nutritional and Medical Specialties

The priceless ingredient of every product is the honor and integrity of its maker

© 1948, E. R. SQUIBB & SONS

Make Glamour Desserts Galore from

Betty Crocker's NEW "Cake in a Box"

JUST ADD WATER, MIX AND BAKE!

Cranberry Sparkle

Follow directions on the box for GingerCake. Serve in squares topped with whipped cream or softened cream cheese garnished with thin cranberry sauce. Colorful and delicious!

Cupcake Swish

Follow cupcake directions on box. Cut out cone from center of cupcakes; fill with whipped cream to which orange marmalade has been added; replace cone. Let filling ooze out. A perfect dessert!

★ ★ ★

Betty Crocker gives you 23 different ideas for serving piping hot, fragrant GingerCake with every package. And no matter how you serve it, it's cake light, cake tender, cake luscious! Yes, Betty Crocker GingerCake Mix, made not from bread flour but from silky-fine Softasilk Cake Flour, is spicy-rich as gingerbread, tender-light as cake!

And it's oh so easy to prepare this mouth-melting dessert and get perfect results every time. You see, it's a Betty Crocker recipe all measured out for you. Get a package today.

General Mills

"Betty Crocker" and "GingerCake" are reg. trade-marks of General Mills. Copr. 1948.

(Continued from Page 200)

crowded and badly lighted; it was raining, and the entire car smelled of wet overcoats and muddy shoes and cheap raincoats. Margaret sat with her head down, looking at her hands in her lap, twisting her cheap cotton gloves together, worrying at the hole in the tip of one finger until she made it larger. She did not care.

All the bitterness she had tried to fight back through the day welled up inside her, and now she could not fight it. She just sat there and, almost unashamed, gave way to bitter envy.

She thought of all the things Frances was going home to. Jimmy would be ready for bed, clean, sweet and obedient. With only one child in the house there were no chances for squabbles, no fights over who broke whose toy, no pushing, no shouting. Besides, why should Jimmy push and shout? He had everything he wanted; he always had. Frances would kiss him good night, and her maternal duties would be done for the day. She would have a bath and dress for dinner, and sit down at her long polished table, without having to give a thought to the dinner—not even knowing, probably, what it would be. There would be guests, and they were almost sure to be amusing; there was hardly a star on Broadway that George did not know. And Frances would talk and laugh and be entertaining; it was easy to be entertaining when you knew your dress was right, your dinner was right, and you didn't have to do the dishes afterward.

And her evening? She would climb the three long flights of stairs, and she would open the door to a messy living room and three tired children. Because of the rain they would have been in all day, and the apartment was not big enough for their bounding energy. They would be dirty, too, from crawling on the floor, and Danny would have a new hole in the knee of his overalls where the fabric had almost worn through. And they would be hungry, because the show had been a long one and she was later than she should have been. And she would put an apron on over her best dress—two years old, and out of style, and still her best—and go into the kitchen and start the endless round of getting supper. The children's supper first, the three of them eating at the kitchen table, Patty eating too fast, Danny eating too slowly, Phyllis—inevitably—spilling her milk, because she wasn't very good yet at managing a glass.

And then there would be baths for them, and hair to brush and teeth to and then they would all be in bed, a would be getting dinner for Dan and And they would eat it in comparative interrupted only two or three times b for a glass of water. And then there wo the dishes to do, and after the dish could sit down. And she would sit and and Dan would sit and work; when he were aching with sleep she would have to bed and leave him there, still wo still trying to make up for the afterno had lost because she had been selfish er to want to go out with Frances and h good time.

And I didn't have a good time, she tho it only made me miserable. It only ma hate my life and everything about it.

The rain had stopped by the time sh home. She went slowly up the stairs; la she was, she was too tired and sad to h She put her key in the lock and opene door slowly. A fine thing, she thought, back to your own home and dread to go in

The living room was empty, and it wa too messy. There was evidence that it been tidied rather hastily, probably Patty—several toys still stuck out under the couch, and the wastepaper ba was stuffed full.

She could hear Dan's voice in the kitc and she went on down the hall. The chil were at supper already; Dan sat at the t with them, reading to them. She looke the four of them, and felt her eyes grow suddenly: four shining brown heads, lightly touched with red—so much alike different in size. In each small face she sa copy of Dan's, of the face that, even afte these years, could still make her heart b faster.

"It's a mirage," she said. "It looks to exactly as though you got their supper."

"Patty helped me," Dan said proudly. stood up, smiling, his finger keeping the pl in the book.

The children looked up at her, bemus with the story, their mouths full of fo dreams in their eyes. She bent over each c in turn, putting a kiss on the top of ea head of shiny, straight hair.

"And they've had their baths!" she sa "You're an angel!"

"You may not believe this, Mrs. B.," said, "but you have the best children in N York City. I even got three pages of not made."

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

MY Irish grandmother always accepted any trial with, "Well, Lord, if it's You, send it along."

Picture: Teen-age girls bouncing with boyancy.

One family's delightful name for its male grandparent: "Gumpa."

Children put to bed by fathers always have a sealed-with-dirt, fun-up-to-the-last-minute expression.

Many a man in a kitchen is as helpless as a June bug on its back.

Food kept from going to waste sometimes goes to waist.

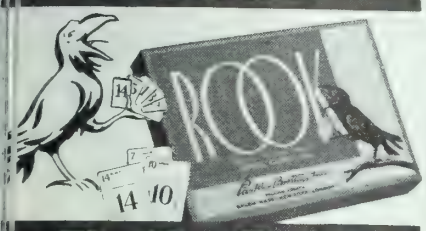
Small daughter's description of a chum with the measles: "You ought to see her, mother. She's sincerely broken out."

From an old book: "It is not the correct thing in the street for one lady to take the arms of two gentlemen unless she be learning to skate."

Our son has been growing so fast that if h went through a long tunnel his pants woul be too short at the other end.

To scold a child for a broken cup or some thing spilled is to teach him it is safer not t help.

Little girl's confession at bedtime: "It wa a wonderful day; the older kids were rea nice to me. They didn't smug me once."



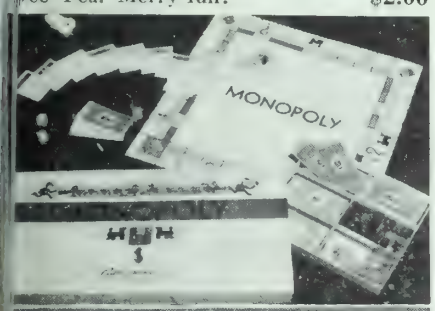
A recent college survey of former scholarship holders reveals that most women, after marriage, lose touch with the piano, except through the dustcloth.

Note to brides: It is the rare husband who is so punctual you can time a soufflé to his arrival.

If the first child is easy to raise, parents may be caught off guard on those that follow.

Too many families have one individual equipped with "absolute" pitch to whom the others are forced to tune.

FAMOUS PARKER GAMES



ROOK

...e Game of Games. The favorite in card ...mes of millions of players. Loved for its ...ique fascination and its exciting play. ...ways and everywhere popular. 75c

POPEYE'S GAME

...EW 1948—A gay party game which ...uses all ages especially the youngsters. ...uick action throughout featuring the ...vorites Popeye, Olive Oyl, Wimpy and ...ee' Pea. Merry fun! $2.00

MONOPOLY

...lost popular of the great standard board ...ames. A world wide favorite! Special ...ttention is called to the famous White ...ox Set with Grand Hotels, removable ...ank Tray, etc. $3.50

MAKE-A-MILLION

A Surprising game with quick climaxes ...nd exciting play from beginning to end. Thousands of families consider MAKE A MILLION the most thrilling of card games. The adroit use of the "Bull" and "Bear" ...ards adds to the fun! Easily learned. The player or side first scoring a total of a million dollars wins. We recommend its play as a stirring experience which every family will enjoy. 75c

CAMELOT—A far better game than Checkers. Easily learned, exciting. Gray-box set $1.50; Sets with ivoroid playing pieces $5.00.

SORRY—One of the best loved board games for all ages, immensely popular! $2.00

PARKER BROTHERS INC.
SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK • CHICAGO • LONDON

"I don't believe it," Margaret said faintly, and she found her cheeks were flushing. Partly with pleasure, and partly with anger at herself. The tired, bitter woman in the subway—where was she now? What had she been complaining about? How could she have dared to complain, when she was coming home to this?

"And for all this," Dan said, "I don't even get a kiss."

She put her arms around him and stood leaning against him, her cheek against his, unable to look into his face.

"Did you have a good time?" he said. "Was the show good?"

"I had a wonderful time," she said. "I wouldn't have missed it." She looked up at him. "But I'm glad to be home," she said.

The taxi fought its way through the heavy midtown traffic. Frances put her head against the back of the seat and closed her eyes; then, remembering her new hair-do, she jerked it up again with an effort. She was really tired; every bone in her body ached with it. She had been up until four and she had had to get up at nine; there hadn't been any other way she could manage to get her hair done before she met Margaret.

And the hair had to be done; once you started touching it up, you could not let it go. Maddeningly, the stuff kept growing, and as it grew the part near the head showed its real color, and you knew that you weren't fooling anybody, not even yourself. George's black hair was already streaked with gray, but it only made him look more distinguished. George did not know yet that she was having her hair tinted, and she did not want him to. It was odd. He was really older, but she knew, somehow, that she had to stay far younger.

Of course, tired as she was, she could have broken the date with Margaret. They could have found a sitter for the children and Dan and Margaret could have used the tickets themselves; they would have enjoyed it. It had been selfish of her not to arrange it that way. But every so often she just had to see Margaret; she had to remind herself that there was another world outside the world George lived in—that there was a world where things were solid and substantial, where values did not change with the seasons.

She sighed. Her breakfast had been, as always, three cups of black coffee. The memory of the lamb chops was nothing but a mockery; she was so hungry that it actually seemed to hurt. I spend half my time, she thought, being acutely hungry. And it's not the sort of thing you ever get used to.

She put her head back again—never mind the hair, she was too tired to hold it up—and thought about food. She pictured a chocolate cake; she pictured a roast duck. She pictured Margaret eating the lobster Newburg, mopping up the sauce with a piece of roll; and suddenly, to her horror, she felt real tears come into her eyes.

It was maddening enough that Margaret could eat anything she wanted and not get fat. But it was made worse by the fact that, even if Margaret grew fat, Dan would not care. A man like Dan loved once and for always; no matter how Margaret changed, he would not. And George? George was faithful, too, and he would not mean to change. But he was restless.

So many of the women he met were pretty. Not just pretty; they were real beauties. It was their business, of course, if they were in the theater; their looks were as real an asset to them as hardware is to a hardware merchant, and they were just as businesslike about taking care of them.

For Margaret there was no such problem. Margaret's children, too, really loved and needed her, since nobody else had ever taken care of them. She would never know the heartache of finding out that a hired nurse meant more to her child than she herself did. She would never have to reproach herself with the grim knowledge that she was doing the same thing to her child that had been done to her—she was bringing him up in loneliness. Frances had always wanted a large family, and now she was bringing up an only child.

"Satina in my starch makes ironing 3 times easier!"

WRITES MRS. R. L. GAUDET, NEEDHAM HEIGHTS, MASS.

"I'M JUST never without Satina," writes Mrs. Gaudet. "It's a necessary part of washing for me, just as soap is. It's 3 times easier to iron starched clothes with Satina."

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE

FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

SATINA, DEPT. 70, Battle Creek, Michigan

Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

Women say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

George had wanted Jimmy, of course. A Harding had to have an heir; that went without saying. And he was proud of his son; whenever he had time to spend with him he would teach him things that were still far beyond the child. He had had special golf clubs made for him, and they practiced indoors, driving into an elaborate contraption she had bought for them. He was proud of the boy, and he was fond of him, but she had not dared to have another. His coming had been a nuisance; it had interfered with a trip George had wanted to take, and she simply had not been able to keep on entertaining the way George liked to. They had come through it all right, but she had not dared to risk it again. Whereas Margaret—the more children Margaret had, the closer she drew to Dan, who was used to children and who loved his deeply. The more children Margaret had, the more secure she became.

Frances closed her eyes for a minute and let herself think, with bitter envy, of the security, the blessed security, of the world Margaret lived in.

She sat up with a sigh, and opened her purse and took out her make-up and touched her face. It was not fair, it simply was not fair. Margaret was so safe, and she must always worry.

The maid who opened the door for her told her that Mr. Harding was in the library; as she walked toward it she heard Jimmy laugh, and her heart quickened at the sound of it. She was glad that he was still up; she had not seen him all day. She was glad, too, that George was with him; it meant that he had not had to go through the whole day without companionship.

George was in a smoking jacket, his collar open at the throat. He looked like a romanticized version of Lord Byron; he was almost too handsome to be real. Jimmy was ready for bed, his sleek hair carefully brushed, his face shining clean. He ran to kiss her and she picked him up, holding him tight, noticing the perfection of his healthy skin and even, white teeth. Everything about him was right; there was no flaw anywhere. He was so like his father.

> It is not how old you are, but how you are old. —ANONYMOUS.

They had been practicing golf shots into the contraption she had bought for them, and George gravely finished his drive, concentrating completely, making sure his form was right. I'm glad I bought them that, Frances thought. It was expensive, but it was worth it. It's given them something to do together.

George turned around, smiling at her. "I wish to inform you, madam," he said, "that your son is going to make a very fine golfer one of these days."

Jimmy wriggled against her; he was tense with the effort of the concentrating he had been doing, but he was pleased with the praise.

George was looking at her thoughtfully. "What a beautiful woman," he said at last, gravely. "Sit down, woman, I have good news for you." He looked at his watch, frowning a little as he figured. "We have one hour and forty minutes," he said, "before we are invaded by a howling mob. The forty minutes will be spent in dressing. The hour is for us. Just us. To relax in." He looked at her severely. "You've already wasted a minute," he said. "Sit down and start relaxing this minute."

She sat down, laughing, pulling Jimmy onto her lap. Her tired back relaxed against the comfort of the soft couch; she looked around with pleasure at the beautifully decorated room, at the handsome man and the handsome child. This was a place where everything was right, where everything was in order.

"Did you have a good time with Margaret?" George asked.

"I always have a good time with Margaret," Frances said. "But, oh, it's nice to be home!"

THE END

Cuddle your little

"Cry Baby" by Doll-Art

She sighs . . cries . . squeals . . coos

$4.98

She's 16" tall!

She has big baby eyes that open or close . . real-like plastic skin arms and legs . . . dressed in gorgeous party dress, bonnet and bootees

ORDER BY MAIL from any of these stores

Baltimore, Md. . BONWIT LENNON	Lexington, Ky. . . . . B. B.
Beaumont, Tex. . BONWIT LENNON	Louisville, Ky. . BESTEN-LA
Birmingham, Ala. . . . The VANITY	Mobile, Ala. . . . . The V
Canton, Ohio . . . . BON MARCHE	Montgomery, Ala. . . The V
Dayton, Ohio . . . DONNENFELD'S	Nashville, Tenn. . . ARMSTR
Detroit, Mich. . . . . S. L. BIRD	Paducah, Ky. . . . . WE
Evansville, Ind. . . . BON MARCHE	San Antonio, Tex. . . The
Kansas City, Mo. . . . BERKSONS	St. Louis, Mo. . . SONNENF
Lafayette, Ind. . . PALAIS ROYAL	Warren, Ohio . HOWARD SH

Knitting Yarn BY MAIL

Cliveden offers y quality yarns of all typ in a large variety of col —bright and gay, or s and delicate—yarns to glo your finished work.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CA

and see for yourself before y order, the lovely texture of yarns spun in our own mill. Yo find just what you want for infan wear, sweaters, afghans, etc. Expe enced knitters have chosen Clived yarns for over 40 years.

WRITE DEPT. E-1 CLIVEDEN YARNS 711 ARCH ST PHILA. 6, PA

New TELEPHONE SECRETARY

An Ideal Gift

Keeps Pad and Pencil Handy

Fits Your Phone or Money Back

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ORDER DIRECT—ONLY $2.65 POSTPAID

Tel-Sec keeps pad and pencil at your finger tips—in handy, rigid pull-out drawer. Ideal for home, office, shop, store. All metal. Non breakable. (Not plastic.) Beautiful enamel finish matches phone Installed instantly—simply snap into place. No more hunting fo paper or pencil—or writing on wall—uses ordinary pad and pencil This is the original, all-metal Tel-Sec, with over 100,000 enthusiastic users. Order yours today!

COMPLETE SATISFACTION OR MONEY BACK

5 x 7½ oblong, $2.65; 5 x 6 oval and 5½ round, $2.95; 5½ x 9, $3.95 Extra refill pads, 20 for $1.00. No C.O.D.'s. Dealers invited.

LANKO INDUSTRIES SALES DIVISION

(Exclusive Nat'l Distributor)

6774 Taft Dept. G-11 Detroit 8, Mich

Tom SAWYER

"APPAREL" For Real Boys

WEARS LONGER!

Tom Sawyer all wool-flannel slacks . . . every Mother wants at least one pair for her boy! They're sturdy and so good looking. Pure virgin wool. Zipper fly. They come in glen plaids, club checks and neat checks in brown, blue or gray. Also solid brown, navy and gray.

All Wool Flannel Slacks
Waist 25 to 32 Ages 3 to 12

A wonderful all wool 2-piece suit with 2-tone jacket. Collar, sleeves and back are in solid color. Longies have zipper fly, suspenders, belt, elastic sides, pleats and cuff bottoms. In brown or gray flannel with contrasting check.

Longie Suits—Ages 4 to 10
(with Zipper Jacket)

These exclusive Tom Sawyer bold plaid shirts give a fellow all the colors he's ever wanted. Absolutely fool-proof in washing. Won't fade. Won't shrink or stretch more than 2%. Highly resistant to wrinkles.

Scotch Plaid Shirts
Ages 6 to 20

See the complete value-plus Tom Sawyer line at fine stores from coast to coast. If you don't know your dealer, just write Dept. 12.

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR RETURN OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Tom SAWYER "APPAREL" For Real Boys

ELDER MANUFACTURING CO. • ST. LOUIS, MO.

OUR READERS WRITE US

(Continued from Page 8)

be having a go. There are rather more goods in the shops these days, but much is rubbish, and it is not unusual to find, stamped somewhere upon the article you buy, the rather sinister words "unfit for export."

We now have a little basic gas, which we are supposed to be able to do as we like with, but hoards of police still lurk and may pounce at any moment, to see if what is in the tank is the right color. Commercial petrol has been dyed pink, so anyone pinching a bit out of the tractor to visit auntie will be in for it.

Love to you both,
DOROTHY BLACK.

From Gloucestershire.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: The air is full of the astounding noise of Flying Fortresses again. They are just going over here in a lump on their way to Bristol, and it takes one back in mind, though it is nice to know that at the moment anyway they are only here for fun. There has been immense excitement in country hamlets around Norwich and other places, where once again handsome American boys appeared, looking for lodgings. Though on paper, the English and the Americans are frequently not supposed to love one another at all, you can't get away from the fact that whenever they meet face to face, they fall on each other's necks with yells of joy. Love to you all,
DOROTHY.

If Women Built Houses

Akron, Ohio.

Dear Editor: A letter in your July issue entitled Housewife Builds a Home had in it some figures which intrigue me. How did the writer arrive at the figure of $5000, which she claims to have saved by building without a contractor?

The lady mentioned that she and her husband had each saved $1800 and that they ended up with the house and a mortgage on which they pay $21.98 per month interest and amortization. According to my figures, $21.98 per month would pay for approximately $4000 principal sum on a 25-year, 4½ per cent mortgage, which are about the best terms obtainable in this part of the United States at present. The $3600 cash savings added to the mortgage loan, and for good measure an extra few hundred that may have been squeezed out of current income during the process of building, would indicate a total cost of $8000.

If that lady can gross $5000 on a house costing $8000 she's wasting her time as a housewife—just think, all she has to do is build another home like hers, sell it and she could pay off the mortgage on her own and have $1000 cash to boot! Please don't think that I'm heckling—the lady who wrote that letter deserves a great deal of credit for having been courageous enough to undertake such a job and more for having carried it out successfully.

Very truly yours,
L. STERN
Sun Construction Co., Inc.

Source of Farm Loans

Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Dear Editors: Your August issue was good reading, especially the story beginning on page 119, The Roods' Promised Land. I happen to know this family, for I worked with them to get the loan they mentioned. I was county supervisor for the Farm Security Administration, now known as the Farmers Home Administration, U. S. Department of Agriculture. You have done a wonderful job of crediting this family. They worked hard, managed and planned well. You failed, however, to give the lender any credit. The story as published indicates that loan funds to buy this farm came from Extension and not from the true source, the Farm Security Administration, now known as Farmers Home Administration.

Yours very truly,
(Name withheld by request.)

In the article Mr. Rood said the Extension okayed the loan, but does not say he got it from them. The Extension Service is advisory; Farmers Home Administration grants loans. ED.

Dreft

helps protect your family's health

as no suds ever could before !

Public Health authorities say new way of dishwashing reduces colds, flu, infectious sickness

Perhaps you didn't know that danger lurks in your dishpan. But it's there! Film on glasses or dishes may actually carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

This is a proved fact. For doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film . . . often on dishes that really look clean.

Dreft Ends Germ-Breeding Film

With this amazing dishwashing discovery—DREFT—you can wash your dishes in a way that puts an end to dishwater film...that actually helps protect your family's health.

And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New, Quick, Dreft Way

Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant lasting suds.* Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy and quick as that!

Dreft suds leave dishes shining bright . . . even without wiping. Healthfully clean . . . film free—as no suds before Dreft ever got them!

So heed the warning of Public Health authorities . . . help protect your family's health. Buy Dreft today.

* Dreft makes more suds . . . kind-to-hand suds . . . than any product before in history ...no matter how hard the water.

A HYMOSOL PRODUCT

Dreft washes dishes so clean they shine even without wiping

The John Freemans, of Quakertown, Pennsylvania, raise dogs for a living and two fine sons for fun.

"There's just no such thing as one drink in my life." But John still likes to go to parties and has learned to "celebrate" with coffee or pop.

Her Husband Was an Alcoholic

Can an ex-alcoholic lead a full life? John Freeman has been proving the answer is Yes since his last drink 15 years ago. ★ By Gretta Palmer

"COME on, John, have a small one." That's what new acquaintances say to John M. Freeman, Pennsylvania dog breeder, when he travels around the country to visit the dog shows which are at once his business and his delight. "One little snort won't hurt you."

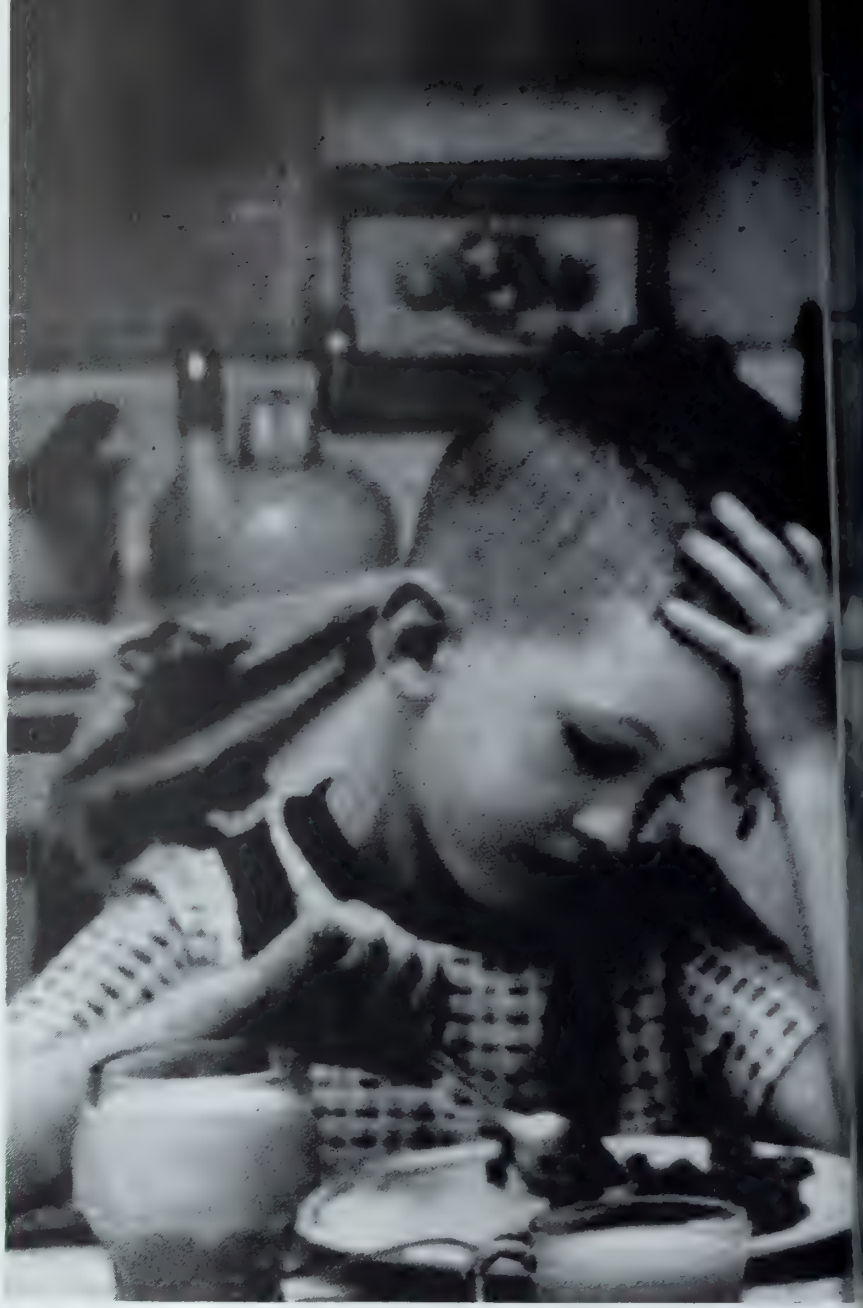
"Listen," says John patiently. "There's no such thing as one drink in my life. I'm an alcoholic and I don't even want to smell that bottle you've got there. It's too dangerous."

The Freeman skeleton in the closet of John's alcoholism has been moved out into their sunny living room. Openly and cheerfully and without a trace of unhealthy embarrassment, John and Frances Freeman have built a life around the fact that John was once a "problem drinker"—one of the estimated two million men and women in the United States who can never learn to drink in moderation. Some fifteen years have passed since he did learn—through a course of psychological training—how never to want to drink at all. John is now a "recovered alcoholic."

He's also what psychologists call an "extrovert" . . . a man who learns more from people than from books, gets more of his fun in company than in solitude. Put him and Frances down in a good-sized town instead of on the Quakertown side road where they live today, and theirs would be the house where all the children of the neighborhood loved to go to play. And that is rather strange—for John was an only child and Frances grew up with a single, younger sister in the home of a divorced mother, with few childhood friends.

John Freeman is thirty-eight now—six feet, good-looking, good-natured and happily adjusted to the small, uncertain income his dog

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HANS KNOPF



"Take it easy," Frances tells year-old Dan, and follows her own advice. Although the Freemans' budget includes little household help, dust-mop and diaper duties never keep her too busy for sociable times-out with John and his customers.

An Unharried Household:

"We make our own fun. We don't panic easily. We've learned how not to want things we can't have."

For G-O and Dan: "Even if we can't afford electric trains and bikes, we' business brings in. His two sons—G-O, six, and Dan, the baby—are being given firm discipline, with no nonsense about it. John blames many of his own life problems on the fact that he got away with too much in his own childhood in a well-to-do Germantown (suburban Philadelphia) home.

How did he get over being an active alcoholic? people ask him. Or how did he get started drinking in the first place? What kind of boy grows up to drink too much?

John's earliest memory is of his grandfather, Samuel T. Freeman, founder of the family business of auctioneering. He remembers visiting his grandfather in the latter's sickroom, when he was scarcely two years old—and he remembers the presence in the sickroom of Scout, an Irish terrier, and the first of his many dog loves.

John's parents were eminently "nice people." His mother divided her time between her home, her ladies'-luncheon social life and charity work in the wards of the local hospital. His father spent much time on the golf links and duck shooting on the island off the Carolinas he had bought with friends. The elder Freeman collected fine etchings and did a little fox hunting; in the evenings he often read aloud to his son—Mark Twain, Kipling, Dickens. It was a home that centered about the son.

So John Freeman was spoiled; he says so today. His parents alternated moods of stern discipline with affectionate indulgence of his whims. He learned early how to maneuver them into positions where they must give in to him.

"I was quite a smart logician as a kid," he says. John learned early not to take threats of severe punishments too seriously—experience had taught him they were rarely carried out. As an older boy, he meekly accepted a very small allowance of pocket money—because he had won access to all the family charge acto help our childern have a better youth than we had. They'll not be spoiled; they have both parents living together. We can give them good health and good habits."

counts. When he was only fifteen he used to treat his small friends grandly to meals at the Philadelphia Ritz-Carlton Hotel, signing the bill to the family account.

Only one grievance John suffered: his family did not believe that their yard was large enough for him to have a dog. When he was eight, he had been given a senile bull terrier and allowed to keep it until it died. But after this, John never owned another dog until he was sixteen—and this was a real sorrow to him. He ran through the usual boyhood stages of owning white rats, rabbits and guinea pigs, but these were not the same.

If you had met John Freeman as a youngster you would not have guessed that he was heading for a psychological collapse a few years later. He was so normal a well-to-do American boy. He played baseball and football and did a little fox hunting. He showed jumpers in the horse show at the Germantown Cricket Club, of which he was a junior member. He did well in his studies at the Chestnut Hill preparatory school—very well, indeed, for a boy who rarely studied. He had many friends and he found life pleasant as it came along. His ambitions for the future were vague. When he read Arrowsmith he wanted to be a doctor, but the mood soon

As a kennel master, John is doing what he likes best—and what is best for him, psychologists think. Because he was fond of animals and being on his own, breeding spaniels was suggested both as a profession and as therapy in his fight to remove himself from the ranks of America's two million problem drinkers. It costs one dollar a day to feed each of his 25 dogs, and last year his income was only $3000—half of 1946's. "The high cost of other people's living hits our business."

Books are G-O's wonderland; but Fran, a former teacher, is anxious that he "learn to take people more easily," sends him to play and Sunday schools.

"We want to make our children feel part of a home that has real family solidarity."

passed. Toward the end of his preparatory-school days John got to know one of his teachers, a cynic and an agnostic, who gave him a profound distrust for all religion and made the role of swaggering villain attractive; Machiavelli and such hard, bitter men were made glamorous to him. But John Freeman was too sociable and open a boy to act the Machiavelli for a single day.

John's friendliness extended to both sexes and to all creatures, but it was especially strong where two kinds of beings were concerned: boys and dogs. John went to camps (in Vermont and, later, at Lake Champlain) for eleven summers. The last few years at camp he was a counselor, and a good one. And from the age of sixteen on his life included at least one well-bred dog, which he was usually grooming for the shows. It always, in all phases, included lots of people. John Freeman was never the morose, solitary, Lost Weekend kind of alcoholic. He was not even a saloon fighter. His toots took the form of light-hearted and irresponsible antics: climbing a bare-faced brick wall to the second floor of a dormitory at the University of Virginia in his freshman year; driving a car too fast: cutting classes for a party. Or such stunts as he remembers on one bibulous occasion when he and a friend carried a stone, earth-filled jardiniere from the foot of the garden into the family parlor, thinking it an extraordinarily useful thing to do. The next morning, when they were sober, they found that they could scarcely lift the urn two inches off the floor.

Farm food bill is $20 a month, but $5 more is needed to buy G-O's vitamins.

That was the kind of drinking party that appealed to John Freeman, a product of the late speak-easy generation. He liked to go to week-end parties in Philadelphia—and if the party lasted into the middle of the coming week and he never got back to college, that was all right with John Freeman too. "Everybody" was doing it. Who wanted to waste time with a lot of musty books, when there were so many enchanting people willing to bend an elbow with a gay, fast-talking, young writer-to-be?

Yes, John—whose life today revolves around his farm and family of four—was as Bohemian, as antidomestic and as literary as they came in '30 and '31.

"I knew a writer—an older man—who seemed to me to lead the ideal life," he chuckles today. "He used to work in the morning, spasmodically. Then he'd have lunch and cocktails with his cronies. The rest of the day was punctuated with calls for mint juleps; he went to bed potted every night. That seemed to me the height of glamour. This writer had met everybody. He had sold something, once, to Hollywood. It all seemed wonderful. Actually, this man had done hardly any work for the past ten years.

Mailbox chore—the Freemans believe that it's never too early to learn the art of "helping out."

He was living on inherited money—which I didn't have. And he was an unhappy man, or he wouldn't have spent so much time bending the elbow and trying to impress a kid like me. But I didn't see those things then. I thought a life built around a little writing and a lot of Scotch was Something. I don't think so now."

John stopped wanting to write far more easily than wanting to drink. But now that, too, is under control.

"I not only don't expect ever to take a drink again; I don't wish I could drink as other people can . . . like Fran here can, for instance," he tells you cheerfully. "If someone brought out a certified, scientific 'cure' tomorrow that would make it possible for alcoholics to drink normally, I'd say, 'That's fine. Take it off and give it to someone else. I'm better off this way, thank you. I like never even having to think about a drink.'"

And he doesn't think about it. The Freeman skeleton in the living room is so familiar that neither he nor his wife gives it a passing thought except on such an occasion as my visit, when they were asked direct questions about his drinking. They show neither worry nor self-consciousness about the subject. The Freemans are not Prohibitionists. When their income allows, they serve drinks to friends and the decanter stands out, in open view, on the cupboard which John passes a dozen times a day.

Frances Freeman takes this problem—takes all the family problems—gracefully in her tiny stride.

G-O frolics, but realizes that he must keep his room and bed neat himself.

To John's six feet she presents a scanty five. She is of the type the French would call gamine—dainty and droll and full of gaiety. And she is relaxed! Relaxation is the quality that oozes from the very beams of the Freeman home and sets the visitor at his immediate ease. Here are a couple who have learned the secret of living one day at a time—a home in which small worries and occasional upsets are never allowed to spoil the beauty of the day.

Visitor's car contrasts with the Freemans' well-used 1940 coupé.

"Take it easy," says Fran to her small, startlingly beautiful son, G-O, as he brings his six-year-old kindergarten problems to be solved. Or to year-old Dan, when he infrequently cries. "Take it easy" is the motto an earlier generation would have hung over the Adam fireplace of this home.

This is a happy family, but its happiness is an achievement, not a ready-made gift from any goddess of luck. Frances Freeman could find excuses for acting the tragedy queen if her disposition ran that tortured way.

She is a small and pretty woman—only thirty-two years old—but she has had four major operations since her marriage. Both the boys were born by Caesarean section, and if you look closely, you will see dark circles under her eyes: she is not yet very strong. Yet Frances does as much work every day as a husky farm woman might do. No inquisitive finger will ever find dust on the mantelpiece in the Freeman living room. The chintz on the chairs and sofas is faded, but it is newly washed. The children may never have owned an electric train, but they have learned good habits. Between cooking and dusting and helping in the kennels, Frances Freeman also manages to remember that she was once a schoolteacher. Her children will get culture, if they never see a rodeo or own a bicycle.

"Better a little punishment from us now than a lot from himself later." John and Fran co-operate to give G-O discipline as well as security in their love.

"I don't need to drink to have fun any more. Being married to Fran's the best fun I can imagine."

"We make our own fun," she says. "We've learned how not to want things we can't have. We don't panic easily."

"Never," says her husband, "have I seen Frances flustered. That's a great thing in a wife."

Frances Kalbach did not have many luxuries when she was growing up. The divorce took place when she was too young to remember much about the shadowy figure of a father who owned a store in Pennsylvania and then moved west. She lived in Lebanon with her mother, her younger sister and a permanent-guest great-aunt who had once taught school. Mrs. Kalbach, too, had been a schoolteacher; the two older women gave Frances such a flying head start that she was two years younger than any of her class and graduated from high school at fifteen. Then the paternal grandfather stepped in and offered to give her a college course; she chose West Chester State Teachers College, and became a teacher in the local schools. (Her younger sister followed her and is a schoolteacher today.)

As a girl, Frances led a happy, small-town life, with dances and hay rides, movies and drugstore sodas afterward. She learned to cook (she makes all the family cakes today), but she loathed sewing, even at the doll-clothes age. Like her husband, she learned early how to get along with children; she was immensely popular as a teacher, and knew how to enforce discipline without making any child resent her. She always knew that someday she would marry; she knew, too, that she wanted desperately to have the marriage last. Children of divorced homes are often the fiercest defenders of lifelong monogamy; Frances Freeman is one of these. She has mastered the immense art of keeping discontent away from the door, even when the wolf is howling there. Or even when someone rattles the skeleton labeled "alcohol."

"John's drinking never did seem a thing to worry about," says Fran. "Not to me. He hadn't had a drink for several years when we got married. I hoped I wasn't going to drive him to drink, if nothing else had."

Big extravagance—a sitter at 25¢ an hour—so Frances and John can go to Kennel Club meetings.

"We can't drive a nail straight." Of an evening, the Freemans prefer reading aloud or playing records to "acrobatics with paintbrush and hammer." They found 17th-century farm for $3500, had to pay twice as much for remodeling.

Some of Fran's friends complimented her on her bravery. Her mother was one of these. But, "Rubbish, darling," was Frances' comment to that. "If not being able to drink is the worst thing people can find to say about a man, he must be a pretty good risk as a husband." She still thinks so today, nine years and two children later.

But things haven't been too easy for the Freeman family in those years. With only a limited bank account to fall back on, they decided to try to make a living at one of the riskiest and least dependable of specialties: the breeding and training of show dogs. They both love dogs. Fran's greatest triumph is that she once bred for obedience trials a bloodhound, and did it well. Although John has held more orthodox jobs since their marriage (he was a real-estate salesman when the wedding occurred), they hope desperately to be able to hold out and make a go of the breeding business.

"No great glamour about this life," chuckles John, when he thinks of the hard-drinking writer he once aspired to be. "But it's a whale of a lot of fun."

For when you breed fancy pedigreed cocker and springer spaniels, you are not allowed to live either a lazy or a stick-in-the-mud existence. There are the twenty-five dogs in the kennels to be fed and exercised and to have more delicate attentions paid them at the time for breeding or birth. There are the shows to visit—dog shows, and now chicken shows as well. Yes, the Freeman household has lately expanded to take in a yardful of Dark Brahmas—recently John nursemaided his chickens at the New York Poultry Show. And constantly he travels—to cities as far away as Washington—to participate in the dog shows. The honey-colored puppies are of the usual buff-cocker strain, but there is to be a newer breed, born of Nova, the eleven-month-old black-and-tan who is really named Innovation (she was the first black-and-tan the kennel had ever bred).

Dogs are a luxury business. Ask John Freeman what is his greatest business obstacle and he will say, "The high cost of other people's living." In a year like 1948 potential (Continued on Page 248) and this label means the product is made of quality stainless steel!

STAINLESS STEEL IS CORROSION-RESISTANT . . .
STAINLESS STEEL STAYS BRIGHT . . .

THESE days, you'll find that more and more of the things in your home are being made of stainless steel. Things like the trays, shelves and freezing compartments of fine refrigerators. Cooking utensils. Cutlery. Clothes lines. Sinks. And scores of others. For stainless steel is really the "miracle metal" when it comes to lasting loveliness, easy cleaning and economy. So, when you shop for products like these, why not insist on stainless steel? And here's a tip: when you see the U·S·S trade-mark on anything made of stainless steel, you'll know that it's made of good stainless steel. For that's what the letters U·S·S mean . . . quality steel.

MANUFACTURED FROM USS TRADE MARK STAINLESS STEEL UNITED STATES STEEL

REAL TIME and labor savers! Automatic dishwashers with dish racks of U·S·S Stainless Steel Wire. Want one?

MAINTENANCE? Nil! Gutters and downspouts of U·S·S Stainless Steel are new . . . and stay new, year after year!

The U·S·S label shown above is one of a family of U·S·S labels. Some say "Premier Spring Wire" or "Vitrenamel" or just "Steel" . . . but all are the same color, all have the big letters U·S·S prominently displayed. Whenever you see these letters—U·S·S—the trade-mark of United States Steel — you know the steel is good.

LISTEN TO . . . The Theatre Guild on the Air, presented every Sunday evening by United States Steel. American Broadcasting Company, coast-to-coast network. Consult your newspaper for time and station.

Subsidiary companies: AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY • AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY • CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION
COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY • CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION • GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING COMPANY • NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY • OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY
TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY • UNION SUPPLY COMPANY • UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY • UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY · UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY · VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY

USS

UNITED STATES STEEL

WHEN TO WORRY ABOUT YOUR BRINKING

By Francis T. Chambers, Jr.

When has a person's drinking gone over the borderline of social drinking and become problem drinking? What are the danger signals?

The pattern of problem drinking varies to a great degree, as it depends to some extent on the individual's personality make-up and his or her environment, age and sex, as well as the length of time that a given personality has had a drinking problem.

The quality of abnormal-drinking symptoms may be exaggerated and startling in one individual, or so mild as to escape early detection in another individual. One of the more pronounced symptoms may be a need for a drink in the morning before breakfast, or in place of breakfast. The problem drinker has found at this stage of his breakdown that he cannot face the day following a drinking night unless he has more drinks to quiet his screaming nerves. In his attempt to soothe his nervous condition, he usually succeeds in reintoxicating himself. A period of sobriety will dispel the need for morning drinking, but soon after he attempts to drink in moderation, the morning drinking becomes a necessity again. Other symptoms may take the form of disturbances in the normal sleep pattern, such as a tendency to nightmares, sometimes reaching the point where the drinker is afraid to go to sleep because of the horrible dreams he may have. Usually there is difficulty in sleeping—the drinker awakes before dawn, and spends restless hours before the rest of the family is awake. Sleepless nights also occur when a man first stops drinking.

There is nothing noble in being superior to some other man. The true nobility is in being superior to your previous self. —HINDU PROVERB.

Another symptom is secret drinking, hiding bottles around the house or in the shrubbery. As one consulter of mine put it, "We are like squirrels getting ready for a hard winter, hiding big and little bottles all over the house and, like the squirrels, often forgetting where we hid them."

Another symptom frequently encountered in abnormal drinkers is the tendency to lie about their drinking to anyone they think might criticize them or curtail their drinking. They say, "Of course, I haven't had a drink"; or "I only had a beer"; or "I just had one or two with an important customer." These statements of innocence or extreme moderation are denied by obvious symptoms of intoxication.

OTHER symptoms are irritability, unjustified jealousy and suspicion, as are involved systems of self-deception—rationalization wherein the drinker convinces himself that the causes of his drunkenness or lapses from sobriety are due to outrageous fortune. Sometimes paranoid symptoms such as are encountered in certain forms of insanity may appear in mild form, and disappear after recovery, or they may persist after a period of abstinence. If this happens, by all means call on a psychiatrist for help. It may mean that the individual is suffering from a grave mental disease. Another symptom is forgetfulness about what the drinker may have said or heard the night before when he was drinking. These periods of amnesia may occur when the problem drinker appears to be sober.

Such various reactions may alternate or appear as isolated symptoms of alcoholism. It is well to bear in mind, too, that certain types of behavior under the influence of alcohol may change during the course of the disease. Inefficiency in his job or profession, as well as a lack of social responsibility, appears in the unrecognized problem drinker who, because of a quasi-control of alcohol, disguises from himself as well as from his family and friends the tremendous price he is paying to alcohol in personality inefficiency and maladaptation. Such a person may lose a position or fail in a profession without recognizing that his reaction to alcohol is crippling his adjustment and often destroying his personality adaptability.

The quantity of alcohol consumed and the quality of chronic intoxicated behavior have in the past been stressed as criteria in diagnosing alcoholism. Too often this delayed diagnosis has the same lack of curative value as a post-mortem. The last stages of pathological drinking are probably incurable. Advanced stages are in need of supportive measures for the balance of life. The early or middle stages of abnormal drinking, no matter how well disguised or how blatantly abnormal, are those most apt to respond to the right kind of help.

What we must accept in the individual whose drinking has become a problem to his friends, his family and himself is that he is undoubtedly tending to use alcohol as a crutch. Whether such a person is definitely recognized as a chronic alcoholic, a problem drinker an alcoholic dependent or an inebriate, or considered by his friends to be "just a plain drunk," "a bad actor" or merely an inefficient worker because of his use of alcohol makes little difference in the ultimate seriousness of his problem. In any event abnormal drinking, if it continues, reveals a state of mind which the drinker himself regards as unendurable. In other words, he is suffering from a type of nervous breakdown and is using alcohol to alleviate an intolerable mental condition. No matter what you call him, if a man's drinking pattern is interfering with his potentialities to pursue happiness in a normal manner, such drinking is abnormal and he and his family are in need of help and guidance.

How can you convince the problem drinker that he is becoming an alcoholic?

When you see someone you love or are dependent on destroying himself with alcohol, it is quite understandable that you will plead with him, appeal to his better side, then try threats or promises. These tactics just won't work. By and large, the wife or family of the problem drinker, because of the close emotional relationship with the addicted personality, can do little toward convincing a man that he is becoming an alcoholic. Most people have found that someone outside the family circle will be more effective in convincing a man that he has a problem and needs help. The family doctor will often do this, or a psychiatric specialist may be able to present the problem so that the patient realizes the need of facing it. Sometimes a member of Alcoholics Anonymous may be able to convince the problem drinker that he should seek their help. It has been the author's experience that many people seek help because they have read about the problem in books or articles on the subject. Such books or articles permit them to see their own plight presented without threats, promises or criticism. Dr. Edward A. Strecker and I have written a book, Alcohol: One Man's Meat, which we find helpful in indicating to the problem drinker the need to identify himself with the seriousness of his problem. The book, Alcoholics Anonymous, distrib-ted by AA, may be helpful. The pamlets put out by the Research Council on oblems of Alcohol are good, and such vels as The Lost Weekend and The Glass utch have done much to convince many oblem drinkers of the need to do someing about facing their problem.

How much can be done at home without the aid of outside medical or psychiric help?

If a man's or woman's drinking is merely cessive and even dissipated, provided it as not reached the stage of abnormality nown to the medical profession as chronic coholism, much can be done by the use of ersuasion. On the other hand, if the drinker as been diagnosed by proper authorities s belonging to that class known as alcolics, nothing can be done through the art f persuasion on the part of the family. For y this time such a person is psychologially sick, and cannot help himself without utside guidance and understanding.

Should everybody in the house cut out lcohol, and should friends be asked to o-operate by not serving alcohol?

Once the patient has sought outside help nd guidance, the family should be guided y whoever is helping the patient about whether or not they should drink and how heir friends should co-operate. In my work with abnormal drinkers, the burden of the lecision as to whether or not to serve alcohol in his house is left up to the patient. If n the first month or two of treatment, he feels that it would be easier for him to avoid the suggestion presented by others' drinking, then he himself avoids it until such a time as he feels his readaptation without alcohol will permit him to face others' drinking without dangerous temptation to him. In this type of treatment, the family is advised to put the whole responsibility on the patient and the therapist, for n this approach we are attempting to show the problem drinker how to readapt himself. If anyone else attempts to "run" him, it will seriously interfere with his treatment.

At what point should outside help be called in, and what help is available?

When a man's drinking has reached the point where it is seriously interfering with his normal relationships, such as his family life, his business or profession, then outside help should be sought. It seems only sensible that the first step toward outside help should come from the family physician, who, because of his training in medicine and his contacts with specialists and modern treatment, is the man most apt to give the best advice to the family and to the patient. He is in a far better position than the family to analyze the sick personality of the patient and make recommendations for this or that clinic, Alcoholics Anonymous, or certain psychiatric approaches.

What is the record of success in the treatment of alcoholism through clinics, Alcoholics Anonymous, psychiatrists, and therapists working for psychiatrists?

In answering this question, it should be pointed out that chronic alcoholics can be roughly broken into three groups. First, those who are capable of making a mature adjustment without alcohol. Second, those who are capable, with the aid of support, of staying away from alcohol; and third, those who have deteriorated to a degree where no help is possible. From my personal observation, I would say that only 20 per cent of chronic alcoholics are able to make mature adjustments without alcohol; 60 per cent will need support of some kind or other; and the remaining 20 per cent are incurable.

Of the 80 per cent who may be materially helped with such support or who may recover through the help of clinics, psychiatrists or Alcoholics Anonymous, I would say that 60 per cent were helped for a period of several years. Probably only 40 per cent remain off alcohol for the rest of their lives. This is far from perfection; however, it is a far cry from the pessimism of twenty years ago. I remember an incident just about twenty years ago when I was seeking the approval and support of medicine and psychiatry in setting up a clinic to help abnormal drinkers. My first contact was with a kindly old psychiatrist, since dead. I told him of what I wanted to try to do. He looked at me and said, "You are wasting your time. Alcoholics never get well. There's something wrong with their germ plasm." Fortunately, the other psychiatrists and physicians with whom I talked were less pessimistic, and more than willing to try new approaches toward helping problem drinkers solve their problems.

Can an addiction to alcohol be acquired by social drinking regardless of other psychological difficulties?

A perfectly adjusted man could not become a problem drinker; but frankly, I have yet to meet the perfectly adjusted man, and I am not at all sure I should like to meet him. The answer to the question is: There is always some danger of one's becoming a problem drinker. To paraphrase a familiar quotation on greatness: Some acquire alcoholism, some achieve alcoholism, and some have alcoholism thrust upon them.

In the group which may be considered as acquiring a drinking problem are middle-aged men and women who have used alcohol consistently and often heavily without dire results, but who in middle years are forced to meet shocks and frustrations, business failures, divorce, menopause or severe illness, and turn to alcohol as a narcotic.

Of the group who may be said to achieve alcoholism are the playboys and playgirls who have little purpose in life other than the pursuit of pleasure on a very immature level. They seem to have no deep psychological need for alcohol, but use it the way they do everything else in life—in excess. As time goes on, they are apt to develop greater and greater dependency on alcohol in order to keep going. In this group are a number of constitutional psychopathic inferiors—those men and women who think they know all the answers and fancy themselves as being so smart that they can get away with anything. They are psychiatry's prize liars, and most difficult to help. Others who may be considered to "achieve" alcoholism are entertainers, bartenders and salesmen who use alcohol as a lever in their business or profession, only to wake up someday to find a too great personal need for their salesmanship accessory—alcohol.

Those who may be considered to have alcohol thrust upon them are the men and women with a psychoneurotic nucleus, usually acquired from maladjustment in their early home life. They carry scars of early shocks and suffer as adults from abnormal feelings of guilt, rejection, inferiority and anxiety. These men and women find in alcohol a soothing sirup for the pain of their own maladjustment.

What of the morality of drinking?

Because of alcohol's popular association with crime, delinquency, prostitution, and so on, it is very easy to think of it as being concomitant with immorality. Such a judgment is unfair. There are plenty of people throughout the world who use alcohol in moderation, and the association in this group is with the finer things of life—the joy of a wedding, a toast to a hero, and the friendly sociability of entertaining. There is really nothing moral or immoral about drinking, but rather it is in the way that alcohol is used. The problem drinker, because he uses alcohol asocially, should expect moral censure from society. Granted, he is emotionally sick and his drinking is out of his control; therefore he deserves help and treatment. But up to the time he seeks help and treatment, the problem drinker is a danger to the very core of the nation; that is, the well-integrated family.

Because alcoholism has in recent years been recognized as a disease, there is a tendency on the part of many alcoholics to excuse themselves and say, in effect, "Poor me, I am a sick person. Who can blame me for my drinking?" But the alcoholic must realize though he is emotionally ill, that society will not condone or sympathize with his illness, but will for its own self-protection insist that he seek treatment for it.

(Continued on Page 229)

Emily Post SAYS:

Upon the death of a friend you should go at once to the house, write "With sympathy" on your card and leave it at the door. Or, you write a letter to the family. In either case you send flowers, addressed either to the funeral of (name of the deceased) or to the nearest relative.

The latter method is preferable, if the relative is a friend. But the former method is followed if the deceased alone was known to you.

On the card accompanying the flowers, and addressed to one of the family, you write "With sympathy," or "With deepest sympathy," or "With heartfelt sympathy," or "With love and sympathy." When flowers are addressed to funeral of the deceased, no message is included. If there is a notice in the papers requesting that no flowers be sent, you disregard it only if you are a very intimate friend.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY — Send Flowers Worldwide — INTERFLORA

A very natural impulse of kindness is to send a few flowers with a note either immediately or a few days or weeks after the funeral to any bereaved person who is particularly in your thoughts. A few flowers sent from time to time—possibly for long afterward—are especially comforting in their assurance of continued sympathy.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, 149 Michigan Ave., Detroit 26, Mich.

Le Gant corselette #3829 with exclusive "Free-Lift." $29.50

Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT
STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* • REDFERN*
*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Darling, you'll never be "average" to us!

Warner's 3-Way-Sizes make standard sizing downright old-fashioned

You don't have to wait for a new moon or a falling star to make a wish.

• Warner's 3-Way-Sizes can make that wish for a lovelier YOU come true in a twinkling. For Warner's know that Nature never meant women to be squeezed into "standard size" molds.

• In a Warner's girdle, you take your size, then choose your very own length . . . your very own hip size . . . and as little (or as much) control as you want. There are over 200 styles and sizes to dazzle you, too.

• And in a Warner's Corselette, like the beautiful Le Gant "Free-Lift" at the left, you have your 3-Way-Sizing plus your correct bra cup size and just the amount of uplift you want.

• So if you want to be an angel from every angle, look for the Warner's that's "individually yours." You'll feel as heavenly as you look.

In your size ..... your correct length

No angel can look heavenly if she hobbles around in a girdle or corselette that's too long. Or shows her temper when a too short girdle causes runs in her stockings. You'll never lose your wings with Warner's* because they're sized; short, medium, long and extra long. Incidentally, Warner's corselettes, famous for fit, come in half-sizes, too—a blessing to short-waisted women.

.....your correct hip size

Is there a slight "hip-slip" in the foundation you're now wearing? If it's too wide at the hips it probably has washboard-wrinkles at the sides. If it's too small it's bound to bind your thighs into unlovely bulges. Warner's are "personal-sized" for straight, average and full hips . . . one just right for you.

.....your choice of control

From the gentle hug of light mesh elastics to the strong control of tightly woven elastics—you choose the girdle that inches you in . . . but comfortably. The "Free-Lift" feature in the Le Gant* corselette above frees the bra from the corset section, eliminating bustline drag. At finer stores.

WEEK-END WARDROBE

Beautifully detailed white crepe blouse tucked front, small collar. Also, short sleeves. Vogue Design No. 6389, 12 to 20.

Sizes, back views and prices on page 211

PHOTOGRAPH BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Mrs. Freeman wearing her classic tweed suit with a natural cashmere sweater, pearls; spectator pumps, string gloves. Vogue Design No. 6539. 12 to 42.

© VOGUE

Slim wool dress with double-breasted, collarless jacket. Turquoise with black accessories. Vogue Design No. S-1920. 12 to 20.

he dress without the jacket. Dressed up with pearls at the eck, carnations at the waistline. Black gloves and shoes.

Frances Freeman lives in the country and her social life revolves around dog-show activities. In the winter, dog-show week ends are frequent. We have helped Mrs. Freeman select a wearable, packable wardrobe with a minimum of pieces, to wear on such occasions. Her suit is neutral gray-brown-and-white tweed. The four-gore skirt has a slight flare and the jacket is classic. With this she wears a natural cashmere sweater and a bright scarf or a string of pearls. She can also wear her nicely detailed white crepe shirt with it. Her turquoise wool dress has its own jacket. Worn with a tiny hat, it is a perfect luncheon costume. Worn without the jacket, with pearls at the neck and carnations in the belt, it becomes the perfect soft dinner dress. Having both a suit and a dress that do double duty eliminates the need of a bulging suitcase for a two-day holiday. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 21 Dundas Square, Toronto, Ont. Connecticut residents please add sales tax.*

Newest kind of new Make-up!... it's Foundation and Powder—all in one—

Angel Face

by POND'S

New— A really different make-up! Not a cake make-up. Not a greasy foundation. Angel Face is actually foundation and powder all in one! A velvety, sweet-tinted finish that's never drying...never greasy!

New— Easier to apply! No damp sponge. No greasy fingers. Pond's Angel Face smooths on with its own puff. Stays on much longer than powder!

New— Can't spill over your handbag or dark clothes. Carry Angel Face with you and smooth on a fresh, natural "new complexion" anytime . . . anywhere!

Choose from 5 perfect shades. Angel Face complete with puff — 89¢ plus tax

Society Beauties say:

"Really I can't say enough nice things about Pond's wonderful new Angel Face! Such a perfect make-up—and you can smooth it on in a moment, anywhere. I always have Angel Face in my handbag!"
MRS. ROBERT BACON WHITNEY

"Angel Face has all the virtues of the best make-ups I've ever tried—and none of the drawbacks. No water, no oiliness, no drying effect. It's the cleverest beauty trick in years!"
MRS. PERRY TIFFANY

"Angel Face is the most flattering make-up—and so easy to use! No watery sponge, no greasy fingertips—no spilling over handbag or clothes. I carry my Angel Face with me everywhere!"
RAFAELLE, DUCHESS OF LEINSTER

...s Freeman's good looks require ...attering make-up and hair-do.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Frances in her new and more flattering soft dress, is poised, pretty and self-confident.

Highlight your hair

Wake up your make-up

Flatter your figure

Show off your shoulderline

See the new you

By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

SMALL WONDER... in less than a day

TINY Mrs. John Freeman, in both photographs above, is a scant four feet eleven inches tall and weighs ninety-two pounds. While she is among the first to agree there are many merits to being little—summed up in such pleasing adjectives as feminine, dainty, delicate and cute—she also is of the opinion, shared by many small women, that there are drawbacks in possessing pint-size proportions. Finding hair-do's, clothes and accessories which do not dwarf the little woman is a major operation—too often unsuccessful.

For Frances Freeman, and for the many women who are in her shoes (size 3½), we planned a kind of "do-over day" for little women. Impressed by her transformation ourselves, we hadn't counted on the immediate approval by the outside world which actually took place. So, with apologies to our fiction editors, we will give you the ending of this story first—and then go back to tell you what led up to it.

Mrs. Freeman, at the end of this particular day, was returning home by train when the woman sitting next to her asked, "Could you tell me the time, child?"

"Are you speaking to me?" asked Mrs. Freeman. When the woman said "Yes," Mrs. Freeman laughed. "I'm really not a child," she said. "I have two children of my own!"

The woman was obviously surprised. "But you don't look more than seventeen," she answered.

Mrs. Freeman, thirty-two-year-old mother of two boys, one and six years old, was thrilled to realize the change in her appearance could have prompted such a storybook compliment.

If you are among the women under the average height of five feet four inches and are bemoaning your fate, here are some ideas to help your good looks grow—and prove to you there is none more appealing than a pretty, little woman!

Hair-Do's Add Height. First, for Frances, a new hair-do. One to add height—but not one of those architectural structures difficult for even the most statuesque women to carry. After several experiments with new parts, lengths and hair silhouettes, Frances' original and too severe hair-do was forsaken in favor of a softer, prettier halo effect of curls. This called for cutting her hair about two inches all the way around and for a new center part.

For any woman whose hair has a tendency to curl, the shorter length is easily kept by simply putting the curls up on pins two or three times a week. Otherwise, a soft permanent on the ends will do the trick. You will notice in the photographs Frances' "before" hair-do seemed to drag down the lines of her face. The new, more becoming arrangement not only gives her appearance a lift but gives an illusion of at least an inch and a half in added height!

Feature Story. Small features often come with small figures—and lucky is the woman who, with the help of a genius make-up, can achieve a fragile flower-petal look. As opposed to taller women who accomplish a certain dash with a bolder use of make-up, small women are smart to take the delicate approach.

First, for Frances, whose skin is inclined to be slightly dry, we applied evenly and lightly over her face and neck a creamy make-up base with a faint rosy cast. Any excess was carefully blotted off with tissues, especially around the nose and chin, where make-up is apt to clog. Then her eyebrows were plucked, from underneath, to create just a slight arch and give more width between eyebrows and eyes. Next, with a brown eyebrow pencil and short, quick, outward strokes, Frances' eyebrows were slightly darkened. To do justice to her naturally long eyelashes, (Continued on Page 278)

The Hawaiians have a word for it...

Mai kai!"

LIBBY'S Peak-Flavor PINEAPPLE
. . . slices or sun-sweetened juice . . . is always "perfect"!

FOR THE "FROSTY" GRAPES on the party punch bowl, simply dip each cluster (Concord, Tokay or seedless grapes) in slightly beaten egg white—and then in confectioners' sugar. Dry on wax paper. For the most glorious of fruit drinks, choose Libby's peak-flavor Pineapple Juice. Chill it well and top with sprigs of fresh mint.

As you pour out that sun-gold juice, note the sweet fruit fragrance of Libby's. That aroma tells you Libby's is juiced from full-ripe "pedigreed pines." You, too, will say "mai kai"—or in plain English "perfect"! For this luscious juice is sweetened only by Hawaii's magic sun! Enjoy Libby's for breakfast, luncheon, dinner, and between meals!

FOR A DESSERT THRILL choose Libby's peak-flavor pineapple slices. Here again is the full-ripe "golden flavor" of Hawaii's finest! When you buy pineapple in any form insist on Libby's!

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

LISTEN TO "MY TRUE STORY."
Mornings—Mon. thru Fri.—ABC stations.

1869 LIBBY'S 1949

IN ALL FRUITS . . . LOOK TO

Libby's FOR

PHOTO BY HANS NO

All small boys love cookies. G-O is no exception. Mrs. Freem bakes molasses crinkles more often than any other kind of coo

"I love to Bake

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

TO Fran Freeman there isn't any more satisfying homekeepi job than baking. "I don't consider myself a natural cook," sh told me one day, as we chatted about recipes, "but baking is real thrill and a challenge. Maybe it's because John and G-O are s appreciative. Women who say they don't like to bake just don know how much fun they really miss."

Mrs. Freeman bakes as the spirit moves her. Sometimes it's in th evening after the children are in bed. The house is quiet then, th kitchen cozy. John keeps her company. Both she and John enjoy thes evenings together waiting for a cake to bake—particularly in the winte

Bread is really the only baked product Mrs. Freeman buys from th store. In spite of the extra time it takes, she prefers to make her ow biscuits, waffles, pancakes, and so on, rather than to use mixes. She' proudest of her lemon-meringue pie and popovers. G-O casts his firs vote for his mother's molasses-crinkle cookies, particularly because she sprinkles some with pink sugar and some with green—just for him.

Mr. Freeman and young George are really an "I love chocolate" team. Their favorite chocolate cake is one Mrs. Freeman calls Crazy Cake. "I dump everything in a bowl, beat it up and that's all there is to it. I often stir up one when we have unexpected company."

CRAZY CAKE

Place the following ingredients in a bowl in the order given. Do not beat or stir at this point—just measure and add: 1 cup sugar, 1 egg, ½ cup cocoa, ½ cup shortening, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon baking soda, 1½ cups cake flour. Now for mixing and beating. Add ½ cup boiling water. Beat 3 minutes with a rotary beater, or 2 minutes on the electric mixer at medium speed. A crazy way to make a cake—but the results a excellent. Pour batter into a greas 8-inch-square loaf pan. Bake 35–40 mi utes in a moderately slow oven, 325° Serve unfrosted.

Another cake for the chocolate fan Having a light hand is your secret of su cess in this cake. Save your strong-ar work for cakes made with shortening. Tak it easy with this one—the gentler you a the better when you fold in ingredient together 3 times: 6 tablespoons cake r, 6 tablespoons cocoa, ¼ teaspoon and ¾ teaspoon baking powder. Sep- e 4 eggs. Beat whites until they form peaks. Fold ¾ cup sugar into the whites gradually, a tablespoon at a e. Beat the 4 egg yolks until very thick lemon-colored. Add 1 teaspoon va- a and fold in the egg-white-and-sugar ringue. Then fold in the sifted dry in- dients carefully. Grease a shallow y-roll pan, 10x15 inches. Line with paper and grease again. Pour in the ter and spread out evenly. Bake in oven, 400° F., 13 minutes. Quickly off crisp edges of cake. Turn out on th sprinkled with confectioners' sugar. ll up. Cool on rack. Unroll. Spread with ipped cream sweetened and flavored h rum extract. Roll up again.

CHOCOLATE ROLL

Mrs. Freeman has two stand-by cooky ipes—Chocolate Chip and Molasses nkles. Her cooky jar is usually filled h one or the other.

MOLASSES CRINKLES

eam ¾ cup shortening and 1 cup own sugar together thoroughly. Add eaten egg and ¼ cup molasses. Beat up ll. Sift together 2¼ cups flour, 1 tea- oon salt, 2 teaspoons baking soda, ½ aspoon cloves, 1 teaspoon cinnamon d 1 teaspoon ginger and add to the st mixture. Mix thoroughly. Cover and ill dough in refrigerator 1 hour. Shape to balls about the size of a walnut. ace several inches apart on greased oky sheets. Brush tops lightly with ter. (A pastry brush is so handy in king, I really think everyone should ve one for just such purposes as this.) rinkle the cookies with sugar. Bake in oderately hot oven, 375° F., 10 minutes. akes three dozen.

Pineapple Drop Cookies take even less ne to make than the Molasses Crinkles. he dough doesn't need to be chilled. No aping is necessary. Make them tiny for tea party—bigger for the children's nches.

PINEAPPLE DROP COOKIES

ft together 3½ cups flour, 1 teaspoon aking soda and 1 teaspoon salt. Cream cup shortening. Add 1½ cups sugar grad- ally and cream until mixture is light d fluffy. Add 2 well-beaten eggs and 1 aspoon lemon juice. Measure 1 cup nned crushed pineapple (with the rup). Add sifted dry ingredients alter- ately to the creamed mixture with the neapple and sirup. Mix well after each ddition. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto reased cooky sheets several inches apart. ake in moderate oven, 350° F., 12–15 inutes. Makes 6 dozen small tea-size ookies. Yield depends on size you make em.

Here's one for the youngsters. Banana ars are easy to make—pack well in the nch box.

BANANA BARS

ift together 1¾ cups flour, 2 teaspoons aking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. ream ½ cup shortening and 1 cup sugar ogether. Add 1 teaspoon lemon extract nd 2 well-beaten eggs. Mix thoroughly. lash 3 medium-size ripe bananas moothly. There should be enough to ll 1 cup. Add sifted dry ingredients to reamed mixture alternately with the nashed bananas. Pour into a greased hallow pan, 8x13 inches, or two smaller ans. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 inutes. Cool in pan. Cut into bars. Makes 3 dozen bars.

Until recently, Fran couldn't seem to get he hang of handling bread or roll dough. A friend showed her how to tell when the volume was doubled—how to punch down the dough when it had risen—how to shape. "A little more practice," she says, "and I won't even have to buy bread and rolls." Here are two good yeast-raised items—both very special.

SOUR-CREAM TWISTS

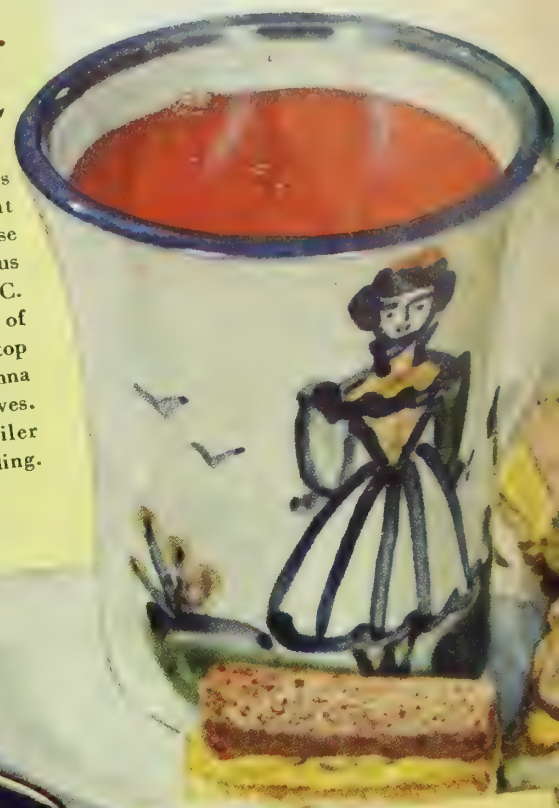
Sift 4 cups flour and 1 teaspoon salt into a bowl. Cut in 1 cup shortening, as for piecrust. Soak 1 envelope quick dry yeast in ¼ cup lukewarm water, according to directions on the envelope. Beat 1 egg and 2 egg yolks together. Combine with 1 cup thick light sour cream, the yeast and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Add to ingredients and mix thoroughly. Let rise in refrigerator for 2 hours. This seems an odd place to put a dough to rise, but this dough has more the quality of a pastry

(Continued on Page 255)

PHOTOS BY STUART

An unusual yeast-raised pastry called Sour-Cream Twists. They are short, crisp-crusted and sugary—a special-occasion sort of thing to make for your appreciative company.

Any chocolate lovers in your family? If so, this chocolate roll should be a top favorite with them. For party service, frost with whipped cream and then sprinkle with shaved chocolate.



Here are hot jelly-filled raised doughnuts fresh out of the fat kettle! These are much lighter and richer confections than the old-fashioned raised doughnuts made from bread dough.

Beautiful Beginnings for Budget Meals...

For lunch—LIBBY'S TOMATO JUICE hot, and Vienna Sizzlers

Fanfare for a cold-day luncheon is Libby's—served hot! Just heat—but don't boil—that glorious juice, because you want to protect Libby's precious tomato vitamins—A, B_1, B_2 and C. For the appetizers, spread "fingers" of bread with Libby's Mustard and top with Libby's tantalizing little Vienna Sausages cut in halves. Toast under broiler heat and serve sizzling. What tempters!

For company—have DEVILED DELIGHTS with the TWICE-RICH* Juice

When "the boss" comes to dinner—serve the very best tasting tomato juice in the world in your very best glasses. Add Deviled Delights (In the palm of your hand pat out a little Libby's Deviled Ham; mold it around a stuffed olive, top with parsley sprigs and spike with a toothpick). Here's a sure-success menu-starter. Just make certain it's Libby's you get... America's favorite tomato juice!

*Rich in Vitamins!
*Rich in Flavor!

TRY LIBBY'S CATCHUP AND CHILI SAUCE! Made from the same fine quality tomatoes as Libby's TWICE-RICH* Tomato Juice!

Look to LIBBY'S for perfection

"Eddie Cantor* and Ida insist on

PAT. NO. 2,326,672

in their

..."

says Anna Murray,

housekeeper to the Cantors

With a large, home-loving family and a host of interesting and distinguished friends, there is always good fun, good food and solid comfort at the Cantors'. There's always clean-smelling air, too, thanks to air-wick. "We use air-wick throughout the house" states Mrs. Anna Murray. "Particularly, in the kitchen, to keep cooking odors from seeping into the other rooms. Whenever the Cantors plan a large party (which is quite often), it's my cue to open air-wick in the living-room. I know that air-wick kills indoor odors . . . because despite the heavy smoking that naturally goes on, there's never even a hint of stale cigar and cigarette smoke."

Efficient homemakers find air-wick indispensable. In the kitchen, air-wick kills the unpleasant odors of cooking cabbage, onions and fish. Stale cigar and cigarette smoke is banished like magic when air-wick is put to work in the living-room.

In thousands of homes from coast-to-coast air-wick is a "must" in guest rooms, children's nurseries and sick rooms. And no truly modern bathroom is ever without air-wick.

Remember, air-wick contains over 125 compounds as found in nature... as well as miracle-working Chlorophyll. And remember also that air-wick is protected by U. S. Patent and cannot be duplicated. Why risk offending when air-wick only costs about a penny a day to use! At all better stores in the United States and Canada.

air-wick deodorizer and household freshener is fully protected by U. S. Patent . . . a trademark of Seeman Brothers, Inc., New York 13, N. Y. Tune in "Monday Morning Headlines" Sunday, coast-to-coast ABC network, following Drew Pearson . . . also "Tomorrow's Headlines" Saturday morning, coast-to-coast ABC network. © 1946 SEEMAN BROS., INC.

use air-wick for...

1 cooking odors
2 stale smoke
3 airless bathrooms
4 bedrooms
5 children's nurseries
6 sickrooms
7 musty closets
8 living-rooms

air-wick kills indoor odors

*Eddie Cantor's radio program can be heard every Friday evening over the National Broadcasting System. Your local paper lists the time and station.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD POWLER

The Freemans' country living room: a combination of originals and copies of Provincial furniture such as early Americans made for themselves.

American Provincial Living Room

An Early American room restored and furnished with regional pieces of the period is both charming and comfortable for modern living. ★ BY HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

HERE is a starter room for those who like the romantic simplicity of primitive American furnishings. It is the living room in the Freemans' early-eighteenth-century house, restored and made larger by combining two smaller rooms.

Period furniture for so large a room presented a budget problem, and in addition the Freemans were worried about combining antiques with present-day pieces. But of course there is not enough original Provincial furniture to go around, and scouting for bargains takes time. It is much more satisfactory to compromise and round out a livable family room using both antiques and copies. Provincial styles were austere in rural America and the period needs liberal treatment to be comfortable for modern use. (Continued on Page 268)

Simple, upholstered furniture blends with most Provincial styles.

Here Ladies,
e 10 good reasons for buying
Norge!

NORGE
IPLE-ACTION WASHER

Division, Borg-Warner Corp., Detroit 26, Michigan
da, Addison Industries, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario

- Giant Tub: Cuts laundry time—handles average four loads in three.
- Triple Action Agitator: Spins clothes up, down, around for cleaner, faster wash.
- Rugged Auto-Bilt Transmission: Assures long years of efficient operation.
- Beautiful White Porcelain Tub: Prevents rust, corrosion—is always clean.
- Steam Seal Lid: Holds heat in tub—makes clothes whiter.
- Large Balloon Type Wringer Rolls: Easy on clothes—protect buttons, zippers, snaps.
- Eight Position Wringer: Provides safety finger-tip pressure control and adjustable pressure selector.
- Wringer Rolls Dry For The Line: Clothes are light and fluffy—easy to carry, just right for the line.
- Power Leg Balance: Washer always in balance.
- Anti Air-Lock Power Pump: Quickly removes soil, lint and water from tub, (extra).

A BORG-WARNER INDUSTRY

Refrigerators
Electric Ranges
Water Coolers
Washers
Electric Water Heaters
Home Heaters
Gas Ranges
Home Freezers

SEE
NORGE
BEFORE YOU BUY

PHOTOS BY J. DI PIETR

The Freemans' spaniel puppy is part of the family, knows he's we come to make himself at home wherever they are. But the slip cover are washable, and the Freemans feel that his affection and companion ship are worth a bit of extra washing and vacuum cleaning. Puppie can, however, be trained to stay off furniture, or discouraged from sofa sitting by certain harmless powders to be sprinkled or sprayed about

HOUSEKEEPING WITH PETS

By Judy Barry Dee

WE MUST admit that pets of any kind do add a plus to the problems o housekeeping. Yet, from great Dane down to guppy they're un doubtedly worth the additional trouble. And there are ways of help ing to reduce that plus to a tiny sum that's hardly noticeable.

• Patience and wisdom in housebreaking are all-important to your future happiness in living with a dog—or, for that matter, a cat. If you're about to embark for the first time on this adventure, you couldn't do better, we think, than be guided by our own Gladys Taber's delightful book, Especially Spaniels. Mrs. Taber's sound, proved methods work out well for both puppy and "housebreaker."

• A feeding dish of pottery, enamel or metal which is always kept scrupulously clean, a dish for water, and a clean comfortable bed, cool but well protected from drafts, are the basic minimum requirements for any dog or cat. It's best for pets' peace of mind habitually to eat and sleep in the same spot; gives them a sort of secure feeling. And a pet at peace with himself and scrupulously clean is an easy one to keep house for.

• Old newspapers figure largely in the life of anyone who keeps house with pets. Get into the habit of saving them, piled tidily in a convenient spot. Shredded society sections or want-ad pages, can be used as filler material in an old pillowcase for a clean, easily replaced mattress for your pet's bed. (If you are lucky and can get cedar shavings, they may be used in the same way.) You'll need plenty of papers as housebreaking helpers, and use them, folded, as gentle admonishers. Yesterday's real-estate pages make easily disposable crumb catchers beneath feeding dishes.

• There are new nontippable pet plates, which secure the dish to the floor by means of rubber suction cups. A rubber mat, or a piece of rubber cut to fit the dish and glued on with household cement, also helps to keep your pet's dinner from getting away from him and on your clean floor.

• Cats need a scratching pole, or something of their very own to claw when they're in the mood. Otherwise they're bound to go to work on the legs of the furniture. Some cats enjoy scratching a rubber mat better than a wooden pole. You'll just have to try out the tastes of your pussy, and train him to avoid using furniture legs and the upholstery. Some scratches are almost inevitable, of course, but rubbing them with a bit of fine furniture polish, applied to clean cheesecloth, will minimize their ill effects.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

• Watch the family table manners. Bad dining-room habits are easily formed by feeding your pet a bite of food because you just can't bear to eat in front of that wistful gaze. This mistaken kindness creates several problems: your pet begs during the meal and begrudges everyone every mouthful; and worst of all, when your pet is fed from the table, the food usually falls on the rug and leaves a stain for you to cope with.

• Cats need regular brushing and grooming even more, perhaps, than dogs do, especially during their shedding time. Cats will consume these loose hairs while they lick themselves in their effort to keep clean. The loose hairs form hair balls in the cat's stomach and that always means trouble—for the cat, and for you.

• Absolute cleanliness is the best protection against fleas. If they do appear, in spite of frequent scrubbing and brushing and fresh, clean beds, get after your dog or cat at once. Plenty of good defleaing powder rubbed into the dog's coat, working down from the head, will kill the fleas. A word of caution, however, if a defleaing preparation is used on a cat: it should be placed only on the back of the neck, as the cat is unable to lick that area. An ounce of prevention is still worth a pound of cure, and many dog-shampoo preparations contain an active flea-killing ingredient which protects the dog from fleas between baths. Sleeping quarters should be sprinkled with flea powder also.

(Continued on Page 240)

Erase mistakes at once

This is important for both the sake of one's rugs and the puppy's social training, since they're little creatures of habit, too, and tend to return to a spot that seems familiar when sniffed. Sponge the spot with cold water, follow up with a solution of half ammonia, half water, to neutralize the acid.

Round up all pet necessities in one place

It's a great help to have all a dog's medicine-cabinet and dressing-table supplies corralled in his very own cabinet placed in the utility room or back hall, and to keep a special convenient shelf in the kitchen or pantry for his foods. A newspaper placed under his feeding dish saves lots of cleaning up.

Keep your pet well groomed

Naturally, you want a well-shampooed, well-brushed, properly fed pet just for his own sake, but good grooming and a balanced diet make him easier to keep house for too. A damp cellulose or rubber sponge will effectively pick up the troublesome hairs that the best of dogs or cats shed at certain seasons.

Lots of our customers are converts

In recent months many young housekeepers have learned a valuable lesson —"you can't wash clothes with coupons". Nearly every day this very practical experience makes more converts to Fels-Naptha Soap.

It doesn't take long to see why Fels-Naptha is the real 'bargain' in laundry soap. Fels-Naptha combines two great cleaners—mild, golden soap and active naptha. It gets out the grime most soaps can't budge. It is quick and ever so gentle with delicate fabrics—especially baby things. It's a positive time and labor saver for "The Lady of The House".

These are the "specials" and "extras" you always get with Fels-Naptha Soap . . . at a fair and modest price.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Coconut—the Peepul's Choice!

by Virginia Coates

Everybody votes for coconut! And men especially love the combination of coconut and orange. So make them doubly happy with a Coconut Orange Cake. First, make an orange layer cake—and then top it with Coconut Frosting. Just follow the recipe. Durkee's is my favorite for all coconut desserts. It has a rich, tantalizing flavor with a touch of the tropics. And it's always fresh! You can get Durkee's good Coconut in two grand styles: In the familiar package—or extra moist in the can.

Other festive desserts—with a dash of Durkee's Coconut. Sprinkle its snowy whiteness on baked custards, jellies, fruit cup and baked bananas. Put coconut on broiled grapefruit and on cup cakes. And, for an exotic dish, blend this fine Coconut with butterscotch sauce for a marvelous ice-cream topping.

Any way you slice it, cold turkey topped with Durkee's Famous Dressing is heavenly! If you're a little short of turkey, add slices of cold ham. This grand Dressing gives zest and spirit because it's made of rare spices, expertly blended to create a unique and delightful tang.

More turkey tricks! Serve your cold, leftover turkey plain and make cole slaw with the Dressing. Or try this: To thin slices of turkey white meat, add strips of ham and a few greens and then toss with Durkee's Dressing. Delicious!

• • •

Interested in unusual recipes? Then write to Durkee Famous Foods, Dept. L11-8, Elmhurst, L. I., N. Y.

Accessories from Carole Stupell, Ltd.

Coconut Frosting

2 egg whites
2 cups sugar
⅓ cup water
2 tsp. corn syrup
1 tsp. Durkee's Vanilla
1 pkg. Durkee's Coconut

In top part of double boiler, beat egg whites, sugar, water and corn syrup. When well blended, place over boiling water and continue to beat with rotary beater 7 or 8 minutes until frosting is thick and holds its shape when dropped from beater. Remove from boiling water. Add vanilla and continue to beat another 5 minutes or until frosting is thick enough to spread. Allow to cool. Sandwich between 2 layer cakes and cover top and sides with rest of frosting. Sprinkle top and sides of cake with Durkee's Coconut.

FOR THAT CERTAIN THURSDAY

(Continued from Page 75)

I remember—I remember. In the house where I was reared, about this time of year the big chopping bowl was brought out and the raisins were piled on the table ready for the inevitable stoning and steaming and chopping. It was work for little hands, and very exciting they became until they graduated to bigger tasks. What they considered more important tasks. These are the memories that center around this day, and I am one who remembers many a wonderful time, getting ready weeks ahead, and having all the wonders I had helped to make come true before me when the great day came.

A little different. Now, someway, no one eats as much as he used to even on the feast day. Desserts are lighter, the stuffing less stuffy. Turkey? Yes. And who among you doesn't have her own way of roasting a turkey? But for a stuffing—well. You may still cling to the sweet memories and sage I'm always talking about, but as for me, I shall, for this once at least, have quite a new and different filler-up for the big bouncing bird, and maybe you'll want the same for roast chicken or anything roastable. And that's my word. It has a nice everyday sound, don't you think? Roastable—maybe roasted, can be roasted, as a turkey; and having bound myself to a turkey, let's get on with the roasting, which means on with the stuffing. That comes first.

And as we go along, it occurs to me that walnuts may take the place of almonds, if you prefer walnuts all have them on hand; and if you ask me, I'm an old walnut hand and go for them in a big way. Several big ways, as a matter of fact.

APPLE-AND-ALMOND STUFFING FOR TURKEY

Combine 6 cups fine bread crumbs made from two-day-old bread with 2 cups finely diced peeled tart apple, 5 slices cooked bacon, crumbled, 1½ cups toasted slivered almonds, ½ cup chopped onions, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons thyme, ½ teaspoon poultry seasoning. Add ½ cup melted butter or margarine; mix well. Add a little water or chicken stock to make a stuffing not too dry, not too soggy. This makes enough stuffing for a 12-to-13-pound turkey. And don't forget that turkey stuffing heated and fried is a pretty nice leftover.

Not forgetting the oyster. If you are of a mind to have a strictly orthodox old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner, I shouldn't hesitate a minute—it would be oysters and no nonsense about it. If it led off with a clear soup, my orthodoxy would go so far as to have oysters anyway, scalloped or in the stuffing, and I guess nobody'd find any more fault than they'd find with the tablecloth, so long as there were dishes on same and plenty of good food in the dishes.

Well, I can't play croquet in the winter, nor can I eat as much as I used to, so in the name of the simple life I will give in to a hot vegetable bouillon to start with, and give in to the oysters until another time.

HOT VEGETABLE BOUILLON

Heat 3 cans mixed vegetable juice in a saucepan. Add 2 small onions, sliced, some celery leaves, a spray of parsley, 4 whole cloves, 4 peppercorns and ¼ teaspoon salt. Simmer 10 minutes. Strain. Serve very hot with a spoonful of blue-cheese garnish.

BLUE-CHEESE GARNISH

Mix ¼ cup sieved blue or Roquefort cheese with ½ cup sour cream. This makes enough to garnish 6 bowls of soup.

Twice-told cranberry tales. That quaint way I have of making cranberry sauce has become a refrain something like The Old Oaken Bucket.

CRANBERRY SAUCE

Using 3 cups cranberries, 1½ cups sugar and 1 cup hot water, let the berries stand and think it over in the water and sugar for 5 minutes, then leap and pop and act up on the hot heat 5 minutes, followed by a quiet contemplative spell off the range—and then 5 minutes more snapping in the heat—and you have such sauce.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Dromedary

(addressed to a child)

BY WILFRID THORLEY

The Arabs in the desert lack
  Both bicycles and cars.
They have no roads, but find the track
  By following the stars;
And both themselves and luggage carry
Upon the patient dromedary.

This is a camel highly bred,
  And moving very fast.
It has a hump, and if unfed
  Will swallow it at last,
As though it were a sort of larder
Only for use when times are harder.

In this event the hump outside
  Will gradually shrink
So that the beast, although sore tried,
  May live. But do not think
That you, with plenty on the shelf,
Should bite your nails and eat yourself.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Added sweets to sweets. Now a sweet potato is a sweet thing, and a date, reared in the hot desert, is still sweeter; get the two together and you've a combination that's good. It's so good I want you to add it to your sweet-potato repertory.

MASHED SWEET POTATOES WITH DATES

Cook 3 pounds sweet potatoes until tender. Peel them and mash while hot. Add 3 tablespoons light cream, ¼ teaspoon cinnamon, ¾ teaspoon salt and ¾ cup pitted dates, cut into pieces. Mix well and put in a moderate oven, 350°, to brown.

Pretty up the onion. A combination that goes where it ought to go is an onion and a pepper. Two of the nicest vegetables that ever came out of the garden. When you get them in a casserole, hot and steaming and ripe with good cheese, you've got something. And you know as well as I do that no Thanksgiving dinner where a turkey is around is half a dinner without onions. The peppers are the fringe on the cushion, just adding their color and taste and surprise to what is usually another batch of creamed onions. Do them this way and see if I'm not giving you a treat and one of those little things to add to your receipts, the collection you keep and treasure.

SCALLOPED ONIONS AND GREEN PEPPERS

Cook 12 medium-sized onions in boiling salted water until just tender. Cut an X in the top and the onion won't split as it likes to do while it's cooking. Drain and cut the onions in halves. Put them in a 2-quart casserole. Remove the seeds from 6 medium green peppers, cut in half, and then in thin strips crosswise. Sauté in ¼ cup butter or margarine until soft. Put the cooked peppers on top of the onions in the casserole. Make a sauce with ¼ cup flour, ¼ cup butter or margarine and 2½ cups milk. When thickened, remove the pan from the heat and blend in 1 cup grated good sharp cheese. Season with 2 teaspoons salt and a dash of pepper. Pour the sauce over the vegetables. (If the sauce is too thick, thin it a little with cream.) Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for about 25 minutes until it bubbles and browns on top.

Slaw—but is it cole? Those who turn up their noses at slaw will eat this one and come back for more and give it a tryout

For That GLOW OF HEALTH

This is the Florida Drink

That Sends Quick Refreshment Through Your Entire Body!

1. A gold mine of VITAMIN C
2. Other VITAMINS and MINERALS
3. ENERGY from fruit sugars
4. Supplies liquid for good CIRCULATION
5. Helps maintain ALKALINE reserve
6. Arouses listless APPETITES
7. Stimulates DIGESTIVE juices
8. MILDLY LAXATIVE

© 1948, Florida Citrus Commission
Lakeland, Florida

FLORIDA BLENDED

ORANGE-GRAPEFRUIT JUICE

name your wish!

Everything automatic New Gas ranges have automatic time and heat controls . . . light without matches!

Instantaneous speed Only Gas gives you high heat, low heat, any heat you want . . . without waiting!

Cool, clean cooking Smokeless broiling! Non-clog burners! Extra insulation! Only Gas has them all!

Finest results. Only air-circulated Gas ovens bake so evenly. Only live flame broils so perfectly!

Super-modern design One-piece turret top of shining stain-resistant porcelain. Bigger, better storage space!

More for the money Gas ranges cost less to buy and operate than any other modern cooking appliances!

Gas has got it!

Discover the same modern miracle that is making more women choose Gas ranges than all other types combined! See this new TAPPAN "CP" Gas range . . . and all the other "makes" built to "CP" standards . . . now at your local Gas company or appliance store. Then for the next step in your work-free "New Freedom Gas Kitchen,"* pick a new trouble-free Servel Gas refrigerator. It stays silent—lasts longer!

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

*CERT. MARK, AMER. GAS ASSOC., INC.

in dinners yet uncooked. It's a wonderful way to serve cabbage and get away with it too. For that relish dish, instead of some other inspiration. And speaking of inspirations, I am following this with a corn-meal yeast roll that should become a favorite. If you like corn-meal muffins, you will like these rolls.

ORANGE AND CABBAGE SLAW IN ORANGE CUPS

Cut 3 oranges in half and cut out the pulp so there will be good firm shells. Remove the membrane from the orange sections and cut up enough to make 1 cup and drain in a sieve to get all the free juice out. Mix 2 cups finely shredded crisp cabbage, 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion, ⅓ cup chopped water cress with the orange sections. Toss together lightly with ⅓ cup mayonnaise seasoned with ¼ teaspoon salt, a pinch of sugar, pepper to taste—oh, just a little, you know—1½ teaspoons vinegar and a sprinkle of celery salt. Fill the orange shells with the mixture. Garnish with sprays of water cress and serve cold and crisp.

CORN-MEAL YEAST ROLLS

Add 1 cup boiling water to 1¼ cups yellow corn meal in a large mixing bowl; stir well and let stand for 10 minutes. Dissolve 1 packagequick dry yeast in ¼cup lukewarm water; let stand 5 minutes. Mix until very smooth. Scald ¾ cup milk and cool it until lukewarm. Add the dissolved yeast, milk, ⅓ cup sugar, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ cup melted butter or margarine, 2 egg yolks to the rest of the mixture and again make it very smooth. Better beat here. Add 2 cups flour and beat well. Gradually stir in about 2 more cups flour, adding just enough to be able to handle the dough. Knead on a floured board until smooth. Place the dough in a greased bowl; brush it with melted butter or margarine. Cover and let it rise in a warm place (80–85° F.) until double in bulk. Punch down and let rise again. Shape into small rolls. Place on greased shallow pans or baking sheets. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., 15–20 minutes. Makes 5 dozen small rolls. The rolls could be made the day before and reheated for Thanksgiving dinner. But these are better made fresh. They aren't just like all-white-flour rolls.

It seemed so simple when one was young, and new ideas were mentioned, not to grow red in the face and gobble!

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH:
Afterthoughts (Harcourt, Brace & Co., Inc.).

Light and sweet. In the days that I remember, there was, for dessert, at these light and airy dinners we were talking about, a plum pudding, reeking with such good fragrancies as never were. And can you remember the pumpkin pies, heaped with whipped cream and brown with cinnamon? And can you see the mince pie, so hot, so deep and irresistible? Just to smell it sent one into raptures of anticipation. And apple pie, made from flawless Spies and greenings, the best from the barrels; no culls, no waste ones were good enough for that pie. Hard sauce or foamy sauce—well, I will cease and desist, as they say, and let you make your own choice, for those days are gone, I guess. Folks don't get up from the table and throw themselves on the nearest couch and call for the "bicarb." That's something.

So for a delicate and delicious ending to this year's Thanksgiving, tell me if this isn't a sweet to be desired and gladly come by.

APRICOT-PINEAPPLE SPONGE

Sprinkle 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin over ½ cup cold water and soak for 5 minutes. Add 1 cup hot water and ¾ cup sugar; stir until the gelatin is dissolved. Add 1½ cups puréed cooked apricots, 1 cup drained canned crushed pineapple, ½ cup pineapple juice, ½ cup lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon salt. Mix well. Chill until it starts to set—or gets very thick. Fold in 2 beaten egg whites. Pour into a 2-quart ring mold. Chill until firm. Unmold and fill the center of the ring with golden fruit sauce. Serves 6–8.

NABISCO PARTY NEW

Quick trick for delicio
Short-order Shortcal with tasty-rich Lorna Doon

Shortcake

Sweetened fruit Whipped cream Lorna Doone

Make a bed of about 4 Lorna Doone on each plate—cover with sliced peaches; top with whipped cream and another Lorna Doone. That's the best-tasting shortcake ever! Rich and wonderful because Lorna Doone is baked true to an old-time Scotch shortbread recipe—authentic in flavor and texture. Folks will love it—like they love Lorna Doone with any light dessert—or by its own sweet self alone! Try other cookies that bear the famous red Nabisco Seal of quality!

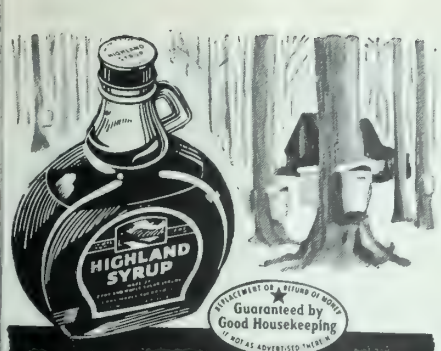
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

MAKES FOOD
AUSTE
Good

To add piquant flavor to home cooked foods, use MEXENE All-Purpose Seasoning. Delicious for Spaghetti, Meats, Sea Foods, Soup, and Hash.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR WALKER'S AUSTEX
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

STRUCK IT RICH



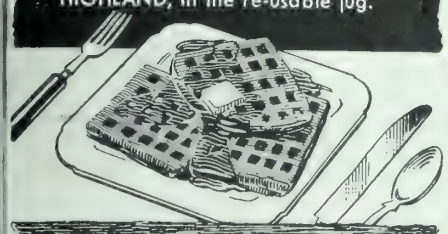
After little Johnny had spent the night with a friend whose father was very wealthy, he said to his mother, "Rich people have a hot cereal that's the best you ever tasted."

Curious, his mother called up and found the cereal was Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal, which, for some reason, she had never tried.

The first morning she served it to Johnny, he looked surprised and said, "Did Pop get a raise?"

(Advertisement)

KVP Household PAPERS



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Handsome new jug of

MAPLE MAGIC

The world's largest processors of maple have blended cane-and-maple to create the sensational new heavy-bodied HIGHLAND SYRUP. Rich in that woodsy maple "tang" that glorifies pancakes, waffles and fine cookery. Insist on genuine HIGHLAND, in the re-usable jug.

HIGHLAND SYRUP from Old Vermont

RECIPE BOOK Send 3¢ stamp for colorful book of Maple Recipes. CARY MAPLE, ST. JOHNSBURY 6, VERMONT

FREE to smarter women

Paul's Catalog of Imported Lamps

Write today for Free Catalog that has shown thousands of clever home makers how to bring new life and beauty to their homes with exquisite lamps imported from France, Italy, England and China. Artistically designed to add distinction to any room, these lamps are hand decorated in Venetian glass, fire-glazed china, Majolica and faience. For example: Lamp shown here is one of many from China . . . uniquely fashioned Chinese Mandarin figures of 10 inch high finest quality china on a 26½ inch lamp. 15 inch scalloped satin shade with hand applied braid, contrasting velvet edge. Only $29.75.

Send postcard TODAY to Dept. L for FREE catalog and name of nearest dealer.

Edward P. Paul & Co., Inc.
New York: 1133 Broadway
Chicago: Merchandise Mart
Manufacturers and Importers since 1898

LONG DISTANCE MOVING

Over 500 agents. See classified phone book for agent near you.

Call us for quick, safe moving to any part of the nation. Trained personnel. Modern vans! Get our estimate on packing, moving and storage.

North American VAN LINES, Inc.
General Offices: FORT WAYNE, IND.

GOLDEN FRUIT SAUCE

Beat 2 eggs until very light and thick. Gradually add ¾ cup sugar and beat hard. Fold in 1 cup heavy cream whipped until stiff. Flavor to taste. Add 1½ teaspoons grated lemon rind, ¼ cup raisins that have been steamed until plump, ½ cup canned apricot halves cut into slices and ½ cup chopped candied fruits. Chill until very cold.

Later—if there's time. Someday you and I will reminisce. Later we'll gather round and say, "Do you remember?" Until then a happy, unforgettable Thanksgiving. Do a little remembering, won't you? But let's not be too much like Wordsworth. Homesick, that was his trouble. Homesick for an attic, a window long since gone to splinters—and the morning sun on a day that was probably rainy anyway.

WHEN TO WORRY ABOUT YOUR DRINKING

(Continued from Page 215)

What is the best attitude for parents to have about drinking—never to serve liquor in the house and frown on its use, or allow their children to see them drinking in moderation?

A great deal will depend on the environment in which the parents are rearing their children. For instance, in a dry community where any drinking is condemned, serving liquor in the house and allowing the children to see the parents drink would embarrass them, because in their association with other children in other homes they would have the feeling that their parents were different, looked down on, and condemned for their drinking. In another environment, where moderate drinking is socially acceptable, the children would merely see their parents who drank as being like other parents, and would interpret moderate drinking as being normal. Hence it would not be associated with guilt.

Where there has been an alcoholic problem in the family which is situated in a normal drinking environment, great care should be exercised by the recovered alcoholic not to project his own anxiety about drinking onto his children. The children, when they are old enough to understand, should be told by the recovered alcoholic that he had a problem with drinking, but he should assure them that such a problem is not hereditary. The children of alcoholic parents, when they reach maturity, have no reason to expect that they will develop alcoholism, provided they are emotionally well adjusted.

The advisability of whether or not to permit children a little wine or beer, as is customary in many families of Latin descent, is partly a physiological problem which can be answered only by a physician. Psychologically, the answer would again depend on environment. Certainly Americans of Latin descent, often reared in homes where wine is frequently served in small amounts to children, are no more prone to alcoholism than are others who come from homes where it is not served.

If drinking were less fashionable, less socially acceptable, would there be fewer alcoholics?

Definitely yes. Human beings are suggestible, both constructively and destructively. The standards of behavior are largely set by those people who are in the public eye. This would include scientists, clergymen, educators, outstanding soldiers, prominent politicians, motion-picture actors and actresses, outstanding business successes, and men and women of great wealth and so-called café society, as well as desperate criminals and gangsters.

If the public, through observation, advertisement and the press, identify heavy, dissipated drinking with their movie idol, this or that playboy or glamour girl, or the president of a corporation, such self-identification influences their own behavior. One never saw a liquor advertisement with a well-dressed, distinguished man being carried out of his club, feet foremost. THE END

KNOCK IT

DOUSE IT

LET IT FALL!

ROUGH TREATMENT

DOES NO HARM AT ALL!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

4-qt. capacity

This indestructible pressure weight is an outstanding feature of the

NESCO

Super Simple

PRESSURE PAN

Nesco's one-piece, stainless steel pressure weight stands up under everyday use and abuse.

It has no springs, glass or moving parts . . . nothing to go wrong. It even eliminates "pressure watching" by releasing excess steam with a gentle hissing—all the while maintaining a steady 15 lbs. pressure automatically.

Absence of complicated gadgets makes the Nesco Pressure Pan the simplest to operate. And just ordinary washing keeps its gleaming aluminum surfaces bright and clean. Perfect for canning. Get a Nesco Pressure Pan today.

Nesco products include stainless steel utensils, enameled ware, tinware, galvanized ware, decorated kitchen containers, electric roasters, electric ranges and heaters, oil ranges and heaters.

DOUBLE-LIP SEALING GASKET
Impervious to grease. Needs no stretching or reversing. Provides a tight, positive, lasting seal.

OPENING IS SIMPLE
Just turn the easy-grip handles in opposite directions. The Nesco has no needless locking "do-dads" to bother with.

OUTWARDLY-FLARED LIP
Pouring is far easier. Simplifies emptying, handling of meats, and facilitates thorough cleaning.

NATIONAL ENAMELING AND STAMPING COMPANY
DEPT. E11, 270 N. 12th ST., MILWAUKEE WISCONSIN or finer flavor...

SERVE Hi Ho!

Compare for appetizing appeal
In appearance, Hi Ho crackers invite comparison with any other cracker. Note the golden-brown color . . . the uniformity of each and every Hi Ho.

Compare for finer flavor
Taste Hi Ho . . . try them on your family and guests. No other cracker has the distinctive flavor that belongs only to Hi Ho!

Compare for flakiness
Turn a Hi Ho cracker edgewise. Note the crisp flakiness, the delicate texture . . . sure sign of expert baking.

M THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES
OF Sunshine Biscuits, INC. © 1948

GOD AND THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

(Continued from Page 37)

II

"To believe in God," the famed Spanish writer Miguel de Unamuno once observed, "is to desire His existence, and what is more, to act as though He existed." Considering for the moment only the first half of this definition, one may deduce that if 95 per cent of the American people believe in God, they also desire His existence. But this suggests further questions. What kind of God do people want? What kind of God do Americans believe in?

To attain a glimmer of insight into this hidden area of thought, people were asked bluntly: "Please tell me in your own words what you believe about God." Here are some typical answers:

"I believe He is the power of the world."

"He is the giver of all things and our creator."

"I believe He is a very kind and just God and that if we have faith He'll help us all in our times of trouble."

"I feel that God is a spirit within the individual."

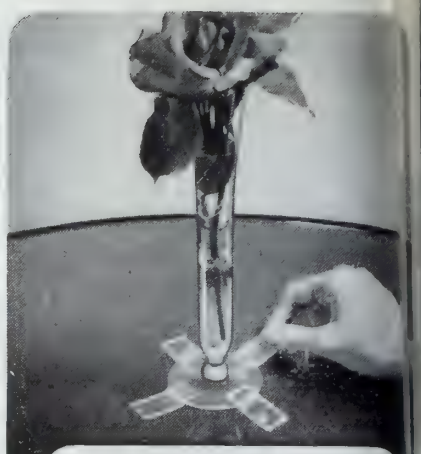
"God is love and truth."

"I think God is a force—we don't know what kind—He is a force with intelligence."

"God is everything—you can't look at a thing, think of a thing, or touch a thing that is not God."

"I just know and feel there is a God, that's all."

"I can't answer that."



At first glance these responses reveal little more than a feeling for what theologians sometimes call the "otherness" of God. Yet certain channels of thought become apparent upon analysis of all the returns. The American concept of God appears to fall into four main patterns of definition. To 29 per cent of the people God suggests "Supreme Power"; 26 per cent think of God in some kind of supervisory capacity—i.e. "He cares for us, answers our prayers"; 17 per cent think of God primarily as "Creator"; and to 7 per cent He is vaguely "spirit."

The notable point in this tabulation is that only one quarter of the people—26 per cent—immediately think of God in intimate relation to their own lives. The remainder employ concepts that might simply define the impersonal Absolute of extreme unorthodoxy—the abstract Intellect that designed the atom and administers the laws of gravitation and quantum physics.

To sharpen the focus two further questions asked: "Do you think of God as your judge—that is, that God observes your actions and will reward or punish you for them?" and "Do you think of God as a person?" The answers to these provide more suggestive clues to the ethical function of religion in American life. For 71 per cent replied "Yes" to the first question and 40 per cent said "Yes" to the second. Thus seven out of ten Americans believe that they must ultimately answer for their behavior to an authority above the sanctions of man's society; and four out of ten endow this divine authority with specifically human attributes.

To the question What are the MAIN reasons why you believe in God? one third of the people specified "teachings"—"I read the Bible and it teaches us to believe in God." Another third cited rational evidence—"The world had to have a beginning," "How could one observe nature and not believe there was a supreme being!" Somewhat less than one quarter mentioned private revelation or testimony from within—"Because I realize benefit from Him," "Because in trouble He gives us all," "I don't understand all the why's, but I know there is a supreme something."

Closely related to man's varying concepts of God are the questions of personal survival and life after death. In good agreement with the ratio of Americans who acknowledged God as their judge, 73 per cent of the people professed belief in some kind of afterlife. Of the remainder, 15 per cent foresaw death as Tape it easy!

SLENDER FLOWER VASES stand securely when anchored with a strip or two of transparent "Scotch" Tape.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE
SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING TRANSPARENT AS GLASS
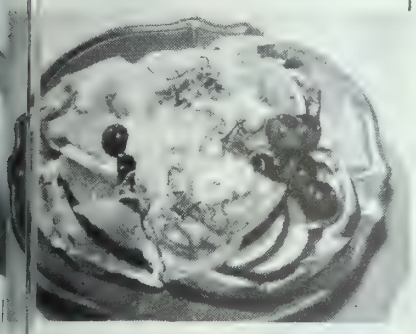
Buy It At Your Favorite Store
Tips on everything from gift wrapping to mending fishing rods in our new booklet "Tape It Easy." Send for your free copy today. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 926 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.
©1948 3M CO.

THE BEST BUTTER comes in

Paraffined Cartons
Most manufacturers package their highest quality butter in paraffined cartons. They rely on these sturdy, waxed packages to preserve fine flavor.
Also used to protect the quality and flavor of ice cream, margarine lard shortening and frozen foods.
For Finest Quality
Look For The PARAFFINED CARTON



VOSS WASHERS
TIME TESTED SINCE 1876
• Write For Free Booklet Describing Exclusive Features
VOSS BROS. MFG. CO., DAVENPORT, IA., U. S. A.

Arlene GREETING CARDS HAS EXTRA CASH
BUY DIRECT FROM MANUFACTURER
Sell Tomorrow's New and Different CALIFORNIA CHRISTMAS, RELIGIOUS, EVERYDAY GREETING CARDS and GIFT WRAPPINGS Today Exclusively from ARLENE your MANUFACTURER 100% Profit Write for free full-color folder and sample Don't delay Send no money
DEPT. B
4618 Pacific Blvd. Los Angeles, Calif.
ARLENE GREETINGS
DEPT. B
Allendale New Jersey

2 marks of distinction
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
GRAVY MASTER makes gravy good

Baker's Coconut Quickie #3

range sections — Mayonnaise anana slices — Whipped cream pple slices — Grapes
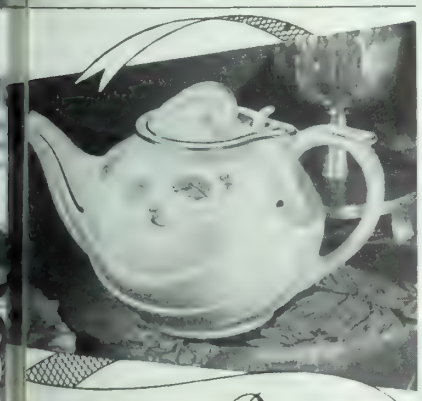
Baker's Coconut—toasted*

nge orange sections, apple slices, grapes anana slices (or other fruits in season) on plate. Top with mayonnaise, or a combination of mayonnaise and whipped cream. Sprinkle with toasted, chewy-wonderful Baker's Coconut. Another luscious coconut delicacy! Keep Baker's Coconut handy—use often. Sprinkle it on a homemade sundae, orange pudding, chocolate blanc mange. Your grocer has both Baker's Premium Shred and specially moist Baker's Southern Style.

*Toast coconut in moderate oven until delicately browned, stirring occasionally.

BAKER'S COCONUT

SECRET OF 00 GLAMOUR TRICKS



Products of General Foods

SEND! New Recipe Book. "Coconut Glamour Desserts"—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut, Box 28, Battle Creek, Mich.

HELP WANTED

Men and women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Jack and Jill and others. Big commissions. Devote spare time or full time. For details write to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 791 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Beauty Parade

The beauty of the Parade Teapot pictured above, like that of all genuine Hall China brewers, comes from an exquisite blend of lovely design, luxurious color, and gleaming gold decorations. Its use assures perfect tea every time, because it is made of secret process china that always stays sweet and clean. The Hall China Company—World's Largest Manufacturer of Decorated Teapots and Cooking China.

Hall

Teapots of superior quality china

SOLD BY ALL LEADING DEALERS

final extinction, and 12 per cent refused to express an opinion. Those who said they believed in life after death were then asked to describe their ideas of what form it would take. A few characteristic responses follow:

"I think when you die your spirit leaves your body and goes to heaven. When your spirit gets there, God is the judge of your sins just the same as a court here on earth."

"I believe in life after death for the good. I guess there is life after death for the bad too, only it would just be a worse life."

"I believe if we die right in this world we will be reborn in the next. Don't know what form we will return in but we will come back in some form."

"I believe the spirit goes to heaven and will see members of his family later."

"I believe that when a person dies he sleeps until the resurrection. Then in the twinkling of an eye he awakes a new man."

"I suppose there is something—won't be gold streets though."

Throughout these responses the major emphasis was on the pleasant expectation of reward, happiness, reunion—in short, heaven. Only 16 per cent of the people who expressed belief in an afterlife admitted that they could not even guess at its nature, and only 13 per cent mentioned hell. When asked specifically, however, "Do you think life afer death is divided into heaven and hell?" 52 per cent said "Yes." This larger percentage possibly derived from the objective phrasing of the question, in which hell was simply recognized as a possible feature of the next world, rather than a destination the individual need look forward to himself.

Civilization: A state of society in which a dog that breaks thirty seconds on a racing track gets more publicity than a man who writes a poem. —Dublin Opinion.

Since nearly three quarters of the American people believe in a judicial God and life after death, one would assume that religion must play an integral part in their lives. But does it? Apart from its effect on secular activities (which will be considered later) how deeply is the individual stirred by his relationship to God? It has already been shown that almost all Americans go to church sometimes, and sometimes pray. But with what degree of reverence, contrition or awe do they approach their God, Who, they admit, judges them and presumably fixes their ultimate roles in eternity?

Asked to name the main reason why they go to church, people adduced a variety of statements, which again fall into half a dozen main categories. The largest group, 32 per cent, define their motive for church attendance as the need or desire for some kind of inspiration or uplift. Roughly one fifth, 18 per cent, say they go to church in obedience to convention or duty. Other reasons cited by smaller groups in descending order include: "habit," "to hear the sermon," "to set a good example," "to hear the music," and "to see people."

The factors that lead people to pray are less sharply defined. For roughly half the people prayer seems to be a plea or petition for some kind of spiritual benefaction, variously defined as "comfort," "guidance," "protection," or "help in time of trouble." One bloc of 13 per cent saw prayer as an occasion to "give thanks"; 12 per cent specified that they prayed "for others"; 5 per cent said they prayed for forgiveness; and 4 per cent envisaged prayer as an act of worship and testimony of their love of God.

The effect of this more searching second class of questions is somewhat to abate the impression of extraordinary religious vitality created by the first general group. Although 95 per cent of the American people say they believe in God, it is by no means clear that they acknowledge the God of Biblical revelation, Who speaks to man from beyond himself and awakens in him a sense of dependency, moral unworthiness and obligation to

SO EASY TO MAKE

Two unique recipes for fall meals

HOLSUM

Salad Ring with Built-in Dressing

2 cups boiling water
1 package lemon gelatine
1 package orange gelatine
2 cups cold water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ teaspoon salt
8 Holsum Stuffed Olives
1 tsp. unflavored gelatine
2 tablespoons cold water
½ cup Holsum Salad Dressing
1½ cups finely shredded cabbage
2 tablespoons shredded pimiento

Cool — and easy! Holsum Salad Dressing is molded right into this salad. Olive Layer: Combine first 3 ingredients. Stir well. Add next 3 ingredients. Pour enough of this mixture into mold to cover bottom. Arrange sliced Holsum olives in this layer. Chill until firm. Salad Dressing Layer: Soften gelatine in water, heat until melted, then blend with salad dressing. Pour over olive layer. Chill until firm. Final Layer: Add remaining ingredients to chilled lemon-orange gelatine mixture. Pour into mold and chill thoroughly.

HOLSUM

Recipe for Sliced Ham with Spiced Jelly Sauce

4 servings sliced ham
½ cup Holsum Grape or Currant Jelly
2 teaspoons brown sugar
3 to 4 tablespoons vinegar
2 teaspoons Holsum Mustard

To give ham that magic touch, serve it this appetizing way! Pan fry the ham slices slowly. Remove to warm platter. Add delicious Holsum Grape or Currant Jelly, brown sugar, vinegar and fine Holsum Mustard to meat juices in pan. Simmer until jelly is melted. Strain sauce and serve over ham. Or, if a rich glaze is desired, return ham to frying pan and cook 1 minute in sauce before serving.

A CLEAN HOME

—and More Healthful, too—

with ROYAL

Take your choice of either a ROYAL revolving brush or "cylinder" model. With either you'll get the outstanding performance and reliability for which ROYAL has been famous for almost forty years.

ROYAL gives you . . (1) Easy, almost effortless operation. (2) Fast cleaning, due to strong suction and the wide, scientifically designed nozzle. (3) Great efficiency and thoroughness, due to ROYAL'S specialized method of applying suction and brushing. (4) Extraordinary durability, which means economy and value.

Your ROYAL Dealer will gladly show you why you, too, will be happy with ROYAL. If you don't know his name, write us. ROYAL Cleaners are sold only through local dependable Dealers.

Illustrated—ROYAL Model 259, revolving brush Super Grand—The newer than new ROYAL Model 260—the last word in "cylinders"

THE P. A. GEIER COMPANY, Cleveland 8, Ohio. Continental Electric Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

ROYAL

loads the world for value

UL

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

obey His will. In the Bible God appears in three aspects: as Creator, Judge and Redeemer.

One can infer that virtually everyone who believes in God recognizes Him as Creator and the ultimate author of life and source of being. But although three quarters of the people declare (on being asked specifically) that they acknowledge God as their Judge, the aggregate responses do not imply that they feel an abiding sense of being watched, commanded and understood by a reality above and beyond the social system in which they stand—that they face the eternal in every act and moment of their lives. And notably few reveal any understanding of God as Redeemer, Whose resources of love and mercy come down to man.

There is, therefore, little evidence in the returns that Americans look upon God as a source of forgiveness, suggesting perhaps that they have no sins to forgive. (It will be recalled that only 5 per cent said they prayed for forgiveness.) Yet unless this ultimate power of God is recognized and sought, God in the highest ethical dimensions of Biblical thought is denied. It would thus be at once possible for 95 per cent of the American people to "believe in" God, and yet for their society to be essentially materialistic.

"God is not merely the X of the unconditioned or undifferentiated eternal," Doctor Niebuhr points out. "God is revealed as loving will: and His will is action in creation, judgment and redemption."

The rather detached perspective from which the American people view God is implicit in other omissions from the categories of response. "I find little indication," Doctor Greenberg observed, "of any compulsion to obey God. Nor does there seem to be any suggestion that people think of God as the power that makes for justice and freedom in the world. They do not apparently associate God directly with their own behavior. They do not say to themselves, 'He is my Father.'"

From the responses relating to churchgoing and prayer, Father Ford drew similar conclusions. "I didn't notice," he said, "that too many felt a personal responsibility to give honor and glory to God. On the contrary, most people defined their motives for going to church purely in terms of satisfaction to themselves. There is, of course, a difference here between Catholic and Protestant tradition. We don't concede that church attendance can be a matter of individual choice; with us it is a serious obligation. We feel that people should go to church because they are faithful children of God, and it is their responsibility as His creatures to recognize His existence by public worship."

Although Father Ford's criticism was directed particularly at the American attitude on churchgoing, his reference to man's situation as a creature of God held deeper implications. For the most ignored canon in the Bible, though it was thundered by the prophets from Amos to Zechariah and reiterated throughout the New Testament, is that man sins when he forgets his creatureliness—his finiteness and his dependence on God. His primal sin is explicitly defined as pride—and by pride is meant self-sufficiency. Man rebels against God in refusing to admit the provisional state of his existence, in overestimating his knowledge and importance, and in trying to make himself secure through his own resources alone.

There is indeed a note of sinful pride in the confidence with which the majority of people expressed their ideas about heaven. For although the Bible has much to say about final judgment, it offers no definitive picture of life after death. Yet fewer than one third of the American people—29 per cent—admit they have no ideas on what is one of the most ambiguous subjects in Biblical revelation.

"It is unwise for Christians," Doctor Niebuhr observes, "to claim any knowledge of either the furniture of heaven or the temperature of hell or to be too certain about any of the details of the kingdom of God in which history is consummated. Faith must admit that 'it doth not yet appear what we shall be.'"

Horrors! You've forgotten to "see to" the toilet bowl! And guests coming. But, it's all right, lady—keep your orchids on. Just sprinkle Sani-Flush in the toilet bowl. No fuss, muss or feathers. No work. Sani-Flush cleans away stains and film—disinfects—leaves only odorless toilet bowl freshness.

Safe in all toilet systems. Works in hard or soft water. At everybody's grocer's. Two handy sizes. The Hygienic Products Company, Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

USE TWICE WEEKLY

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CASH MONEY! Men and women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Holiday and Jack and Jill. Big cash commissions. Devote spare or full time. Write to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 793 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Happy Helper!

Elsie's Dairy Truck provides tops in fun. As the brilliantly-colored truck is pulled along, Beau-Regard bangs on the large nickel bell. There's fun galore delivering the real milk bottles. 16 other Fisher-Price Toys assure hours of fun. Ask for them at your favorite toy department.

FISHER-PRICE TOYS, Inc., East Aurora, N. Y.

FREE- Colorful folder showing 17 Fisher-Price Toys with catchy rhymes. Or enclose 10c for our big 16-page catalog showing the toys in full color. It's worth more than this purely as a picture book.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____ L 11

FISHER-PRICE TOYS

Sew-Gem, the most modern of electric sewing machines for the home, brings undreamed of sewing pleasures to women everywhere.

New features — found only in Sew-Gem, make sewing easy for beginners and experienced alike.

Available in Secretary Desk, Writing Desk, Occasional Table and Portable Models. See Sew-Gem at your dealer's, or write us direct.

MANUFACTURED EXCLUSIVELY BY MANUFACTURING CO

DEPT. LJ. ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS

EARN $50.00 • SELL $1 Boxes
OF NEW, GORGEOUS CHRISTMAS CARDS
EASY FAST • Write TODAY
Take easy orders, earn big cash profits! Lovely, colorful Everyday or Christmas assortments featuring "Imprinting" Relative Seals," to personalize each card. Profitable "Business Getter Blotters" our gift to help you get more sales. Sell friends, relatives, buying people $1 box—make 50¢ cash fast—100% profit! GREATEST VALUE EVER OFFERED. Write today for samples on approval
HOUSE OF HARMON • DEPT. T-21 • HARMON, N.Y.

HAND KNITTING
Yarns SAVE!!! FREE SAMPLE CARD
BUY FROM MANUFACTURERS
WORSTED • SPORT YARN
HEATHERS • CASHMERE
INSTRUCTIONS WITH ORDER
PETER PAN YARNS • 363 GRAND ST., N. Y. 2, N. Y.

WAR SURPLUS
NYLON THREAD
Amazing Strong Thread used to sew Parachutes
NOW AVAILABLE
For Home Use...
GIANT SPOOL only $1.69
BLACK or WHITE
APPROX 5000 FEET
This genuine Du Pont Nylon thread is practically unbreakable. Perfect for keeping buttons on tight, mending children's and work clothing, linens and tatting. Perfect for crocheting. Used by Air Force on parachutes because of its amazing strength and dependability. Here is your chance to get a giant spool of 5000 feet, almost a mile of Nylon thread at the sensational low war surplus close-out price of only $1.69. Ideal for hand or sewing-machine.
SEND NO MONEY, TEST AT OUR RISK
Just send your name and address. Specify white or black or two giant spools for only $3.29. On arrival, deposit only $1.69 per spool $3.29 for two spools plus C.O.D. postage on our guarantee if you are not delighted, you can return in 10 days and your money back. Cash with order, we pay postage. Limited Supply. Write Today.
LEEWARD PRODUCTS
Dept. F-31-P, 189 W. Madison St., Chicago 2, Ill.

A further deduction from the second group of questions is that the American public's knowledge of religious fact and dogma remains at the Sunday-school level. No appreciable differences appeared between the ideas of college graduates and those with only a grade-school education.

"It is obvious," Doctor Greenberg declared, "that religious education ceases in this country in the elementary stage. While the mind that enters a university may be ready for adult fare in the secular field, all it gets in the religious field is infant food.

"How many college graduates can answer an elementary theological question? Take the question of monotheism, for example. All of us are quite sure our faith is superior to polytheism. But why are we? Why is it good to believe in one God only—instead of five? The Jewish prophets gave the world the idea of believing in only one God. But why is this idea so important to man?

"The answer is implicit in Malachi 2:10. 'Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother?' In other words, the fatherhood of God implies the brotherhood of man. In a polytheistic world each man can say, 'My god is better than your god; hence my ancestor is better than your ancestor.' But one God means one mankind. That is the great ethical implication of monotheism. How many people know it?"

One might also ask how many Christians can define Christianity. How many Protestants can explain why they believe themselves to be Presbyterians rather than Methodists, or Baptists rather than Episcopalians?

Wit is the salt of conversation, not the food. —WILLIAM HAZLITT.

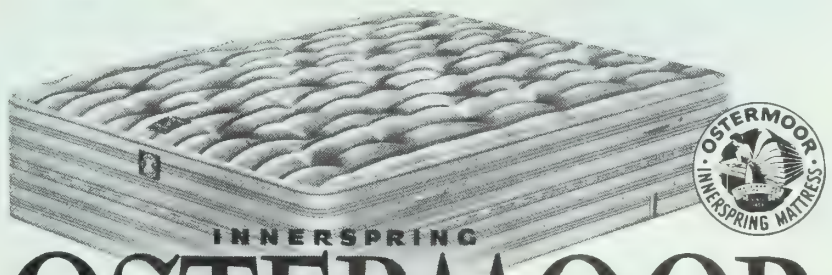
How many can name any of the philosophical differences between Catholic and Protestant doctrine, or between Christian ethics and Mosaic law?

The contrast between the quantity and quality of religious energy in America, however, points to an important corollary. The mere fact that so many adults still cling stubbornly to the elementary ideas they learned as children is significant evidence of the vitality and compelling power of religion.

III

For a conclusive measure of the force of religion in America, one must look for its effects in man's social behavior. There are, of course, wide variations between personal and group ethics. Nevertheless, a deeper insight into the nature of U. S. democracy may be gained by exploring the interplay of religion and the code of conduct by which Americans live. This is what the third and final category of questions in this survey attempts to do.

As a crude, preliminary test of conscience, people were asked, "Would you say that you honestly try to lead a good life?" To this 91 per cent replied, "Yes," suggesting that Americans by and large aspire to virtue; 2 per cent said they didn't know; 3 per cent refused to answer; and only 4 per cent said no, they did not try to lead a good life.



Since in his attempt to lead a good life man is continually harried by his innate self-centeredness and self-love, the truly good man is aware of this inner conflict and the saint suffers agony.

To assess the intensity of their effort people were asked, "How much of the time are you aware of trying?" Of those who said they honestly did try, 44 per cent declared they were conscious of the struggle "almost all the time"; 26 per cent said they were "often" aware of it; while 21 per cent said "occasionally," "seldom" or "hardly ever." But 82 per cent admitted that the battle in no way interfered with their happiness or enjoyment of life.

In order to define this self-appraisal more precisely, people were asked to state briefly what principles of behavior they associated

Inside and Out
ORGANDIE CURTAINS LOOK LOVELIER with SAYLERIZED PERMANENT FINISH
THEY WEAR LONGER

No Starch Required!
Saylerized Organdies resist soilage, need less laundering — and so wear longer. This finish minimizes lint — keeps these billowy white beauties crisp — even on damp days, even after countless washings. No stretchers needed. You'll find the Saylerized label on curtains of famous makes, also on cotton wash fabrics and handkerchiefs. Look for it!

if it's Sleeping you are missing!
It's time to turn to Ostermoor for glorious, buoyant, relaxing comfort. Spine soothing rest— all night long...Full Innerspring construction.

INNERSPRING
OSTERMOOR
AMERICA'S QUALITY MATTRESS FOR NEARLY 100 YEARS

FOOT AND LEG PAINS?
Rheumatic-like foot and leg pains, tired, aching feet, sore heels or callouses on soles, may be due to weak or fallen arches. Dr. Scholl's Arch Supports and exercise help give relief by removing muscular and ligamentous strain—the cause of your pain. Light, flexible. Adjustable as the condition of your arches improves. Expertly fitted at Shoe and Dept. Stores and at Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Shops in principal cities. For FREE Foot booklet and address of your local dealer, write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Dept. ASK, Chicago 10, Ill.

Dr Scholl's ARCH SUPPORTS
There is a Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Appliance or Remedy for Every Common Foot Trouble ew

Sunbeam
AUTOMATIC
MIXMASTER
REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

two great new automatic features

IAL YOUR FAVORITE RECIPE

New AUTOMATIC JUICE EXTRACTOR

Strainer automatically joggles the juice out of the pulp.

New—a complete juice extractor that juices oranges and lemons in a jiffy—and automatically joggles the screened strainer to shake the juice out of the pulp. Completely automatic. Fast. Easy-to-use. Easy-to-clean. Another Sunbeam Mixmaster exclusive advantage.

New AUTOMATIC BOWL-SPEED CONTROL

Famous POWERFUL MOTOR

Because MIX-MASTER has a powerful, patented-governor controlled motor, the beaters automatically maintain Full Power on all speeds.

The beaters never vary their speed as batter thins-out or thickens-up whether set slow or fast, for EVEN mixing.

Now—you never have to turn the mixing bowl by hand, even when beating eggs. Nor do you ever have to slow it down by hand with the heaviest batters. One of the beaters of the new Mixmaster has a control button that contacts the inside bottom surface of the bowl, keeping beater-speed and bowl-speed uniform—automatically.

IS NEW FREEDOM FROM THE TIRING ARM-WORK OF COOKING, BAKING, GETTING MEALS

new Sunbeam Mixmaster gives you all these special advantages you want and when you buy a food mixer. So be sure the mixer you get (or the one you receive) is the original and the ONLY Mixmaster. There's only one by that name.
ster puts that EXTRA deliciousness, EXTRA success into every recipe. Nearly on enthusiastic users are its best advertisements. Though tremendous popularity beam Mixmasters scarce, despite constantly growing production—hold to and be richly rewarded. See your dealer.

SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., So. Toronto 9 with "a really good person." Some singled out the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule. Others specified such precepts as "Be good to your family and neighbors," "Pay your debts," and "Don't go to wild parties." Many were completely vague—"Just do what you think is right."

Given his own definition, each person was then asked to estimate how close he came to achieving his standard of goodness. Nearly a fifth of the people, 18 per cent, credited themselves with total success; 28 per cent declared they went three quarters of the way toward realizing their ethical ideal; 32 per cent said they went at least halfway; and only 7 per cent admitted they had scaled less than half the pinnacle of virtue.

As an additional check on America's sense of goodness, those who had expressed a belief in heaven were asked if they themselves expected to go there. More than three fifths of them said optimistically that they did—a ratio that the French philosopher Pascal could perhaps have forecast when he wrote, "There are only two kinds of men—the righteous who believe themselves sinners; the rest, sinners who believe themselves righteous."

The next sequence of questions attempted to ascertain the extent to which Americans consciously associate religion with their conduct. Asked to explain as best they could why they endeavor to lead good lives, almost one third—comprising the largest single category—gave hedonistic reasons involving "inner satisfaction" and "peace of mind." The next largest group, 19 per cent, specified "influence on other people," 15 per cent mentioned belief in an afterlife, 14 per cent spoke of "duty," 12 per cent cited the teachings of religion, 10 per cent said, without mentioning religion, that "they were brought up that way"; and 8 per cent pointed to the sanctions of society—i.e., that it doesn't pay not to be good. (The percentages exceed 100 as some respondents gave more than one answer.)

The third question in this series on motives asked people to name the principal source from which they derived their ideas of right and wrong. In response 55 per cent specified their parents and the habits of thought their parents imparted to them in childhood; while 29 per cent cited the teachings of religion. Thus for the third time one encounters the significant ratio: Roughly one quarter of the American people feel that religion provides the moral force underlying their behavior.

ALTHOUGH it can be argued that the ethical concepts of everyone's parents derive ultimately from religious dogma, the striking fact is that nearly three quarters of the American people do not consciously connect religion with their adult judgments of right and wrong. This finding—considered together with the fact that most of the people readily trace those judgments right back to their childhood—lends additional weight to the conclusion that the average American's religious thinking has not advanced beyond the Sunday-school level.

But how can the strictly secular responses to this last trio of questions be reconciled with the assertion by a heavy majority that they recognize God as their Judge? The apparent contradiction vanishes in the light of the high valuation placed by most people on their own virtue. Since the individual American believes himself to be good, he does not need to worry about God now, today; his ideas of right and wrong must be God's ideas too. So when at last he meets God as Judge, God will adjudicate his case by the old comfortable standards he has always enjoyed. What happens after that is suggested by the figures showing that the overwhelming majority of people view hell as a repository for others only.

The partition which Americans erect between their religious convictions and their worldly affairs is most conspicuously revealed by the question: "Would you say your religious beliefs have any effect on your ideas on politics and business?"

To this 54 per cent said "No"; 39 per cent said "Yes"; and 7 per cent didn't know or didn't answer.

There is, however, one basic ground on which the relationship between man's belief and his behavior is most explicitly, if unconsciously, revealed. That is in his response to the law of love. Although the religious introvert, the mystic, can perhaps build his exclusive ladder to heaven through love of God alone, the second great commandment, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, can hardly be a private matter. It stands over all human relationships; and his aspiration toward it constitutes for the Christian the supreme ethical testimony of his faith. Love is, indeed, the very quintessence of Christian ethics; in a sense it is Christianity itself. It is the ultimate virtue, just as pride (which discloses itself as contempt for one's neighbor) is the ultimate sin. By the value Americans place on the law of love and the approximation of their obedience to it individually and

From the standpoint of this survey the notable point here is that only slightly more than one quarter of the people mentioned religion—either the prospect of immortality or the impact of teachings—as the ethical governor of their actions. This ratio reappears in the responses to two related but more specific questions. One, asking people to choose from several possibilities the factor they considered most important in compelling them to lead good lives, revealed that by far the most persuasive force in human behavior—named by almost half the respondents—is "the effect on myself and others now." Fewer than one quarter picked hope of reward after death, and only one twentieth mentioned fear of ultimate punishment.

This last small fraction, incidentally, becomes very interesting when one compares it with a previous figure: 52 per cent of the people believe in hell, but only 5 per cent have any fear, not to say expectation, of going there.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Small Bee In Clover

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

The small boy with the corn-silk hair
Was all over the train,
Like quicksilver he was not there,
And then popped up again.

He was alive out to the tips
Of his ears and feet,
His shoes were boy, his trousers boy,
He danced like lambent heat.

He gripped two seat arms, and he ran
On nothing but thin air,
Stood on his head and ran as well
Shady-side-up there.

I looked about to see why this Small boy had run wild,
And, sure as sunlight, there she was,
A honey-haired girl child.

No wonder the boy was showing off
All his curves and mind,
The wisdom in his head, his feet,
His before, behind.

Any man would do the same
Though not so well all over,
Never expect a bee to be Calm in blossomed clover.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

ollectively, one can best weigh America's aim to be a Christian nation.

As a preliminary test of the perspective om which Americans view the whole idea loving their neighbors, they were asked if ey felt it was easier or harder to obey this w today than it was in the time of Christ. hose who thought it was harder outnumered those who thought it was easier two to ne. Among the reasons they gave were: Life is more complex now," and "Today 's every man for himself."

However, when asked, "As things stand oday, how far do you think it's possible o go in following this teaching and still et ahead in the world?" more than half the eople replied, "All the way." And to the uestion, "If you yourself followed this ule ALL THE WAY, what would you do ifferently—that is, how would it change our life?" half replied that they wouldn't lo anything differently—or they were already following the rule all the way; another per cent didn't know or refused to answer.

To bring this issue into a smaller focus, people were asked, "Thinking over the last 24 hours, can you think of a time when you yourself might have acted differently f you'd been able to follow this rule all he way?" Nearly two thirds of the people, 62 per cent, said "No," and another 13 per cent said "Don't know." Only one person in four admitted recalling an instance when he had fallen short of the idea of love of neighbor. A further question on this theme asked, "Among the people you come in contact with, how far would you say most of them go in following the idea of love of fellow men?" A huge majority, 82 per cent, agreed that other people went only part way.

Placing the issue in a specific frame of reference, another question asked, "Thinking over the last week, can you recall any incident, big or little, when you went OUT OF YOUR WAY to do something for somebody—not a close friend or relative?" Nearly two thirds of the people, 64 per cent, said "Yes." Of those who described their acts of benevolence, some revealed genuine forethought and effort in behalf of others:

"I helped all day at two hospitals,"

"I got a job for a fellow at a gas station."

"I went shopping for a sick neighbor."

Others had reacted charitably to sudden situtations:

"I stopped and took a small boy and his tricycle off a busy highway."

"I helped a man carry a big drum of oil."

"A woman fell on the sidewalk and I helped her get home."

Many simply cited acts of routine courtesy:

"I answered a stranger's questions for directions."

"A lady in a store had a lot of packages and I helped her get them together."

"I led a blind soldier into a meeting."

Although no attempt was made to classify these episodes or draw any distinction between authentic good works and common politeness, the ability shown by so many people to summon from memory the little occasions when they "did something for somebody" provides additional evidence of the American's keen cognizance of his virtue.

Two more questions on love concluded the survey. The first, relating the Christian ethic to society in the widest sense, asked: "Can you think of some problems of the day that would be solved if everybody in the world lived according to the rule of love of fellow man?" To this, 81 per cent said they could, and proceeded to name them. By far the greatest number, 46 per cent, spoke of "war," "United Nations," "world peace," and other ways of defining international problems. A bloc of 12 per cent said flatly that all problems would be solved; 10 per cent made vague statements about jealousy, greed, selfishness in general; 8 per cent cited race problems; and 3 per cent specified labor problems.

The final and most searching question of all asked each individual to look within himself and state honestly whether he thought he really obeyed the law of love under cer-

Mmm! Creamy-rich chocolate Ice Cream velvet-smooth!

full-flavored!

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

1 can Ten-B-Low
1½ cups water
2 squares bitter chocolate* or 2 tablespoons of cocoa 2 teaspoons vanilla

a can makes a quart

1. Place Ten-B-Low in mixing bowl. Gradually add water, vanilla and chocolate, (which has been melted over boiling water) or cocoa. Mix thoroughly.
2. Transfer to freezing tray and freeze solid. You merely add water and flavoring because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks you need for extra-rich ice cream.
3. Spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into bowl. Beat to a consistency a little softer than creamy mashed potatoes.
4. Return to freezing tray and freeze. Ten-B-Low is NOT a powder, NOT a so-called "mix," but a genuine ice cream in heavy concentrated form! Get several cans of Ten-B-Low today!

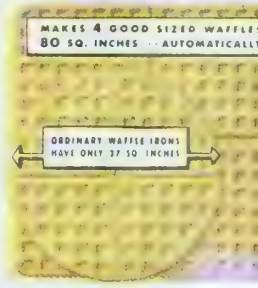
*Do not use sweetened chocolate or chocolate syrup—there is sufficient sugar in Ten-B-Low.

Ten-B-Low
CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

SEE how many wonderful flavor combinations go with Ten-B-Low. Write for free recipe folder to Sally Koss, Ten-B-Low Co., Dept. B-811, Columbus 16, Ohio

Sunbeam
AUTOMATIC
WAFFLE BAKER
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

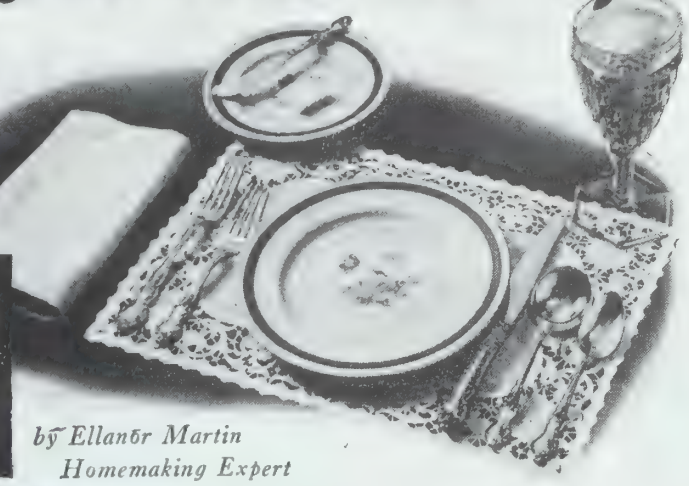


Makes 4 good-sized waffles at one tim
...Automatically

Serves 4 People at one time!

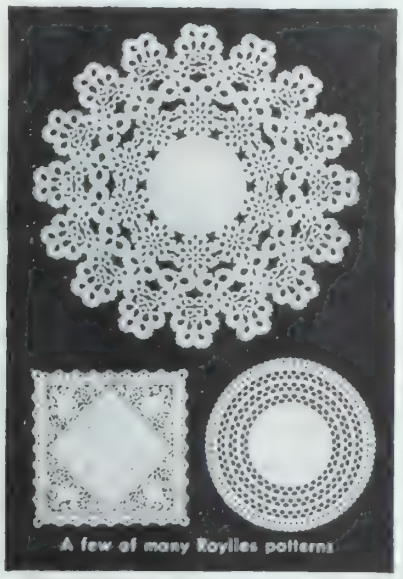
Four golden, crispy-tender waffles all in one baking. No waiting "between waffles." No embarrassment over "who's going to be next."

You get 4 waffles at a time—four perfect, generous-sized waffles, piping hot, ready to serve quickly and easily. Each section of the Sunbeam's famous four-section waffle has 20 square inches—more than one-half the size of an ordinary round waffle—and the ideal, appetizing size for a single serving.



Fully automatic, too. Red indicator light tells when to put in batter and when waffle is done. Has exclusive, new-type over-flow rim, built right into the lower grid, that prevents batter from running over the sides even though you put in more batter than required. You can set it for light, medium or dark waffles.

Though great demand has made Sunbeam Waffle Bakers scarce—hold to your purpose and be richly rewarded. See your dealer.



© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., So., Toronto 9

Tips on table settings

by Ellanor Martin
Homemaking Expert

1. Give every meal an inviting look with crisp, white, lace paper Roylie place mats. They're as beautiful as real linen! Hard to believe? Yes, but seeing is believing. And they cost less than the mere laundering of linens. Handsomer than plastics. More convenient and economical too! Make Roylies standard equipment for meals in your home.

2. Use matching Roylies elsewhere on your table—under glasses, under salads, on dessert plates, etc. Rounds, squares and oblongs—in many sizes and patterns, from 5" round to 10" x 15". At 5-and-10's, neighborhood and department stores.

ROYLIES
Lace Paper Doylies

Trade Mark "Roylies" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.—
Royal Lace Paper Works, (Inc.), Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

tain special conditions. The conditions and the responses follow:

	YES	NO	NO OPINION
a. When your fellow man is a business competitor	78%	10%	12%
b. When your fellow man is a member of a different race . . .	80	12	8
c. When your fellow man belongs to a different religion from yours	90	5	5
d. When your fellow man is an enemy of your country	25	63	12
e. When your fellow man is a member of a political party that you think is dangerous?	27	57	16

From this concluding table some notable facts emerge. For example, only one American in four even thinks he observes the law of love when political or national enmity is involved. The majority frankly renounce it.

To any student of history this confession should cause little surprise. For in every civilization men have relinquished their personal ethics beneath the pressures brought by the collective egoism of the group or nation to which they belonged. "What lies beyond the nation, the community of mankind," Doctor Niebuhr points out, "is too vague to inspire devotion."

THE most striking element in the returns on this question, therefore, is not that most of the American people put national and political allegiance above religious conviction. The remarkable point is that as many as one quarter think that they practice the highest, transcendent form of love—love of one's enemy. The implications of this claim are best revealed in the light of the Sermon on the Mount: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies . . . For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? . . . And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? . . . Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

The counsel to love one's enemy is a counsel of perfection, specifically defined as such by Christ and historically exemplified by His death on the Cross. One must ask then why so many Americans feel that they actually attain this ultimate norm. An answer to this question is suggested by the figures in the other categories of the table above: 78 per cent of the American people say they love their business competitors, 80 per cent say they love members of another race, 90 per cent say they love members of another religion.

These figures are dramatically incompatible with the facts of American behavior as revealed on every level of national existence today. The Christian meaning of love is qualified by the phrase "as thyself," which presupposes an unselfish concern for the interests of one's neighbor without regard for one's own interests. Such a standard of conduct is obviously not even approximated, for example, in business competition, where each man necessarily places his own interests above all others, no matter how scrupulously he may adhere to the relative demands of honesty and "fair play." And it is openly repudiated in such other aspects of American life as labor conflict, anti-Semitism, and the inequality and discrimination to which racial minorities like the Negroes, Mexicans and Nisei are subjected.

If nine tenths of the American people love those of another religion, how can one explain the exclusion of American Jews from certain colleges and professional schools, residential and resort communities, business and social organizations? Or the subtler forms of anti-Semitic prejudice which recent studies show are steadily increasing in the U. S.? Can one ascribe these manifestations of antipathy solely to the five in a hundred who concede they do not love members of another faith?

And if four fifths of the American people love members of another race, how explain the humiliation that is visited on the Amer-

PROTECT YOUR PRECIOUS SNAPSHOTS WI

NUACE
MOUNTING CORNERS

Stick quick! Stay stuck! Thanks to NuAce super adhesive! Best for stamp mounting. Best for card mounting. Package of 100 for 10c. 12 colors & transparent! Get NuAce Mounting Corners today! At stores everywhere!

Ace Art Company • Reading, Massachusetts

Bienvenue à QUÉBEC

Plan now a wonderful, different, winter vacation in la Province de Québec — easily accessible by rail, road or plane. Keen, clear mountain skies, brilliant snow and old-time French Canadian hospitality await you in comfortable modern inns and hotels.

LA PROVINCE DE
Québec

For help planning your vacation, or for information concerning the unsurpassed industrial opportunities in our province, write the Provincial Publicity Bureau, Parliament Buildings, Quebec City, Canada.

A HAPPINESS PIANO
FOR CHRISTMAS 1948

Hours of joy will be yours this Christmas and all through the years with a Gulbransen Spinet in your home. You'll like its simplicity of beauty, its rightness of design. And most certainly, you'll like its clear, rich tone, its fine quality and performance, famous for over 50 years. For a Christmas surprise to the family, for the children's happy future, choose a Gulbransen.

You'll be happier with a
GULBRANSEN
SPINET PIANO

FREE BOOKLET

GULBRANSEN COMPANY
Dept. LJ, 816 N. Kedzie Ave., Chicago 51
Please send free booklet showing "America's Smartest Piano Fashions."

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

Fincastle FABRICS

couch throws so beautiful so economical
so handy

Single Bed Cover at Home or School

Automobile Use

You'll find these beautiful homespun-textured throws so useful in so many ways! Add beauty and color when used on divans or armchairs, serve as spreads for single beds or day beds, utility auto robes, or picnic throws, size 60" x 108". Can be split to make matching draperies. See them at your dealers!

"Interiors Beautiful" offers helpful decorating hints. Send 25¢ (stamps or coin) to 1324 McHenry, Louisville

Fincastle FABRICS
LOUISVILLE TEXTILES, INC. LOUISVILLE, KY.

REALSILK MEANS QUALITY

FOR MEN Socks
Neckwear
Shirts
Underwear
Pajamas
Sportswear
Accessories

FOR WOMEN
Hosiery
Lingerie
Dresses
Coats
Rainwear
Sportswear
Accessories

Your Realsilk representative brings this famous line to your home or office.

Profitable full-time or part-time sales opportunities for men and women.

Contact local Branch Sales Office or write . . .
REAL SILK HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
Indianapolis 6, Indiana

YARNS AT LOW PRICES
MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
FREE INSTRUCTIONS
WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CARD
Beads: Supreme, Instructions for BEADED BAGS
WONOCO YARN CO., 371 GRAND ST., NEW YORK 2

PAINS
*Quicker more thorough RELIEF and aches of RHEUMATISM NEURALGIA
NEURITIS
LUMBAGO
CHEST COLDS

YOU needn't suffer the misery of these aches and pains when it's so easy to get blessed relief. Just rub on FAST-ACTION Rub A-535 where you hurt. Then feel the warming, pain-relieving agents go right to work to ease your misery. You won't soil your clothes or bed linen either, because Rub A-535 is GREASELESS and STAINLESS — rubs in quickly.

Antiphlogistine
*TAKE A TIP from more than 2,000 other sufferers. Use FAST-ACTION Rub A-535! 8 out of 10 of them wrote us that they liked Rub A-535 BETTER than the rubs, liniments, balms or analgesics they formerly used.
Rub A-535

ican Negro? How explain the denial to him of the very lowest rung of social justice—equality of opportunity? How explain segregation in the armed forces and in the nation's capital and all the other forms of disinheritance that are imposed upon him by white Americans in contempt and pride? Can one attribute these rejections of Christianity exclusively to the twelve Americans in a hundred who admit they do not love members of another race?

It is evident, therefore, that a profound gulf lies between America's avowed ethical standards and the observable realities of national life. What may be more alarming is the gap between what Americans think they do and what they do do. The extent of this national schizophrenia is made perfectly clear by the paradox that (1) eight out of ten Americans think that most of America's problems would be solved by absolute adherence to the law of love, and (2) eight out of ten Americans think they themselves obey the law of love. Thus someone else is at fault. Here indeed is a revelation of man's final sin, which Luther defined as his unwillingness to admit he is a sinner.

Doctor Niebuhr, Father Ford and Doctor Greenberg agreed that the basic impression they derived from this concluding series of questions was one of national self-satisfaction. The American, individually and collectively, has an easy conscience. Involved in foreign hostilities, torn by social hysterias, imperiled by the dissolution of his family life, his plunder of national resources and the menace of atomic war, the American nevertheless clings to his good opinion of himself.

The essence of giving is that you should expect nothing in return. If you do it isn't giving, it's barter.
—ALAN BLAIR: More Bright Brevities. (F. Muller, Ltd.).

The causes underlying the American's resistance to the plainest refutations of his self-esteem are suggested by certain anomalies in his own testimony within this survey. For example, the great majority of American people profess sincere religious conviction and claim substantial success in living up to the principles of their faith. But at the same time most of them admit that they do not apply those principles to the major preoccupations of their social existence—business and politics.

Citing this confession of duality in American ethics, Father Ford observed, "There appear to be two departments to their thinking, one personal and the other more or less public. It does not always follow that the man who is the most faithful churchgoer is also most distinguished in business for justice and for consideration of his employees. One sometimes finds a very pillar of the church who is a gorilla in the business world. And by the same token people who are not churchgoers may often seem more sensitive to social evil than those who are.

"I think the church has fallen down in its mission by too easily accepting this dichotomy. The churches have weakened their influence by weakening their challenge. They have not impelled people to lift themselves up to the highest requirements of their faith. Instead they have brought religion down to where they think their membership wants it to be. They tone down sermons because they fear their own congregations. And sometimes they are very slow to discover where their conscience lies. The Jim Crow churches are vivid examples of this. A Jim Crow church is a denial of Christianity. What good is religion if it adjusts to what the people want, and by so doing contradicts the essential verities it should proclaim?"

Doctor Greenberg also looked askance at organized religion. "This survey shows that there is a much broader base of religious activity in America than is generally recognized," he said. "If there isn't a more inten-

(Continued on Page 239)

Luxury Sheer Curtains... at an Amazingly Low Price!

See these airy, wind-swept lovelies. Examine their magic sheerness, their breathtaking, lacy texture reminiscent of fine imported laces... their generous length and width, their extra fullness. Consider their washability. And then look at the price ...under $5 per pair! At fine stores, or write for dealer's name. Other Beacon Net Washable Curtains from $1.95 a pair. Beacon Looms, Inc., Dept. S, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York.

beacon-nets® washable curtains
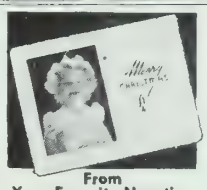
FOR EVERY ROOM IN THE HOME
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

See a Pearce before you buy



PEARCE
All-Wool
BLANKETS

America's Finest Blankets by America's Oldest Blanket Mill

A source of never ending pride and joy to the modern homemaker

$8.95 to $17.95
PEARCE MANUFACTURING CO.
LATROBE, PA.

From Your Favorite Negative

PERSONAL PHOTO CHRISTMAS CARDS including envelopes as low as 20 for $1
(plus 10¢ Shipping)

Yulecards are handsome photo Christmas cards made from your favorite negative of child, family, pet, doorway or familiar scene, etc. See card before you buy.

FREE sample . . . send us negative of your snapshot with 3c return postage. (After Nov. 15 send 6c for 1st class return postage.) We will make sample of our deluxe style from your negative. If negative unavailable, add 50c for making new negative from your snapshot. Negative returned with sample. No obligation whatsoever. Satisfaction guaranteed. Offer expires Nov. 30.

YULECARDS Box 310-Q QUINCY 69, MASS.

Cleans Quickly

America's Largest Selling Silver Cleaner

★ BUFFET BEGINNER

Here's your holiday first course—gala, sun-rich Dole Pineapple Juice to accompany a platter covered with colorful canapes. Bright golden pineapple juice served ice-cold in tinkle-thin, clear glasses pricks appetites, makes friends, puts families in the mood for the feast that follows. Start the meal with Dole—for a delightful send-off!

Pineapple hits for the holidays—

★ COLD PLATTER, PARTY STYLE

Turkey slices ought to look as exciting as they taste. So if you're planning a cold supper, team the turkey with baked ham, then wreathe Dole pineapple slices with chopped parsley, and alternate with plump, spiced crab apples around the edge of the meat platter. Presto! You have a main dish to make you and your table a success!

all decked out by DOLE

★ PINEAPPLE MINCE PIE

Give mince pie a tropic touch! How? With a surprise layer of new-style Dole Crushed Pineapple under its top crust. Just spread those tempting, juicy cubelets generously over a thick layer of mincemeat in a pastry-lined pan, cover with top crust, and bake as usual. Serve hot. Remember—every can of Dole Crushed you buy is the new, crisp-cut Crushed.

★ By Patricia Collier
DOLE HOME ECONOMIST
Hawaiian Pineapple Company, Ltd.
215 Market St., San Francisco 6, California

(Continued from Page 237)

eligious life, it is because the church has he techniques for bringing its message ellingly to the people. Our fathers used me to the synagogue with fear and left hope. This generation comes without and leaves without hope. People today they have no sins—they have no con- isness of spiritual inadequacy—and that e cause of much of the world's disillu- ment. A high opinion of oneself is the soil of which cynicism grows."

r the ultimate causes of America's easy cience and self-esteem, Doctor Niebuhr ed behind the facade of organized reli- and pointed to certain deep and serious uptions and dilutions of the original ical doctrine on which it was reared. ng these one of the most pernicious is the lency of modern liberal thought to as- e that man lives up to his ethical stand- simply because he endorses them.

The whole history of human self-right- sness," says Doctor Niebuhr, "proves man always judges himself not from standpoint of what he does but from the dpoint of his knowledge of what he ht to do. Assuming that he obeys 'the ' because he knows it, he throws the s of disobedience upon his fellow men. . . . greatest sin of moralistic Christianity ts tendency to encourage the assump- n that men are as good as the ideals justice and love which they entertain."

Another harmful per- sion of orthodox ristian thought, for ich liberal Protes- tism again must be d responsible, lies in delusion that ful- ment of the law of e is an easy possi- ty. The high per- tage of Americans o think they do e their fellow men icates the degree to ich the norm has n degraded. For classical Christian- love represents the imate ethos, the end m of morals, the cri- ion of perfection be- e which all man's fitful flickerings of good l are mere feeble approximations.

One of the most tragic errors of modern ristianity, therefore, Doctor Niebuhr nts out, is the tolerance with which it has rmitted men to confuse their own partial d relative standards of brotherhood and tice with the transcendent ideal of love. long as they fail to see the heights that ar above their highest efforts, they will dge themselves by their own attainments d claim that their highest is the highest. t every human beneficence, every exten- n of justice, inevitably falls short of the timate possibility of loving one's neighbor s thyself." And the very keystone of Chris- n ethics is the uneasy conscience which ints past all approximations of human love the Cross, the supreme symbol of self- nying love in history.

THE true relationship between the higher w of love and all other levels of human vir- e is made clear in Jesus' meeting with the h young man who had kept all the com- andments but whose uneasy conscience arned him his goodness was not enough. What lack I yet?" he asked. Jesus replied, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou ast and give it to the poor, and thou shalt ave treasure in heaven: and come and fol- w me." The young man went away "sor- wful"; and Jesus' disciples, realizing that is demand called for a complete disavowal f all self-interest, asked in amazement, Who then can be saved?" Jesus' response o this question contains the very core of Christian doctrine: "With men this is im- ossible; but with God all things are possi- le."

Here is the key to all the apparent con- radictions and inconsistencies disclosed in his survey of America's religion and ethics. It says in effect: Every man tends to regard himself as the center of existence and feels his own necessities more keenly than those of all others; hence the conflict between love of one's neighbor and love of oneself is in- soluble from the standpoint of man's own resources and can be resolved only with the help of God. So behind the second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neigh- bor as thyself," stands the imperative of the first, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."

To the extent that men ignore the words "as thyself" in the second commandment, they overlook the phrase "with all thy heart and all thy soul and all thy mind" in the first. For simple obedience is not enough: Orthodox Christianity demands complete surrender of the self to God. And this is the primal requirement of faith, just as the self's refusal to admit its dependence on God is man's primal sin. Without love of God all human love between person and person is frustrated by man's love of himself.

One of the deepest insights of Christian ethics is its realization that only from the higher ground of the spirit attained through love of God can man discern the evil in him- self and avoid the dishonesty of attributing his sins to others; lacking this contrition, he falls into self-righteousness which, as St. Paul clearly saw, is the source of all the so- cial sins—injustice, cruelty, greed.

These theological subtleties bear directly on all America's prob- lems today. For the fence which the indi- vidual American ad- mits he erects between his religious and his secular life becomes an insurmountable wall in his group activities. History shows that the consummate form of self-righteousness blooms in man's col- lective behavior.

Every group—whether a political party, a corporation, a labor union or a government—pretends that its righteousness is the final righteousness; and the force of this pretense is such that all individual ethics—sympathy, compas- sion, forgiveness—are overwhelmed and engulfed by the group's impersonal will-to- power.

It is easy for Americans to see how the vio- lence of collective egoism can override the gentler impulses of personal morality in other national groups—in Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, Imperial Japan and the Soviet Union.

In each of those nations the state usurped the role of God, ignoring its depend- ence on the vast uncontrollable processes of nature that make every nation what it is, and exalting itself as the source and end of existence.

It is not so easy to relate these sins to our- selves. Unlike the extinct pagan societies of the Axis and unlike the alive and flourishing pagan society of Soviet Russia, the people of the United States have never explicitly re- pudiated God. On the contrary, we claim God as our ally, and even, it sometimes appears, as our exclusive ally. But herein lies our dan- ger. For the most insidious form of self- assertion is that which claims divine sanc- tion for its particular ends. The whole his- tory of human conflict is a chronicle of war- ring self-interests masked in high moral pre- tensions.

From the Biblical standpoint any group which tries to sanctify its self-interests by pretending that they are also God's interests commits the sin of religious self-assertion. And so when the United States stands before the world as the defender of God against godlessness, as the God-fearing democracy which protects the planet against the God- hating power of Communism, its citizens would do well to make sure that they really

The winner of a prize, no matter what its nature, is said to "take the cake." The expression is thou- sands of years old, and hails from the city of Athens, Greece. Early in modern times, when Athens was the capital city of the world, her citizens were both cosmopolitan and sophis- ticated. Every night, cronies gath- ered in the taverns for drinking bouts. Shrewd tavernkeepers gave prizes to those who drank the great- est number of opponents under the table. In the course of time, the standard prize came to be a cake. Hence the familiar expression, "to take the cake." —WEBB B. GARRISON.

Look for the

TOASTMASTER name

on your toaster

...others will!

Fair Trade Price $21.50

Never fear that your gift of the new "Toastmaster" Toaster will go unnoticed. To people everywhere, this name identifies America's finest toaster. They warm to its beauty. They welcome its quarter-century background of faithful performance. In giving it, they know you cared enough to give the best. So when you buy—look for the "Toastmaster"* name on your toaster : : : others will!

JUST PRESS THE KEY
—and the Superflex toast timer automatically delivers perfect toast every time.

TOUCH THE BUTTON
—and watch the crumb tray swing open instantly for quick, easy cleaning.

LIFT THE TOASTER
—easily, safely, by finger-fitting handles that are always cool to your touch.

THE NEW TOASTMASTER Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"Toastmaster" is a registered trademark of McGraw Electric Company, makers of "Toastmaster"

Pieces from the Hampshire Collection

Flatter yourself WITH HAMPSHIRE

Hand-rubbed Hampshire by Drexel, with its colorful Ivanhoe finish, brings new charm to your bedroom . . . The rich charm of fiddleback mahogany veneer, the elegant charm of rare boxwood inlays, the distinguished charm of Hepplewhite design . . . Add the glamour of a serpentine vanity, a classic vanity bench borrowed from the Regency, and a bow-fronted chest on chest. Climax your room with a stunning shield mirror, or the handsome square mirror not shown here . . . Ivanhoe finish, with a lighter band of mahogany outside the boxwood inlay, emphasizes the richness of these pieces.

A grouping like this deserves and gets the finest of craftsmanship . . . Dust-proof drawers, center-guided and free-sliding; dovetail joints on all drawer fronts, and sound construction throughout.

See the Hampshire Collection at fine department and furniture stores. Look for the "by Drexel" brandmark—your proof of superior craftsmanship.

Write today for booklets: "Traditional"—26 pages—10c in coin only; "Precedent"—27 pages in full color of Drexel's new modern furniture—25c in coin only. Address, 272 Huffman Road, Drexel, N. C.

Drexel Furniture Company

DREXEL · NORTH CAROLINA

TRADE MARK

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

do fear God and that He really is on their side.

If fear of God implies a sense of moral inadequacy, one hardly finds it within the testimony of this survey. Nor does one find much evidence that our claim to being a Christian nation is based on our uneasy aspiration toward Christianity's unrealized goals rather than upon the easy belief that in our present society those goals are already adequately won.

Actually there is no area of social, economic, political or religious life in which the American's conscience should be at rest. Moral critics have long called attention to obvious shortcomings in our approach to the secular democratic ideals enunciated by the nation's founders. It is evident that an even profounder void yawns between the superstructure of American life and the foundations of faith on which our political and social institutions stand.

America's ethical position appears far from secure today for, as many thoughtful men have pointed out, the challenge of communism is a response to the failures of Christians who have forgotten the revolutionary demands of their faith. And this survey suggests specifically that the weakness of America's position stems from the self-satisfaction of its people, who assume that they are quite as virtuous as anyone can be and love their fellow men as much as anyone should, and thus mistake their partial and incomplete achievements for absolute and unconditional success. And this, in the perspective of the Bible, is sin.

Religion is not, as this study indicates most people regard it, a private, purely personal and painless pathway to heaven. It is, in the words of Doctor Niebuhr, "merely the final battleground between God and man's self-esteem." Only by acknowledging his dependence on God, therefore, can the individual American avoid the sin of regarding himself as more important than anyone else and acquire the contrition through which all enlargements of brotherhood and justice are attained.

His aspirations to these ends cannot be sustained without inspiration from a higher dimension. For Christians that inspiration flows from the Cross, the symbol of love of God and man which hovers over all imperfect human harmonies as an ultimate and ever-receding ideal.

HOUSEKEEPING WITH PETS

(Continued from Page 225)

(Caution: DDT powder should never be used on cats.) But if the unlikely worst happens, and fleas infest your house and furnishings, real action is indicated, and quickly. Spread naphthalene crystals heavily along baseboards, into corners, on rugs and furniture, and shut up the room for 24 to 48 hours. Sweep up the leftover crystals later and seal them in a tin to be used again, if need be. Or spray the room completely with a flea-killing spray, paying special attention to corners and crevices. If neither of these methods helps, call a reliable professional exterminator as soon as possible.

● A hand spray is handy for washing dogs: they seem to enjoy it, too, much more than tub dunking.

● Birds are almost no extra housekeeping trouble, though they do like to toss seeds out of their cages sometimes in a spirit of gaiety, but the vacuum cleaner deals with these easily and effectively.

In fact, with an extra swish of your vacuum cleaner to pick up fine hairs from rugs and furniture, an extra swoosh of your usual glass cleaner to banish nose prints on windowpanes, and woodwork cleaner to deal with paw prints, there's no reason why you shouldn't have a dog, a cat, a bird, goldfish and guppies and still be the best housekeeper in town. And you'll certainly have fun and companionship! THE END in Easy Stardust Letter Contest closing Nov. 15, 1948. Write for Contest Rules to P. O. Box 51, Murray Hill Station, N. Y.

WIN $5000.00

Lovely CINDY LOU BAYES, chosen by famous beauty judges as Miss Stardust of 1948... now a Harry Conover Cover Girl.

The slip that made Stardust famous for fit, quality and value . . . Life-Insured for an entire year's wear! Beautifully tailored of rich acetate rayon crepe, in your favorite 4 gore bias cut that bans sagging, twisting or riding up. Double bra top, adjustable straps and sturdy double-stitched flat seams; no raw edges. $2.39

Stardust Life-Insured Slips GUARANTEED FOR 1 YEAR

LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNDIES, GIRDLES, GARTER BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES
Stardust, Inc., Empire State Bldg., N. Y. 1

NAMECHAIN KEY CHAIN
Spells Your Name!
THE PERFECT GIFT
Gold Color $3.50
Sterling Silver $7.00
Each NAMECHAIN made to your order —up to 14 letters allowed. Packed in gift box. Orders shipped in 48 hours. Tax and Postage included in Price.
NAMECHAIN MFG. CO.
19 E. Pearson St., Dept. 52, Chicago 11

CUT OUT AND BUY DIRECT VIA MAIL
SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR Free Booklet! LJ TALL GALS SIZES
8½ 9 9½ 10 10½ 11 11½ 12

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Mary L. writes: 'The shoe you sent is a perfect fit.'
STRIP-TEASE. IT'S TOPS! For glamour or leisure in gold kid . . . also in black suede . . . $16.95 (Sizes 8½ to 12, add $1)
SHOECRAFT nationally famed Fifth Avenue shoes are chosen by style-and-quality minded 'Tall Gals'. Perfect fit means better wear. A trial convinces. Get your copy of our FREE BOOKLET LJ TODAY. Smart styles! All sizes! Any pair sent on a 10 day money-back guarantee if unworn. Prompt REFUNDS. When ordering send check or money-order. Charge accounts invited. SHOECRAFT shoes are sold direct ONLY.
TALL GALS STOCKINGS $1.95 pr. Extra, Extra Long (35-38 inches) All Nylon. . . . Sizes 10½ to 12. Newest colors: Off-black, Taupe, Toast, Suntan, Navy and White.
SHOECRAFT
603 FIFTH AVE. • NEW YORK 17
All sizes 2½ to 12 • AAAAA to C
PRINT NAME AND ADDRESS IN MARGIN

Your Hand Knits will NOT shrink out of size knit with

*Wonderized ANTI-SHRINK ANTI-MATTING YARNS

Now, socks, sweaters, baby things stay true to size, permanently, with wonderful Wonderized Yarns! And no matter how often they're washed, precious hand knits keep soft and fluffy. Ask for Fleisher and Bear Brand Wonderized Yarns the genuine anti-shrink anti-matting yarns. Available at good stores everywhere.

Fleisher and Bear Brand Wonderized Yarns, also available for your convenience in complete Sock Kits.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

ARGYLE SOCK KIT
Enough Fleisher's or Bear Brand Wonderized yarn to knit handsome Argyle socks up to size 12. Kit includes complete instructions. Your choice of 9 authentic color combinations.

*Wonderized ANTI-SHRINK ANTI-MATTING FOUND ONLY IN BEAR BRAND YARNS
Fleisher's Yarn
*® Proc. Pat. No. 2,429,082

ELDER-AGERS

(Continued from Page 23)

older folks like myself who were friendly and sociable, it was like having a door open into a new world," said one stooped old man with a light in his faded brown eyes.

"The clubs give older people the assurance, understanding and companionship that they so often lose with old age," explains Georgene Bowen, city director of old-age clubs. "We started two years ago with the idea that people are human beings as long as they live, that human needs don't change much with age. Older persons, as their friends and relatives die, need new friends and interests more than at any time before in their lives."

Most clubs meet once a week. A 103-year-old gentleman walks eight blocks to and from meetings through snow and oppressive heat alike. Mr. Levin, laid up for months with a broken hip, took a train and trolley from suburban Philadelphia, alone, on crutches, because he didn't want to miss the Happy Age Club's big spring party. And at one club's first meeting, a slight elderly lady groped her uncertain way across the room to the leader. "I hardly see or hear anything," she said, "but I had a wonderful time."

Philadelphia is a pioneer in the field of recreation for older people—the first city in the country to adopt a city-wide recreation program for this increasingly large segment of the nation's population. When Georgene Bowen arrived in Philadelphia in June, 1946, to take over her job as director, 10 experimental clubs had been formed. They couldn't begin to reach even a slight percentage of the city's 135,894 who are over 65. The clubs were grass-roots organizations, struggling along with no over-all plan or direction. The program needed guidance. And because of finance—the Community Chest, first in the country to allot money for this purpose, was able to give only $5000 a year for salary and running expenses—the program had to be built from scratch with the human and material resources on hand.

If the fact could be definitely determined, I think it would be discovered that in this "wide-awake" country there are more persons humbugged by believing too little than too much. —P. T. BARNUM.

Today Philadelphia's old-age clubs are run by more than 40 organizations—churches, synagogues, settlement houses, the Salvation Army, ethical-culture societies. The number of individuals reached has jumped from 426 to 2049.

For Miss Bowen, a large, pleasant woman whose face shows deep character and resources, had met this challenge the same way she'd met other challenges in twenty-odd years of social work—with energy, intelligence and an open mind. She consulted for days with her chief, George T. Adams, farsighted young Executive Secretary of the Philadelphia Recreation Association, in whose hands the problem of recreation for the aged had been placed.

From these talks emerged the basic plan of old-age clubs as they are today. The Recreation Association exerts no actual control over any club—they are the responsibility of the sponsoring agencies—but Miss Bowen stands ready to give ideas and advice at any time. Her main job is one of promoting more clubs.

The clubs' main purpose is recreation. Club members themselves decide what they will do. It's their club.

Watch the Golden Age Club at Lutheran Settlement. Olaf Matson, who still wears the tattoos he got in his sailor days, shouts with delight as he takes off two of Mr. Stark's men in their weekly checker game. The ladies at the next table are so busy cutting large stars out of paper, and writing get-well notes on the backs for sick members, that they don't even look up Their tongues are going as fast as their scissors. In another corner two

(Continued on Page 243)

"Let 'er rip!" SAID MRS. POTTS

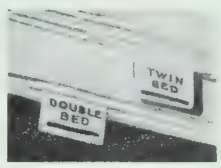
There she stood, looking at her laundry. And what she was looking at was a sheet ripped down the middle! A Pequot sheet.

Most women would recoil in horror. But Mrs. Helene Potts (of Washington, D. C.) just laughed. "Let 'er rip," she said, "even Pequots can't last forever!"

For here was a sheet that had served her faithfully, for much longer than even a long-time Pequot fan would expect. Writes Mrs. Potts:

"I've bought Pequot Sheets since I was a bride. I date them all and use them in rotation, to get the very most wear. But even I was amazed at the stamina of a sheet that's been used constantly as long as this one had."

For four generations, Pequot muslins have been amazing thrifty housewives by their well-nigh indestructible beauty and phenomenal wear. And for four generations mothers have been doing what Mrs. Potts is doing now:



"I'm assembling the trousseau linens for my daughter, and I assure you they'll be Pequots -- nothing else but!"

If you would like to be amazed by beautiful sheets that wear and wear, look for the two Pequot exclusives*... ask for Pequot plus-service muslins, America's most popular sheets.

Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts
Also makers of Pequot Fine Combed Percales

PEQUOT MUSLIN SHEETS PILLOW CASES
Pronounced "PEE-KWIT"

so good-looking .... so long-wearing

*Projecting size tabs for quick finding on the shelf.

*Double-tape selvages to give extra strength.

PEQUOT SHEETS

Plus-Service muslins have the thread count and weight that give the longest service.

The happiest brides have Community

For keeps! That's the cornerstone of the bride's dearest dreams—of her love, her home, her Community!
For keeps, the finest silverplate—fine in design, in weight, in Community's own enduring "Overlay."
For keeps, a dinner service in one of Community's famous patterns—correct alike for high hospitality and lingering, contented dinners-just-for-two.
At your jeweler's. Happy-bride priced!
(No Federal Tax)

If it's Community*. . . it's correct!

MMUNITY . . . THE FINEST SILVERPLATE . . . ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, NEW YORK

*TRADE MARKS OF ONEIDA LTD. COPYRIGHT 1948 ONEIDA LTD.

(Continued from Page 241)

old gentlemen are discussing politics, mildly but with conviction. It's a happy, busy group.

The first day these thirty people were together, they sat stiffly in chairs about the edge of the room. Only six would play games or sing. The rest watched, not saying a word. They were uncertain, afraid. And the leader, realizing this, invited everyone to participate, but urged no one against his will. As each person left two hours later, her smile was friendly, her handclasp warm and firm. To each she said, "Won't you come again next week?" They did—every single person. That time only half sat around the wall saying nothing. By the third week they all had forgotten their shyness. They've been having a fine time ever since.

Over at the Friends' Neighborhood Guild members like to sing and paint. Biddie, a 96-year-old who's painting for the second time in her life, laughs aloud at the vague shape of an ostrich on her paper. "It don't look like nothin'," she says, but other members are quick to assure her it's "very good." The painters spend half their time jumping up and down checking on others, giving advice about color and composition. For women who have never had time to paint before, these elderly people do remarkably well. Their paintings are free and expressive, anything from a house with a chimneyful of smoke to the portrait one religious lady did of Moses and two followers, complete with an apple tree in the corner.

Mrs. Voight, a volunteer who found solace in the club after her husband died, strikes a chord on the piano, and Miss Mary stands up to sing her favorite, The Old Rugged Cross. The painters stop for a moment to applaud. Then Antonia, a charming Polish woman with deep blue eyes which match the bandanna tied about her head, sings a Polish hymn. At the end of her song she gives a little speech, partly in English, mostly in Polish. Few members understand her exact words, but there's no doubt of the meaning—"Friends. We're all friends."

GROUP singing is a favorite of every club—anything from sentimental songs like Good Night, Sweetheart and I'm Always Chasing Rainbows, to more spirited numbers like I'm Looking Over a Four-Leaf Clover and the Army Air Corps song. Before most clubs adjourn they form a friendship circle and with their hands clasped, sing Auld Lang Syne or God be With You Till We Meet Again.

Both men and women belong to the Salvation Army Lehigh Recreation Center's club, and here there's a brisk bowling match every Thursday on the Center's small wooden bowling alley. Steve, an amiable, gray-haired old gentleman, presides over the game as pin boy and scorekeeper. It's an exciting contest for all, from Steve, who specializes in strikes, to the energetic grandmother whose average is seldom more than ten pins for the whole game. Cheering, laughing, getting up to take their turn, these older people haven't time to feel old. There's too much going on.

In another way, members of the Germantown Settlement's Happy Hours Club have just as good a time. On the first floor of their meeting place is a library with a fireplace where members gather to sing, dance and have their lunch. On the second floor there's room for craftwork—painting, weaving and clay.

OTHER clubrooms are not so attractive as this. The walls may be dark and in need of paint, the windows curtainless, the chairs hard and uncomfortable. But few members notice these things. They agree with the exshipbuilder, who, looking about the sparsely furnished room where his club meets, saw only the friendly faces, felt only the warmth and good cheer of the group around him. "Elegant," he said. "Real elegant."

Some clubs are formed by agencies taking the initiative; others through the pleas of older people who have heard of the clubs through friends. After the program was publicized in a Philadelphia newspaper, Miss Bowen received twenty letters from oldsters in suburban Olney asking, "Where is the nearest club?"

Checking her map, Miss Bowen found none near Olney. Immediately she went into action. She contacted the Olney Community Council which, in turn, appointed Mrs. Jerome Printz as chairman of a committee to plan a club. Eight community leaders held a meeting, listened to Miss Bowen, immediately organized a bang-up Fourth of July celebration for oldsters. The event was publicized on the front page of the Olney Times—and fifty people of 65 or over turned up.

Olney's civic associations took it from there. The Golden Age Club of Olney—seventy members strong—meets twice a month in rooms donated by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Each meeting, sponsored by a different agency, is unique. They've had Paul Jones get-acquainted dances, flower shows, costume and crazy-hat parties and hobby shows. Women's groups have entertained the club with parties and refreshments. Last Christmas the mothers' chorus from an Olney school provided a Yuletide program.

Oldster clubs succeed because everyone who comes into contact with them is touched somewhere. They remember older friends and relatives—or perhaps they think of themselves a few years hence. Either way, they get to work—"We never could have done the job without so many willing workers," Miss Bowen reiterates.

Volunteers teach crafts, play the piano, provide cars for outings, bring refreshments, visit members when they're ill, and send remembrances on holidays and birthdays. They encourage new arrivals to enter fully into club

"On other days I do this alone."

Set a party mood

...Set a festive table!
Create a "dressed-up" atmosphere at moderate cost with a Quaker Lace cloth—then leave it on for everyday use!
So practical, it needs no special handling to spot-clean, and washes easily.
A perfect gift for a busy hostess.

MADE IN AMERICA
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Quaker
LACE CLOTHS

QUAKER LACE COMPANY
Philadelphia 33, Pa.
Sales Office: 330 Fifth Ave.
New York 1, N. Y.

activities. Mrs. Strawbridge and Mrs. Mackenzie, who started out as volunteer workers in the Germantown Happy Hours Club, now consider themselves members as well. Volunteers go home and tell their husbands and friends about the clubs. Perhaps their friends know some older person who would like to join; often they help out at meetings themselves.

They are appreciated too. As the little Yugoslav refugee said to the worker who had spent most of the afternoon with him in a fierce game of checkers, "Mrs. Herman, I like you with all my system."

In every club members are surprised at their accomplishments. "I never thought these old hands of mine could do things like this," they say time and time again.

Take the mother who boasted she has "seventeen heads of children."

"Why, mother," said her eldest daughter, looking at the scarf she'd just finished, "we used to do things like this in school."

"Don't I know it!" came the answer. "You had your chance while I was taking care of you children. Now it's my turn!"

"We've discovered that older people learn new things easily, even after eighty; that they're more tolerant, co-operative and appreciative," says Miss Bowen. "They meet people from cultures they've never known before and through them find new outlets for their personalities.

"The death rate among club members in their seventies and eighties is surprisingly low—they seem to live longer with useful work and something pleasant to look forward to. And they undertake new pursuits with happiness and enthusiasm. Many are learning new attitudes as well as hobbies."

Work does more than get us our living; it gets us our life.
—HENRY FORD.

Responsibility for club activities rests with each leader. Some are members of the sponsoring agency's staff; others are unpaid volunteer workers. At the request of new sponsoring agencies, Miss Bowen had arranged in the summer of 1946 an institute to train and orient leaders for their work. First of its kind in the country, the institute presented authorities on the psychological, physical and social problems of the aged. Other sessions were led by specialists in crafts, dramatics, games and dancing. This institute was followed by a one-day meeting a year later to explain old-age clubs to interested persons throughout the city.

New leaders today benefit from the records of these meetings, from the wealth of literature Miss Bowen has turned out on the Philadelphia experiment, and from direct contact with Miss Bowen herself. Some leaders have had experience and training in recreational work; most have not. Many have come from wartime volunteer tasks like USO.

"EXPERIENCE helps," Miss Bowen says, "but our most outstanding leaders are those who possess the really important qualities—a true interest in older people's welfare and happiness, and an unselfish desire to help them find a fuller life. These people have made fine leaders."

The job has not always been easy. The building up of a thriving club program takes constant work, infinite understanding and some expense. Most clubs operate on a shoestring.

While the room where they meet is supplied by the sponsoring agency, they do have small expenses for paints, clay, light refreshments like tea and doughnuts. But no member ever is required to contribute.

"We just talk about the club outside, and people do things for us," explains Margaret Rudderow, codirector of the group meeting in Philadelphia's historic Christ Church. "The church appropriates one hundred and fifty dollars a year; members drop their contributions in our nugget box, and sometimes donate ice cream or cider."

Members of the Happy Age Club, whose weekly expenses are paid by the Council of Jewish Women, collect ten cents a week from each member for a luncheon and movie party in the spring.

THE same spirit which motivates volunteers radiates through the clubs themselves. Members grow to care for one another genuinely. Some, whose relatives are dead, transfer family affection to the club. The tall, gaunt man who had missed several meetings because of a heart condition hurried to see the leader his first time back. "You know what kept me alive?" he said. "All the cards I got from these people. I can't get over knowing they really care."

Whether or not old-age clubs should be encouraged to seek more contacts with younger people is a question which Mr. Adams and Miss Bowen have not yet answered to their satisfaction. Mr. Adams is skeptical: "Young people too often treat older people as if they were old—and that's not right, because they feel young. Or worse, youngsters pay them no attention at all."

On the other hand, some clubs encourage neighborhood children to come spend a few minutes talking to the older people. And many go on to seek other outlets themselves. Their timidity overcome, they attend other meetings sponsored by the agency, wash curtains and clean rooms in the meeting house, mend toys and dress dolls for the children who play there. Others do baby sitting in their neighborhood, and assemble packets for Red Cross and Community Chest drives.

Conclusively, Philadelphia's old-age clubs prove the old adage: You are as young as you feel. Visit a dance at Christ Church. A white-haired woman with a determined look on her face, and a black patent-leather purse slung casually over her shoulder, leads waltzes and fox-trotting. Then a slender 74-year-old woman wearing pince-nez glasses takes over the polkas. A gentleman who describes himself as "eighty-three and still looking" carefully asks each lady to dance. Another, as the room and dancing become warmer, sheds his coat. Those on the side lines clap and stomp their feet.

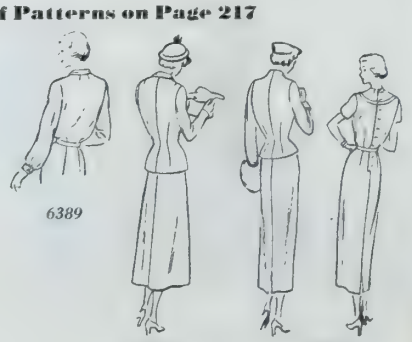
As the dancing drew to a close one night the leader asked, "What shall we sing?"

"Page seventy-five," said the little gray-haired lady with the black shawl pinned tightly about her shoulders.

"All right," said the leader. "Long Long Ago—is that the one?"

"Oh, no, the other one on the page—There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Her neighbor, a brisk "young" woman of 65, looked up with a smile. In a simple, spontaneous question she put into words the way each member feels about his new friends: "These boys and girls are fun, aren't they?"



THE END

Back Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on Page 217

Vogue Design No. 6389.
Blouse; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 40c.

Vogue Design No. 6539.
"Easy-to-Make" suit; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 75c.

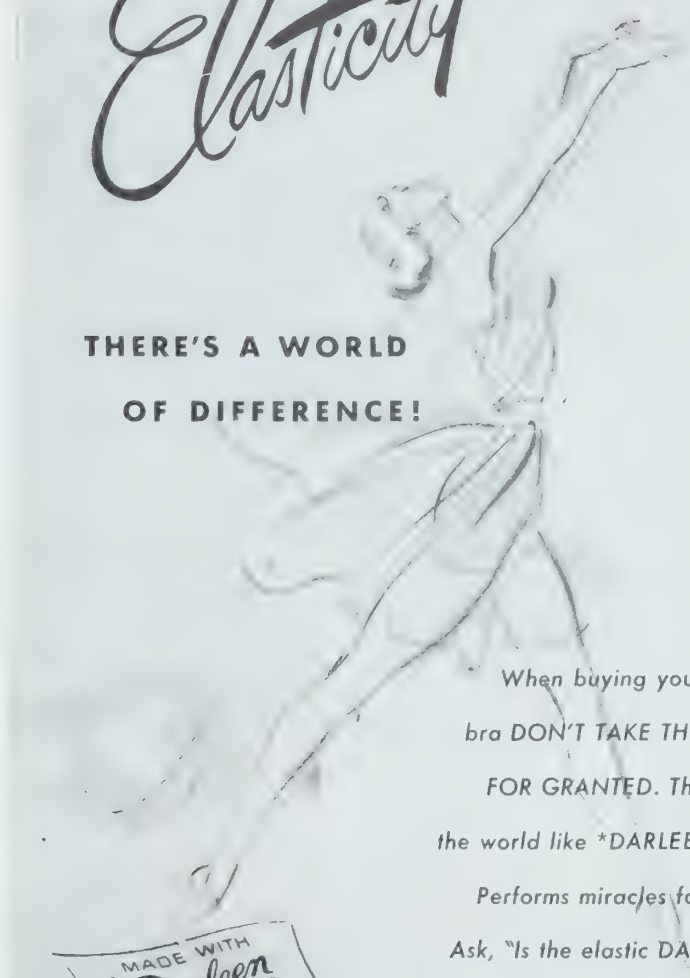
Vogue Design No. S-4920.
One-piece dress and jacket; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.

Brocade collar and cuffs on Textron's treasure of a hostess coat, about $17. Slightly higher west of the Rockies

Black Pearl in a Pink Setting

Now Textron brings new loveliness to you—a hostess coat as radiant as a rare black pearl shimmering in a delicate pink shell. Waves of fullness in its soft-falling skirt . . . a waistline so beautifully cut that it makes yours look inches smaller. Of finest rayon slipper satin in Black with Shell Pink or Black with Sky Blue, sizes 10 to 20. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.



TEXTRON
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

LOUSES • MENSWEAR • WOVEN & TRICOT LINGERIE • HOSTESS COATS

IN Elasticity

THERE'S A WORLD

OF DIFFERENCE!

When buying your foundation or bra DON'T TAKE THE ELASTIC FOR GRANTED. There's nothing in the world like *DARLEEN Elastic. Performs miracles for your figure. Ask, "Is the elastic DARLEEN?"

MADE WITH Darleen®

* T M. Reg. Darlington Fabrics Corporation • 350 Fifth Ave., New York

New hues for a new season
Vision nylons in . . .

Game Bird Colors

made of du Pont nylon
Vision nylons

Rich, romantic tones in those beautifully made stockings that fit your heels, toes and ankles with a natural perfection. You'll find them at better stores. A vision of sheer loveliness.

Knit Products Sales Company, 350 Fifth Avenue, New York 1. N.Y.

Christmas Gifts for the Hous

By NORA O'LEARY

Make waterproof plastic fabric bowl covers by shirring different-sized circles with elastic thread. Ruffled apron to match.

Linen dish toweling makes place mat matching apron. Trim with rickrack der. Tie apron with matching color ri Stenciled leopard-velveteen covers odd-shaped pillows. Complete the set with a round, gay-colored satin or velveteen one.

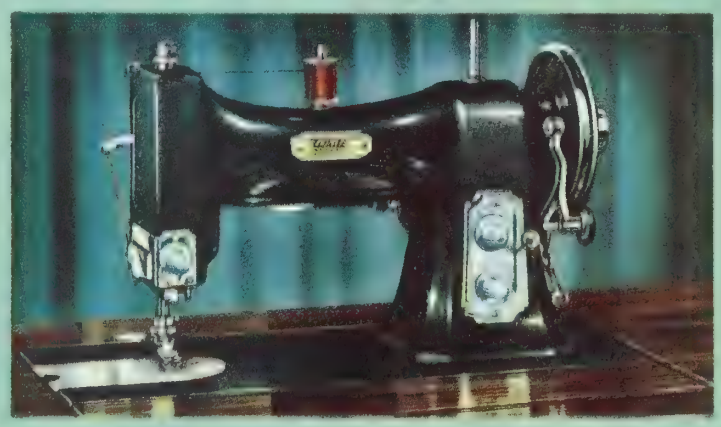
A set of plain colored towels becomes very special with bright chintz appliqué of roses buttonhole-stitched to the towels.



Shower curtain and matching bathroom-window curtain made in waterproof plastic fabric. Sells for about 74c per yard.

If you need further instructions, write

An Invitation to Better Home Sewing for You

From the moment you first try a modern White Rotary . . . a wondrous invitation to new loveliness unfolds before you. Right at your fingertips is a new-found ability to make all the clothes you've been wanting. Just think! Tailoring and decorating tricks that grandmother paid handsomely to have someone else do, now come almost automatically from the expert needle of your White. You'll ruffle, tuck, pleat, shirr, quilt or make buttonholes about as easily as you sew a straight seam. See this new sewing magic . . . in furniture-type cabinets or handy portable . . . at your department store or dealer.

IT'S "SEW EASY" WITH THESE FAMOUS WHITE FEATURES:

Forward or Reverse Sewing at any speed helps you back-tack ends of seams without stopping. Hinged Presser Foot for sewing right over pins, seams and varying thicknesses of material. Automatic Bobbin Winder fills the bobbin correctly and then stops. Finger-tip Controls regulate thread tensions and stitch lengths. Four-point Feed guides your stitches straight and true. Smooth, Level Sewing Area gives you complete working freedom. Big Set of Attachments do decorative tricks and laborsaving shortcuts.

CABINET MODELS AVAILABLE IN MAHOGANY, WALNUT, MAPLE AND BLOND

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

HER HUSBAND WAS AN ALCOHOLIC

(Continued from Page 212)

customers come out to see the dogs and sigh and glance at their checkbooks and decide that they will have to wait awhile before they can make the purchase.

These are royal dogs: the registered name of the Freeman kennel is Eldgyth, the name of one of the royal ancestors genealogists discovered for the Duchess of Windsor at the time of her marriage. Apollo Eldgyth was a real patrician: he won 140 "best of the breed" citations before his death a few months ago. Such show dogs sell for fancy money—when they sell. But 1948 is a bad dog year, as was 1947. The $6000 the family needs from sales to keep going comfortably has not been reached this year or last.

Does Frances Freeman worry? Worry?

"Of course not," she says serenely. "If John has to take a job for a while, and commute from here, it will be too bad; he loves the farm so much. But times will change. Sometime people will want dogs again. And if there were a real pinch I could always teach."

Frances was a substitute teacher for the third grade in a Lebanon school when she first met John. She was making $1050 a year then, although she could command a higher salary today. John had a nest egg: there was $2000 set aside. His earnings from selling real estate in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, ran to $35 to $40 a week. They had little security then—they have almost none today. But they share a trust in life and in each other which seems to them far better than money in the bank.

"We have paid off the mortgage on the house," says Frances proudly. "So what have we to worry about?"

The Freeman family has no life insurance whatsoever, nor anything left in the savings bank, nor any one of the expensive possessions some families think of as necessities. Their car (nicknamed "Bluebird of Happiness") is a 1940 Dodge coupé, old when they bought it. Its upkeep comes to $25 a month. Fuel and light for the house whack a large sum out of the profits from the dog business: about $270 a year. G-O's vitamins are an expense—but since his tonsillectomy the doctor urges them. They cost $5 a month. Taxes for the Freeman farm are only about $30 a year, food costs only $20 a month; most of the food is grown in the garden. Milk is bought from neighboring farms. They eat little meat these days; staples and once in a while a side of bacon or a ham are all the store provides. But there are oddly extravagant items tucked away in the nonexistent budget. You cannot run their kind of business without spending money for telephones and travel, for entertainment and for specialists' magazines.

Kennel publications cost the Freemans over $10 a year; the telephone bill, even on a party line, is nearly that amount a month. There is no household help except for a laundress one day a week—but when you ask Frances Freeman how much of the family money goes for household maintenance she makes a wry little mouth and says, "ninety-eight per cent." In the past two years of bad sales there have been no new clothes for the family, no vacations, no taste of the favorite family dish: a juicy steak.

SOME families might sulk or sink into proud retirement at times when they cannot put on a show of high prosperity before their friends. But not this couple: they are too real for that.

"We entertain all the time," says Frances. "One or two couples for dinner perhaps twice a week is our big fling. But the house is full of dog people in between times. Customers roll up at any hour of the day. Other breeders drop by to meet the pups. Sundays, especially, the Freeman family keeps open house."

Mealtimes are movable—ten people ma be there and hungry at twelve noon or a three o'clock. With a year-old baby and a si year boy, a mother is lucky if she is finishe with her housework at the end of a ten-hou day in such a home. But Frances budgets he energies; she manages never to be flustered o tired. Does she bake? "Oh, yes. Cakes an pies." Has she a hobby? "Listening to ol ballads on the radio and thinking up ine pensive dishes to surprise John." Does sh find time to read? Yes—when the children ar in bed. The Freeman interests move smoothl hand in hand, and reading aloud is therefore joy to them. Westbrook Pegler is their favor ite columnist. They like dog magazines, an Rudyard Kipling, murder mysteries and th novels of Charles Dickens, Li'l Abner comi strip and an occasional educational dip int Frazer's Golden Bough. The most recentl published novel they liked was Kenneth Rob erts' Lydia Bailey.

THIS life sounds like a peaceful heaven for a man who wanted to paint the town red an go to bed potted every night. It is. The las motion picture that the Freemans remembe having liked was Gone With the Wind; tw movies a year are par for them. They neve go to lectures, art exhibits, concerts, plays But what cultural pleas ures are possible the enjoy: the walls ar hung with good etch ings; the collection o phonograph records i much used.

If you said to the Freemans, suddenly, "What gives you the most fun?" they would answer, in a single breath, "People." ("But not in organized groups," John pleads. One single visit to the local Lions Club made him sure he never wanted to join any dues-paying group that didn't center around dogs or poultry.)

They are on terms of easy neighborliness with the Pennsylvania Dutch farmers whose places are near by. Their best friends, however, are "city folk," who commute from Quakertown to jobs as engineers or lawyers or businessmen in Philadelphia. All the members of their group are passionate dog lovers.

That love of people—all kinds of people—is characteristic of the men and women who are known to doctors as "problem drinkers." Alcoholics are sociable extroverts—even the solitary drinkers who tipple privately are usually eating their hearts out for the easy, carefree friendships they don't know how to form. John Freeman is fortunate in having found a wife who loves people as much as he, a wife whose casual, lighthearted management of the home leaves time and strength for lots of talk.

It was, typically enough, at a big party that these two met in 1937. Frances was teaching then; the family of one of the children in her class urged her to attend their child's Valentine party—insisted that she attend—sent a car to make sure that she would attend. She had a lovely time there and agreed to return the next Sunday to an older daughter's tea party. Here she met John; he liked her easygoing mockery, her sense of humor, her very pert and feminine little face, with the brown, expressive eyes. It was a courtship that lasted a year and ended in a Reformed Church rectory wedding at Lebanon, Pennsylvania, with Frances' mother and sister present.

What did Frances wear at the wedding? Bridal outfit? Tailored suit? Both Mr. and Mrs. Freeman thought awhile when I asked.

"Dress," they said. Its further details did not interest them. What people wear is interesting to Frances only when nothing more exciting is up. And getting married to John

(Continued on Page 251)

There are children that blame their parents for their own faults. Some for indulgence, others for severity, and still others for indifference. Such blame is the excuse of a weak character. For he that is of an age to criticize his own conduct hath more knowledge of himself than any outsider, and if he be unable to correct his own faults, blame of others is a confession of his indifference to betterment and is therefore injustice to his parents.

—SIR THOMAS BARCLAY:
Wisdom of Lang Sin (D. Appleton Century Company, Inc.).

The saddest day of the week... for some people!

SHRINKAGE IS CERTAINLY shameful . . . in these bright, modern times!

And the day-after-washday can be a mighty miserable day—for girls who buy cottons without looking for "Sanforized" on the label.

So shop smartly . . . demand to see the "Sanforized" trademark on every washable cotton you buy. It's the sure-and-sensible way to buy clothes that won't ever shrink out of fit, out of style.

The style will never shrink away from the dress with "Sanforized" on the label.

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ® MARK

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

1948 CANNON MILLS, INC.

Cannon Towels • St

"I

Francis Chambers had not yet written the book, Alcohol: One Man's Meat, which he and Doctor Strecker were to publish in 1938. He himself had been a "recovered" alcoholic for only five or six years—for the lay therapists in this field are all men who have themselves been through the mill. He was reluctant to accept as a client this twenty-three-year-old playboy: he felt, on the basis of his own experience, that few men who are true alcoholics will renounce the habit until it has given them far more grief than a few bad hang-overs and a scare or two. Why, this boy had not even been fired from a job for drinking! He was a piker, in comparison with some of the alcoholics who were coming in for help.

But Doctor Strecker, who also interviewed John Freeman, certified him as free from any psychic quirks which might make treatment especially difficult; and eventually Francis Chambers took him on. At that time John was living in a sort of polite rural sanitarium for drinkers, but as a patient with privileges. He was free to go to Mr. Chambers' Philadelphia office twice a week at first, then once a week, for the full year of consultations that this treatment involves.

Some alcoholics resent being told that they are "different," in a class apart from normal drinkers. But John Freeman was never one of these. When he understood what alcoholism is, he immediately accepted the fact which follows it: that he could never, so long as he lived, take another drink. At the end of the treatment, he found, to his astonishment, that he didn't want a drink—ever. He has never wanted one since.

Mr. Chambers felt that his patient needed the encouragement of being on his own. Aptitude tests showed that he was best fitted for country living. It was then that he got a job as a salesman of real estate in Bucks County—but not a very successful one.

"He was much too honest," says his wife, who met him while he was working at this job. "He'd warn his customers away from houses they might have bought by pointing out that the roof leaked and the cellar was damp."

So Frances Kalbach Freeman, a bride, urged her husband to take a flier at the dog-breeding business. Mr. Chambers, paternally in the background by now, was enthusiastic; he gave the Freemans their first setter. It was he, too, who introduced them to the Oakertown area, where he had bought a country home. The Freeman property was a bargain when they found it—$3500 for a 150-year-old stone house with excellent lines, wide beams and a fine, old-fashioned fireplace. But the installation of a bathroom, central heating and electricity cost them almost twice as much as the property itself. And that ended the savings account and sent them into debt too.

THE Freemans are refreshing among owners of remodeled homes: they did not lay a hand to any of the work themselves. "I wouldn't know what to do with a paintbrush," each admits. And, "I can't drive a nail straight," grins Fran.

Life in the remodeled farmhouse has been happy and fairly serene. There was a period, during the war, when John felt that a husky man of his age ought to do something more relevant to victory than breeding dogs; he tried to join the marines but was rejected because of a back injury suffered during his old football days. So he got war work at the SKF ball-bearing company, twenty-three miles away, and commuted to a night-shift seven-days-a-week job. That was a hard time. Frances was lonely . . . but it wasn't too bad, she says, for "I had G-O to keep me company."

G-O is company—he's now in the first grade of the nearest public school at Quaker Town, and the two house dogs, Christmas and Chappy, are his. He is bright, lively, assured. When told that someone had reported G-O as "a co-operative little lad," his father snorted: "G-O," he said, "can be the worst little stinker I know when he tries!"

BUT all through Frances' second pregnancy, when he was only five, G-O dust-mopped the floors for her; he now makes his own bed and keeps his room neat every day. Sometimes he even tries to wash and dry the dishes, but on a rather lick-and-promise basis. He is self-reliant: he is used to having both parents bolt off to dog shows, leaving him with a neighbor; he waves them casually off and never cries. Little Dan is coming along too.

Both the Freemans think that children ought to have a sense of family tradition when they are growing up: theirs are taken every year to the big family party at an uncle's. G-O attends the local nonsectarian Sunday school.

The schedule of the home revolves around the children and the dogs. The family rises at six-thirty and there is always a busy hour ahead of Frances—preparing Dan's formula, getting G-O's hearty breakfast and, at the same time, preparing the grapefruit, eggs, toast and coffee that start the day for John. The two "men" have to get through on time, so that John can drive G-O to school in winter, to the organized play group in the summer.

When John comes back, he is busy around the kennel most of the morning—grooming, trimming, training, feeding the dogs. In the afternoon he mows the lawn or works at the vegetable patch or repairs the kennels or cleans the chicken house: "On a place like this," he says, "man's work is never done either."

Frances keeps busy, too, thank you. She does all the cleaning, mending, cooking, baby care. She washes and sets her own hair and keeps her wardrobe in order; this now consists of two good suits and several cotton house dresses, to which it is reduced in a bad dog year. Frances' mainstay and support is the neighbor woman who comes in to launder and baby-sit when the Freemans go off for the day to a show. She is a friend and a "find," who is always eager to help out and do a little extra cleaning beyond the terms of her twenty-five cents an hour.

The family life revolves around the pleasant living room, where pickup meals of sandwiches and coffee are often served to casual guests. When they are alone the family take breakfast and lunch in the kitchen; for dinner, even alone, they always change into fresh clothes and move into the dining room. Unlike many of their friends, they loathe out-of-door meals and picnics. They never stack the dishes in the sink unless the house is filled with guests who must be entertained.

But Frances is no "Craig's Wife": if customers arrive in the midmorning she whips off her apron and pours out coffee and sits around, acting as gracious hostess, without a moment's worry over undone chores. "The

(Continued on Page 254)

MAINE PIONEERS

HAVE you ever had the yen to pull up stakes and take to the woods for a new life? Well, the Stanley Crawfords had and did, and, today, the two of them and their five daughters are coping with the great outdoors in 50 acres of rugged Maine country.

The living (log-cabin style) isn't exactly easy. In fact, it's minus plumbing, a decent stove, hot water, a phone and steam heat. "But," say the Crawfords, "we've our own air to breathe and a darn good time in the process."

Meet the Crawfords, of Old Town, Maine

BY SARA LAMPORT

HOW AMERICA LIVES

The December JOURNAL

FURNITURE DESIGNER'S BEEN Reading Your Mind!

. . . and he's dreamed up something you've always wanted.
New Style . . . New Pieces . . . New Features . . .
all yours in this striking New Mengel Grouping!

Don't waste a minute. Hurry right down to your Mengel store and see this new Ivory Bisque Oak group. It's just the furniture you'll want.

The sleek new lines of this modern furniture make a smart new dress for any home. The strikingly beautiful finish adds a new kind of satiny loveliness to any room.

Each smartly designed piece you see gives you new ideas to make your home more comfortable, more convenient, more up-to-the-minute in style. You'll be wanting to do over the entire house.

And this is just the furniture that will do it. Bedroom, living room, hall, dining room . . . this new Mengel group is all-room furniture. The versatile functional design enables you to use each piece separately . . . or to group several together, to give you just exactly the combinations you require.

A smart chest for your hall; a roomy bookcase for your living room or a buffet, complete with matching table and chairs for your dining room.

And every piece is *Permanized. That's Mengel's name for their exclusive, scientific method of furniture construction. No matter what the climate . . . hot or cold, damp or dry . . . the joints and veneers in your Mengel Permanized Furniture will never come apart.

Visit your Mengel store soon. Find that furniture you've always wanted. Meantime, send 10-cents for Mary Adam's booklet, "Let's Plan a Bedroom Around You." You'll find a hatful of new ideas for dressing up your home.

Permanized
MENGEL
Furniture

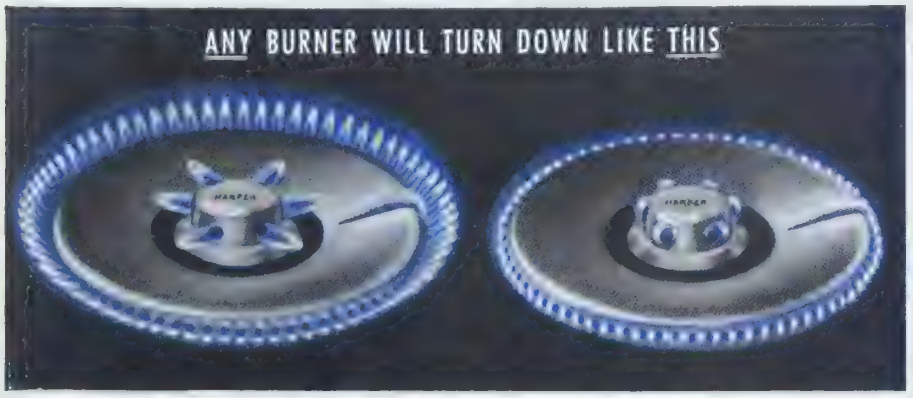
MARY ADAM
The Mengel Company, Dept. 187
Louisville 1, Kentucky

Enclosed is 10¢. Please send me your new booklet, "Let's Plan a Bedroom Around You." (If you live outside Continental U. S., send 25¢.)

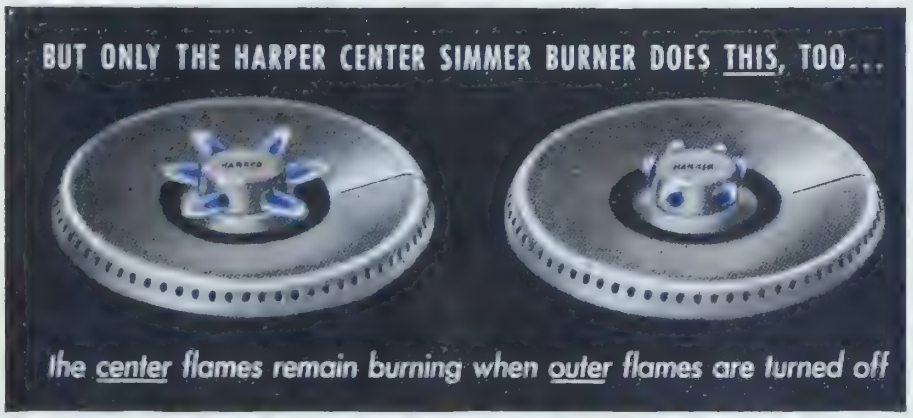
NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____



*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



Copyright 1948 The Mengel Company

Make This Test

WHEN BUYING YOUR NEW GAS RANGE

Try the top burners. That's where 80% of your cooking is done. Will the tiny center flames burn alone?

IT MAKES A Big DIFFERENCE!

The Harper Center Simmer burner is really 2 burners in 1. Turn off the big burner and the little burner keeps on burning. You benefit many ways!

1. Saves gas, because the Center Simmer alone keeps a covered vessel boiling.

2. Saves time, saves food, saves boiling dry, saves delicious flavor and color of foods. You can cook with less than a cupful of water, as so little boils away.

3. Keeps foods warm without over-cooking . . . only the Center Simmer can be turned to such a low point.

DO THIS! Insist that your new range has top burners that operate on the Harper Center Simmer principle. Leading makes include A-B, Atlantic, Caloric, Copper-Clad, Cribben & Sexton Universal, Crown, Delher, Detroit Jewel, Flamex, Garland, Gurney, Majestic, Moffat, Moore, O'Keefe & Merritt, SGE Acorn, SGE Oriole, Wedgewood.

HARPER CENTER SIMMER

FREE: Send for illustrated color booklet, "Modern Methods of Top Burner Cooking," today. It tells how to make your cooking easier . . . better! Harper-Wyman Company, 8564 Vincennes Ave., Chicago 20, Ill.

(Continued from Page 252)

consumption of coffee here is enormous," she says. John, like most recovered alcoholics, drinks a lot of it. Unlike most recovered alcoholics, he detests candy.

The conversation with visiting dog lovers—morning, afternoon or in the evening—is gay and outspoken. Frances remembers the horror with which her mother greeted John's barnyard chatter during their courtship days. Mrs. Kalbach was even more appalled at the idea of her daughter's marrying an alcoholic "to reform him."

"But he's reformed himself already," Frances pointed out. "I won't be able to get any of the credit for it."

Actually, in those days, John Freeman was less free from the threat of renewed drinking than he is today. "It gets easier every year," he tells you. At first, when he had to fill out a job application or explain, for some social reason, about his drinking history, he felt embarrassed and "sort of leprous." He also felt out of things and rather resented the steady diet of black coffee forced on him if he wished to share the company of his hard-drinking friends. But nowadays the old friends, with whom he used to reminisce, have scattered or died. John looks back on his wild-drinking days with as little desire—indeed, with less desire—to repeat them than the games of marbles that amused him when he was eight or nine.

But he can't bear a hard-drinking party even nowadays—the sort that ends at six in the morning on New Year's Day. Neither can Frances, who takes a drink only once in a while from politeness, and who would always rather have a malted milk.

"It isn't because I am wrestling with my old longing to get fried that I hate hard-drinking parties," says John. "It's just that if you don't drink at all, people who are high are awful bores. Fran thinks so, too, and she's no alcoholic. So now we just keep away from parties that are going to be too gay for us."

Most of the Freeman friends have finally learned that John's "No" means "No": they no longer press drinks on him. But he found at first, as all recovered alcoholics do, that the only effective way of refusing a drink was to come clean.

"If you simply say, 'No, thank you,' people are insulted: they imagine you want Scotch if they have rye or that you want champagne if they have port. If you say, 'I'm on the wagon' most hosts treat the remark as a challenge to get you off. The only real silencer is to say, 'If I took that drink I'd be roaring drunk for three days and I'd spend them right here. You'd be sorrier than I.' Then they usually lay off."

John Freeman is safe today if any alcoholic is ever safe. And he has one powerful help in staying safe: happiness. On his thirty-three-acre farm, much of it beautifully wooded, he has an occupation that he loves. Inside the old farmhouse there is a family of which he's very proud. Friends, and dog-loving customers who will probably turn into friends save him from any fear of loneliness.

"John loves people," says Frances proudly, "and he's very good with them. When he's with a banker, he is a banker. With an artist, he's an artist."

John Freeman has almost everything a man could want, he says. Oh, he'd like a lake on the place, to stock with fish—one where the family could also canoe and swim. The first $600 the family can spare is going to dam the stream on their place and make one. And the next little windfall will provide an automobile trip through the United States and Canada for John and Frances to "visit kennels." These are the pipe dreams the Freemans share, when they sit about the fireplace and set down the book that one of them has been reading aloud.

"I don't need to scale walls or carry jardinieres indoors to have fun nowadays," says John Freeman. "Everything I do is fun. Being married to Frances is the best fun I could imagine." And not many tributes to a woman can top that, from a man who once had to climb dormitory walls to keep himself amused!

THE END

"that's why we both chose a
DEXTER TWIN TU
FIRST CHOICE For Cleaner Clothe —Quicker Washings—Trouble-Fre
Service
Two washing tubs turn out th whitest, brightest wash ever—without rubbing, soaking or pre-treating DEXTER TWIN Double Sudsin washes quicker—easier than you eve thought possible! In only one hou or less your whole family's week wash is beautifully done! DEXTE TWIN is today's biggest washer valu See your DEXTER dealer today for free home demonstration.
FREE! WRITE TODAY!
THE DEXTER COMPANY
Dept. L118, Fairfield, Iowa
WASHES CLEANER • QUICKER • EASI

Even the finest bathroom c be haunted by the

This unpopular bathroom lurker can be chased away with new double-action VANiSH—the toilet bowl cleaner that... cleans so quickly...and leaves bathrooms sweet and fresh. Buy the big blue can today.

New VANISH KILLS TOILET ODORS AS IT CLEANS

DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK GUARANTEE!
If you find that new, double-action VANiSH doesn't do all we say it will, return the partially used can to us, and we will refund double the money you paid for it.

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, DOVER, N. H.

Ebonettes, most popular housekeeping gloves in America—and now Bluettes, elastic knit lined home and garden gloves. Both easy on-and-off, short fingers, snug fit to tips. Both hold wet things as if dry. Both of long-wear DuPont neoprene.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — satinized inside, slip on like a charm. All-neoprene, give you barehand efficiency.

instant favorite of men and women . . . for indoors or out. Two-way-stretch elastic knit lining, moisture absorbent —comfortable in hot water.

It's fun now to protect your hands with Ebonettes and Bluettes. Buy at hardware, drug, dept., paint stores.

Look! New ESKImitts

Cozy Warm Dry Hands for youngsters in the snow—double fleece-lined, wetproof red neoprene coated, outlast wool mittens. Wonderful protection from chapped hands, colds.

Over 30 Years of Quality Glove Making

The Pioneer Rubber Co., Willard, Ohio

AMAZING OFFER—$40 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 50 BOXES CHRISTMAS CARDS
Each box contains 25 brand new, entirely different Deluxe Christmas cards with or without name imprinted. Also 50 for $1.00. Free samples. Other boxes on approval. Write to-day. It costs nothing to try.
Cheerful Card Co., Dept. G-16, White Plains, N.Y.
FREE SAMPLES

Every Kitchen Needs Aristo-mats

Guard the precious beauty of your new stove . . . add gay charm to an old one

Glamorize your kitchen as you protect fine surfaces from heat, scratches, spilled foods. Use cheery, gay Aristo-mats on stove tops, table tops, under electric appliances. For lasting beauty and dependability, insist on the best—Aristo-mats, wherever housewares are sold.

Finest Quality Money Can Buy!

PHOENIX TABLE MAT CO., Chicago 7, Illinois

I LOVE TO BAKE

(Continued from Page 221)

and surprisingly enough, it does rise in the refrigerator—all you want it to, at least. Now sprinkle sugar lightly on your breadboard. Place dough on sugar. Sprinkle sugar lightly over the dough and roll out to a 10- to 12-inch square, folding dough in to center from either side. Roll out and repeat the folding job, using a little more sugar. Do this two more times—four times in all—sprinkling sugar on the board and on dough each time to prevent sticking. Cut into strips ¾ inch wide and 4 inches long. Sprinkle with sugar. Shape into twists—in other words, twist the strips three or four times and lay them on ungreased cooky sheets several inches apart. It will take about ¾ cup sugar in all. There's no additional rising required, as in most yeast-dough recipes. Bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 20 minutes, until light brown. Makes 3 dozen twists.

RAISED JELLY DOUGHNUTS

Dissolve 1 envelope quick-dry yeast in ¼ cup lukewarm water according to directions on envelope. Beat 8 egg yolks until very thick and lemon-colored—as thick as you do for spongecake. Add ½ cup sugar gradually to the yolks, beating well after each addition. Mix into this the dissolved yeast and 1⅔ cups light cream that has been scalded and cooled to lukewarm. Add 5 cups flour, sifted with 1 teaspoon salt. Beat well until dough is smooth. Scrape into large greased bowl. Brush top of dough with melted butter or margarine. Cover with towel and plate to prevent drying and to keep out drafts. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Punch down to remove air bubbles. Divide dough in half. Shape each portion into round ball. Roll half the dough out at a time on a lightly floured pastry or breadboard to thickness of ¼ inch. Cut out with biscuit cutter. Drop a bit of jam in center of half of the rounds. Cover with the other plain rounds. Recut, this time using a slightly smaller cutter. This seals the edges and holds in the jam. If you do not have two cutters of different sizes, use the edge of a glass for one of the cutters. Place the doughnuts 2 inches apart on a lightly floured cloth. Cover with a clean cloth and let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk. Fry in deep fat until golden brown, 365° F. Remove carefully and drain on paper toweling. Sprinkle with plain sugar or a mixture of cinnamon and sugar while still hot. Makes 2 to 3 dozen doughnuts.

There are many paths to the top of the mountain, but the view is always the same.

—CHINESE PROVERB.

This is the time of year for hot spiced fruit puddings. You may have pet steamed-pudding recipes, traditional in your family, but here's a different one to try. It's baked instead of being steamed—uses the fruit of the persimmon, in season now. It's light, feathery, thoroughly delicious. It keeps well. Can be reheated.

PERSIMMON PUDDING

Put 1 cup seedless raisins, 1 cup chopped walnuts and 1 cup sugar into a bowl. Sift together 2 cups flour, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 teaspoon cloves, 1 teaspoon allspice and ½ teaspoon salt. Add to nuts, raisins and sugar and mix well. Cut up 1 cup ripe sweet Japanese persimmons (use skin and pulp). Two good-sized ripe persimmons will make 1 cup. Add 1½ teaspoons baking soda to persimmons and mix well. Beat 2 eggs and fold into the persimmon mixture. Add this to the first mixture in the bowl. Mix all together well, and last of all stir in ¼ cup melted shortening. Fill greased and floured muffin pans. Bake 30 minutes in moderately slow oven, 325° F., or until done. Makes 1½ dozen. These keep well for days and may be reheated as wanted in steamer or in oven on a cooky sheet, with pan inverted over them. They are good served with hard sauce, whipped cream or any favorite pudding sauce.

THE END

I use every Pyrex dish a dozen ways!

SMART UTILITY DISH
1 qt. size 59¢

Like all Pyrex ware, this favorite is many dishes in one. Ideal for baking family treats like stuffed tomatoes (above) or gingerbread—or roasting meats and baking fish. Perfect, too, for chilling and serving crisp salads. All food just naturally looks more tempting in sparkling Pyrex ware.

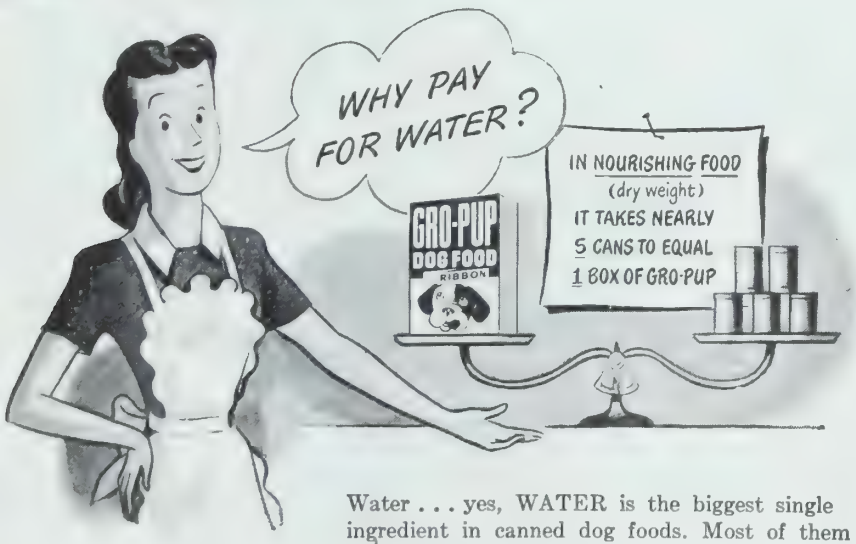
THERE'S ONLY ONE PYREX WARE

AND IT'S MADE BY

CORNING GLASS WORKS

PYREX TM REG MADE IN U.S.A.

PYREX OVENWARE CORNING GLASS WORKS CORNING N.Y. U.S.A.



"PYREX" is a Reg. T. M. of Corning Glass Works in the United States and in Canada of Corning Glass Works of Canada, Ltd.

...lives like a king—

No king's diet was ever prepared more carefully than Gro-Pup! Every vitamin and mineral dogs are known to need for vigor, growth and stamina. Twenty-three wholesome ingredients in a scientific formula! And dogs go for crisp, toasted Gro-Pup—the only Ribbon-type dog food available!

You save almost half!

Water . . . yes, WATER is the biggest single ingredient in canned dog foods. Most of them are 70% water, only 30% food dry weight. It takes nearly 5 1-lb. cans to give as much food as 1 25-oz. box of Gro-Pup. For Gro-Pup is 92% nourishing food! (In Meal and Pel Etts, too.)

Kids get this cloth dog!

MOTHER! SEND for this hug-able, 10-inch cloth copy of "Kellie." Colorfully printed on two pieces of sturdy cloth, ready to stuff and sew. For each dog, send only 15¢ and one box top from Gro-Pup Ribbon —to Kellogg Company, Dept. 225G, Battle Creek, Mich.

THE BIGGEST BOX ON THE SHELF

At the end of a warm and dreamy November day, Honey sits patiently, waiting for the family to come home.

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

EVERY warm and dreamy day now is a special treasure, to be savored from early morning to deep dark. The cockers and I run to the door as soon as we get up; they lift their soft noses and sniff, then dash out to see what might have crossed the yard in the night. I breathe to the very bottom of my lungs. Yes, it is one of those days—those last and lovely gifts of New England autumn!

I have the same feeling that comes when I hear a favorite piece of music: I don't want the last note to be played. Or like having the new Joseph Shearing. I always ration myself on Joseph Shearing, which would horrify most readers of mystery novels. But Joseph Shearing does more than write mysteries; each all-too-infrequent volume is a literary bouquet, as rich and beautiful as a November day, and now that I think of it, with the same soft melancholy as a November dusk. I never pay so much attention to the murder or the plot, but I am enchanted by the writing. I just wish Joseph Shearing would write faster.

People are always arguing the pro and con of mystery reading. I myself don't feel escape reading is ever out of place, and mysteries make a fine escape, besides being an exercise in ingenuity.

For my taste, a mechanically perfect tale doesn't mean a thing. I like plausible characters, a real setting, and a sound motive and a quiet murder. Jill, however, will read anything that breathes the air of crime, though she prefers Leslie Ford and Mary Roberts Rinehart. She may be the only living person who reads The Nine Tailors over every year, and when the smoke plumes up from what was to be carrots for lunch, she always has a Dorothy Sayres in her hand. But she will read anything at all!

Just around the corner from us murder takes place daily. For Eddie is a mystery writer, and since Ruth and Eddie bought the little white house on Juniper Hill we spend much time over coffee and cake arguing about secret methods of disposing of bodies. And all our friends arrive saying, "I know a fine way to kill a person, Eddie!"

He is polite enough not to say that it takes more than one murder to make a good book; actually, the murder is the simple part of it. I couldn't follow my own clues, I am afraid, because by the second chapter I would wonder myself what that blue slip of paper meant.

We do get a little more time to read now, for we have an early supper, and the evening closes down soon. The fireplace gives a comfortable warmth and we have not a single vegetable that ought to be frozen "while we are just resting." In summer we can always freeze a few extra ears of corn at night, or do the chard and spinach. But now the freezer is filled, and the shelves in the fruit cellar have all the jams and jellies and tomatoes and pickles that we shall need for the long winter. The bins are also snugged down with acorn squash, butternut squash (which we have to eat first, it does not keep so long), cabbage and potatoes.

The garden work is far from done, however. The only thing that quiets a gardener down is having the snow too deep. Otherwise there is always a little cleaning up or extra mulching or pruning.

Fences can be repaired, new posts set before the ground freezes, the kennels can be cleaned and the runs raked and treated with agricultural lime—and then there is always the lawn furniture for country folk. Ours is a great problem because the cockers like it so well. Any canvas-covered chairs are fringed, hammocks grow lacy as the seasons pass. Bits of reed or ends of cypress strew the yard. Only in the quiet garden do the ranks stand unthinned, but we sit there only when the cockers are up for the night anyway.

Maeve, the Irish setter, has settled down slightly now she is around a year old, but nobody could call her sedate. She continues to be emotional, stubborn, utterly charming. The Celtic heritage comes out in her—and I am amazed at how very Irish our Irisher is! When she is gay she acts like a butterfly, and to see her large self vault in the air is really something. Then melancholy overtakes her and she sits with her head up on the back of the sofa, her eyes tragic, her ears limp, and a heavy sigh in her breath. She is sorrowful—in a very intense and dramatic way. But after we sympathize with her enough, her mood brightens and with one bound she clears the whole sofa and is if we all pull together!

(Continued on Page 259)

Sure, America's going ahead...

...let's compare yesterday with today ...that will give us an idea of what tomorrow can be!

Machine Power: Since 1910 we have increased our supply of machine power 4½ times.

Production: Since 1910 we have more than doubled the output each of us produces for every hour we work.

Income: Since 1910 we have increased our annual income from less than $2400 per household to about $4000 (in dollars of the same purchasing power).

Work Hours: Yet, since 1910 we have cut 18 hours from our average workweek—equivalent to two present average workdays.

HOW have we achieved all this? Through the American kind of teamwork! And what is teamwork?

American teamwork is management that pays reasonable wages and takes fair profits—that provides the best machines, tools, materials and working conditions it possibly can—that seeks new methods, new markets, new ideas; that bargains freely and fairly with its employees.

Our teamwork is labor that produces as efficiently and as much as it can—that realizes its standard of living ultimately depends upon how much America produces—that expects better wages as it helps increase that production.

Teamwork is simply working together to turn out more goods in fewer man-hours—making things at lower costs and paying higher wages to the people who make them and selling them at lower prices to the people who use them.

What we've already accomplished is just a foretaste of what we can do. It's just a start toward a goal we are all striving to reach: better housing, clothing, food, health, education, with ever greater opportunities for individual development. Sure, our American System has its faults. We all know that. We still have sharp ups and downs in prices and jobs. We'll have to change that—and we will!

It will continue to take teamwork, but if we work together, there's no limit on what we can all share together of even greater things.

What we have already accomplished is just a foretaste of what we can do—if we continue to work together!

Approved for the PUBLIC POLICY COMMITTEE of the Advertising Council by:

EVANS CLARK, Executive Director, Twentieth Century Fund

PAUL G. HOFFMAN, Formerly President, Studebaker Corporation

BORIS SHISHKIN, Economist, American Federation of Labor

WANT TO HELP? MAIL THIS!

PUBLIC POLICY COMMITTEE
THE ADVERTISING COUNCIL, INC.
11 West 42nd Street, New York 18, N. Y.

I want to help.

I know that higher wages, lower prices, shorter hours and larger earnings can all result from producing more goods for every hour all of us work.

Therefore, I will ask myself how I can work more effectively every hour I am on the job, whether I am an employee, an employer, a professional man or a farmer.

I will encourage those things which help us produce more and add to everyone's prosperity—things like greater use of mechanical power, better machines, better distribution and better collective bargaining.

I will boost the good things in our set-up, and help to get rid of the bad.

I will try to learn all I can about why it is that Americans have more of the good things in life.

Please send me your free booklet, "The Miracle of America," which explains clearly and simply, how a still better living can be had for all, if we all work together.

Name_____

Address_____

_____

Occupation_____

BY APPOINTMENT PERFUMERS TO H.M. QUEEN MARY. YARDLEY, LONDON

Yardley English Lavender,
$5.50, $2.85, $1.75, plus tax.

Yardley English Lavender Soap, 40c.
Box of three tablets, $1.20.

Lighten your day... brighten your way... the carefree young air is catching when you're wearing the gay-hearted fragrance

YARDLEY English Lavender

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

(Continued from Page 256)

off again. Maeve never walks around anything, she always leaps over.

November is a betwixt-and-between time for meals. We eat a lot of the late fall vegetables—stuffed squash, spiced cabbage, braised celery. Then we like a change and decide on something like Ruth Sanford's Curry Ring. This is one of those recipes that you cannot give exact quantities for, but this is the best I can do. It is a wonderful luncheon dish—serves six to eight—for a nice pre-Thanksgiving luncheon.

You cook three cups of rice, and the brown rice is my choice. Meanwhile, you take two tablespoons of butter or margarine and melt it and stir in three tablespoons of curry—and if you do not like curry much, make it two. That's why this recipe is variable. When it is well blended, stir it into enough mayonnaise to moisten your rice well. By the time your rice is cooked and drained, you can judge—the big white rice will use less mayonnaise than the small brown grains that are finer.

Pack the mixture in a mold and set it in the refrigerator to chill overnight. Or the rest of the day if you make it in the early morning. Turn it out on a platter or silver chop plate and fill the center with chilled jumbo shrimp or cut-up lobster, garnish with parsley, and serve a bowl of dressing that is half mayonnaise and half good sour cream. A side dish of chutney is a must. If you make your own, this is the time to use it.

This makes a whole luncheon, and it is inexpensive, for the curry mold is the main part of the meal and the shrimp goes a long way! And then, of course, if you are having an after-Thanksgiving buffet, you may use turkey or chicken for the center.

All over the country women are getting ready for Thanksgiving around the beginning of the third week. This is the family festival, almost more than Christmas, for even when our forefathers were not given to Christmas they did allow a family gathering to give thanks to God for His goodness in preserving them.

He who will live for others shall have great troubles, but they shall seem to him small. He who will live for himself shall have small troubles, but they shall seem to him great. —DEAN INGE: More Lay Thoughts of a Dean (Putnam & Company, Ltd.).

There should be a big Thanksgiving dinner at which everybody eats far too much, and a late pickup supper with cold turkey and dressing or big bowls of oyster stew with the oysters plump in the gentle cream. The children can stay themselves further with cold mince pie—or pumpkin.

If turkey is high, any other fowl or meat will do, as long as you have mashed potatoes and fluffy whipped squash and lots of gravy. For this is the time to forget diets and just go to town on all the heavy and comfortable foods.

We like plain old-fashioned dressing for the turkey better than any fancy variation. Chestnuts and oysters are all very well, but why diminish the delicate flavor of the bird himself? A bread dressing with chopped sweet onion and our own sage, not too much—this is what I like.

SAGE is a much misunderstood herb. People often throw it around too lavishly; it should be used with respect, for it is a strong-minded herb. I like it mixed with cottage cheese and cream and chopped chives. Or just a breath of it in chicken gravy.

The New England countryside is blurred with November and the village streets have a tranquil look. We like to drive to Litchfield or Farmington or Washington, and my favorite time is around dusk when all the supper lights are on. In the stately mansions around the green the dining-room chandeliers are glowing, not so unlike the candled glow of yesteryear. And in the little white houses, the kitchen lamps give a warm family light as the oyster stew is ladled from grandmother's ironstone tureen.

It all looks so unchanged I could imagine the stagecoach rumbling up to the old inn, the horses stamping softly, the coachman descending with the post from Boston and a package of Paris silks to deliver. The passengers would be tired from jolting in the springless conveyance over the roads we skim on in this later day. The lady traveler with overdress and petticoat in violet and gray and with a bonnet of lilac silk would exhibit the latest style from Paris to her country cousins in Litchfield. The gentleman, in smallclothes and a fine cloak, would impart the latest news regarding the British over his hot buttered rum. But not in the company of his wife.

I have a small white-and-gilt volume of Advice to a Married Couple which flatly says, "It is a serene region in which a woman moves: not so that into which the head of the family is often driven. . . . She is perhaps called upon to allow for the agitations of mind to which MEN are particularly liable, from their having more to do with the world than women have." It continues, "If a woman would preserve the affections of her husband, let her not only be attentive to him in all the engaging actions which her sex, her situation in the family, and her vows, give him a right to expect from her, but let her confine herself to these."

WOMEN have come a long way and in a relatively short time. But now and then I think it would be rather nice to leave the agitations of the mind to the men and confine ourselves to the engaging actions of the weaker sex!

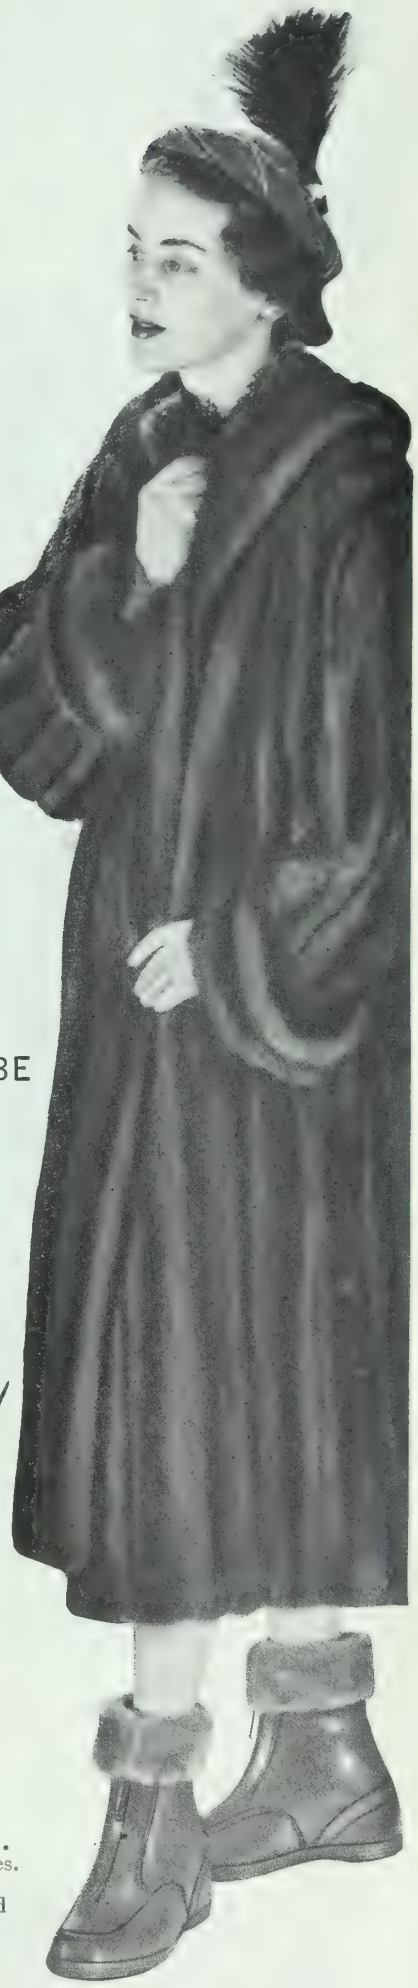
Maybe the new styles are a subconscious expression of a desire to be handed gallantly into a carriage and protected from the night air by closed curtains. And I did notice smelling salts being advertised again! What's more, I decided they were a fine thing to have around. My mother had hers in a silver-stoppered bottle, and it was a treat to have a small headache and be able to bury my nose in the cool, quick scent. And when there was a crisis, it was pleasant for a woman to have the delicate attention of the smelling salts waved before her by an anxious male.

In these days, a woman who feels faint is liable to get first aid, which is certainly not romantic. And if she seems hysterical, she is apt to be soundly slapped. Therapeutic measures are all very well, but they lack the charm of the graceful days.

All the thoughts such as these come to my mind when I drive down the serene streets of the villages hereabouts. How many journeys the mind makes—and how wonderful that it may do so!

Instantly from the meditation about the state of women, I begin to ponder whether that smell I caught as the car went round the corner was really steak broiled over charcoal in the back yard! Did they brush it with garlic butter or a whiff of vinegar and mustard first? And is it too cold to eat out, or may we still take a last picnic supper over at Roxbury ourselves?

Finally I get around to considering the meaning of Thanksgiving; and I believe we have a great deal to be thankful for, even today, even now, even in this world which needs much done to it. I make my own private list usually on one of those evening drives down the valley. There is, of course, the moon, and the glory of autumn sunlight, and the clean sweep of air from the darkening hills. And the feel of a spaniel nose in the palm. The sound of a fox barking in the woods and the memory of the fox I saw that day by the road.



And all the good things that men do, which are as many as the bad things we read about. And because while the world is hungry and tired and filled with stupidity, there are people giving their lives to send food and clothes and share their goods with others. Because there is a kind of world conscience developing here and there. Because love and friendship may enrich any life. And especially, for me, because Honey is barking at the gate as I come home.

Happy Thanksgiving! THE END

COAT, MAXIMILLAN • HAT, CHANDA

ZIPPER BOOT . . . with an eye to the swish of a low hem! Sharp as a blade as to line, to achieve a striking simplicity. Enclosed slide fastener. Black, brown, red or white.

EVERY WARDROBE WANTS THIS STYLISH "WEATHER TRIO"

ZIPPER SPATTERSHU—A dainty little boot aloof to storms . . . snugly protective to your ankles. Light and flexible . . . easy on and off your city-mannered pumps. In black or white.

AIRLINER—A foot-warming style . . . fabulous in comfort! Made in rubber to seal out the weather . . . then luxury lined and cuffed in sheepskin! Black or brown.

for rain • for snow • for cold, get the "WEATHER TRIO" by

B.F.Goodrich

Footwear Factories, Watertown, Mass.

THE PORTRAIT

(Continued from Page 43)

"I took the liberty of mentioning this painting to him," Mr. Sigmund continued. "He was interested. Wanted to know if you'd consider selling it."

"Would he buy it without seeing it?" Betty asked, surprised.

"He usually accepts my judgment on those things," Mr. Sigmund answered indifferently. "But he might want to run out here. I think I mentioned a hundred dollars as a possible price, but I believe I could get a hundred and fifty."

There was a pause.

"Of course, I don't charge you a commission on this," Mr. Sigmund said. "I'm acting for him—not for you." He gave a short, and startlingly mirthless, laugh.

"Well, I really don't want to sell it," Lacey said.

Mr. Sigmund thrust out his lower lip. "If I could get him to go up—well, say, as high as two hundred and fifty; I'm doubtful if I can, but I'm willing to try—would you consider it?"

Lacey hesitated. He certainly could use two hundred and fifty dollars. It would buy Betty a small washing machine and put a little cash in the bank, so that they wouldn't get the jitters at the end of every month. And, after all, he was a little conceited to hold on to a painting of himself when they could get a good price for it and needed the money.

"It's my painting, isn't it?" Betty inquired suddenly. "I mean, you gave it to me, didn't you, Billy?"

Lacey couldn't remember anything definite about that—he had just sort of brought it home and presented it; but he certainly wouldn't be so lacking in gallantry as to deny the gift. "Yes, of course," he said.

"So you'll have to deal with me, Mr. Sigmund," Betty said. "And I don't want to sell it. I like it."

Mr. Sigmund stared at her. "Yes, I know how you feel. A portrait of your husband But money's useful. Well, I'm sorry we couldn't make a deal. I'll tell my client."

He said good-by and went out. From the window Lacey saw him get into a car driven by another man and begin to talk vehemently to him.

"He's probably saying we're a couple of fatheads," Lacey said. "And maybe he's right."

"It's not likely that you'll ever have another portrait painted," Betty said, "and I want to keep this one."

"Yes, but two hundred and fifty bucks!"

"Money isn't everything," Betty reminded him loftily.

"Our money is practically nothing. That's just the trouble."

"Anyway, two hundred and fifty dollars is too little," Betty said, shifting her ground. "Twenty-five hundred I might listen to."

"I don't think I could hear twenty-five hundred dollars. I'd get a roaring in my ears."

Betty slid over the arm of their one armchair into the seat. "I don't like that little man, anyway," she declared. "He has the kind of sharp nose that you sometimes see sticking out of a hole in the wall."

"I wish he'd never come around," Lacey muttered moodily. "I used to look at the face in that painting and think, 'How pure, how fine!' Now every time I look at it, I see two hundred and fifty dollars written across the forehead."

This disturbing illusion was reinforced two nights later, when Mr. Sigmund called on the telephone. "I have a pleasant surprise for you," he said. "And I must say it's a surprise to me, too! I told my customer that you didn't want to sell that painting; but he called me back today to say he'd give you five hundred dollars for it."

Dress by Vanity Fair

MADE OF Bur-Mil COMPANY YARN BATON ROUGE

Between the figure and the fashion...

the lace, the grace of your

Seamprufe

slip

Beautiful go-between that gives the longed-for smooth line to your finished dress... your Seamprufe* slip... figure-proportioned and precision-tailored to the last tiny detail. Bur-Mil* quality rayon. White, blue, maize, or black. Sizes 32 to 40. Seamprufe slips from $3.95 to $7.95.

At leading stores throughout the country

SEAMPRUFE INCORPORATED, 412 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Mynette

A fitting answer to your gift problem! Mynette gives this gay half-size Sanforized Dan River corded chambray her famous attention to fit and fabric. Blue, black, brown or red stripes with white cord. Wonderfully washable. Sizes 12½ to 22½. About 9.00.

For store nearest you, write
THE GOTTFRIED COMPANY
Dept. 8, Cleveland 14, Ohio

L[illegible]y could not quite prevent a slight sp[illegible] To give himself time to think, he said, N[illegible]hy does he want it so much?"

"[illegible]inkly, I can't imagine. It isn't worth at[illegible]much. But he has two of Bonner's [illegible]el[illegible], and apparently he's going to collect m[illegible]

B[illegible]y, who had been washing the dishes, m[illegible]o the living-room door.

"[illegible]ell, I'll—I'll ask my wife about it," ac[illegible] said. "Just a minute." He put his un[illegible]over the mouthpiece. "Five hundred [illegible]rr[illegible]," he whispered hoarsely.

"[illegible]s not for sale," Betty stated firmly.

"[illegible]ve hundred——" Lacey stopped, pulled m[illegible]f together and declared into the telephone, "She says that it's not for sale."

H[illegible] could hear a sound [illegible]s[illegible]he tortured kind at [illegible]e[illegible] her end of the wire.

Lo[illegible]," Mr. Sigmund said [illegible] strained voice. "I [illegible]n[illegible] how you feel about f[illegible]ily portrait, and so n[illegible]ut this painter's stuff ev[illegible] sold for more than a [illegible]un[illegible]red dollars. You get [illegible]ve[illegible]undred dollars, you can buy yourself [illegible]n[illegible]er portrait just as good here for two [illegible]un[illegible]red dollars, and you have three hundred [illegible]oll[illegible]s in your pocket. Does it make sense [illegible]o [illegible]n a thing like that down?"

[illegible] washing machine and a tweed jacket, [illegible]nd the cylinders ground in the car, and [illegible]le[illegible]y of bank balance. Lacey spoke shakily: S[illegible]ce my wife owns the painting, maybe [illegible]o[illegible]better talk to her."

"Yes, let me talk to her."

But Betty shook her head. "It's not for [illegible]al[illegible]' she repeated.

Lacey made his report.

There was definitely a note of exasperation [illegible]n [illegible]r. Sigmund's voice. "Ask her how much [illegible]he[illegible] take for the painting," he begged.

"Twenty-five hundred dollars," Betty said.

Lacey swallowed, but transmitted the information as calmly as possible. After a moment he hung up.

"In my opinion you are a desiccated carp with fallen arches," he told his wife.

"What did he say?" Betty demanded.

"He was a little profane. He said you must think the painting is by Van Dyck."

"I just think it's strange that this dealer wants it so badly."

"I've heard of one painting being painted over another," Lacey said.

"Why don't you ask the art professor?" Betty suggested.

Lacey didn't take Art, but he had a friend who did, and he ran into him the next morning. "Who's the head of Art?" he asked.

"Professor Dale."

"What kind of a guy is he?"

"He's a stinker. . . . I have to run, Bill. Got a class."

Recalling that his friend's descriptions were impulsive, and that he had failed his last Art examination, Lacey called on Professor Dale that afternoon, carrying the painting wrapped in paper. The professor had a small office in the Art and Geology Museum; he was surrounded with paintings and prints, pieces of sculpture and large flat tomes. He was no taller than Mr. Sigmund, but he had a big, rather handsome head with a beard, a gruff, abrupt manner and a twinkling eye.

Lacey introduced himself and said he wanted to ask his advice on a painting.

"You're not in my course?" Professor Dale queried.

"No, sir."

"Why not?"

"I'm working for a scientific degree."

"You should take my course as an extra. It's the best course in college."

"Yes, sir. I've heard it was good."

"From whom?"

Lacey was confused. "A friend—some of the boys said it was good."

Smile, for everyone lacks self-confidence; and more than any other one thing, a smile reassures them.

—ANDRÉ MAUROIS.

BESTFORM

no finer fit at any price to give you lovely, sleek lines . . .

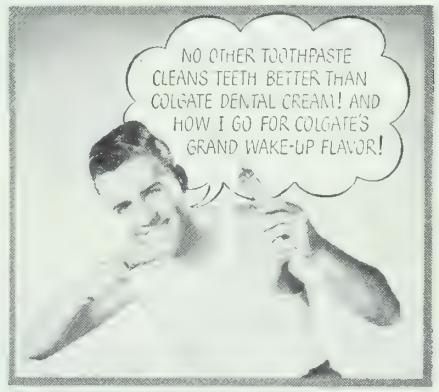
Bestform's artfully designed all-in-one. 15" long, made of smooth satin-faced batiste with firm elasticized panels, bra top of stitched lace. Side Talon zipper. Style 7117, sizes 34-42. In nude only, $8.50



It's a Woman's Privilege to Change Her Mind!

Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

COLGATE RIBBON DENTAL CREAM

NEW! ECONOMY SIZE EXTRA BIG! EXTRA VALUE! 59¢

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

It's so soft—just like cleansing tissue! And because it's two-ply, it's strong—really practical! I'm sure you'll like Scott's new Soft-Weve as much as I do!

Cleansing tissue soft
...toilet tissue firm

"Soft-Weve" "Scotties" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

P.S. a cleansing tissue by Scott

...so soft
...so firm
you'll like Scotties

The professor glared at him. "Probably making that up, just so you can ask my advice. All my advice on painting is given in that course. Better take it."

"Yes, sir," Lacey said. Chagrined, he started to move away.

"Well, speak up," Professor Dale said, "and sit down. Never be overawed by a professor—he's frequently bluffing. Is that the painting?"

"Yes, sir." Lacey unwrapped it and set it on an easel at the professor's direction, and explained how he got it.

"It's a competent commercial job," the professor said. "You can hang it up for a while and then put it in the attic."

"Could it be sold—is there a market for it?"

"Are you short of cash?" the professor inquired.

"No, sir—that is, not at the moment."

"Um-m. Married a rich wife, probably. Oh, you might sell it for fifty dollars, but I doubt it."

"I've been offered five hundred for it."

"You don't say!" the professor exclaimed.

Lacey related his conversation with the art dealer. The professor sat upright with his hands on his knees, his big head and eyes turned intently on Lacey.

"That's curious," he said. He took the panel in his hand and began examining it closely, inspecting the edges and back more than the painting itself. "The wood looks old," he said. "It's the kind used in Italian primitives—but it's not too difficult to get old wood; and, of course, age can be faked."

He put the painting back on the easel and examined it through a microscope on an adjustable standard. Lacey sat quietly, looking at some of the paintings around him and wondering why they were supposed to be beautiful.

Professor Dale pushed the microscope away and said, "I can't tell enough about it with this instrument. The first thing we need is an X-ray photograph. That would show us whether or not there was another painting under this one."

"You think there might be?"

"It looks suspicious—or perhaps we should say promising."

"If there is, can the top painting be removed?"

"There are half a dozen people in the country perhaps who could remove it. The restoration of a painting is one of the most difficult tasks known to man."

"I suppose one of these experts is expensive?" Lacey inquired cautiously.

"It might take him seven or eight months and cost several thousand dollars," Professor Dale replied lightly. "And then might find that the painting underne wasn't worth anything."

"I see."

"Or we might find it was a del Sa worth a hundred and twenty-five thous dollars." The professor directed a bri smile at Lacey and suddenly terminated

"I guess I was happier when I just ha painting of myself that cost half a carton cigarettes," Lacey said.

"The simple life is often the happies Professor Dale replied, "but—toujours l'a dace!"

"Yes, sir."

"It so happens that one of these restor tion experts is a friend of mine," the pr fessor continued. "He's in Albany and do work for half a dozen art museums in t East. I'm going to Albany this week en Let me take the painting along."

"That certainly would be kind of you Lacey said. He walked home in a state excitement.

Betty was out, but returned shortly. " you really loved me," she said, after kissin him, "you'd scrape your feet before yo enter the house, after walking through a that mud."

"I wore rubbers," Lacey said, "and I le them on the back porch. So I didn't bring i any mud."

"What do you call that?" Betty asked pointing. There were undeniably mudd footprints on the floor, man-size.

"You must have been entertaining, Lacey stated accusingly.

Betty looked into the bedroom. "They'r in here too." Then she looked into th kitchen. "Someone's been through th house," she cried indignantly.

"There's where he came in," Lacey said at the bedroom window. The window was on the side of the house at the end of the room too high to reach from the ground; an ash can had been placed beneath it. They looked through the rooms, but found nothing missing.

"We haven't anything worth stealing, anyway," Betty said.

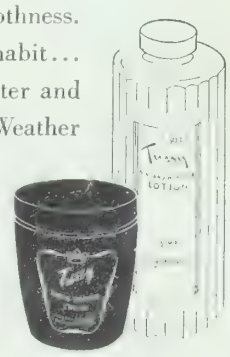
"We did have something," Lacey said He nodded at the wall where the painting had been hanging before he took it to the professor.

Betty sat down. "Billy, you scare me!"

"Wait till you hear this." He told her of his conversation with Professor Dale. "I think Sigmund or his accomplice was here," he concluded. "They know the layout."

"You know what I think, Billy?" Betty declared solemnly. "We're caught in the net

(Continued on Page 264)



Beauty forecast—softer lovelier hands with

TUSSY WIND & WEATHER LOTION

Smooth its silken goodness over your hands every chance you get. This fragrant, rosy lotion helps protect your skin from weather exposure, from everyday tasks. Its richer consistency gives better protection... and for longer. Tussy Wind & Weather Lotion brings soothing relief for chapped, roughened hands... encourages appealing petal-smoothness. Non-greasy and refreshing... you'll want to make it a daily year-round beauty habit... not only for hands, arms, elbows, but from head to toe. Your skin will feel softer and lovelier each time you use it! Tussy Wind & Weather Lotion, $1 and $2. Wind & Weather Hand Cream—special cream formula—$1. All prices plus tax. With other fine Tussy preparations at better cosmetic counters.

TUSSY wind & weather lotion

NO Guessing FOR ME

Mine are Gordon Nylons!

With Gordon Nylons there's no guessing about beauty, no guessing about quality, no guessing how they will wear . . . because Gordon makes Nylons in a correct sheerness for every occasion. Next time you're shopping for nylons, ask yourself where you will be wearing these stockings. Then choose the ones that suit the way you live, the things you do . . . and get more wear per pair. The tissue around each pair of Gordon Nylons tells you which sheerness is designed for your particular need.

Be sure of lasting beauty, be sure of longer wear . . .

there's no guesswork with

Gordon NYLONS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

(Continued from Page 262)

of a vast criminal conspiracy involving a priceless treasure of art."

He nodded. "Lucky we weren't murdered in our beds," he asserted.

"Bed," Betty corrected.

Lacey telephoned Professor Dale and told him about it. "It may be a coincidence of no importance," he said.

"Very interesting," the professor replied. "I'll lock it up."

Several very long days later the professor called on them. He seemed to like Betty.

"The perfect way to go to college," he assured Lacey. "Someone to cook for you and make your room attractive. No annoying contacts with undergraduates after hours. No worry about asking the loved one to the dance or getting a letter from her."

"It's working out pretty well," Lacey admitted.

"How do you feel about it?" the professor asked Betty fiercely.

"I like it fine," Betty assured him.

"Did your husband tell you what we're doing about his portrait?"

"Yes. It belongs to me, you know."

"Oh, it does! So I have to deal with you."

"Yes."

"It will be a pleasure," Professor Dale averred, bowing, with his sudden warm smile. "So! Here is a picture that will interest you." He unrolled an X-ray photograph and held it against the light. "My friend Gallardin, the restorer, took it and it shows, as I thought it would, that your portrait has been painted over another portrait—probably a man, by the shadow here, which seems to be a scholar's cap." He interpreted some of the other shadings for them and added, "I took a chance and asked my friend to remove a square inch of the overpainting, here in the right-hand corner where it would not matter much if anything went wrong. We found out something of the greatest importance." He stopped and turned to Betty. She was gazing at him with big eyes, and her excitement made her look prettier than ever. The professor's pause was longer than he intended. "Let's see—where was I?" he inquired.

"You said you found out something of the greatest importance," Betty responded breathlessly.

"Oh, yes. The portrait of your husband was put on in such a way that it could be easily and quickly removed. A hard glaze was put over the underpainting, and your man Bonner painted on that. In other words, your portrait was apparently designed for concealment only—a kind of wrapping paper that no one would suspect."

"I thought the portrait was quite good," Betty said indignantly.

"You are in love," Professor Dale said.

"You think the painting underneath it may be an—an old master?" Lacey inquired.

"I don't know. Suppose it is an Italian primitive. It may have been part of the loot the Germans took out of Prague or Warsaw or something they swiped in passing from an ancient chapel in Italy. Bonner gets hold of it, somehow. He cannot ship it out of Germany—it would be recognized and seized, and he would need special permission to export an art treasure anyway—so he spreads a hard glaze over it, paints a portrait of an American G. I. over that, gets the G. I. to bring it to the United States, tells his confederate to buy it back for a couple of hundred dollars—and practically free of charge he has something to sell here for a very large sum of money."

"Pretty smooth," Lacey commented admiringly.

"Because of that hard glaze," Professor Dale continued, "my friend Gallardin can wipe off Mr. William Lacey in a few hours, without the usual months of painstaking work. Only, he can't put him back! So?"

"What do you say, Betty?" Lacey asked.

"It's worth the chance," Betty said.

"He'll grow better looking in time, anyway," Professor Dale assured her. "That's what happened to me. Well, I'll tell my friend Gallardin to go ahead, and we'll take a look at it when he calls us."

AMAZING NEW DEW SPRAY DEODORANT

in the Magical "Self-Atomizing" Squeezable Bottle!

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TWO FULL DAYS!

Daintier than creams! Dew never touches hands, nails. Not messy. Just squeeze new flexible bottle. Spray on a gentle mist.

Only deodorant containing "Retselane" to stop perspiration safely, protect clothes from perspiration stains. Instantly removes odor. Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure for two full days.

Will not rot clothes! Dew is harmless, stainless. Can't irritate normal skin.

Bottle magic! Dew's new plastic bottle can't leak, break or spill. Perfect for purse or travel.

SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax

Less than 2¢ a week

KNITTING YARNS Prompt Mail Service

Send for FREE Samples

COLONIAL YARN HOUSE, 1231-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

FALSE TEETH

KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. © I. P. Inc.

KLUTCH CO., Box 4821-K, ELMIRA, N. Y.

THE FRAGRANCE OF YOUTH...

April Showers

Eau de Toilette
$2.00, $1.25
plus tax

by CHERAMY perfumer

The three drove to Albany a few days later in the professor's automobile—a somewhat nerve-racking ride, because of the professor's habit of honking his horn at oncoming cars. Gallardin had his laboratory in his house on the first floor. There was a white counter along one side of the room with microscopes, test tubes, Bunsen burners and retorts. A large X-ray machine stood in a corner, and there were several draped easels. Gallardin himself looked a little like a clerk, neat and preoccupied; but his mildness of manner was deceptive, and he had an interested eye for Betty.

"We are naturally somewhat excited, my dear friend," Professor Dale said to him. "So what do you have to say to us?"

"The results are good so far," Gallardin replied. "I did not look for any trouble with the overpainting—I simply wiped it off above the glaze with turpentine. But finding the right solvent to remove the glaze without hurting the underpainting is another matter! I've been experimenting in one corner, but I'm afraid to do much. I'd like to know what the right solvent is."

He went to one of the draped easels and took off the cloth. The portrait of Private First Class William Lacey, Army of the U. S., in olive drab had disappeared, and in its place was that of a young Italian scholar in medieval dress, the rich colors of which were still apparent through the glaze. He wore a doublet of varying blue silk with silver sleeves, a green pelisse and a black velvet cap; a heavy gold chain hung over the shoulders.

"Extraordinary!" Professor Dale muttered. He moved nearer, charged with a tremendous emotion. The Laceys, awed and thrilled, were at his side. "Venetian school," Dale stated. "Early sixteenth century."

Gallardin nodded. The professor continued to study it.

"Ah," he murmured with satisfaction. "Yes, I would say so—Lorenzo Lotto."

"No, I think not," Gallardin contradicted. "But my dear Gallardin—that blue and silver! And note the slightly desperate curve of the mouth, so characteristic."

Gallardin shook his head. "The colors are too vigorous for Lotto, and the chiaroscuro too powerful. Also, the costume is, I believe, that of a Roman, not a Venetian. To me, it has the stamp of del Piombo. You haven't had time to study it."

"If the glaze were removed, you would see what I mean," Professor Dale went on kindly. "It was probably done in the latter part of Lotto's life when he was so closely associated with Titian."

"There is certainly a resemblance," Gallardin conceded. "The Venetian painters, after all, have so much in common! No, this, I believe, is del Piombo. In the Pitti Gallery there is a portrait of his, similar to this; the pelisse is fur, as I recall."

"It is more like a Tintoretto than a del Piombo," Professor Dale rejoined, his voice losing its kindly note. "But it is neither. It is Lorenzo Lotto."

Gallardin gave a short laugh, and the professor glared at him.

"Would it be very valuable whichever one it is?" Betty asked timidly.

"Valuable?" repeated the professor absently. "Yes, yes, of course. Certainly over a hundred thousand dollars."

"Wouldn't that dealer, Sigmund, know what solvent to use on the glaze?" Lacey inquired, after swallowing.

"Yes, that is what I've been thinking," Gallardin answered. "I was going to suggest that we get him over here. He probably won't tell, but it's worth trying. I've known the little crook for some time, and I'll call him."

Continued on Page 267

Ordinary people merely think how they shall spend their time; a man of talent tries to use it.
—SCHOPENHAUER.

Patterned to Please

Miracle-Tread

SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

A smart beginning for a stunning appearance. Dramatize your smartest costume with footwear that is so fashion-right and so–

Cleverly designed for Ankle Flattery

The Jiless

$7.95
A FEW STYLES HIGHER
Distant Points
Slightly Higher

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer
MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation, Lynchburg, Virginia

here's the Hidden Secret of soft, natural-looking waves:

GABRIELEEN with Adepsol
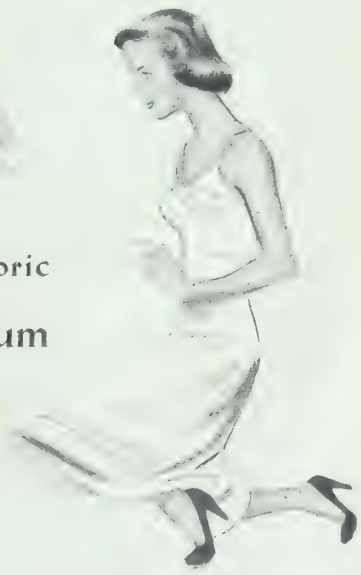
COLD WAVE PERMANENT
(Also Machine and Machineless Waves)

Gabrieleen with Adepsol can assure your permanent being deep, springy yet soft . . . and shining with highlights. For Gabrieleen is the professional cold wave . . . behind the millions of beautiful long-lasting Gabrieleen waves are the skilled hands of your operator. Discover this lovelier permanent for every hair-type; at your beauty salon insist on genuine Gabrieleen for your next permanent.

GIBBS & COMPANY
Distributors • CHICAGO, ILL.
World's Largest Manufacturers and Distributors of Beauty Shop Supplies and Equipment



This advertisement is based on the embarrassing episode of Jean Williams of Lambert, Miss., to whom we have sent a check for $50.

When a Slip becomes a social error ... switch to

Mary Barron

The jeering section saw the slip-up. So did the captain and the student body. Not even the Queen's crown could offset her embarrassment. As she knelt, her slip climbed above her knees. Impossible with a MARY BARRON slip! No strap tug, either, nor twisting around the hips! The patented "biastrait" design assures perfect behavior with full freedom of action.

A new combination miracle fabric

• • • Nylon Rayon Radium

Washes easily and dries quickly. Shell pink, white and black. Sizes 32 to 44, 31½ to 39½. Buy MARY BARRON slips in the same size as your brassiere.
Price $4.00

If not available at your favorite store, write to Mary Barron.

WIN $50.00 for your most embarrassing slip moment, if we use it in our advertising. Send to Mary Barron, c/o The Davidson Bros. Corp., 180 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. (Expires Dec. 31, 1948)

"TEDDY" ROOSEVELT—great American patriot—ovator—and President, stirs a "home town" audience.

FIGHTING EYES made "Teddy" a Champion!

Theodore Roosevelt, lion-hearted President, builder of the Panama Canal, Nobel Prize winner, started life as a frail boy . . . a shy, awkward child, hopelessly handicapped by poor vision. Not until his first eye examination, at 13, did young Teddy know the miracle of good seeing—the ability to see clearly, comfortably and without strain. The transformation, in his own words, "literally opened an entirely new world to me". . . a bright, new world of knowledge and understanding. With eyes in "fighting trim", Roosevelt's real self began to develop and shine out. He acquired power, aggressiveness, alertness. He became an omnivorous reader, a prolific writer . . . in every way a man of action and achievement.

BETTER VISION FOR BETTER LIVING

In our day, modern eye science safeguards young eyes from the intolerable strain and struggle of poor seeing—a child's most tragic handicap in preparing for a happy, useful life. Now, as a bumper crop of babies grows to school age, young mothers and fathers should take heed that eye care comes first in child care! Have your child's eyes examined at once—and regularly. The professional services and skills of the ophthalmologist, the optometrist, and the ophthalmic dispenser (optician) will protect those trusting young eyes for a lifetime of seeing and doing!

BETTER VISION INSTITUTE, INC., 630 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 265)

When Mr. Sigmund arrived, his manner as brisk and assertive; if he was guilty of ousebreaking and other sharp practices, it d not weigh on his conscience.

"That used to be my portrait," Lacey said ith a wave of his hand.

Mr. Sigmund stood in front of it, pushing it his lower lip. "Well, it's happened be-re," he said finally. "You have to be ready r anything in this business. An art dealer never surprised."

"What would you say it was?" Professor ale inquired.

"I'm just a dealer," Mr. Sigmund said. "I ouldn't know as much about that as you entlemen."

"I thought maybe that fellow Bonner told ou something about it in his letter," Lacey aid.

"Didn't mention it."

"Of course, Bonner knew there was an-ther painting underneath," Professor Dale bserved gently.

"Yes, I guess that's right," Mr. Sigmund greed blandly.

"And he painted over it in order to conceal and get it out of the country," the pro-essor went on.

"Ah, now you're speculating," Mr. Sig-hund said.

Gallardin entered the conversation. "Mr. igmund," he said, "these people have asked he to restore this painting. I was hoping hat you could tell me what solvent I might se to remove the glaze. I can find out my-elf by experimenting—but that takes time nd there's always the risk of damaging the ainting. Of course, we'll pay you for any elp which you can give us, Mr. Sigmund."

Sigmund shook his head ith a regretful expression. I don't know a thing bout it, so I'm afraid I an't help you." He picked p his hat. "Unless you appen to want to sell t."

"How much would you ay for it?" Betty inter-ected quickly. "It's mine, ou know."

"Five thousand dol-ars."

Betty did not do a very ood job of concealing her excitement. A low of triumph swept over her. After all, he had held out all the way from a hundred dollars.

"Of course, if it's genuine Venetian school, t's worth a great deal more," Professor Dale aid.

"If," said Mr. Sigmund. "If, if." He valked casually to the door. "Well, let me now." He went out into the hall, with Lacey following, to show him to the front door.

"Just about as co-operative as a rattle-nake," Gallardin observed.

"This whole business is making me nerv-ous," Betty said. "Maybe I better sell it. I once said I would sell it for twenty-five hundred dollars, and I never thought I'd get that much."

"Working on that glaze might be expen-sive," Gallardin said, nodding.

"Well, let's sleep over it," Professor Dale suggested. "We'll have a council of war to-morrow."

THE Laceys were spending the night with Lacey's parents. At bedtime, as Betty was giving her hair forty brush strokes, she said, "By the way, what was Sigmund saying to you in the hall when he left? I heard you talking."

"He wanted me to show him the bath-room."

"Oh." Betty went on brushing her hair. Then she added, "There's one on the ground floor, isn't there? So while he was there, he unlocked the window."

Lacey stared at her. "You're an intelligent woman," he said. "By Godfrey, I'll tele-phone Gallardin."

There was no answer on the telephone.

"I'm going to borrow dad's car and go down there," Lacey said. He was already hurrying out the door before Betty could de-mand to go with him.

Gallardin's street looked lonely and dark when he entered it. A car was parked just be-yond the house, with someone in the driver's seat. Lacey drove slowly past and around the corner, where he stopped and got out. There were three houses between here and Gallardin's, and the plots were separated only by hedges. As he cut through the back yards, a lap dog yapped sharply from an in-terior; otherwise, all was quiet. There were no lights burning in Gallardin's house. Lacey surveyed the grounds and then crossed to the house wall and proceeded along it to the bathroom window. The window was open.

HE drew back against the wall and con-sidered the situation; but he had time for no more than a moment's reflection, before the darkness about the window stirred, a man's arm let down a rectangular panel, and the man followed immediately. Lacey jumped forward to grab him around the throat from behind, but stumbled on a rock, so that he missed and clutched the other's waist. The man hit backward with his elbow, hitting Lacey by chance in the eye, and started to run, holding the panel by the edge. Lacey got his hand on it and jerked it away. He was about to run after the other and was confident he would catch him when there was a flash of light behind him and something struck him on the back of the head. His knees gave way, and despite the effort of his will he sat dizzily upon the ground. The beam of light was in his face and then turned off, and through his daze he heard Gallardin's somewhat breathless voice:

"What's the idea, Lacey? Trying to steal your own wife's painting?"

"No," Lacey answered. He had to wait a moment to collect himself. Then he added," Somebody else was." After another mo-ment he said, "I suppose you cracked me on the head?"

"I came home, heard a noise, walked around here—and saw somebody apparently running off with the panel," Gallardin explained. "So I hit him on the head with a flashlight. Sorry if it was a mistake."

"It's O.K. We saved the painting, any-way."

"Are you all right?" Gallardin asked.

"Yes. How's the painting?"

Gallardin picked it up and ran his flash-light over it. "It's scraped in one corner, but otherwise undamaged."

They went into the house, and Lacey told his story. "It was so dark and happened so quickly that I couldn't tell who the thief was," he concluded, "but I have a feeling it was Sigmund."

"It probably was," Gallardin said. He was examining the scraped panel with a mi-croscope.

"I wish I had socked him good just once."

"He deserves it," Gallardin said, "but there may be other and better forms of pun-ishment. That's one of the things we can dis-cuss tomorrow."

Betty was the first to arrive at Gallardin's the next day; Lacey was coming from an-other appointment. She was worried. It had taken her a long time to get to sleep after Lacey had returned from his adventure.

"This is getting to be too much for me," she declared to Gallardin, "men trying to steal my painting, and people saying that it might be worth a hundred thousand dollars—it upsets me. I guess I'm not the mystery-novel type."

Gallardin laughed. "You're beautiful enough," he said, "but the dark and tricky character of the art business probably seems a little strange."

"Billy and I don't know anything about art," Betty continued, "and, of course, we don't have any money. If I had a hundred-thousand-dollar painting hanging on the wall of our emergency-housing unit, I'd never have a peaceful moment."

Dancing is the loftiest, the most moving, the most beautiful of the arts, because it is no mere translation or abstraction from life; it is life itself. It is the only art, as Rahel Varnhagen said, of which we ourselves are the stuff.

—HAVELOCK ELLIS: The Dance of Life (Houghton Mifflin Company).

RELIEVE PAIN INSTANTLY
COMBAT INFECTION from minor WOUNDS
WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern, stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! apply soothing Campho-Phenique. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use Campho-Phenique also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites. Many doctors, dentists and nurses prefer this famous liquid antiseptic. So do children. It does not smart or sting . . . and it's stainless! Recommended over 50 years. Get it now.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(pronounced Cam-fo-fi-neek)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

A Woman Looks At Life Insurance

What does a woman think of when she looks at Life Insurance? Mortality tables—non-forfeiture values? No, she thinks of the security of her family—of a promise that her little ones will have a college education. Then, too, she thinks of the day when the children will be grown and she and her husband can look forward to doing all the things they have planned together.

When a woman looks at Life Insurance she looks at herself and she also sees the older woman she will some day be. It isn't just the facts of compound interest that persuade her toward a life insurance program but the pleasant prospect of lifetime security.

Appreciating that most women will think of these things when they look at Life Insurance, the Business Men's Assurance Company is introducing a unique new Family Security Plan—a plan that offers four times as much family security for approximately two times the usual premium and provides for Hospitalization, Doctor's and Surgeon's bills, Income Continuance and Retirement Income.

Chances are there is a B.M.A. Representative as close as your telephone, but if not the Home Office in Kansas City will be glad to furnish you with complete information about this new, modern plan of Family Security. Write for details.

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSURANCE CO.

B. M. A. Building, Home Office, Kansas City, Mo.

Offices in More Than 45 Principal Cities to be as good with Meat

Spreading ham, or other cold cuts, with Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise mixed with Best Foods Mustard-with-Horseradish is an idea born in gourmet's heaven. This delicious mayonnaise has no sissy sweetness. Not just "salad dressing," it's real mayonnaise.

as it is with Potatoes

A potato salad ring browned in the oven is a treat—especially when served with lots of Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise. This famous mayonnaise contains no starchy filler. It's flavor-rich with freshly broken eggs, added egg yolks, "Fresh-Press" salad oil, mild vinegar, and spices. It's real mayonnaise!

make sure it's BEST FOODS OR HELLMANN'S
Real Mayonnaise

AMERICA'S LARGEST-SELLING MAYONNAISE

I wish this girl were single, Gallardin was thinking. "Look here," he said, "why don't you forget about these fancy prices and all this excitement and sell the painting to Sigmund for what he offered? Five thousand dollars is a lot of money."

"It certainly is," Betty agreed. She had a sudden impression that Gallardin was trying to tell her something without saying it. "Is that your advice as an art expert," she asked "or is it your advice as a comforter of nervous women?"

"It's my advice as an art expert."

"Well, maybe I will sell it," she said slowly.

"Call him up now and tell him."

"I guess I ought to talk to Bill," Betty said. "He might not want to have any dealings at all with Sigmund after last night."

"That's one of the reasons why I suggest you do it now."

"And Professor Dale will think I'm a fool to sell at that price."

"That's the other reason," Gallardin said.

Betty laughed. "All right. I'll do it." She telephoned Sigmund's shop. Mr. Sigmund responded with cautious gratification, but lived up to his previous statement that an art dealer should never be surprised at anything. He said he would send over a certified check.

When Lacey and Professor Dale arrived, Betty nervously reported her action. Much to her relief, Lacey received the news, on the whole, with approval. He was glad to have the matter settled, and as long as he was taking money away from Sigmund it wasn't so bad. And, after all, five thousand dollars ——

The professor was touched to receive, a few days later, a check for five hundred dollars from Betty for his art museum. At about that time he had a talk with Gallardin, and the conversation was so interesting that the professor asked the Laceys to call on him. Betty had a new permanent wave and was wearing a new tweed suit, with alligator shoes. Lacey looked equally prosperous in doeskin slacks and tweed jacket, of the same material as hers.

"Well, I have some remarkable news for you," the professor declared. "First of all, let me say that, as I stated at the time, my friend Gallardin was wrong in thinking that the portrait was a del Piombo."

"And you were right," Lacey said, nodding.

"Ah. No. I was wrong, too," the professor conceded. "Of course, I only saw it through the glaze. And that fellow Sigmund w wrong—he thought it was a Tintoretto. G lardin got the story from him when Sigmu went there to pick up the panel. It was s posed to be the portrait of an Italian n chant of the Renaissance, and it was kept the house of his descendants in Mantua Italy. At least, that is what your Gern acquaintance, Bonner, believed. Some G man staff officer was quartered there, and took it and sent it to Goering, who had it one of his hunting lodges in Bavaria. Af the German defeat, it was looted, and B ner got hold of it, somehow. Bonner us you to get it into the United States and se word to Sigmund that it was a Tintorett

The professor paused to produce one his irrelevant smiles.

"The last Tintoretto I read about s for a hundred and twenty thousand dollars he said.

"But you say it wasn't a Tintoretto Lacey said, trying to suppress a note anxiety in his voice.

"No. That was just Bonner's mistake. was a modern copy made by some shrew Italian painter. He probably sold it as bargain to some Fascist official who didn know anything about art and wanted to w Goering's favor."

"How did they find out it was a fake? Betty asked.

"When the painting was scraped on t night of the attempted theft, Gallardin n ticed a different color underneath. So took an X ray and found a third picture u der that one—a still life, dated ninetee thirty-seven."

"I wish I could have been present wh Sigmund was told," Lacey said gleefull "Whoops!"

"Ah," said the professor. "As you say, was indeed, 'Whoops!' Gallardin, a man no mean spirit, says it was a flaming mome in his lifetime. Sigmund even accused him knowing that the panel was a fake at t time Sigmund bought it and of urging yo wife to sell it for five thousand dollars The professor's eyes strayed innocently Betty's.

Betty hesitated for one stabilizing breat while her interview with Gallardin flashe luminously through her mind. Then she r plied with dignity, "Mr. Gallardin is too fi a man to be affected by abuse from such one as Sigmund."

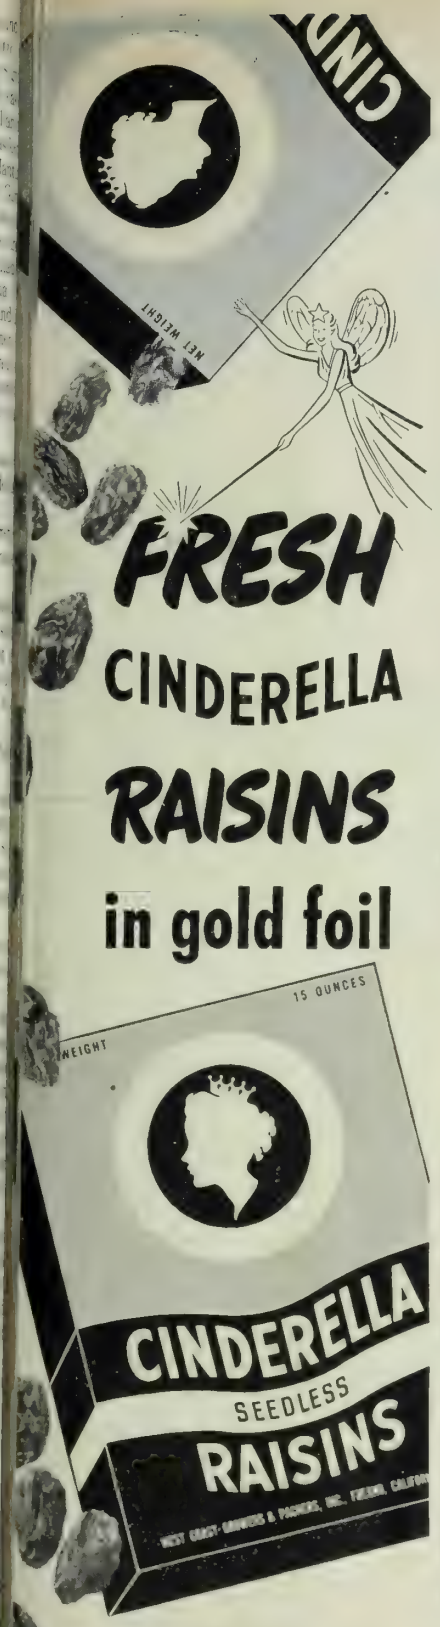
"That's what I thought, too," the pr fessor answered gravely.

AMERICAN PROVINCIAL LIVING ROOM

(Continued from Page 223)

In the color photographs the sawbuck and lamp tables, as well as the fireside and tavern chair, are authentic originals bought near the Freeman home in Quakertown. The Windsor-type chair in the foreground and the desk chair are fine copies of Provincial types now being made commercially. The desk, coffee table and wall cabinet we designed and made ourselves, following faithfully the lines of the finest museum pieces.

An upholstered sofa and chair of the type shown go well in any informal setting and take their character from the style of coverings; in this instance, quaintness. Chairs were not "easy" a century ago, and of course there were no upholstered pieces in early America. It is the spirit of the room that counts, and no decoration is ever good without comfort and at least a few beauty spots for accent. Collectors' rooms take many years to complete, so don't be bothered by the stand-ins which are lacking only in romance to make them as charming as the originals.



Here are a few points to keep in mind when starting or developing a Provincial American room.

Good Colors. Authentic colors of the period—in general, covering the first two centuries of American history—are India blue; Persian green (on the mossy side); brown, combined with yellow; Turkey red and mulberry. Walls were cream from age or use, and wood trim was richly weathered tan and brown. You can't improve on an approx imation of these colors for today's scheme

Printed fabrics were cotton, with design of flowers, birds, leaves and arabesque pat terns brought in as trade goods from India The fabric used in the Freeman room is glaze cotton, which is an exact copy of a century old print. The design shows a delightful pat tern of grape leaves and birds, and the pric is $1.80 a yard. The same fabric comes in red yellow and brown colorings.

Furniture Suggestions. In an earlie day, sawbuck and trestle tables were more plentiful than drop-leaf styles, which were usually made by cabinetmakers for town trade. This offers a suggestion for the handy man of the family who need be little more than an amateur to turn out a good sawbuck or trestle table. Originals were practically al amateur jobs made by the men of the family for hard, everyday use. Many such tables in antique shops today have been newly constructed out of old wood, genuinely mellowed by age. Old wood can still be found in ancient barns and other buildings being torn down.

Small tables are easily found, but you will have to make, or buy new, your coffee table, as the style is of recent origin. Benches or pews, settles, stools and a great variety of chairs are reasonably plentiful in those sections of the country where they originated. Elsewhere one must search for them in shops or at auctions.

Fresher than any raisins you've ever tasted because plump, sun-dried Cinderella Raisins are wrapped in moisture-sealing gold foil. They reach your kitchen fresh, stay fresh days after the package is opened.

FREE Recipe Book
"It's a Cinch With Cindy"
Just send coupon

Mrs. "Cindy" Lewis
Cinderella Kitchens
Fresno, Calif.

Please send me the free Cinderella Raisin Recipe Book.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....

Superb reproductions of all types of American Provincial furniture are being made today. These are not fake antiques, but well-made copies worthy of being used along with your treasured originals.

You will find that some pieces which you really need were not made in early America because there was no use for them. For instance, we could not find a large desk for the Freeman living room, and although a few exist, they are rare and expensive. So we hunted up books of old furniture drawings and studied museum pieces of the period and finally designed a convenient desk amply scaled to John Freeman's six feet, one inch, and appearing quite at home among the authentic chairs and tables of the period. Since both design and construction of early furniture were primitive, cupboards, cabinets, shelves and tables are extremely easy to make. A good book on Early American furniture will serve as a guide in the matter of details, and the dimensions can be your own.

In case you are confused by popular classifications or sectional lingo, don't be afraid of selecting and combining what you like. It is not important to have all your old furniture come from the same section of the country. While there are regional differences in both design and materials, practically all furniture of the era goes well together.

It is often more fun to collect primitives from your own section of the country, and the supply will be more plentiful. As suggested before, country furniture was usually made at home by the man of the family or by some local craftsman who specialized in a particular style of bed, chair or table. These basic styles he varied from time to time to suit his fancy. And since early American families did not move around much, especially those in towns and villages, styles of furniture established themselves in communities and were copied over and over again, to become in later years identified with that section of the country. Local woods such as maple, pine and fruitwood were used because they were easily available, although it is surprising how often a fine board from a far section of the country found its way into a local workshop, to the confusion of antiquarians today.

Love pleases more than marriage, for the reason that romance is more interesting than history. —CHAMFORT.

Of course many families were only a generation or so removed from Europe, so that furniture designs often resembled those of England, Holland and Germany. This is why early New England furniture has a distinctive style of its own, while Dutch and Quaker communities in Pennsylvania, as well as certain regions of Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky and Tennessee, show characteristics of similar origin.

Accessories. Today's accessories for Provincial American rooms were utility items a century ago. Big brass or copper milk jugs, stone jars and Paul Revere lanterns make handsome lamps when wired and fitted with up-to-date shades. For the fireplace there are andirons, cranes, trivets, warmers and fenders. Delightfully ornamental are the graceful candlesticks, painted trays, spice boxes and iron stands of a century ago. Hanging shelves and corner cupboards can be used to hold your collections of old glass, pewter and pottery.

American Provincial rooms should never become overfurnished or cluttered if they are to remain effective. When small items become too numerous, put them out of sight, for extreme simplicity is the keynote of Early American rooms. If you have interesting items not wholly decorative, start a cupboard museum—which is simply a cupboard of the period, inside of which you arrange your Americana so that it can be shown to interested friends rather than be exhibited as decoration. THE END

*Use at least half a jar of Borden's. Then if you don't agree it tastes better than any coffee you ever used, send us the jar with the unused contents, and we'll refund your money. The Borden Co., 350 Madison Ave., N. Y. 17, N. Y.

Fresh thought for tonight...

When you find this thought floating up from your subconscious—relax! Your folks are in for some real eating enjoyment with those luscious big, baby-tender Green Giant Brand peas. Grown from special seeds by a scientific system of "Flavor Farming." Packed at that "fleeting moment of perfect flavor" (before the sugar has turned to starch). The Green Giant on the label is your assurance of the same dewy freshness in every can.

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

GREEN GIANT PEAS

BRAND

QUICK AND EASY for two

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

YOUR days take on a quicker tempo as fall turns toward winte Every day has its own busy signals. You have neither time n money to waste on elaborate dinners; gear your meals to t less glamorous groceries of the quick-to-fix variety, yet still e well. These menus are for you, whether you budget your fo money of necessity or as a means to an end.

Quick in the Skillet
65¢

*Frankfurters with Cabbage
Boiled Potatoes with Dill
Raw Carrot Sticks
*Pineapple Rice Custard
Coffee

It's no hardship to have to fall back on frankfurters while other meats are high, as there are so many good-eating dishes that you can concoct with frankfurters and vegetables. Here's one.

FRANKFURTERS WITH CABBAGE

Cut 3 frankfurters into ¼-inch slices. Sauté in 3 tablespoons butter, margarine or bacon drippings with 1 medium onion, chopped. Push onion and frankfurters to one side of skillet. Blend 1 tablespoon flour into fat. Add ½ cup water and 3 tablespoons vinegar. Mix everything together. Then add 3 cups finely shredded cabbage, 1 tablespoon sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt and a good dash of pepper. Mix again. Cover skillet and simmer until cabbage is tender—about 15 minutes. Reseason to taste.

PINEAPPLE RICE CUSTARD

To ¾ cup cold leftover cooked rice add ½ cup crushed pineapple and ¾ cup cold (chilled) double-boiler-type soft custard and serve in sherbet glasses.

Night After a Night
$1.02

*Sausage—Mushroom Gravy
Mashed Potatoes
Glazed Carrots
Celery Curls
*Hot Coffee Gingerbread
Cheese Wedges
Coffee

Last night you spent, if not your all, a good many of your dinner dollars on a bang-up dinner in your favorite resta rant. It was worth it. Tonight you a digging in—having an easy-money su per, saving up for the next night out.

SAUSAGE—MUSHROOM GRAVY

Fry ½ pound link pork sausages. you start them in a cold pan and coo them slowly, they won't be so ap to split. Drain off the fat. Cut sausag into halves. Add ½ can condense mushroom soup and enough milk t make a sauce of good gravy consist ency. Heat together, stirring unt sauce is smooth. Serve over mashe potatoes.

HOT COFFEE GINGERBREAD

Make gingerbread from a mix, usin cold leftover breakfast coffee for par or all of the water called for in the di rections on the package. If you don happen to have leftover coffee but d have a jar of instant coffee or decaf feinated coffee, this, plus water in th proper proportion, will do as well.

Courting Variety
81¢

*Bacon Fish Rolls
*Spinach with Mustard Sauce
Head Lettuce
Thousand Island Dressing
Grapefruit
Coffee

When you've come to a dead stop on a something different to do with the Friday fish special or the ubiquitous spinach, change the flavor of each and help yourself to a good dinner.

BACON FISH ROLLS

Buy ¼ to ½ pound fish fillets, depending on your appetites—flounder, if it is specialed in your markets. Split them down the natural dividing line. Wash. Season. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and just a little soy sauce. Lemon juice, if you haven't soy sauce. Both flavors are good. Wrap up each strip in a slice of bacon and secure with a toothpick. Broil the fish rolls under moderately low heat until bacon is crisp and fish cooked through. There's a point when the fish is just done, tender and juicy. That's the point to take it out and serve. Overcooking will make the fish dry.

SPINACH WITH MUSTARD SAUCE

Cook fresh or frozen spinach until wilted. Here again, don't overcook. Drain. Add 2 teaspoons prepared mustard (to 1 package frozen or 1½ pound fresh spinach), salt and pepper to taste, a piece of butter or margarine and 1 teaspoon vinegar.

Purse Appeal
$1.10

*Ham-Sandwich Soufflé
Hot Broccoli—Russian Dressing
*Apple Tapioca
Coffee

While fresh-meat prices are high, keep canned-meat specialties in mind. Amazingly good dishes can be made from them—ham-sandwich soufflé is one. A small can of deviled ham will be your meat for dinner tonight.

HAM-SANDWICH SOUFFLÉ

Spread 3 slices bread with butter or margarine, then spread with deviled ham—you'll need most of 1 can of the deviled ham. Beat 2 eggs light. Add 1½ cups scalded milk and ¼ pound sharp Cheddar cheese, grated. Add a dash of Tabasco sauce, one of Worcestershire, salt and pepper. Put bread together in half sandwiches. Cut each in thirds and arrange the pieces in a greased 1-quart casserole. Pour the custard mixture over them and let stand 15 minutes while you wash and prepare the broccoli. Then set casserole in pan of hot water and bake 30–35 minutes in moderately hot oven, 375°F., until puffed and brown.

APPLE TAPIOCA

Use a packaged prepared tapioca pudding. Cook according to directions on package. Remove from heat and add 1 cup canned applesauce. Chill in refrigerator until serving time. When you serve it, sprinkle with cinnamon or nutmeg.

Winter Round the Corner
$1.12

*Baked Pork Chops Southern
*Acorn Squash with Apple
*Green-Bean Slaw
Sliced Oranges
Coffee

With the turn of the maple leaf, squash and cabbage are usually inexpensive. Just the thing to have with baked pork chops for a cold-weather dinner if they are sensibly priced.

BAKED PORK CHOPS SOUTHERN

Select 2 loin or shoulder pork chops. The latter are less expensive. Sprinkle them on both sides with salt and pepper and roll them in flour. Brown well in a skillet. Put in casserole. Add 1 onion, minced. Blend 1 cup hot water into 3 tablespoons peanut butter and pour over chops. Cover and bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., until tender—about 45 minutes.

ACORN SQUASH WITH APPLE

Cut 1 acorn squash in half lengthwise. Scoop out seeds. Sprinkle inside with salt and pepper. Slice 1 peeled and cored raw apple and put half in each squash half. Add 1 tablespoon water. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon brown sugar. Dot with butter or margarine and bake in same oven with chops until pulp of the squash is tender when pierced with a fork—about 45 minutes.

GREEN-BEAN SLAW

Did you know that thin, thin slivers of raw green beans taste wonderful added to your regular cabbage coleslaw? Shred the cabbage fine—cut the beans in really thin slivers. It really is good, if you need encouragement to venture into serving green beans raw. Tough beans won't do. Be sure they are young and tender.

Take Two Eggs
71¢

*Macaroni Special
Tossed Salad
Fresh Pears or Grapes
Coffee

With eggs costing ⅔ of a dime apiece you think twice before you use two for a serving when one does as well. One apiece does fine in this dish, with the help of a can of macaroni and cheese from your cupboard shelf.

MACARONI SPECIAL

Open 1 can macaroni and cheese. Pour into 2 individual casseroles. Make a depression in each casserole of macaroni and cheese. Put 1 tablespoonful canned tomato sauce in each depression. Drop a raw egg in each. Put another tablespoon of tomato sauce on top. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., just until eggs are set—about 15–20 minutes.

Chinese American
88¢

*Pork and Noodles, Chinese Style
Green Salad
Fresh Pears
Coffee

Many Chinese dishes are economical, as they start with very little meat and are usually extended with vegetables and rice or noodles. Cooking time is short, too—a decided advantage. This dish of pork, noodles and green beans is a meal in itself. Add your favorite salad and fresh fruit.

PORK AND NOODLES, CHINESE STYLE

Cook ½ package fine noodles (the kind you buy for soup) in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Rinse with cold water and set aside. In a skillet, put 1 tablespoon salad oil and ½ pound pork cut into ⅛-inch slivers (2 pork chops are easiest to buy for this). Season with salt and pepper. Let cook over high heat 2 minutes. Then add ⅓ cup water, 1 cup sliced celery and ⅓ pound green beans, sliced into very fine pieces. Cover and simmer 15 minutes. In the meantime, fry the noodles in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in another skillet, turning frequently with spatula. They won't get really brown. Have the fat hot before you add them. When meat and vegetables are done, mix the noodles in with meat and vegetables. Stir in 1½ tablespoons finely minced onion and 1 tablespoon soy sauce. Add about 3 more tablespoons water and reseason to taste. Simmer together 5 minutes.

Note. Bread and margarine are figured in cost of these menus

Fresh thought for tomorrow night

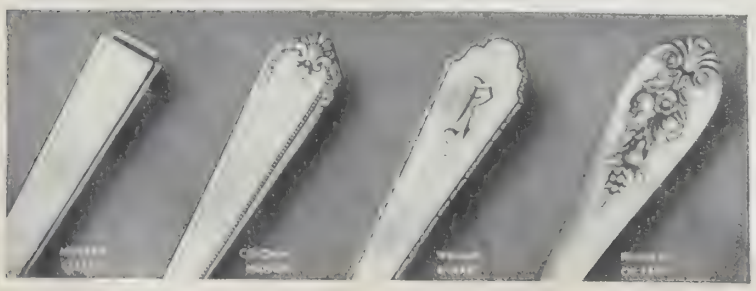
That's a mighty pretty picture you're dreaming up, young lady—tender young kernels of golden Niblets Brand Corn mixed with bright red and green sweet peppers. This gorgeous dish has all the summer freshness and color that special seed and our system of Flavor Farming can put into a can. "Packed at the fleeting moment of perfect flavor." Ask for Niblets Brand Mexicorn — with your old friend, the Green Giant, on the label.

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of Green Giant Brand peas.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

NIBLETS MEXICORN
BRAND

"Green Giant," "Niblets" and "Mexicorn" are trade-marks Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. MVCC © MV-



LUNT
Sterling of Lasting Good Taste

Beauty that Endures

THE Sterling that you select for your home is a life-time purchase. This is why you must choose wisely, making sure that your pattern will always remain in good taste... that in all the years to come it will remain as charming and as lovely as on the day it first won your heart. Fortunately you have this assurance with your selection in LUNT Sterling. Each pattern is soundly based on the best accepted decorative styles. Here is Sterling whose beauty is everlasting. Write for your copy of "Sterling for Gracious Living", addressing Dept. L-2.

Lunt Silversmiths
GREENFIELD • MASSACHUSETTS

A WAY WITH BOYS

(Continued from Page 51)

and his ma both killed in that accident, and not another living soul on earth to care for him except the lawyer that's paying for the hospital. If they'd ——" But she broke off, clamping her lips shut. Almost, she had spoken aloud the wonderful, the glorious thought that had come to her when first she saw Mike and learned that he was an orphan. "Could you just glance at your watch," Mrs. Cracker asked 3-J civilly, "and give me the time?"

At eleven-thirty-five the lamp on Miss Rumsey's neat desk at the end of the corridor was dark. Mrs. Cracker, with a quick glance forward and a quick glance back to make sure no other nurse was in sight, pushed open the door of 3-C and shuffled briskly inside.

Mike was lying straight and quiet in his high bed. At the soft sigh of the door he moved his eyes, and for an instant, the smallest part of a second, they seemed to be alive and eager, lending vividness to his small white face. Then they died again, expressing nothing, neither welcome nor annoyance, neither pleasure nor pain. This happened whenever anyone entered his room, but nobody except Mrs. Cracker had noticed it.

"Well now," Mrs. Cracker said, "you're wide awake now, ain't you, and waiting for your lunch? They'll be along with it pretty soon."

"Yes," Mike said politely. "I expect so."

He was always polite. He was the politest boy Mrs. Cracker had ever known. He had been polite at their first meeting, ten days earlier.

"Hello," she had said. "Your name's Mike, ain't it? Mine's Mrs. Cracker. Ain't that a funny name? But that's not the worst of it—my first name's Polly. Polly Cracker."

She had waited, smiling broadly, for him to show some sign of amusement. But all he said, with grave courtesy, was, "It's a very nice name."

"My real name's Mary, but when I was a little girl everybody called me Polly, and it stuck. Then I grew up and married a man named Cracker, so there I was. Polly Cracker. Like," she explained painstakingly, "Polly-want-a-cracker. Parrots."

"Yes," Mike said, and his gaze slipped away from her face, as if there were nothing there to hold it.

Mrs. Cracker had not been discouraged, although every other child she had ever known found her name highly amusing. They had this boy doped up, naturally, on account of the pain, and when you were doped up you weren't yourself.

SHE told him, that day and other days, about her own five boys, every one of them grown now, and four married with children themselves. She related how Gerald had fallen from a swing when he was five, breaking his collarbone, and how Paul was the most mischievous boy on the block, forever getting into scrapes, and how Ernie had always wanted to fly an airplane and would you believe it, in the war they took him for a pilot and he flew over Germany and got a medal!

Mike just lay there—unstirred, remote, asking no questions that would show he heard. He was always awake; he slept very little, for a child. It was as if he had moved into some separate world where sleep wasn't needed, nor amusement, nor any of Mrs. Cracker's abundant love.

He was no trouble at all. He stayed quiet as he was supposed to, without any juvenile sprawlings, submitted uncomplainingly to whatever Doctor Kinnear or the nurses wanted to do to him—the medication, the protein injections, the bandaging; and when they hurt him he set his lips and didn't cry. He didn't eat much, and when he did it was obviously from a sense of obligation to the nurse who brought his tray. Day by day he became thinner and paler.

Early in his stay in the hospital—the third or fourth day—he had asked about his parents. Miss Hawkins, youngest of the floor nurses, was the one he asked. "Where are

New Dessert IDEA
JUST ENOUGH FOR Two!

Crosse & Blackwell

FIG DESSERT
or
DATE DESSERT

SO EASY ON YOUR BUDGET... READY TO SERVE... and SO GOOD!

C&B Fig Dessert in the just-for-two 4-oz. tin, is a rich, golden roll with the delicate flavor of luscious figs, spices and selected ingredients. Serve hot or cold. For directions and delicious sauce recipes, see back of label. At your grocer's, or write Crosse & Blackwell, Dept. F, Baltimore 24, Md.

Secret of real French Dressing

Oui, oui, cherie! It's so-o easy to make real tasty, tempting French Dressing when you know the Pompeian secret. Use original recipe below and vary to taste by adding Worcestershire sauce, horseradish or chili sauce. It takes the Pompeian flavor to get the best out of your French Dressing! Pompeian is the genuine, imported, virgin olive oil, famous for its clear, golden color and nutty flavor.

How to make
BASIC FRENCH DRESSING
So easy to make—½ cup Pompeian Olive Oil, ¼ cup vinegar or lemon juice, ½ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. paprika, 1 tsp. sugar. Place in glass jar, shake and serve.

POMPEIAN
Great name in olive oil

FREE! 83 wonderful ways to make taste thrilling salads! Including 26 varieties of appetizing French Dressings! Write POMPEIAN, 4201 Pulaski Highway, Baltimore 24, Maryland.

HIP-O-LITE
The ORIGINAL Marshmallow Creme

HEAVENLY SAUCE ON FRUITS AND GELATINES!
43rd YEAR

A grand substitute for whipped cream. Makes wonderful sundaes, too—and taste-tempting cake icings, candies, etc. You'll love it with cocoa, hot chocolate. Ready to use. Stays fresh and creamy.

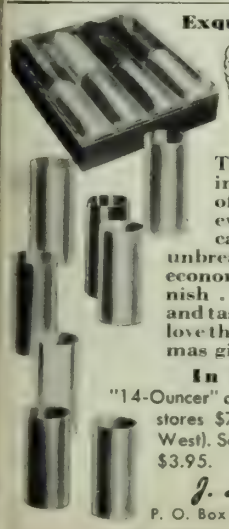
FREE: Recipe Book of successful, "different" desserts. Write Hip-O-Lite, 601, Saint Louis, Missouri.

MAN BOWS

to that distinctive tangy flavor of CHEEZ-IT crackers!

America's largest selling cheese cracker!

A Quality Product of Sunshine Biscuits, INC.



KNITTING YARNS
Finest Quality Yarns at Low Prices
Send 10¢ for Sample Folder to cover mailing cost
SUNRAY YARN HOUSE, Dept. J11
349 Grand St., New York 2, N. Y.

HOW YOU CAN SAVE FOOD & MONEY WITH HANDI-BAGS

More than 150,000 enthusiastic housewives are using this convenient way to keep foods fresh, tasty at low cost—with plastic Handi-Bags. They keep lettuce, vegetables crisp—bread, pastry, fresh and moist for more than a week. Wonderful for meat, cheese, fish too. Can be used over and over, will not crack. Set of six bags $1.75 value for only $1.00 includes:
1—14"x21" bag for turkeys, roasts & clip
1—14"x18" bag for fruit, vegetables & clip
1—8½"x18" bag for celery, bread & clip
1—8½"x15" bag for cheese, fish & clip
2—8½"x12" bags for butter, chops & 2 clips
Enjoy economy of foods kept fresh in space saving Handi-Bags right away. Send $1.00 for each set today. We ship immediately prepaid. Money back guarantee. No C.O.D.

6 Bags $1. AMG Handi-Bags
A.M.G. PRODUCTS CO.
P.O. Box 717-B, Pittsburgh 30, Pa.

Exquisitely Gift Boxed
PermaHues Aluminum Tumblers

The 8 different glowing colors in a set of PermaHues make every meal a festive occasion. PermaHues are unbreakable . . . therefore, economical. They never tarnish . . . and are odorless and tasteless, too. Children love them. A perfect Christmas gift.

In Two Sizes
"14-Ouncer" and "Squatty." In leading stores $7.95 a set (except far-West). Set of 8 coasters to match, $3.95.

J. H. Cristil Co.
P. O. Box 1691, Indianapolis 6, Ind.

they?" he'd said. "Why don't they come to see me?" And Miss Hawkins had answered:

"No one's allowed to see you, Mike, not until you're better."

"Not even for a minute? Not just to stand in the door so I could look?"

"No, not even that much," Miss Hawkins had said briskly, cheerfully—and, she knew, inadequately. But what else could you tell the child if you weren't to let him know his parents were dead?

He had given her a long, steady gaze, measuring her candor. "But where are they?" he asked again. "Are they all right?"

"All right?" Miss Hawkins exclaimed. "Yes, of course. They're fine."

"Oh," he said, and turned his head away from her on the pillow.

Miss Hawkins, telling Mrs. Cracker about it later, said, "It's doctor's orders, but I felt like a criminal, lying to him."

"And so you should," Mrs. Cracker rejoined heartily. "Never fib to a young one, Miss Hawkins. I never did, no matter what. It don't do no good, for one thing, and it's wicked for another. Doctor's orders or not, young Mike won't be any the better for not having his questions answered straight!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Yours Only

By Sara King Carleton

This is something for you,
Close your fingers about it;
Though I am giving it, true,
I shall not be without it.

It is nothing that one can buy,
Or carelessly throw away;
Nothing that you nor I
Can ever again mislay.

It is love I happened on here,
Close your heart warmly around it;
I give it to you, my dear,
Because it was yours when I found it.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

However, Mike asked no more questions, either of Miss Hawkins or anyone else on the hospital staff. Perhaps he asked Doctor Kinnear on one of the latter's daily visits, but if so, Mrs. Cracker was not informed. Mrs. Cracker knew Doctor Kinnear very well, by sight and by reputation; but Doctor Kinnear was not aware that Mrs. Cracker existed.

Inside Mike's room, Mrs. Cracker set down her pail and advanced toward the bed, leaning forward, her head with its wispy gray hair tilted gaily to one side.

"It's a grand day," she confided. "Look, you can see the tops of the trees turning yellow and orange. Pretty soon, when Doctor Kinnear says it's okay, you can sit in the chair next to the window and look out. Every afternoon the kids from the school play football in the empty lot next door."

"Do they?"

"That they do, and one of these days you'll be out playing too."

He didn't bother to answer this, and his silence was a contradiction. Mrs. Cracker leaned closer and she said cunningly:

"I got leaves all over my front yard out in Sunnydale. Tonight when I go home I'll have to rake 'em all up into a pile. My, I just wish you was there to help me!" Mrs. Cracker's front yard measured precisely ten feet by six, but somehow her tone conjured up a vision of wide acres covered by the falling leaves of a hundred ancient elms. "We'd make a big pile this high"—she held a gnarled and mottled hand above Mike's head—"and you could run and jump into it. All the kids like to do that."

She giggled—a sound like a girl's laughter, warm and light and young. If the boy had

Now! All ready to S(

274

Choicest Mushroo...
Broiled in Butter!

Save Time and Money with B in B Broiled in Butter Mushrooms. Packed 3 ways for every mushroom use!

WHOLE CROWNS add zest to steaks, chops, meat patties.

Use CHOPPED for spaghetti sauce, meat loaf, soups.

SLICED CROWNS are wonderful in chicken à la King, with peas.

B in B Mushrooms give you that delicious broiled in butter mushroom flavor!

B in B Mushrooms are choicest hothouse mushrooms picked when their flavor reaches perfection. They're especially prepared, broiled to a rich brown color, and then packed in their own luscious broth.

So economical. No peeling—no trimming—no waste! B in B Mushrooms are all ready to heat and serve.

You will enjoy all 3 styles of B in B Broiled in Butter Mushrooms!

Money is unimportant here!!

Land of Cockaigne (COCKAYNE). This is a modern artist's idea of that delightful paradise which was part of the folklore of Europeans many, many centuries ago.

THIS is the Land of Cockaigne.

It's a wonderful place where the houses are built of cake, and the shops are eager to give you their merchandise for free.

Here, roast geese and other fowl wander about inviting folks to eat them. Here, buttered larks fall from the skies like manna.

Wonderful place, Cockaigne . . . this land that's always free from want . . . where business cycles are unknown . . . where money is *un*necessary.

Only trouble is you won't find this mythical place on any up-to-date map of the world.

We live in a land blessed with plenty —true enough. But the rub is that we will always need hard cash to buy the things we want.

You will need money to make a good down payment on a new home . . . to send the children to college when the time comes . . . or to keep well-supplied with fine food and little luxuries when it comes time to retire.

One of the best ways you can assure yourself that you will have the money you need for the things you want later in life is to salt away some of the money you now earn, in U. S. Savings Bonds.

These Bonds are the safest in the world. And they make money for you. Each $75 you save today will grow to $100 in just 10 years.

So start saving now . . . the automatic way, on the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or buy them regularly through your bank or post office.

AUTOMATIC SAVING IS SURE SAVING - U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

been listening, he surely couldn't have helped laughing too. But he made no sound at all.

She would have to leave soon, because one of the nurses would be bringing in Mike's lunch and she had no intention of being trapped in his room. Desperately, she sent her mind back again, a score of years or more, searching for the things which had amused and interested Gerald and Paul, Ernie and Frank and John. There had been a dog, a little brown scrawny thing that followed John home one night ——

"You got a dog, Mike?" she asked him.

"No."

"I been thinking I might get one to have around the house for company, Mike. If I had somebody to help me take care of him, that's to say."

Mike offered no comment.

"My boys was always great ones for pets, dogs and cats and canaries and such. Even mice." Mrs. Cracker stopped. "Mice," she repeated more thoughtfully, then stooped and picked up her pail. "I'll be running along now, Mike," she said. "I'll see you tomorrow."

"Good-by, Mrs. Cracker."

At the door she turned and glanced back at him, but he wasn't watching her. She saw his profile against the white pillow—the unformed nose, the listlessly drooping mouth, the mussed hair that was only a little darker than beach sand—and she felt a pang of fear that tomorrow, or perhaps the next day, that bed would be empty. He didn't have any interest in living, that was the trouble. He was giving up his claim on life, and he didn't even care.

But going downstairs for her lunch, her spirits rose. You could never tell. A mouse might help. Gerald and Paul had been so crazy about those two of theirs—it was as if the sun rose and set on them. Of course, if Miss Rumsey knew about it she'd throw a fit. Mrs. Cracker didn't care. She didn't care, really, about anything except Mike's getting well again.

The truth was, Mrs. Cracker coveted Mike.

It was fantastic, impossible, not to be thought of—yet she thought of it constantly. At night, when she got home, she always went into the spare bedroom where Ernie slept on his rare, short visits from Chicago. It was a nice room, she thought, but the wallpaper would have to be changed. Mike wouldn't like pale blue with pink flowers growing up it. He'd prefer something with ships or airplanes. The bed was a good one, the same bed Ernie had used when he was a boy. She would make a new spread for it, and curtains to match, and buy a desk for the space under the window, where he could do his schoolwork.

LIKE so many fantastic notions, this one seemed less so the longer she harbored it, and she had harbored it now for ten days. Her house was in a decent neighborhood, it was as clean as scrubbing could make it, and it was her own. The boys had chipped in six years ago and bought it for her. "Ma," they had said, "you've been stuck in an old city flat long enough. What you need is a place of your own with a front yard and a back yard, where you can take things easy for a change." Mrs. Cracker had known what they were up to: they thought that once she was out there in Sunnydale, faced with the long bus ride to the hospital, she would be ready to stop working. Me! Stop working! she had said scornfully to herself. But she had accepted the house, knowing how proud it made them to be able to give it to her.

As it turned out, she grew to like the house, except that very often, small as it was, she felt lonely in it. And the bus sometimes was impossibly hot and slow and crowded, and her feet hurt, and no matter how dog-tired she was when she came home at night she couldn't get to sleep, and the programs on the radio Paul bought her were stupid. She knew that if she told the boys all this they would urge her again to leave the hospital, so she kept quiet. Giving up her job wasn't the solution; she didn't know what the solution was, but it wasn't that.

Then they brought Mike into the hospital, and she knew. She loved all children, but Mike she loved more than any other because he was hurt and alone.

R-o-o-m...
for everything!
Two top zippers,
swagger pockets,
top grain cowhide.
At good stores everywhere,
about 5.95

KADIN
20 W. 33 St., N. Y. 1

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Rambler
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BASIC HANDBAGS

*Slightly higher in certain localities.

flattering Comfort Afoot

Smart styling lets you walk in beauty . . . Bellaire's buoyancy lets you walk in wonderful, new comfort. Flattering Fall styles . . . all budget-priced.

Bellaire
THE FOOT STIMULATING SHOE

$7.95 to $9.95 (slightly higher west of Denver)

AT BETTER STORES

HOLMES STICKNEY, Inc., Portland, Maine

THANK HEAVEN I Can Hear Again!

I HEARD EVERY WORD THE PREACHER SAID!

"And oh, what a blessing it is! I miss nothing at church or the movies. Never need turn the radio on loud. Never ask people to repeat. It all began when I filled out a coupon. A marvelous free book told me all about hearing loss. It told what modern science is doing for me."

You too, should learn the full facts. Send in this coupon today.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Beltone

MONO-PAC
Foremost One-Unit Hearing Aid

FREE BOOKLET - MAIL COUPON

Beltone Hearing Aid Co., Dept. LHJ-11
1450 West 19th Street, Chicago 8, Illinois

Please send me FREE booklet of interesting new facts about DEAFNESS AND HOW TO OVERCOME IT.

Name.....

Address.....

Town.....State.....

And why couldn't she have him? Someone must take care of orphaned boys, and the lawyer—she had seen him one morning when he came to the hospital with Doctor Kinnear and hung around outside 3-C while the doctor was with Mike—didn't look like the kind of man who would want him himself. Dry as dust, fussy, feeble. He should be glad to find a woman who knew all about boys and could prove it by pointing to five sons, every one of them strong, healthy, happy and successful enough to be able to help the others buy their old mother a home of her own.

She wouldn't ask or expect to adopt him; she was too old for that, and she knew it. But in the next block lived Mrs. Mungo, who had two foster children that the agency paid her to keep. Mrs. Cracker wouldn't expect pay for keeping Mike, although she was frank to admit that if the lawyer offered it, some money would probably come in handy. She would quit her job, because she wouldn't want it any more, and it might be hard for her and Mike to get along on her little savings and what the boys could spare her.

But Mrs. Cracker didn't, actually, think very much about the money side of it. Money had been a problem all her life, a problem that always got itself solved somehow or other with the aid of courage and optimism, both of which she had in abundance. The important thing to think about was how to bring Mike into that extra bedroom of hers. It was something that couldn't be accomplished, certainly, until he was well again. The first thing, then, was to make him well.

The following morning Mrs. Cracker behaved in an exemplary manner, aware of Miss Rumsey's eyes upon her. She gave 3-A and 3-B good, thorough cleanings, and not until they had been finished did she enter 3-C.

"There's one consolation about matrimony. When you look around you can always see somebody who did worse."

—WARREN HENRY GOLDSMITH: Crumbs of Common Sense.

"Well now," she said to Mike, "and how are you feeling this morning?"

"Fine," he told her. But then he always said that.

She put down her pail. The door was just barely ajar, and anyway the head of the bed was behind it; no one passing in the corridor could see her and the boy.

"I got something for you," she said, reaching under her apron to the pocket of her dress. "A surprise. I got it in a store out where I live."

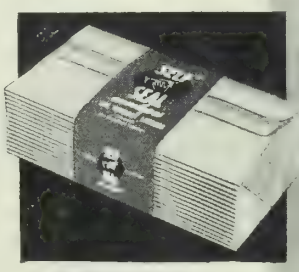
Carefully, conspiratorially, she produced a large kitchen-match box bound round with a rubber band. She removed the band and slipped the box open, holding it so Mike could see inside. On a bed of cotton cowered a mouse, brown and white and faintly pink. You could see the life pulsing through it.

"Ain't he cute?" she asked Mike. "I got him for you. They won't let you have him here, of course, but I'll keep him until you're well, and then you can take him away with you." She waited, but Mike didn't answer. Mrs. Cracker put her hand into the box and lifted the mouse out. "See his little ears?" she urged. "And his whiskers, and the way he looks at you?" Yet she herself wasn't watching the mouse at all; she was watching Mike, trying with her eyes to pull some word or sign of pleasure from him. She opened the cup of her hand a little wider. "Do you like him, Mike?"

Mike might have said something then, in his polite way, but he had no time. The mouse gave a nervous scurry and slipped out of Mrs. Cracker's hand like quicksilver. It flashed across the bed. Mrs. Cracker made a grab for it. Mike uttered a startled cry—not a frightened cry, Mrs. Cracker told herself afterward, not frightened at all, only surprised, the kind anybody'd be liable to make—just as the door opened.

"Well!" Miss Rumsey said.

The mouse fell to the floor and went straight



℞ DR. DRY SEAL PRESCRIBES SELF-SEAL

As fast as Ol' Doc Dry Seal gets around, more and more envelope-lickers are switching to Self-Seal, the really modern envelopes—the kind you seal without licking. Self-Seal envelopes need no moisture; just turn the lower tab under the upper flap—run your finger across—and it's sealed!

If you still seal envelopes the messy, old-fashioned way, pick up your Self-Seal envelopes today. You'll find them —and matching Self-Seal writing paper— at your favorite stationery counter.

SPECIAL "Get Acquainted" OFFER
For a sample package of Self-Seal stationery, send a dime to U. S. Envelope Company, 21 Cypress St., Springfield 2, Mass. Dept. 5

SELF SEAL envelopes
SEAL WITHOUT LICKING
*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

UNITED STATES ENVELOPE CO., Springfield, Mass.
World's Largest Manufacturer of Envelopes

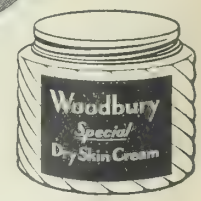
DAINTY BEAUTY CREAM DISPENSER
for your favorite Face or Hand Cream

Holds your favorite cream always ready for use. A light finger pressure and up comes the cream in the exact amount you want. No waste, no fussing with lids or jars. Made of durable plastic. White, yellow, pink, green and blue.

At your favorite Dealer or Order Direct $1.00 Each Postpaid State Color

I-ODORAL, INC.
282 Corliss St., Pittsburgh 20, Pa.

"Coets please"



• Pretty co-eds at universities choose COETS for a smooth make-up job. For dozens of other cosmetic uses.

HANDY COTTON SQUARES
LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

For Dry Skin Penetrates!

Lanolin's Rich Benefits!

SMOOTHS! This rich, rich cream penetrates . . . sends lanolin's softening benefits right into pores! Has four more special skin softeners! Apply Woodbury Special Dry Skin Cream nightly. See how tiny dry-skin lines soften . . . how much fresher, smoother your skin looks!

Woodbury Special Dry Skin Cream for Miss Rumsey's feet. Miss Rumsey did not scream—she was not the screaming kind—but she side-stepped in a way that was less than dignified, and the mouse escaped into the corridor.

It was found, later on in the day, by Mrs. Cracker herself. It was hiding in the closet of another room, and she captured it and put it back into the matchbox. "Might as well take you back to the pet shop," she said disconsolately to it. For it did not seem that Mike was greatly interested in mice, and in any event Mrs. Cracker wasn't going to have another chance to show this one to him.

"You will not enter that room at any time," Miss Rumsey had said, biting the words off hard, "except when I am present. You will not speak to the patient or annoy him in any way."

"I wasn't annoying him." Mrs. Cracker had done her best to recapture her old, fine disregard of Miss Rumsey's whims, but she was shaken and her wit seemed to be paralyzed. Instead of leading the discussion gaily off at a tangent, she was apologizing, excusing herself. "All boys like pets, and it didn't do him no harm just to look at ——"

"I'm a better judge of that than you are, Mrs. Cracker. That boy is suffering from shock, and any excitement, any disturbance at all, is very bad for him. My orders to you are to leave him alone. Quite alone. Is that clear?"

It was clear. Miss Rumsey meant that she was ready, given one more provocation, to see to it that Mrs. Cracker was fired. Prior to Mike's arrival, Mrs. Cracker would have preferred being fired to letting Miss Rumsey, or anyone else, order her around. But Mike had taken away her independence. If she left the hospital she would never see him again, never even know what had happened to him.

And maybe, she confessed wearily to herself as she plodded through her day's work, Miss Rumsey was right after all. Maybe she, Polly Cracker, was only a bungling old fool, poking her nose in where she wasn't wanted or needed, causing trouble. She hadn't been able to help Mike, no matter how hard she tried. His eyes went dead when she came into his room, just as they did when it was anyone else. Whatever had made her think she could take the place of his mother?

That night, for the first time, she didn't open the door of the spare room in her house.

For two days Miss Rumsey stood guard while Mrs. Cracker did Mike's room. Mrs. Cracker would say meekly, "I'm ready for Three-C now, Miss Rumsey," and Miss Rumsey would nod curtly and leave whatever it was she had been doing and go ahead of Mrs. Cracker into 3-C. As she came in, Mrs. Cracker would steal a glance and a shy smile at Mike before she bent over her mop. With Miss Rumsey there, it never took her more than five minutes to clean the room. Nobody said a word. And Mike hardly seemed to know he wasn't alone.

He was getting worse, Mrs. Cracker thought desperately. He had stopped looking over at the door as if he expected someone; he'd lost all hope that that someone would ever come. He was getting worse, and nobody did anything about it. Doctor Kinnear came every morning and stayed with him for five or ten minutes and went away again, looking cross. Mrs. Cracker had seen that look on doctors' faces before. It meant that they had done everything they knew how to do and were angry and dismayed because they were being defeated by something stronger than they.

WHO WILL BE OUR NEXT PRESIDENT?

FIND out . . . by listening to any of the 450 radio stations of the Mutual Broadcasting Company on Election Night, Tuesday, November 2. The publishers of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL will sponsor complete election returns, starting at 9:15 P.M., E.S.T., and continuing until the nation knows the name of its next President.

Expert commentators will report voting trends and analyze interesting developments as the returns come in. Mutual's cross-country stations will stand by to report exciting happenings in pivotal states.

There is a feeling you get when you ha been around hospitals a long time, a feel that tells you when somebody is preparin die. Mrs. Cracker had that feeling now. looked into the faces of Miss Rumsey and other nurses, and she knew that they ha too. Do something! Somebody! But not knew what to do.

On the third morning, when Mrs. Cracker followed Miss Rumsey into Mike's room, his eyes were closed and he didn't open them all the time they were there. Miss Rumsey tiptoed across the room and lowered a shade, straightened small objects on the bedside table, peered down into Mike's face. Mrs. Cracker mopped the floor, and while she mopped a resolution grew within her.

Doctor Kinnear usually visited Mike about ten-thirty in the morning, before Mrs. Cracker had finished all her rooms. Today she let the rooms go. At ten-thirty she had her mop and pail in the corridor where she could watch the elevator doors. She went over the stretch of tiles once, and then she went over it again, and she would have started a third time if Doctor Kinnear hadn't appeared just then. He came toward her, a short, quick-stepping man whose manner said he didn't need anyone to offer him advice. He frowned when he found Mrs. Cracker in his way and heard her say:

"Doctor Kinnear—can I talk to you a minute about Mike? The boy in Three-C?"

Doctor Kinnear stopped, seeing a vaguely familiar old woman in a faded apron and cotton house dress, completely unprepossessing until you noticed the appeal in her lined face. "Yes?" he said curtly. "What about him?"

"He's awful bad, ain't he? He's not going to get well?" Mrs. Cracker's hands, deprived of the familiar support of her mop, fidgeted against her sides.

"Oh, I wouldn't say ——" Doctor Kinnear began, but something stopped him from finishing the automatic denial. "I don't know," he said, and his voice was a trace more gentle.

"You done everything you could for him," Mrs. Cracker said, "but he's getting worse all the time. Ain't he? And now he's just as bad as he can be."

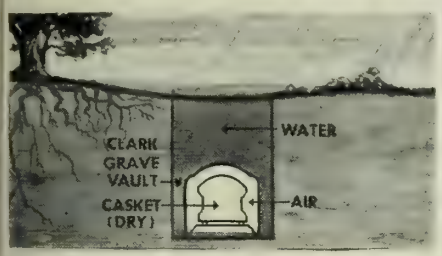
Doctor Kinnear sighed. "I guess," he admitted, "that's about right. I'm sorry." He made a move to go on past her, but she moved too.

"I guess you think it ain't any of my business," she said. "But I know he's all alone in the world, and I was hoping that when he got all better he could come and live with me. I could take care of him—I've raised five boys of my own ——"

"I'm sorry," the doctor said again. "I don't have anything to do with Mike's future. You'd have to speak to Meredith—he's the lawyer for the estate."

"Yes, sir, I know." Mrs. Cracker nodded eagerly. "I only wanted to tell you, so you wouldn't think I was just butting in, like. But won't you let me talk to him? I know he ain't supposed to be bothered, but if he's not getting any better anyhow I couldn't do him any harm, could I? And maybe I could help him."

Neither of them heard Miss Rumsey coming toward them until she spoke, irritably and a little breathlessly.



"Mrs. Cracker, will you please get back to your work?" she ordered. "Doctor, I'm sorry. But I'm afraid Mrs. Cracker is becoming something of a problem."

"No, wait," Doctor Kinnear said—unnecessarily, as it happened, because Mrs. Cracker

There's consolation ...serene through shower or heavy rain... for those who know the casket of a dear one is protected against water in the ground by a Clark Metal Grave Vault

Placed over the casket, the Clark Metal Grave Vault is designed to use the pressure of air in the dome to keep seeping water from the rains and melting snows from reaching the casket.

Your funeral director will show you beautiful Clark Vaults within your means. All made of enduring metal instead of porous material. And available in styles armored with 25 to 35 lbs. of zinc to insure up to 2 to 5 times as long-lasting protection as the same vault uncoated.

Write for FREE 28-page booklet, "My Duty." Tells what to do when you are asked to "take charge." Over a million copies distributed. The Clark Grave Vault Co., Dept. E-118, Columbus, O. Copyright 1947

CLARK GRAVE VAULTS

THE FINEST TRIBUTE • THE MOST TRUSTED PROTECTION

was standing her ground. If she got fired—well, she got fired. It wouldn't matter anyway, if Mike wasn't going to get well. "Help him?" Doctor Kinnear asked. "How?"

How? But that was what Mrs. Cracker didn't know. "I can talk to him," she offered humbly. "Make him see somebody loves him and wants him. That's what I was trying to do all the time, until Miss Rumsey made me stop."

"Oh?" Doctor Kinnear said, and paused, considering, his eyes on Mrs. Cracker's face. They were unexpectedly kind eyes, now that they were focused on something besides his own private thoughts. "All right," he said abruptly. "Go ahead. I've a patient to see upstairs. Then I'll be back."

He turned and went away, and Mrs. Cracker and Miss Rumsey stood staring at each other. There was no triumph in Mrs. Cracker's gaze, nothing but gratitude and quite a bit of panic.

"Well," Miss Rumsey said, washing her hands of the consequences, "go on in."

Mike's room was dim with the blind drawn and very quiet. His eyes were still closed. "Mike," Mrs. Cracker said softly when she stood beside the bed. "Mike."

His lids lifted, and she saw that he recognized her, but he didn't speak.

"Mike, I've saved the mouse for you. I thought I'd take it back to the pet store, but then I figured I'd just keep it and you could make up your mind when you got well whether you wanted it or not."

No. There was no use in talking about the mouse. Mike didn't care about it.

Her head bent, her shoulders bowed, Mrs. Cracker looked down into his face. She said, "Mike, darling, you got to try to get well. Please? You see, I—everybody loves you and wants to help you, but if you won't —— And after you're well again, I thought—I was hoping—maybe you could come out to my place and live with me. We'd have swell times, Mike. We'd get a dog, and you could play with him when you come home from school ——" She stopped, suddenly frightened by the look on Mike's face. He was listening to her at last.

"Live with you?" he said. "Then . . . mommy and dad, they really aren't ever coming to get me!"

Mrs. Cracker hadn't meant to tell him. And yet somehow, she recognized dimly, she had known when she entered the room that she was going to have to, doctor's orders or no doctor's orders. He had a right to know.

"Mike, they can't. They're dead. That accident you were all three of you in—they were killed." She hurried on against his blank incredulity. "You mustn't grieve for them, Mike. They wouldn't want you to. They'd want you to get well and grow up big and strong, so they'd be proud of you."

"Dead?" Mike said. "They're dead?"

"Yes, darling. That's what I've been telling you. I sort of thought you'd guessed it already."

"No, I ——" He broke off, moistened his lips with his tongue, tried again. "That nurse—she told me, she said they were all right, and"—Mike's face twisted tragically—"the doctor wouldn't tell me anything at all when I asked him. So I thought—when they didn't come to see me—they'd gone away somewhere and left me here. I thought they didn't want me any more!"

"Ah, Mike, no!" Mrs. Cracker cried in an agony of comprehension. "Nothing like that! Nothing like that at all! They loved you, they'd never have left you only they couldn't help it."

"I didn't know," Mike said, and he was crying.

Mrs. Cracker sat on the edge of the bed. She took Mike into her arms and he turned to her, instinctively and naturally. Rocking him back and forth, she said, "There. There, there," over and over, soothingly, her old face shining softly.

That was how Doctor Kinnear found them when he came in. Mrs. Cracker looked up at him.

"He'll be all right now," she said, and she added with quiet pride, "I always did have a way with boys." THE END

ANYBODY, ANYWHERE, CAN SERVE A THANKSGIVING DINNER WITH

EVERHOT Automatic Cooking

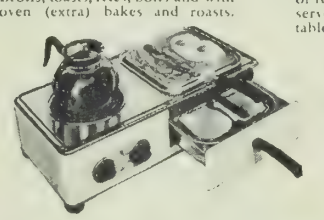
This month countless thousands of women will be matching their wits against the handicaps of getting a Thanksgiving dinner in a make-shift or temporary home—a trailer, furnished room or half finished dwelling.



Everhot Automatic Cooking units operating from any wall outlet, requiring no special wiring, practically no space, enable any woman to cook anything she wants to serve no matter where she may be. In any home they save time, labor and assure food at its best. See Everhot at your appliance dealers or write

THE SWARTZBAUGH MFG. COMPANY
TOLEDO 6, OHIO

EVERHOT ROASTER OVEN. Cooks a balanced meal for up to ten persons in one operation. Roasts a 20-24 pound turkey or cooks 18 quarts of soup or chili.

EVERHOT RANGETTE. Complete Range-style cooking with a unit that requires but 2½ sq. ft. space. Broils, toasts, fries, boils and with oven (extra) bakes and roasts.

EVERHOT CASSEROLE ROASTERETTE. 4½ Quart capacity. 6 Pounds meat or fowl. Two-heat control. Cook and serve from the same unit on dining table.

EVERHOT AUTOMATIC ROASTERETTE. 5-Quart capacity. Removable inset pan Automatic heat control. Gives Roaster Oven performance in a smaller unit.

EVERHOT APPLIANCES HAVE BEEN GIVING SATISFACTION IN USE SINCE 1884

EVERHOT ELECTRIC BLANKET
Large—72 x 90 inches 75% wool, 25% cotton Underwriters approved Plastic bag for storage or travel included

EVERHOT RAYVECTOR
The portable fire place Adjustable for circulating or direct heat of infra-red rays

EVERHOT FAN AND HEATER
—with comfitrol for room heating or cooling Rich, hammered blue finish

EVERHOT AIR FLO HEATER
A fan type unit of very smart styling. Quick, light, efficient

EVERHOT APPLIANCES HAVE BEEN GIVING SATISFACTION IN USE SINCE 1884

Join the CHIMNEY SWEEP users who

SLASH SKY-HIGH FUEL BILLS! ENJOY A CLEANER, WARMER HOME!

—without furnace alterations, insulation, weather-stripping or storm sash!

Millions say there's "magic" in the way Chimney Sweep "eats up" soot, which steals costly, vital heat. Magic in the way it makes any fuel—coal, wood, oil or kerosene—go further and give more heat. And special magic in the drudgery you save, because your home and furnishings stay cleaner! Chimney Sweep also helps prevent dangerous chimney fires and coal gas explosions!

It's sensational how a few cents for Chimney Sweep every week often saves as much in heat and fuel as hundreds of dollars spent for weather-proofing. Even in insulated homes the saving is amazing! Save heat, fuel, money—have a cleaner, warmer, safer home! Get Chimney Sweep today—any hardware or department store or mail this coupon.

POWDER for coal and wood furnaces, stoves. Each application in handy envelope—just sprinkle on the fire! Safe, easy to use, economical.

LIQUID for oil burners and kerosene heaters. Just add to the fuel oil tank. Gives hotter, cleaner flame—reduces oil odors—saves fuel!

CHIMNEY SWEEP is used by industrial plants, hotels, apartments, 16 steamship lines and by leading oil companies in their ocean tankers.

G. N. COUGHLAN CO., DEPT. 11-L,
WEST ORANGE, N. J.

Enclosed is $..... for the following Chimney Sweep

( ) 3-lb. packages Powder at $1.29 each, postpaid.
( ) 1-pt. cans Liquid at $1.29 each, postpaid.

Name .....
Address .....
City..... State.....

It's a money saver!
It's a time saver!

DELICIOUS MACARONI-AND-CHEESE THAT COOKS IN JUST 7 MINUTES!

This Kraft Dinner Ring is a mouth-watering "quickie." Easy to make...ready in a jiffy...and oh, the "ahs" at the dinner table!

All you need is 1 package of Kraft Dinner. Make as directed on package. (It takes just 7 minutes to cook the special Kraft Dinner Macaroni; just a few seconds to sprinkle in fine cheese flavor with Kraft Grated). Pack the hot macaroni-and-cheese in a greased 6½ inch ring mold. Unmold on plate; fill center with creamed dried beef; and surround with hot buttered peas and carrots.

Good? Mmm! Simply super! Leave it to Kraft to combine a truly superb cheese flavor with such tender, fluffy macaroni. And imagine, in These Times, such a delicious dinner for so few pennies! Top your shopping list with Kraft Dinner. Keep some on your "emergency shelf" always.

Copr. 1948 by Kraft Foods Company

SMALL WONDER

(Continued from Page 219)

which went unappreciated because of their light color, a dark brown mascara was applied to the lashes of the upper lids. This immediately deepened the color of her eyes. For lipstick (Frances has medium-brown coloring) we chose a bright, pinky-red shade. This was applied with a lipstick brush, and a curved lipline, almost exactly following Frances' natural lipline, was the most becoming. (Small women should never create an artificial oversized lipline which dwarfs other facial features.) A rosy-beige powder, dusted lightly and evenly over her face and neck, completed Frances' daytime make-up. Her fingernails manicured, softly curved (no long, pointed nails, please!) and polished, was the final beauty treatment to make a pretty picture.

The Trick About Clothes. No matter how pretty the dress (nor how much your husband loves the color) if it can't be altered to fit you well—don't buy it! Many's the woman who, moved by pure enchantment over certain aspects of a dress, suit or coat, buys it, takes it home, and then discovers the shoulder pads she intended to take out leave an ill-fitting bodice—when the garment is inches shorter it looks top-heavy—or certain details are just too overpowering on a small woman.

Here are some things to keep in mind the next time you are shopping for clothes:

1. Have your dress, suit or coat fitted while you are still in the store. This gives you a chance to determine whether, with all necessary alterations accounted for, the dress is still becoming.

2. If you have to shop in the junior or teenage sections in order to get your small size, look for the more sophisticated, smoother designs. Designers of mother-and-daughter clothes often allow for this need in their styling. Too many ruffles, little-girl collars and sashes will ruin the effect you want to create. Keep in mind the simpler the dress, the more success you will have with your adult accessories.

3. Consider the shoulderline. In Frances Freeman's first picture the shoulder pads in her dress give her a broad, square look which detracts from her own natural, pretty shoulders which are perfect for today's fashions.

4. Dress details are important. Note how much more flattering the small, rolled-collar neckline is to Mrs. Freeman than the mannish, tailored collar which tends to dwarf her in her "before" picture. Beware of wide belts, heavy fabrics, excessively full skirts, wide sleeves, cumbersome details.

5. Choose small and delicate accessories—leaving all large necklaces, bracelets, pins, hats and bags to taller women. Mrs. Freeman's single strand of tiny pearls is more becoming to her than the large pin she wears in her first picture.

You will discover these ideas, combined with careful self-analysis, will allow your hair-do, make-up and clothes to bring out your own special charms—and establish you as a pretty foil to any masculine partner!

CHILDREN WITHOUT NEUROSES

(Continued from Page 68)

of great ideals and a preoccupation with self which lie at the root of our personal and social neuroses.

How to transmit them to our young becomes our second problem. And that brings us to the second rule in dealing with animals; that a friendly environment, marked by affection and kindliness toward the animal, is indispensable. Every laboratory worker knows this to be true. And for the successful rearing of children, love is a prime essential.

"But surely we love our children!" you may protest. Nevertheless, this is the second way in which modern parents fail most often. It is a mark of our modern age that many parents feel hostility toward their offspring—every physician, and especially every neurologist and psychiatrist, sees it daily.

This does not mean that the parents in such cases are necessarily unnatural or depraved. The reasons are too complex and subtle for full discussion here, but two main ones are that children, once an economic asset, now are an impediment in the struggle for material advancement; and that in our society, women have been progressively masculinized.

Dad cannot enjoy as much golf, as many trips as his childless contemporaries. Mother, "liberated" by modern conveniences from much personal labor in the home and many services to her family, has in like measure been robbed of much of her indispensability as homemaker and mother. Many women have turned to the rewards of the male world, never completely satisfying to a member of the feminine sex. Adopting masculine standards and goals, they have lost motherliness.

Whatever the reasons for the upswing of parental hostility, anyone who goes deeply into the problems of parents and children realizes that, too often, youngsters are secretly or openly hated and resented. When this is the case they are neglected and ignored, or else subjected to a suffocating tyranny of restrictions, thinly disguised as parental concern. The child responds with hostility and fear. Such ideals as the parents have to give are rejected; and worse yet, the unloved, uncared-for youngster learns to look upon the world as an unfriendly place in which he never feels secure. His attitude toward his parents disturbs his relationships with other people and hinders his sexual adjustments later on. There can be no proper training in such an atmosphere, and the child's character is inevitably warped and distorted.

How different the situation when a child is loved! With nothing to fear, nothing to warrant hostility, he feels safe and secure in his friendly little world. He is willing and anxious to learn from such generous allies as his father and mother, he presents no problems except minor and fleeting ones.

If only those who truly love and want children were to have them, we should go far toward abolishing neurotics. Parents of "problem children" need to search their own hearts and attitudes. When these are changed, the "problem" often solves itself.

Thus the first two essentials of successful training and discipline are to have something to teach, and to build such a loving and friendly relationship with our children that they will gladly accept it from us. The third is example.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

There She Goes Again!

By William W. Pratt

A home is where a housewife does
A daily marathon;
It's down the stairs when doorbells buzz,
Then back to chores undone.
It's up the stairs to take a peep
At baby in his bed,
It's down to cook and up to sweep,
And still more trips ahead.

A home is where the heart is, sure!
Because of constant chase
The muscles feel too insecure
To take it anyplace.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

DRINK GOLDEN-RIPE CALIFORNIA APRICOTS!

Heart's Delight

WHOLE FRUIT NECTARS
APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

No other fruit drink like it. Made from fresh, whole California apricots especially selected for nectar use! Distinctively delicious and healthful as a beverage and in punches, salads, dressings, sauces, sherbets, desserts. Enjoy Heart's Delight Peach and Pear Nectars, too! Same grand whole-fruit "Juicidrink" quality!
Tested recipes on back of label.
RICHMOND-CHASE CO., San Jose, California

NOW
STEW PRUNES IN 20 MINUTES INSTEAD OF 40!

Heart's Delight Pasteurized Prunes are pre-cooked—so soft that youngsters eat them like candy—right from the package! Try them today!

Experimenters have found that an untrained animal, placed with one that has been trained, will learn his lessons more rapidly than if alone. In the same way, children imitate their parents and particularly their mother, with whom they have so much more intimate and prolonged contact. A mother who keeps her home in careful order will have a daughter, if love be present, who is easily trained to hang up her clothes and make her bed, and who eventually keeps an orderly mind—I vouch for it. A truthful, kindly, self-controlled and scrupulously fair father will have a son, provided he love him, who is truthful, self-controlled and fair.

But children absorb vices as well as virtues. And beware hypocrisy—youngsters have an uncanny insight into adult insincerity, and promptly adopt it as their own. As parents, we must live the virtues we would impart to our children. Preaching and pretense will never do the trick.

The fourth great factor in training an animal—or a child—is reward and punishment, which determine all behavior patterns, in animals and humans alike. The rat solves the maze because it is only when he follows the correct path that he gets the cheese. The boy masters the bicycle because only the correct movements give the exhilarating ride. Even infants react according to this law. The random movements which bring gratification are retained and enlarged upon; those which cause distress are lost or inhibited.

Social skills develop in the same way. Behavior that brings admiration and approval is fostered; that which brings dislike and disapproval usually is avoided. However, we must keep in mind that to feel important and significant appears to be one of the most primitive and powerful urges—an unconditioned stimulus, so to speak. So that while approval is preferred to disapproval, disapproval is preferred to being ignored. A child often learns to be mischievous, troublesome, even vicious, because his stupid or neglectful parents never accord importance for "good" behavior, and "bad" conduct alone makes him feel important and gives him a thrill of power.

EVERYONE is entitled to feel important and essential, but these gratifications should come in return for virtuous behavior. To undermine a child's importance by indiscriminating and hostile punishment is to make him a delinquent. To give him indiscriminating gratification and admiration is to teach him that no one form of behavior is better than another, and to stimulate an insatiable hunger for importance and affection which life can never satisfy. (Alcoholism often springs from such treatment.) To bribe him to be good is in effect to reward him for being bad, and to allow him to gain gratifications by subterfuge and falsehood is to establish habits of deceit and dishonesty.

Our study, therefore, should be to bestow praise whenever it is earned—but it should be earned. Make it a point to commend every "good" act the child performs, whether it is telling the truth, doing a job well or exhibiting generosity or tolerance. It is most important to praise the deed itself, rather than the child. In this way he is encouraged to do as well as he can, rather than to be personally admired—a distinction which, if somewhat subtle, nevertheless is important.

I might add that one of the best ways for a child to earn parental approval is through home tasks, diligently performed. Many mothers ask how this may be done in a city home or apartment, particularly where there are servants. I realize it is more difficult than where there are lawns to mow, walks to shovel, fires to tend and ashes to be carried out. However, any three- or four-year-old can be taught to hang up his own clothes, empty wastebaskets, "help" mother set the table and remove the dirty dishes. As his powers develop, regular responsibilities should be added. If the parents work along with the child and are consistent in seeing that he performs his tasks, these will be accepted as customary.

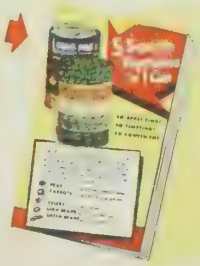
There is no better way to make a child feel he is necessary and valuable. And early in life he will learn one of its greatest lessons: that successful accomplishment of a task requires

5 Separate Vegetables in 1 Can

For Salads... Garnish... Family Variety

SO CONVENIENT! SO TEMPTING!
Yes . . . five separate layers of quality vegetables in one can. That's Layer-Pak! Separated by thin dividers of parchment, here are five delicious vegetables. Here's variety . . . thriftily.

PEAS . . . young tender. CARROTS . . . golden-young. CELERY . . . savory, tender. LIMA BEANS . . . dainty, delicate. GREEN BEANS . . . pick o' the crop.



LAYER-PAK Vegetables

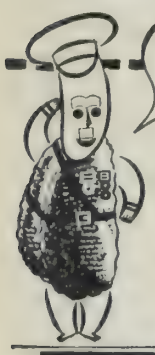
Make Salads at the Table with Layer-Pak

WHEEL SALAD as shown uses 2 cans Layer-Pak. May be made with one can by using smaller plate.

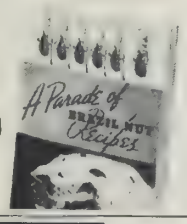
Free

SEND FOR THIS

THE LARSEN COMPANY
Dept. J1148, Green Bay, Wis.
Please send Free:
☐ Make Salads at the Table
☐ Star Recipes by America's Cooking Stars
NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY.....STATE.....



The new crop Brazil Nuts are now at your grocer's. Prices are lower than last year. Hurry and fill the nut bowl. Their large, crunchy kernels are so delicious after meals or for nibbling any time.



Try Toasting Brazil Nuts

Heat in moderate oven a few minutes. Toasting brings out their wonderful flavor . . . makes unshelled nuts easier to shell. Add one cup of chopped, ground or grated Brazil Nuts to your favorite cake, cookie or fancy bread batters. The flavor is marvelous.

Brazil Nuts are so wholesome and nourishing, too. Their protein content is complete. And they are one of the richest of all food sources for Vitamin B1. Buy Brazil Nuts in the shell—or already shelled.

Brazil Nut Association, Dept. LH-3
100 Hudson Street, New York 13, N. Y.
Please send free 32-page illustrated book "A Parade of Brazil Nut Recipes"

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

SERVICE PLATES

An ideal, moderately-priced gift. Use in sets to enhance formal dinners. Lovely as wall and cabinet decorations or as pastry and candy servers. Shown are Godey Prints and Victorian Rose. Genuine 23 karat gold filigree over colorful rims. Select one or a dozen.

by SALEM CHINA CO.

Available now at gift and department stores.

American Dinnerware of Distinction

THE SALEM CHINA CO.
SALEM, OHIO

A SINGLE WIPE DRIES!
EXCELLO Laundry Fresh KITCHEN TOWELS
LOOK FOR THIS LABEL

AT THANKSGIVING
POP JOLLY TIME
IT NEVER FAILS
ASK YOUR GROCER
BEST for Home Popping
JOLLY TIME POP CORN

going at it promptly, and giving one's best efforts until it is finished. These things should be taken into account in the degree of commendation offered.

Punishment, I admit, is often more difficult than reward. Ideally, it should follow as a natural consequence of the misdeed. Anything gained by deception should be taken away, play won through neglect of duty should be denied. When the child knows he is loved, quite often the disappointment and disapproval of the parent are punishment enough.

Situations arise, however, where this method cannot be used, especially when children are too young to grasp abstract ideas. For such situations I suggest spanking. But I hasten to add that the manner in which the child is spanked is all-important. Spanking has fallen into disrepute because it has been abused by vengeful guilty parents who project their own guilt upon the child, in hostility and anger. For how can a lazy father whip a lazy son except in anger and guilt? To angry, unfair punishment the child inevitably responds with anger and resentment.

Only the pure in heart should spank a child. And as with rewards, you should make it plain that you are punishing the misdeed, not the child. When it is over, consider the penalty as paid, and accept the child back into full favor again. This preserves his dignity and self-respect, as important to a youngster as to an adult. Corporal punishment administered in this way, fairly, dispassionately and out of love, is far preferable to the constant nagging and belittling which many nonspankers employ, and which to the child represent the essence of hostility.

The fifth great factor in the training of animals is consistency. Conditioned reflexes cannot be established unless the stimuli remain constant. If two experimenters are working with the same animal, they must use the same methods or the animal is hopelessly confused. "Nervous breakdowns" closely resembling human neuroses can be induced in animals by frequently changing the conditions, punishing an act one day and rewarding it the next, or by setting standards beyond the animal's power to achieve.

A child, too, must operate under standards that do not change if he is to develop consistent patterns of behavior. They must not be too high, and the rules and restrictions placed on him must not be so complicated that h cannot understand them easily. But the must increase in difficulty as he grows in ski and maturity, else he misses the chance to d velop as he should.

If parents compete for the favor of a child or dispute the way he is to be managed in hi presence, he soon learns to play one agains the other. Having no constant law to go by and finding the authority of the home di vided, he never achieves a sense of security He is inclined to reject whatever standard his parents revere, and can develop none o his own. Out of such childhoods grow the neuroses, the psychopathic tendencies and the criminal delinquencies of later years.

Most fortunate is the boy or girl whose parents have such similar cultural, ethical and philosophical backgrounds that they can agree readily on major issues. If differences exist, they should be ironed out when the child is not present. And if at times compromise seems difficult, remember that a united front is better than embattled righteousness, and that an imperfect standard is better than none at all.

There is one more factor in the training of children that we must recognize: the role played by society itself. Our youngsters soon spread their contacts far and wide, many new experimenters come upon the scene—and we would not have it otherwise, since our offspring, in advancing maturity, must meet and master the bewildering complexity of life.

Yet how shall parents combat the influence of other people's children, reared less wisely and lovingly, who lead our offspring to the dance hall, the tavern, the night club? How counteract the lessons taught by the less worthy motion pictures and radio programs, by stupid comic books? How, indeed, preserve any ideals at all in the face of the constant commercial pull toward opportunism and sensualism to which all of us are constantly subjected, and which is another mark of this frenetic age?

This question—with which trainers of animals do not have to contend—is hardest of all to answer. Yet is it not all the more obligatory to offer our children a better fare of ethical, aesthetic and intellectual food, and to exemplify in our own lives the virtues we would have them possess? If we have avoided

(Continued on Page 282)

JENNIFER

"I think our mothers are much smarter than our daddies,' 'cause they control the money!"

The Magazine Women Believe In

JOURNAL

ISSUED
DEC 2 1948
ARMY AIR FORCES

December, 1948 • 25c

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY

OINT OF NO RETURN
Beginning a New Serial
By JOHN P. MARQUAND

---

tters From Our Honeymoon
By ELEANOR and
FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Manufactured by GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

Topsy and Turvy

Commando

Happy Christmas to all—and to all a good night!

Bird Dog

Fitful

Steam Roller

Englander Red Line Mattresses (twin or full size) or matching box springs—$49.75 to $79.75. Other Englander mattresses as low as $29.75.

© 1948, The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Illinois

Bird Dog, Topsy and Turvy, Commando, Fitful, and good old Steam Roller...all the now famous Englander sleeping characters join in wishing you a Happy Christmas and a wonderful night's sleep.

They remind you, too, that there will be 365 nights next year . . . 365 separate and distinct times you can lie down, relax, close your eyes, and thank your lucky stars that you are sleeping on an Englander (and will be for years to come)—the only mattress in the world with completely individual spring action.

(Continued from Page 4)

for over 40 years. In fact, there has been a close fellowship between the two groups.

Sincerely,
REV. ARTHUR M. BALDWIN,
Church of the Brethren.
(Also signed by over 50 members of both churches.)

Texas School-Lunch Program

Austin, Texas.

Dear Miss Hickey: I read with a great deal of interest your excellent story, Hot School Lunches, in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. We appreciate your interest very much in the school-lunch program, and we are indeed glad that this article that you have written has gotten into the hands of many thousands of people and has enlightened many of them on the subject of hot lunches in the schools.

We believe that we have many good school lunches in the state of Texas and would like to give you a special invitation to come to Texas and visit some of our schools that are operating school-lunch programs.

Yours very truly,
M. F. THURMOND,
Director, School Lunch Division.

Does Joe Know About the Price of Eggs in Russia?

The Foreign Service of the United States of America, Moscow, U.S.S.R.

Dear Editors: I have found your advertisements of a great help, have ordered several items and have found them extremely satisfactory. I have translated several of the recipes into Russian and my cook does wonders with them. She will spend hours figuring out how the dishes are arranged, in the featured cooking articles as well as the advertisements, and has been able to duplicate most of them. One looks for the cake recipes that use only one or two eggs, inasmuch as eggs here are about 45 cents each and butter runs about $5 a pound at the diplomatic rate of exchange.

MRS. HOMER C. KAYE.

Oh, That Column!

Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Dear Editors: Today when I couldn't find your magazine on the rack in a drugstore but had to go behind a counter, dig down for an old dusty issue when so many of your competitor magazines were all new on display, I thought you ought to know what a tribute I gave you.

I'd like to add this one adverse comment; I admire Mrs. Roosevelt—but—that column! If you can't get better letters for her to answer, why not have her write on some topic of interest to women on politics or world affairs? Anything but those hostile or stupid letters!

Yours truly,
DOROTHY MATHOT.

Mrs. Roosevelt has a choice of letters to answer. She likes tough questions. ED.

Bringing Up Husbands

Richmond, Kentucky.

Dear Editors: It seems to me that some men would be more happily married if they would observe reasonable precautions. They think that they are born with the right to lie down in their dirty work clothes on clean sheets or clean bedspreads. To a woman who has been working hard all day to make the little home neat and clean, this is a monstrous thing.

Can't the mothers of boys train them to be more considerate of houses? A little proper training at an early age, hard though it may be, may save some marriages and a lot of unhappiness. No woman is likely to have a surplus of energy if she is a good housekeeper. If children can be trained to put more things away, happier marriages will result—then and later when they are grown.

I hugely enjoy your magazine.

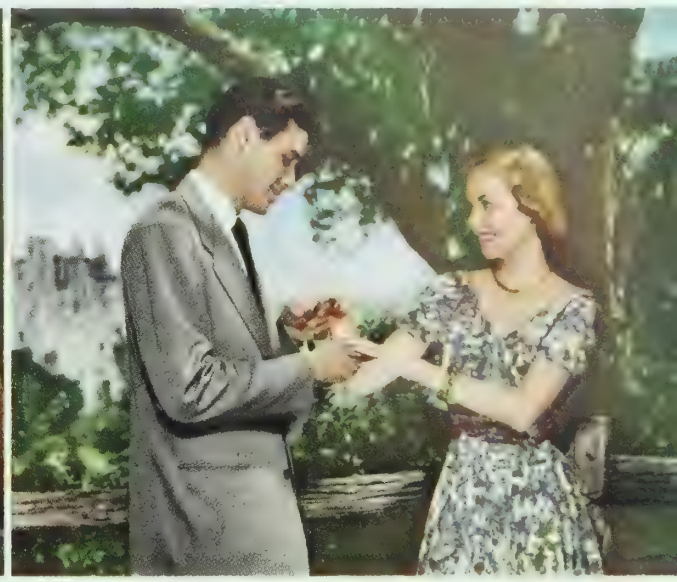
AURORA CHESTNUT.

Women Everywhere

Alexandria, Egypt.

Dear Editors: I want to tell you how much I like the JOURNAL. You may be astonished to know that although I am not American I find it familiar. I think that any woman would find in it feelings and thoughts of her own, no matter what nationality she is.

Yours truly,
AZIZ DARIVISH.



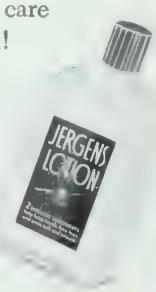
(Continued on Page 8)

"IRELAND was Thrilling after that Hand Kiss"

An Irish Hunt is exciting. Such beautiful horses—so silky. "I know what's silkier," my Irish cousin said; and—goodness, he kissed my hand. Peter (this boy from home) snorted. But...

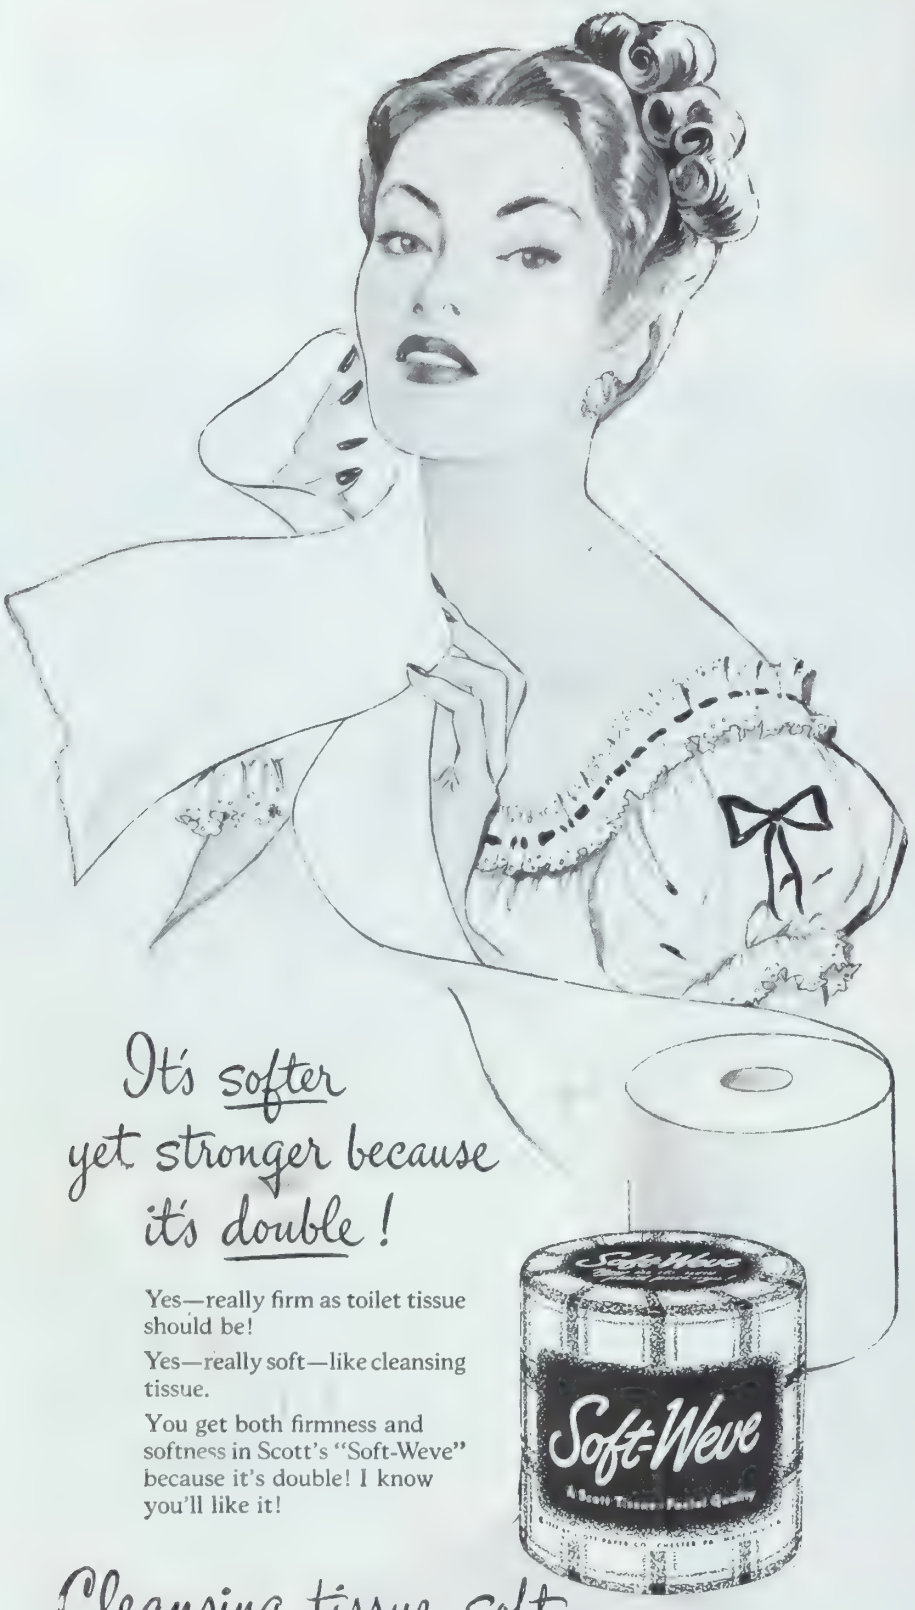
At Blarney Castle, Peter found his tongue. "Your hands are softer than silk," he said. Jergens does keep my hands soft... But Peter said much, much more...

"Is it just Blarney you're talking, Peter?" I asked him. But it's all true, he says. He wants to hold my soft hands all his life.



Soft, white hands...Jergens-smooth hands... are hands to be held, admired...kissed!

You can have even softer, smoother hands now with today's finer Jergens Lotion. It's two ways better, thanks to discoveries in skin care. Today's Jergens Lotion not only keeps your hands silkier, softer than ever, but it protects their loveliness so much longer.



In Hollywood—the Stars prefer Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 over any other hand care in the world!

Many doctors use two special ingredients to help smooth and soften the skin. Both these fine ingredients are in your Jergens Lotion. It's a joy to use, too, because Jergens Lotion is never oily... never sticky! Still 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax) for today's even finer Jergens Lotion. So if you care for your hands—use Jergens Lotion!

USED BY MORE WOMEN THAN ANY OTHER HAND CARE IN THE WORLD

For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use Jergens Lotion

It's softer yet stronger because it's double!

Yes—really firm as toilet tissue should be!

Yes—really soft—like cleansing tissue.

You get both firmness and softness in Scott's "Soft-Weve" because it's double! I know you'll like it!

Cleansing tissue soft
...toilet tissue firm

"Soft-Weve" "Scotties" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

P.S. a cleansing tissue by Scott

...so soft
...so firm

you'll like Scotties

(Continued from Page 6)

Teach All Religions

St. Louis, Missouri.

Dear Editors: I, along with the large majority of other so-called "atheists," would heartily approve a course on religion in our public schools if it were possible to find qualified, unbiased public-school teachers to give it and it included what all the religions of the world stand for. This would give the student an opportunity to form his own opinions, use his own mind and decide his own beliefs, which is the purpose of education.

It seems to me there is a vast difference in teaching children what is believed by some, and in teaching them what they themselves should believe. Herein lies the point of the Supreme Court decision—and I, for one, am for it. Sincerely,

M. S. EDWARDS.

The Trouble With Newspapers

Lake Placid, New York.

Dear Mr. Gould: Dorothy Thompson, writing on The Climate of a Free Press in the JOURNAL, seems to me in need of rebuttal, since she dismisses with pious platitudes an issue of first importance to every JOURNAL reader. I say this with due respect to Miss Thompson, who has so long been one of the ablest American journalists.

What Miss Thompson says in effect is that the American press is the best and the freest in the world, which it is without question, and that if it has any faults at all, none of which seem to her very serious, the reader must be blamed for them. That happens to be the opinion of newspaper ownership, which takes the attitude that, because our press is the best and the freest by comparison, anyone who criticizes it must think some other country's press, probably Russia's, is better. It is downright dangerous to criticize the press in America. The editors of the Atlantic, introducing a recent article, call it "the most difficult and sensitive assignment in journalism." Newspaper publishers look with scorn and contempt upon criticism which comes from outside those actively engaged in the business, and the criticism which comes from within their ranks is mild and pitifully inadequate, with a few notable exceptions. If any serious criticism can be made, then, what is it?

Miss Thompson first begs this question by beating the long-dead horse of advertiser influence. I don't think any serious student of American journalism really believes that advertisers corrupt daily newspapers, or even influence them to any appreciable extent in most cases. Chapter and book, however, can be cited to prove that there is considerably more influence than Miss Thompson thinks exists.

Miss Thompson goes on to postulate that our newspapers are and should be engaged only in the search for truth, as nearly as fallible humans can come to it. This is true of our best newspapers, certainly, but it is not true of a large group of family- and chain-controlled newspapers which reach an extremely high percentage of newspaper readers. Nor is it true of several of our national magazines, which follow their own party lines with the fidelity of a communist, although with a great deal more subtlety.

Of course, the magazines can always claim the right of private ownership to follow any party line they please, but the newspapers have no such excuse. Their ownership is private, but their responsibility is public. The people have a right to know, and it is not only the duty of a newspaper, but its only reason for existence, to report the news as objectively as is humanly possible. That too many of them are not engaged in this pursuit is, I think, the chief cause for alarm.

Miss Thompson seems to believe that it is only in Europe where one can paste up three different news stories of the same event and find little resemblance, but there are several cities in America where it is also true. The differences may not be quite as flagrant or as frequent, but it is distressingly true that they occur most often in stories about labor disputes and political events. It is healthy that there should be differences on the editorial page and in signed columns—diversity of opinion is essential to a free press—but in the news columns, no.

Conversely, there are altogether too many cities in which readers get a newspaper slanted in news columns and editorials alike to one view—the view of the

(Continued on Page 183)

Gotham is the World's Leader in 51 and 54 gauge fine nylon stockings

AND MORE WOMEN ASK FOR GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE THAN FOR ANY OTHER BRAND!

So sheer, so beautiful, so fashion-right in style, fit and color . . . your legs are as style-right as your clothes when you wear Gotham Gold Stripe Nylons!

Shadow, a gray brown to wear with wine, navy or black . . . in 51 gauge, 30 denier. For perfect fit, Adjustables, the long stockings that fit every leg, whether tall, medium or short. If not obtainable at your local store, use coupon below.

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N.Y.
GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.
DOMINION SQUARE BUILDING, MONTREAL

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC., DEPT. LHJ12
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

I would like 51 gauge Gotham Gold Stripe Nylon Adjustables*, illustrated "On A Pedestal." Please send me, through a local store, ... pairs Gotham Gold Stripe Nylon Adjustables in 30 denier, 51 gauge SHADOW, Style 4376, at $1.95 a pair. My size is ..... I enclose Check ☐ or Money Order ☐. (Don't send stamps.)

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

(Coupon orders filled only in the U.S.A.)

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. PAT NOS. 1728924-1824636

Your Cold...

develops in many ways... requires quick attention

GERMS called the "secondary invaders," are believed to be responsible for much of a cold's misery. These are already present in the mouth or may be transferred to you if you get in the way of a cough or a sneeze.

WET FEET or cold feet may lower body resistance, and so make it easier for the "secondary invaders" to invade the throat tissue and produce many of the miserable complications of a cold you know so well.

DRAFTS, fatigue, and sudden changes of temperature may also make it easier for germs to stage a "mass invasion" of the throat tissue. Reduction of germs is an important step in warding off a cold.

ANYTHING that lowers body resistance makes it easier for threatening germs called "secondary invaders" to enter throat tissues and start trouble.

So, at the slightest hint of a chill, sneeze or cough, begin at once with the Listerine Antiseptic gargle and use it regularly.

Attacks "Secondary Invaders"

This pleasant precaution may "nip your cold in the bud," or lessen its seriousness once it has started. Here is why:

Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill millions of germs, including "secondary invaders". . . helps guard against their staging a mass invasion of the tissue. In short it gets after them before they get after you.

Germs Reduced Up to 96.7% in Tests

Remember, repeated tests have shown reductions on mouth and throat surfaces ranging up to 96.7% fifteen minutes after a Listerine Antiseptic gargle, and up to 80% an hour after.

Also remember that those who gargled Listerine Antiseptic twice daily in tests had fewer colds and usually milder colds than those who did not gargle. . . . and fewer sore throats.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY
St. Louis, Mo.

IT'S NEW! Have you tasted the zippy MINT flavor of today's Listerine TOOTH PASTE with 25% more Lusterfoam?

Celebrate the Holiday with America's Luxury Ham

Marie Gifford's Holiday-Party Ham

It's all dressed up for Christmas dinner . . . this bright-glazed Armour Ham . . . gay with a garnish of candied cherries and citron! And it's all so easy. Just bake for 20-25 minutes per pound at 325° F.—glazing the last half hour with 1 cup brown sugar and ½ cup corn syrup. Your first slice proves that its perfection isn't just glaze-deep—that it's unmistakably Armour Ham! And that means it's a hand-picked ham—mild-sugar-cured—tender-smoked! You'll have a second slice, won't you?

For other delicious ham recipes write . Marie Gifford, Dept. 333, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Illinois.

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

LADIES' HOME

Journal

BRUCE GOULD

AND BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editors

MARY BASS, Executive Editor

LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MACNAIR KAHLER, BERNARDINE KIELTY, ANN BATCHELDER, WILHELA CUSHMAN, WILLIAM E. FINK, ALICE BLINN, RICHARD PRATT, HENRIETTA MURDOCK, LOUELLA G. SHOUER, MARY LEA PAGE, MAUREEN DALY, DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, JOHN GODFREY MORRIS, JOAN YOUNGER, LONNIE COLEMAN, MARGARET DAVIDSON, NORA O'LEARY. Contributing Editors: GLADYS TABER, LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN, GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ, BARBARA BENSON, MARGARET HICKEY. Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER, CHARLOTTE JOHNSON, DONALD STUART, RUTH MARY PACKARD, RUTH MATTHEWS, ALICE CONKLING, JUNE TORREY, LILY GLENDINNING, DOROTHY COUNSELMAN SELBY, JOSEPH DI PIETRO, ANNE EINSELEN, GLENN MATTHEW WHITE, BETTY NILES GRAY JAN WEYL, JEANNE SCRIBNER. Editorial Assistants: ALICE KASTBERG, IRIS WILKEN, BETTY COE, JEANNE LENTON TRACEY, CYNTHIA McADOO, ELEANOR POWNALL SIMMONS, ADRINA CASPARIAN, VIRGINIA PRICE, MARION PLUMMER, LOIS WITHERSPOON, PHILIPPA HERMAN, JEANNE STILES, ELIZABETH McFARLAND, POLLY TOLAND, LEONE SEASTROM.

WHAT ONE WOMAN CAN DO

A LITTLE girl in Europe receives a pretty yoked flannel nightie that has just come from America. She looks it over and excitedly pulls from its pocket a tiny baby doll made of stuffed pink flannel. The doll has a big smile on its round painted face. The little girl feels of the doll slowly, and smiles. She is glad to have the nightie—but the doll! She hasn't seen a doll in a long time, even a tiny little doll like this one.

Possibly this little girl, and hundreds like her, will never hear of Mary Hugg, a Quaker grandmother from Detroit, Michigan—but Mrs. Hugg knows about them, and that is what counts.

For the past seven years Mrs. Hugg has been the energetic head of the American Friends Service Committee's Detroit workroom, sending as many as four tons of clothing to Europe in one year. She is outstanding for the sense of unity she has inspired among her diverse groups of volunteers—"I have found no scheme for getting volunteers to work steadily without working steadily with them." So Mrs. Hugg devotes all day Monday to the workroom, other days and nights to gathering and distributing materials, packing and shipping boxes of clothing, speaking to groups in and about Detroit.

Mrs. Hugg, a widow, has never been in business, yet her workroom is self-sustaining. When a Detroit manufacturer offered her some upholstery material, she took it gratefully, designed a special jacket pattern. Flowered chicken-feed sacks are turned into girls' dresses; window-shade muslin into crib sheets and diapers; men's worn shirts into pinafores; and men's worn trousers cut down into boys' sizes.

Although the rent is free for the small room in the Merrill Palmer School, which is the Detroit headquarters, it takes money to buy knitting wool, to pay shipping costs to (Continued on Page 105)

Depression and War

By Dorothy Thompson

THE tendency to consider that war and peace are fixed alternatives, involving merely a matter of moral choice, contributes nothing to the actual question of the prevention of war. So long as the major nations of the world find it impossible to agree upon a common concept of how, and in what spirit, society should be organized, and therefore to agree upon a common enforceable law to restrain even the most powerful of the sovereign states, war is a continual possibility, which all states will take into calculation, despite the rapidly increasing hazards inherent in war, as the instruments of destruction become ever more powerful and appalling.

The mere existence, however, of such weapons is no certain deterrent to war, and may even increase the chances of its occurrence. When one state can utterly destroy another state, or reduce it to such a condition that the population returns to the status of animals, living in caves of rubble where once stood great cities, and foraging for food, every serious diplomatic dispute which might result in war will tempt one or the other of the parties to strike first and obtain the advantage of the initial attack. Under such a condition, the chief preventive to war is the estimate of each party regarding the risk of defeat or the chance of victory. The leadership of no nation, however aggressive, is likely to start a war which, they believe, they have a very good chance to lose. Thus, though the Soviet Union possesses, in its 400 divisions, and exceptionally favorable strategic position, a force capable of overrunning Europe, China or India in a matter of a few weeks, no Soviet leadership is likely to take such a step so long as public opinion in the United States is firm in regarding the security of Western Europe and China as integral with the security of the United States in the Atlantic and Pacific, and so long as we possess a superior air force and the Russians do not possess the atomic bomb. The strategic Russian land position and vast armies are balanced for the time being by the capacity of the United States to wage long-range atomic warfare, and vice versa. The calculated risks for both are too grave to encourage either to launch a war.

When, as in October, two American air strategists, Col. Frederick L. Moore and Col. Dale O. Smith, announced that in their opinion (not that of the American General Staff) the United States could win an "atomic blitz" against any enemy with only about 300 bombers, flying from 450 to 500 miles an hour, they were, in the opinion of this writer, doing peace no good service, but encouraging, from our side, an exaggerated notion of "Want Better Cakes?

HERE'S THE SECRET," SAYS AUNT JENNY

Spry with Cake-Improver

DON'T just wish you could make better cakes. Go right ahead and do it! Don't be afraid to tackle this luscious Christmas Tree Cake. Make it with Spry, for no other type shortening has Spry's Cake-Improver secret that gives your cakes richer flavor, finer texture—helps them stay fresh longer. Follow the recipe for Spry's easy One-Bowl method—your cake will be a beauty! And if you want to be an all-round better cook—use Spry for all baking and frying!

CHRISTMAS TREE COCONUT CAKE

2¼ cups sifted cake flour
1½ cups sugar
4 teaspoons baking powder (or 5½ teaspoons tartrate baking powder)
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup Spry
1 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
¾ teaspoon orange extract
4 egg whites, unbeaten

SIFT flour, sugar, baking powder, and salt into mixing bowl. . . . DROP in Spry (no creaming needed!) . . . ADD ¾ cup milk and flavoring extracts and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed). Scrape bowl and spoon or beater. . . . ADD remaining milk and egg whites and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed).

BAKE in two deep 9-inch Sprycoated layer pans in moderate oven (360° F.) 20–25 minutes.

★ FROST WITH CHRISTMAS TREE FROSTING ★

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
5 tablespoons water
1 teaspoon light corn sirup
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon orange extract
2 marshmallows, cut in sixths
Candied red cherries
Green cherries or citron
1 cup shredded coconut

Put egg whites, sugar, water, corn sirup, and salt in top of double boiler and mix thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water and beat constantly with rotary egg beater until mixture will hold a peak (about 7 minutes).

Remove from hot water, add flavoring extracts and marshmallows and beat until cool and thick enough to spread.

Spread between layers and on top and sides of cake. Outline a Christmas tree with pieces of red cherries. Use green cherries for base. Decorate sides of cake with pieces of red and green cherries. Sprinkle coconut on top and sides of cake.

ANOTHER FINE LEVER PRODUCT

with CAKE-IMPROVER

SAVE MONEY, GET SPRY IN THE ECONOMICAL 3-LB. CAN

the ease with which such a war could be won, and contributing to accelerate (and justify) the Russian race for atomic weapons. On the other side, when the Russians encourage themselves in the belief that all non-communist societies are on the brink of disintegration and would break up in revolution during war, they are contributing to their own recklessness and overlooking experiences of very recent history.

To repeat: When two great powers of conflicting interest and ideals face each other across a practical vacuum of power, the temptation to resort to war to end the dilemma is restrained chiefly by the calculation of risk. Anything which gives one or the other the certainty (or the seeming certainty) of victory encourages aggression, especially if one be a state dominated by aggressively dynamic and revolutionary theory, as the Soviet Union, at this stage of her development, certainly is. American military weakness would not, therefore, at this stage of history, contribute to prevent war, but would rather invite it.

There are, however, factors of weakness or strength which are entirely outside the military field but which also invite aggression or restrain it. Of these factors, the most important is the political and economic stability of the threatened nation. Even were there no great state attempting to spread its power by a combination of military strength and revolutionary fifth columns, the external influence of any state is in direct relation to its internal condition. Thus, Hitler was directly encouraged in his fateful move to occupy the Rhineland by the fact of a government crisis in France, which at the critical moment completely paralyzed action. The perennial instability of internal French politics constitutes still a serious menace to French security.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Little Dirge

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

If you should call I would not stay
To lace my shoes against the wet.
Alas, it is a long day since
We two last met.

If you should whistle I would go,
Leaving my needle in my gown.
Alas, the hill stands quiet now
Where you went down.

If you should linger at the gate
I would not close the blind again.
Alas, the only sound I hear
Is summer's rain.

If you should wake, who sleep so deep,
I would be there to touch your eyes.
Alas, how endless is the dream
That on me lies!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

And among our friends and allies in Europe, the specter of the possibility of a repetition of the great 1929 depression in the United States haunts the minds of all European political leaders, and prevents them from pinning full faith upon the United States, even though economic circumstances tie them to us as never before. The communists, of course, underline and emphasize these apprehensions, also sincerely believing that they are correct.

And, if there is anything in this world fairly predictable, it is that a collapse of the American economy comparable to that of twenty years ago would invite Soviet intervention, both political and military, and bring all pacific defense plans to naught.

THEREFORE—and I hope every political leader in America, of whatever party, puts this fact first in his mind—the United States dares not have a depression; for if she does, not only will her people be hungry, wretched and inclined to extreme measures, but the entire American foreign policy will collapse, the European Recovery Program will fail, and American security will go with it. I would therefore put the stability of the American economy on a par with, or even in advance of, military preparedness as a defense measure.

It is not, for instance, true that the Soviet Union does not change its policies. Though it has never abandoned its millennial ambitions, it has certainly, from time to time, considered it no time to attempt to realize them. The Soviet Union was very active in Europe from 1918 to 1923. But in 1923, following the stabilization of the German mark and the Locarno Pact between France and Germany, all Europe made a quite fantastic economic recovery, during which the Soviet Union and the communists behaved very cautiously indeed. It was the 1929 collapse, tremendously accelerated by American business' loss of confidence in Europe and withdrawal of loans, which opened the way for Nazism or communism.

NOW, the 1929 depression resulted from a decrease of industrial productivity, the diversion of investment money to stock-market speculation, and a fall in consumption. Conventional laissez faire economists treated it as though it were an act of nature—booms and depressions following each other inevitably—and preached even then that it would right itself if left alone. It is not the function of this article to argue that economic theory, but only to point out that another American depression will not right itself by being left alone, because it won't be left alone. It will bring on a political and security catastrophe.

Depressions can be avoided, but they cannot be avoided in a completely unregulated capitalist economy. Only wise measures of Government, long planned in advance and affecting the fields of finance, investment and employment, can redress the balance when the economy begins to sink.

It is not the purpose of this article to tell the Government what it should plan to prevent another depression. The author is not a trained economist and is incompetent to give such advice. But it is the function and object of this article to tell the American people that depressions are avoidable by proper measures prepared long enough in advance; that we live on the razor's edge (as many great peoples have lived before and survived); and to urge our people to demand of Government that it have a consistent antidepression plan.

No part of that plan can be the traditional American response to disturbed internal economic conditions, for traditionally, when the United States is in a jam at home, it cancels its commitments abroad. That is precisely what the enemies of our country hope for and pray that we shall do. The program must undertake planned and Government-supported expansion of capital investment and employment the moment that the symptoms of a slump begin to show themselves, and it must be prepared to intervene wherever necessary to keep up the basic conditions necessary to stable prosperity. We cannot have another collapse because businessmen "lose confidence."

For there is nothing on earth in which we can have confidence at all, except in the courage of our people and their capacity and that of their leadership to prevent self-made catastrophes by wise and foresighted planning against them. Actually, nothing would more strengthen our position in the world, and therefore our security, than the confidence of our friends abroad that our leaders knew what they would do if this economy were threatened. THE END a daily Florida tune-up!

GIVE YOUR HEALTH

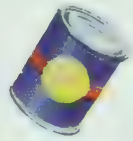
FIGHT FATIGUE!

GUARD AGAINST COLDS!

FORTIFY WITH VITAMIN C!

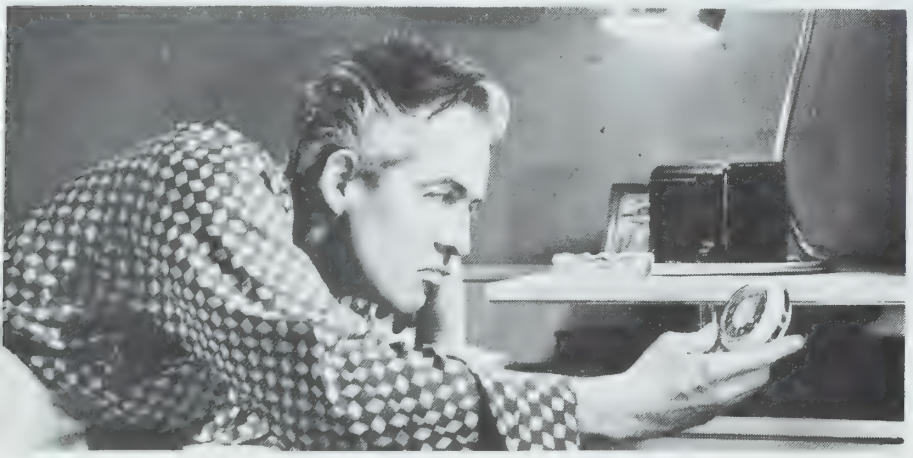
For good health and good looks there's nothing like a daily tonic of wake-up Florida grapefruit, with that zestful, tangy goodness you'll find in no other grapefruit.

Both the fresh fruit and the canned juice are full of natural vitamin C, other vitamins, minerals, and fruit-sugar energy.



At least once a day make it a point to give yourself a tune-up with Florida grapefruit—either the delicious fresh fruit or the equally healthful canned juice.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA



FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT

FRESH  ...OR  CANNED JUICE

Men like this will be

OVERJOYED!

So will all the many people kept awake, made nervous or jittery by the caffein in regular coffee! For . . .

THE NEW IMPROVED SANKA COFFEE

—the "drink-it-and-sleep" coffee—now has a new, marvelous flavor to delight lovers of fine coffee! It has a truly wonderful taste—yet it's still 97% caffein-free!

FINER FLAVOR in Sanka Coffee is due to a brand-new flavor-saving process . . . a miracle method of taking the caffein out of the coffee.

Try Sanka Coffee today. See for yourself what a great flavor-improvement has been made. Sanka comes in two forms: Ground for drip or percolator; Instant Sanka, made instantly in the cup. Products of General Foods.

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"You have to watch this fellow. Last year he brought me a baby sister."

UNDER-COVER STUFF

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

CHRISTMAS books, in our opinion, should be lasting books. Not the latest novel, however good, nor any of the very up-to-date political documents, nor the newest thing in juveniles. But a good collection of poetry that has its permanent place on the library shelf. Or an art book, if taste points that way. Or even a good cookbook, personally tested, with special recipes marked by the giver. For children, for whom hundreds of beautiful books are brought out every Christmas, we still have a conviction that the old ones, in good durable editions, remain the best gifts. The fairy tales, particularly Andersen's, Alice in Wonderland, Kipling's Jungle Books, Selma Lagerlöf's The Wonderful Adventures of Nils; and as they grow older, David Copperfield, Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, Kenneth Grahame's Dream Days and The Wind in the Willows, and possibly Barrie's Sentimental Tommy and Tommy and Grizel (or are we just getting sentimental for our own childhood?).

Fun books and funny books are good gifts to the whole household. Jerome Meyer, creator of the best in parlor games, pencil games, games that take a bit of doing, has a new book: FUN-TO-DO. (He's the one who did MIND YOUR P'S AND Q'S, writing-analysis book, and MENTAL WHOOPEE, the original quiz program for the home.)

Among funny books, SHAKE WELL BEFORE USING, Bennett Cerf's latest collection of stories, will surely be popular. It is the same formula as TRY AND STOP ME, incidents centering mostly around well-known people, with amusing and sometimes serious sketches of the personalities. A neat companion piece to Homer Croy's WHAT GRANDPA LAUGHED AT, if you're interested in changes in humor.

(Still on funny books) THE WHIMSEY REPORT OR SEX ISN'T EVERYTHING, by Parke Cummings, is very restful after a workout on its prototype by Doctor Kinsey. The Professor who takes the Polls on General Domestic Behavior finds many points of masculine and feminine differences. Men, say their wives, are sneaky in their domestic habits. The same man who downtown at his office is most scrupulous in all matters of honest dealing, will at home sweep the dirt under a corner of the carpet, blow off the crumbs from the table onto the floor, and, instead of taking the leftover vegetables out of the cooking pan, putting them in another receptacle, covering them and putting them in the refrigerator, will, if left alone and unwatched, put the whole pan in the refrigerator, or even hide it in the oven. Husbands, on the other hand, claim that their wives insist on rearranging the furniture, sleeping in curl papers, interrupting the husband when he is reading the paper, and resent being interrupted themselves when they are reading. Investigations farther afield show that the American depositor's No. 1 problem is which teller's line to join when he enters a bank lobby. And still in the financial field, we learn that the average man uses up 70 cents' worth of gas driving from store to store in order to return 55 cents' worth of bottles.

Christmas ceremonies have lost something, thinks Robert Ruark, perpetrator of that sardonic and often very funny book: I DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED. For his taste Christmas has been spoiled by cosmetics.

"Each year, when the mistletoe season sneaks closer, I find somehow that the old man's heart isn't in it. Time was," he goes on in his own particular variety of idiom, "when you could snatch a bundle of dry goods up in your arms, plaster lips on hers, and feel mildly exhilarated, as though you had just snatched a kiss from a woman. No more. Any time I purloin a peck in a dark parlor, I am kissing no woman. I feel I am kissing Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn, or a similar collection of inspired trend salesmen. When I fortify my courage with a puncheon of eggnog and bear down on an unsuspecting blonde, it kills my romantic yen to desserts from one cake!

(Continued on Page 16)

MONDAY ☆ to ☆ FRIDAY

That's what Betty Crocker offers you in this oblong version of "Chiffon"!

Betty Crocker Chiffon stays moist and fresh so long—is so delicious—can be served so many ways—that it's the world's most useful cake. It's a really new type of cake, you know—using an easy-to-measure-and-mix oil shortening and combining the best features of angel and butter cakes. It's more tender than angel food. It's unlike any cake for lightness and size . . . is easier to make than any cake by old style methods.

Softasilk—milled by the world's largest millers for cakes only—is the only cake flour Betty Crocker recommends for Chiffon Cakes. It assures that fabulous texture and volume that have made Betty Crocker Chiffon the most newsworthy cake in 100 years.

General Mills

Dozens of recipe ideas—in this first Betty Crocker Chiffon Cake recipe book!

They're here!—all the Chiffon Cakes perfected by the Betty Crocker staff (14 new recipes and variations), plus 35 glamorous icings, fillings and other serving ideas, 26 baking hints, beautiful illustrations. Many of these recipes have never been published. Gives you dessert ideas for years to come. Just published. Place your order for this sensational 20-page booklet today. Only 15c per copy. Order several copies. Write Betty Crocker, Box 1450, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Betty Crocker Glorious Yellow "Chiffon" Cake

Use SOFTASILK Cake Flour—and no other . . . it permits eggs and baking powder to exert their full rising action—giving unusual lightness and volume. Large cake below makes 16 to 20 servings.

First preheat oven (pan sizes and temperatures below). Sift ample amount of Softasilk Cake Flour onto square of paper.

STEP 1

Measure (level measurements thruout) and sift together into mixing bowl. . . . . → 2¼ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack), 1½ cups sugar, 3 tsp. baking powder, 1 tsp. salt

Make a well and add in order. . . . . → ½ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola, 5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized), ¾ cup cold water, 2 tsp. vanilla, grated rind of 1 lemon (about 2 tsp.)

Beat with spoon until smooth.

STEP 2

Measure into large mixing bowl. . . . . → 1 cup egg whites (7 or 8), ½ tsp. cream of tartar

Whip until whites form very stiff peaks . . . much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. Do Not Underbeat.

STEP 3

Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended! Do Not Stir! Pour into ungreased pan immediately.

Bake in . . . 9x13x2-in. oblong pan at 350° for 45 to 50 min. . . . or until top springs back when lightly touched. This recipe may also be baked in a 10-in. tube pan, 4-in. deep, at 325° for 55 min., then at 350° for 10 to 15 min.

Immediately turn pan upside down, resting edges of oblong pan on 2 other pans, or placing tube part of tube pan over neck of funnel or bottle. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. Serve as below:

1. Plain . . . with Hawaiian Fluff Topping (recipe is in the recipe folder in the Softasilk package).
2. Fresh Orange Delight . . . Mix grated rind and orange juice; sweeten; pour over cake, garnish with orange sections.
3. Boston Cream Cake . . . Split servings crosswise into two layers. Put together with custard filling; spread thin chocolate icing over top.
4. Butter Pecan Fingers . . . Ice small rectangles of cake with butter icing on all sides. Roll in chopped nuts. Serve with cubes of flavored gelatin.
5. Mary Janes . . . Spread thick butterscotch sauce over thin strips of cake. Wrap (sauce inside) around scoops of ice cream. Serve with more sauce.

Softasilk and "Betty Crocker" are reg. trade marks of General Mills. Copr. 1948

LUNT
Sterling of Lasting Good Taste

MAKE THIS A
Sterling Christmas

LUNT STERLING...loveliest of Christmas gifts! For someone dear, or for yourself, it's a gift of real importance, one that will bring a lifetime of pleasure, pride, and usefulness. Now is the time to match, add, or start a service in one of these distinctive LUNT designs.

Lunt Silversmiths
GREENFIELD · MASSACHUSETTS

Please write for price lists and your copy of "Sterling for Gracious Living." Address Dept. L-3.

(Continued from Page 14)

think that I am going to chew through a half inch of Cherry, Cinnamon Stick, Barberry, Apple Red, Turkey Red, Raspberry, Pimento or Red Burgundy."

Mr. Ruark feels strongly about any number of modern abominations, and he finds words for them, while most of us just growl inarticulately.

"The juke box, a glittering, vulgar, electrically lit mechanical creature sired by Frankenstein's monster and mothered by a musical Medusa, is the greatest scourge to civilization since the invention of income taxes." . . . "The comic book and the radio have made men of boys and women of little girls long before they learn to spell 'puberty.' We used to entertain them with the exploits of Kit Carson and King Arthur, but now, indoctrinated in the ways of Crime-Buster, our modern small fry knows all about civic corruption, murder, robbery, arson for gain. The little red schoolhouse is a passé shack, and Santa Claus an outmoded bum—both done to death by soap opera and the singing commercial."

In fact, most writers seem to resent the new order in entertainment, fearful, no doubt, that it encroaches on their own preserves. George Kaufman, playwright, concedes that the presentation of entertainment on television may become more expert than it now is, but is sure that it can never become good enough to compete with the actual stage-and-audience show of the legitimate theater. But, he hastens to add, when the pin was invented, he was the boy who said it would never work.

• • •

Did you know—or do you care—that the original Teddy bear was an Australian koala? That the original is quite as engaging as the commercial variety, which is so named in honor of Teddy Roosevelt? It still lives high in the eucalyptus trees near Sydney; it never drinks, never perspires, has no lice, and it smells sweetly of eucalyptus oil.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

Teddy bear's prototype.

• • •

The Germans may combat communism by street fights, the English have their Hyde Park soapbox orators, and we monkey around with congressional investigating committees, but the Tibetans pray. At Lhasa, the holy Buddhist city high up in the cloud-covered Himalayas, the peaceful Buddhists, indignant over the "terrorism and treason" of the communists in China, kneel in a three-day anticommunist prayer—one hundred "living Buddhas" and three thousand student lamas, under

(Continued on Page 18)

Are You Proud of Your Curtains?

Are they smart...crisp...sheer...lovely? They most certainly will be, if they're Queentex Washable Rayon Curtains! No matter how often you wash them, they remain trim, beautiful, luxurious. They wash like a handkerchief—no starching, no stretching, no special care in ironing. You'll be proud of them for years.

Write for free Queentex Rayon Curtain Booklet now! Queen Valley Fabrics, Inc., P. O. Box 634, Pawtucket, Rhode Island. For 20 years weavers and manufacturers of rayon curtains exclusively.

Queentex

QUEENTEX® Washable RAYON CURTAINS

PermaHues Aluminum Tumblers

JUST WHAT SHE WANTED for Christmas

Make her Christmases bright . . . for many years to come. Give a set of Perma-Hues . . . 8 different lustrous sparkling colors . . . in an exquisite gift box. Your guests will admire their beauty, yet they are designed for rugged every-meal use. The colors are IN the aluminum and never tarnish. Unbreakable, tasteless and odorless.

2 SIZES: "14-Ouncer" and "Squatty", $7.95 a set (except far-West). Coasters to match, $3.95 set. In leading stores, or order direct.

J. H. CRISTIL CO.
BOX 1691 • INDIANAPOLIS 6, INDIANA

Gifts they'll use are fun to choose... exciting electric time by Telechron

$14.95

$9.95

$4.95

$5.95

$14.95

$4.95

$7.95

$7.95

$7.95

$6.95

$4.95

$7.95

$32.00

$6.95

$4.95

$19.95

$37.00

$19.95

$25.00

$5.95

$5.95

$39.95★

$9.95

All prices plus tax. Prices and specifications subject to change without notice. Telechron, Inc., Ashland, Mass. A General Electric Affiliate.

★ Includes tax. Price of Musalarm slightly higher in far west.

Telechron

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

ELECTRIC CLOCKS

COOKING WITHOUT LOOKING!

MIRRO-MATIC

...THE easy-to-use PRESSURE PAN!

MIRRO-MATIC Control signals audibly when correct pressure is reached—you can hear it! And it automatically prevents pressure from going higher than recipe requires, 5, 10, or 15 lbs.

3 DEFINITE PRESSURES for Best Results

5 lbs. for frozen vegetables, spaghetti, custards and puddings.
10 lbs. for meats, sea foods and canning.
15 lbs. for vegetables, cereals, soups and dried fruits.
MIRRO-MATIC Control is indestructible and trouble-free.

You expect quick-time cooking from your pressure pan. You know that pressure cooking—and canning, 4 pints at a time—will help save money on fuel and food. But, for full speed and greater savings the easiest way, insist on "MIRRO-MATIC."

Just see how simple it is. There are only four parts. The strong, thick pan, with its roomy, easy-closing lid. A self-sealing gasket that is easily removed to be washed. And the control you can hear . . . MIRRO-MATIC's exclusive, selective Control that automatically prevents pressure from going higher than the recipe requires, 5, 10, or 15 lbs.

See it in the stores, today. You'll understand why we say, "to take it easy—take MIRRO-MATIC!"

At department, housefurnishing, and hardware stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum. 4 qt., with rack and recipe book, $12.95 (West $13.95).

•

WESTINGHOUSE, FRIGIDAIRE, NORGE, GIBSON and ESTATE RANGES now feature MIRRO-MATIC Deep-Well Pressure Cookers

CELEBRATING OUR 50th ANNIVERSARY

MIRRO

THE FINEST ALUMINUM

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WIS.

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSILS

(Continued from Page 16)

the golden roof of the thousand-lamp lamasery.

• • •

A very good book concerned with the home is Emily Post's THE PERSONALITY OF A HOUSE. The noonday blonde, with white skin, golden hair, brilliant cream-and-coral coloring, says Mrs. Post, must assiduously avoid robin's-egg blue. The moon blonde, on the other hand, whose coloring is porcelain fine but pale, may indulge in it. The blue-eyed fair-skinned Irish type of brunette will do well in an orchid room, while the true brunette looks her best against a background of reds and yellows.

• • •

Not long ago the police in Portland, Oregon, investigating an automobile accident, found that the car involved had no license plates, no headlights, no brakes, no top and no gas line. One teen-ager drove while another sat on the front fender and fed gasoline into the carburetor through a hose.

Apropos of which there is a new book by a member of the JOURNAL staff: FUN, INCORPORATED: THE HANDBOOK FOR TEEN CENTERS, by Jeanne Lenton Tracey. It is written for teen-agers, but gives many a good hint to adults who work in community centers and are looking for the answer to potential juvenile delinquency.

• • •

THE PLAGUE AND I, by Betty MacDonald, is a cross between THE EGG AND I and THE SNAKE PIT. It is amusing but it is also factual, and gives an undoubtedly accurate account of life in a free public hospital, in this case a TB sanitarium. It is about as comparable to Thomas Mann's sanitarium novel, THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN, as a folk song is to a Bruckner symphony—and that much easier to read.

ACME NEWSPICTURES

Danny Kaye salutes Betty Mac.

If you make the first hurdle—of dipping into a book about a patient in a sanitarium—we'll wager that you will not put it down until the patient is released, as Betty eventually was. This is not fiction but actuality.

• • •

Old New Yorkers will drop a nostalgic tear over THE FAMILY ON GRAMERCY PARK, by Henry Noble MacCracken, ex-president of Vassar. It is a boy's account of 1891, the year when he was eleven. He lived with his thoroughly educated but not always

(Continued on Page 21)

Picture YOU enjoying Upper Level Cooking WITH A HARDWICK CHALLENGER AUTOMATIC GAS RANGE

UPPER LEVEL OVEN. No bending, no stooping, no peeking! Balanced heat for even baking anywhere in oven.

RITE-HITE BROILER with smokeless aluminum broiler grid glides out at a touch while you stand erect.

Mirro-Magic OVEN DOOR. Light off, it's a mirror, hides inside of oven. Light on, it's a large oven window.

• Everything handy to see and to reach. Floodlighted cooking top. Simmer-set burners, with stainless steel burner grates. Concealed drip pan. 305% more storage space for kitchen equipment. Automatic time clock (optional on deluxe models).

• The Hardwick Challenger Automatic Gas Range is sold throughout the U. S. See your gas company or write Dept. L-2 for name of your nearest dealer.

HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY
CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE
MAKERS OF FINE STOVES SINCE 1879

I'VE FOUND THE SAFE, EASY WAY TO CLEAN SINKS FAST

Bon Ami cleans without grit. No dirt-catching scratches. No hard scrubbing. No red, rough hands.

SO SPEEDY
POLISHES AS IT CLEANS

Want your kitchen sinks and bathtubs to be really bright? Really clean? Then try Bon Ami—the cleanser that's not only fast but safe. Bon Ami is so fine, so white! Contains no grit or harsh caustics. Yet it lifts off grease and grime instantly. Leaves no dulling scratches to hold onto dirt and make your cleaning harder. And Bon Ami does two jobs at the same time, because it gives a bright, lustrous polish as it cleans. Sinks and bathtubs shine like new—without extra work.

Remember, it's quicker—easier—to clean a surface that's free from dirt-catching scratches. And the sparkle lasts longer. That's why housewives who have compared results choose Bon Ami over all other cleansers. It keeps surfaces easy to clean.

FOR SPARKLING WINDOWS USE BON AMI CAKE

Cleans windows and mirrors cleaner. No oily film. No streaks. Polishes as it cleans—and cleans 10 windows for only a penny.

Bon Ami

"hasn't scratched yet!"

In as little as three minutes

Amazing PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF—LEAVES HAIR RADIANT!

Yes, your hair is Radiantly clean, Radiantly smooth every time you use this Radiant-Creme shampoo!

Procter & Gamble's Prell! Exciting new Radiant-Creme with the exclusive formula that leaves your hair more shiningly radiant than the finest soap shampoo you can buy—cream or liquid! And Prell removes unsightly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes—doctors' examinations proved it! In fact, regular Prell shampoos control such dandruff—and leave your hair radiantly clean, radiantly soft, smooth, manageable.

WONDERFUL ECONOMY!

Prell goes farther than any known shampoo—cream or liquid. Yes, you use less Prell because it's concentrated for economy. And that Prell tube is so handy—no spill or waste, no slippery bottles or jars. Get a tube of wonderful Prell today—it's the Radiant-Creme shampoo your whole family will like!

MADE BY PROCTER & GAMBLE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Flattering radiance for every shade of hair—fair, dark, auburn, or gray—from this marvelous Radiant-Creme.

Handy's the word for that Prell tube—no breakable jars or bottles, nothing to spill. It's grand to take traveling!

Hair is so clean after a Prell shampoo it "squeaks." And with Prell there's no liquid to run down and into your eyes.

VISITING NURSES... New Haven, Connecticut

Care for the Ill-at-Home

by MARGARET HICKEY

SIX million persons, the U. S. Public Health Service tells us, are sick every day in our country. Since only 20 per cent of these ailing can be cared for in hospitals, 80 per cent must remain at home. A visiting nurse can care for only six to eight patients a day, and there are 22,600 public-health nurses. Multiply 22,600 by eight, and divide into 4,800,000 (the 80 per cent of sick-at-home). And what do you get? A lot of people without nursing care.

The National Organization for Public Health Nursing recommends one public-health nurse for every 2000 people; 7000 nurses are needed immediately, and by 1960 the Department of Labor says we must have 76,700. Think it's possible?

Caring for the sick in their own homes is the oldest tradition of the nursing profession. With hospital waiting lists and overcrowded wards, people desperately need more public-health and visiting nurses.

Public-health nursing must be made more attractive to young women. For those who wish to make it a career one or two years' preparation is required, in addition to three years' training to be a registered nurse. Salaries are usually slightly higher than those received by hospital nurses. The hours of work (usually 40 to 48 per week) leave evenings and many week ends free. Salaries should be better. Staff nurses who make daily visits to the sick may receive up to $3300 a year. Top administrators get up to $9000. But only 7 per cent of all graduate nurses find their place in public-health nursing.

In an excellent report on voluntary health agencies published by the National Health Council, authors S. M. Gunn and P. S. Platt urge that existing agencies pool their efforts rather than continue to work toward the same goal by separate directions. (This report will make excellent discussion material for your club.) Other authorities recommend greater use of volunteers.

Seattle provides an excellent example of what the "marriage" of the private Visiting Nurse Association with the official municipal health department can accomplish. The city is divided into five areas, with a local supervisor in each center. These are subdivided into as many districts as there are nurses in the area. Each nurse does preventive, curative and educational nursing in her district. She works with the family as a unit. She is prepared to do anything required for nursing care on a part-time basis.

The Attic Angel Association (no doubt their visits seem heaven-sent to many a patient) in Madison, Wisconsin, has used volunteers in community nursing for years. Other towns could learn from its experience. Each year it holds a volunteer institute with a six-hour training course for probationers. The director of the V.N.A. provides the professional side, the past officers of the association doing the teaching. Last year (1947), volunteers gave 3595 hours of service. Some of the things they did? Drove mothers and children to health centers, took children to the city board of health for immunization, mended and remade worn clothing and bedding, and made new garments for babies and young children. No telling what they saved the budget in money in hospitalization and medical care.

Home nursing will always appeal to generous, intelligent women. They find satisfaction in bringing to family after family the comfort and security of scientific care for their ill in the one-room apartment, the shabby tenement or the comfortable bungalow. But it will require the combined efforts of the nursing profession, the health authorities and volunteers like you and me to bring enough nursing into more homes. THE END

TROUBLE had been dogging Jim Thorington the past year. First his wife had broken her arm. Then eleven-year-old Jill had suffered a siege of pneumonia. And now this. His pretty, high-spirited daughter Mary, just twenty, was bedridden with arthritis, certainly for months, possibly for years. The men at the mill had always said of Jim, "That guy—you can't ever get him down." But Jim, awkwardly fluffing Mary's pillows, trying to make her laugh with little jokes about his bedside care, felt sure that if he was ever to be "down," this was it.

Jim tried to face the problem squarely. Tomorrow the doctor would start Mary on gold injections. Every day someone must give her passive massage and exercise in bed. Three times a week someone must give her a bed bath and change the sheets. But who? His wife, her arm almost healed, was still nervous about using it. He himself knew nothing of bedside care, and Jill was too young. With barely enough to pay the doctor, he certainly had no money for a nurse.

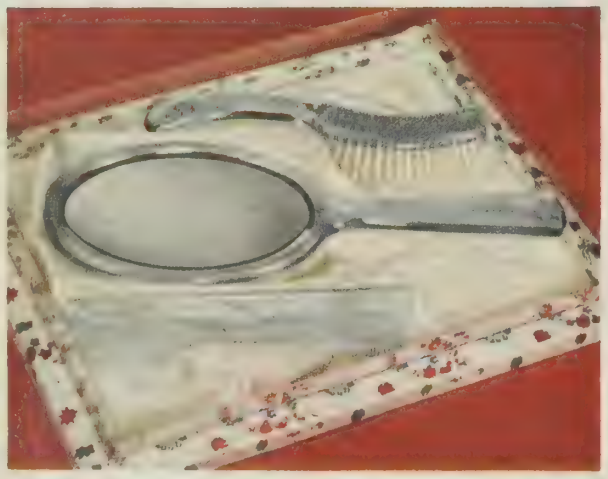
Jim was saved—saved by the New Haven Visiting Nurse Association, a non-profit, voluntary public-health nursing group which last year gave professional home treatment to 13,736 persons who otherwise would have had inadequate care, or none. Today Mary has regular visitors four times a week. On Tuesday and Thursday, Visiting Nurse Richards gives her the gold injection and a bath and exercises her arms, fingers and toes. On Monday and Wednesday, Miss Wellington, orthopedic consultant of the Crippled Children's Aid Society does the massage and has taught Mary to do her own leg exercises.

"And the other three days," Jim says proudly, "I give Mary her massage just like the nurse taught me."

New Haven today has 37 visiting nurses. Each provides an average of 140 families in her district with sickness and maternity and child-health care. Sometimes this care is routine; more often it is for serious illnesses. Sometimes the nurse continues to see a patient over a period of months; often she is able to show him and his family how to assume much of the burden themselves.

Organized in 1905 by a small group of women who volunteered time and money, the V.N.A. has become a family service for (Continued on Page 181)

PHOTO BY ESTHER BUBLEY



This young mother is learning firsthand how to bathe and care for her seven-day-old son. Visiting Nurse McLeod will keep in touch with her for several weeks.

MERRY CHRISTMAS for the heads you love!

A Christmas re-lived each day as she brings loveliness to her hair with this sumptuous Hughes DRESSER SET, Famous Nylon-bristled "Crescent" Brush in crystal, rose or blue Lucite—with dressing comb and double-faced oval mirror to match. Lavish, sateen-lined gift box. $6.50

Handsome is as he-man does . . .

and that man in your life will be proud to care for his hair with this stunning, new, dramatic Brush and Comb Set by Hughes! Boldly flashing gold or silver "nuggets" suspended in gleaming Lucite give it the perfect special Christmas touch. $5.00

• • •

WORD TO THE SHOPPING WISE: Stop at your drug or department store . . . see the terrific selection of important-looking, purse-pleasing gifts by Hughes. Tek Hughes, Inc., 500 Fifth Ave., New York.

Hughes Hair Brushes

It sure is a gift . . .

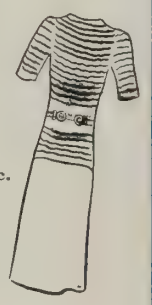
how the famous Hughes All-A-Round* Brush brings out hair beauty. "Deep-action" nylon bristles encircle the Lucite handle. In crystal, rose or blue . . . and now, new, matching brush-and-comb-cleaner $5.00 *®

REFERENCE LIBRARY

For Zero Hours

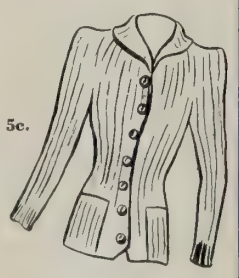
WHEN the weatherman says snow and colder, combine fashion with practicability and wear smart hand knits. They're lovely to look at and cozy to wear—and you can make them yourself with JOURNAL patterns. Others are listed on 1571, KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.

Patterns

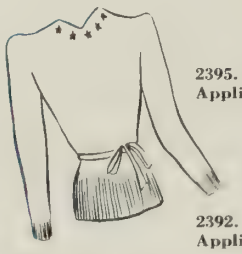


2375. KNITTED TUBE DRESS. 15c.
Made in one piece on round needle.

2409. HOOD WITH ATTACHED SCARF. 25c.
Pattern sheet includes other patterns.



2380. CROCHETED HOOD SCARF. 15c.
To be made in two contrasting colors.



2479. TWO-PIECE KNITTED DRESS. 15c.
Rib-stitch skirt, check-stitch top.

2382. KNITTED CARDIGAN. 15c.
Wear it with a belt and bright scarf.

2299. HEAVY KNITTED CARDIGAN. 5c.
Rib-stitch, roll collar, gold buttons.

2395. KNITTED SLIPOVER. 15c.
Appliqué stars around neck and cuffs.

2392. KNITTED EVENING SWEATER. 15c.
Appliqué flowers on front and back.

2437. KNITTED SWEATER AND HAT. 10c.
Ribbon is combined with knitting.

2494. SLEEVELESS PULL-OVER. 15c.
Cable-knit; to wear with blouses.

Other Features

Lists are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.
1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.
2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.
2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. REFERENCE LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.
1752. HANDICRAFT-PATTERN LIST. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Very personally yours—lever before so confident, so free from trials and sgivings. Because now, with the new Kotex, you've found failing softness. In fact . . .

Before you discovered new Kotex, you never had lown such miracle-softness that holds its shape; ves greater comfort—with safety. And, Kotex is made stay soft while you wear it!

Such self-assurance is yours, too, with those special at pressed ends that prevent revealing outlines. And r bringing you extra protection, thank that exclusive safety enter. Yes . . .

Comfort, protection, peace of mind in fullest easure reward you. Either Regular, Junior or Super otex helps you meet "those" days with a smile . . . ery personally yours.

more women choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins—*

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

MAKING MARRIAGE WORK

Here are ten reasons why a marriage can fail. Read them and see if any are threats to your own.

BY CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

CHANGES HUSBANDS WOULD MAKE

DURING the romantic interlude of courtship, love may be blind; but the mature love of marriage is not. Most husbands, including many happy ones, would change one or more traits in their wives if they could. Sometimes the flaws are minor, sometimes the fault really lies with the husband. Nevertheless, every conscientious wife does all she can to increase the happiness of her marriage. Perhaps you can do so by modifying some trait your husband finds unattractive.

Several hundred husbands, comprising a representative cross-section of married men, were asked this question: "What changes would you make in your wife, if you could?" Here are the ten changes most often mentioned. Note that they are reported separately for husbands who considered themselves happy, and for those who were unhappy.

Changes Mentioned	Happy Husbands	Unhappy Husbands	*All Husbands
Strength of sex desire	4%	43%	23%
Her temper	6	35	20
Tendency to scold	1	24	13
Capacity for showing affection	2	21	9
Lack of thriftiness	4	13	7
Carelessness of dress	3	12	6
Religious life	2	9	5
Serious-mindedness	2	7	4
Selfishness	1	7	4
Truthfulness	0	7	3

*(includes those of "average" happiness)

Strength of sex desire. In one out of four marriages in our study, the sex relationship is less than ideal, almost invariably because the wife is physically less responsive than her husband wishes. Under such circumstances, some husbands have little hesitation about turning to other women; others accept the situation, but nevertheless regret it. In either case, the wife cannot evade all responsibility. It is to her own best interest, as well as her husband's, to try to improve the situation.

Her temper. Though even the mildest individual has to blow off steam occasionally, here is a trait anybody can improve.

A tendency to scold, or nag, or whine, was punished by ducking in Puritan times. Now, as then, a wife may not realize she is a scold. Often she is an efficient housekeeper, a thrifty shopper, a shrewd manager and a perfectionist. Taking exemplary performance for granted, she complains of anything less. Her scolding spoils her family's pleasure in the smoothly running household she works so hard to achieve.

The capacity for showing affection, though related to sex, is distinct from it. A wife who loves her husband, and lets him know it, by word and deed and gesture, can largely overcome his disappointment if she lacks sex drive.

Lack of thrift is partly a matter of management, for nearly all husbands who discuss this trait wish their wives were more systematic in their handling of funds. Even in these days of inflation, the management of the family income is more important than its amount.

Carelessness of dress is easily corrected. Specifically, husbands object to negligee at breakfast, to careless grooming and to extremes in dress.

Religious life can be a source of conflict, even when no fundamental difference in faith is involved. Though a few husbands wish their wives spent less time on church activities, there are far more who wish their wives were more religious, believing that faith would help them overcome other faults.

Serious-mindedness—"too serious" or, more often, "too flighty." This difficulty usually results from a lack of understanding between husband and wife. Common goals and interests are needed. A husband rarely feels his wife is frivolous if she shares his objectives, and works toward them.

Selfishness in little things can destroy harmony; selfishness in fundamental matters can destroy a marriage.

Truthfulness. These husbands are not talking about "white lies," told to spare someone's feelings, but about serious efforts to conceal important facts. There is no place for deception in a successful marriage. Significantly, not one of the happy husbands mentions this characteristic.

Even though your husband loves you as your are, there still may be room for improvement. Ask yourself these questions:

- Is my lack of physical responsiveness likely to send my husband elsewhere?
- When I've had a bad day, do I tell my husband so calmly—or do I take it out on him in a fit of bad temper?
- Do I praise my husband more often than I criticize or scold him?
- What did I do yesterday to show him I love him?
- Am I businesslike in handling money?
- Am I as particular about my appearance as I was before marriage (making due allowance for changes in requirements and means)?
- Have my husband and I discussed our religious beliefs, and tried to work out a philosophy acceptable to both?
- Do I try to interest myself in my husband's pursuits and problems, and to interest him in mine?
- Am I thoughtful in little ways—having meals on time, keeping his clothes mended, protecting him from unwelcome social engagements?
- Do I ever, in big things or little, conceal or misrepresent the truth in order to protect myself?

Ask Yourself

ARE YOU KINDLY AND COURTEOUS?

Answer these questions with a "Yes" or "No." When uncertain, use a question mark ("I don't know").

1. Do you telephone friends before visiting them?
2. Are you gracious when admitting a mistake?
3. Do you avoid opening mail addressed to another?
4. Can you discuss a problem without raising your voice?
5. Do you get compliments on your consideration for others?
6. Are you quick to defend your friends against criticism?
7. Do you avoid sulking when your feelings are hurt?
8. Are you among the first to visit a new neighbor?
9. Do you remove your hat when attending a movie?
10. Can you discourage salesmen without being rude or impatient?
11. Do you avoid arguing with friends while in public?
12. Can you keep your temper when you are criticized?
13. Do you always keep quiet when another is telephoning?
14. Is it easy for you to introduce people without fumbling?
15. Do you always send "thank you" notes promptly?
16. Can you be courteous with a person whom you dislike?
17. At home, do you excuse yourself before leaving the table?
18. Is it easy for you to play with small children?
19. Can you conceal your feelings when you are annoyed?
20. Are you as polite to a close friend as to a stranger?

Each yes counts 2 points, each question mark 1 point. With a total score of 35 or more, you are probably regarded as a thoughtful and gracious person. An average score is 28. With a score of 25 or less, you may unwittingly alienate people whose opinion you value.

WHAT CHRISTMAS CAN MEAN

OF all the days of the year, the twenty-fifth of December is the most loved. To nearly everybody, it is a day of peace. Even in families upset by quarreling or constant tension, bitterness usually disappears and harmony is restored at Christmastime. Many homes, sometimes very unhappy, are united as Christmas approaches. New Year's resolutions usually grow out of the happiness and good will of the preceding days.

This isn't hard to understand. The essence of Christmas is unselfishness. A tired, hard-working husband, for days ahead, plans what he will give his wife. Her appreciation of the gift and the giver is more important to him right now than anything else. Even a frivolous wife, selfish and thoughtless most of the time, may find tremendous satisfaction in planning the Christmas tree and filling the stockings. And both husband and wife are drawn together as they share the children's rapturous enjoyment of the day.

Nearly everybody loves Christmas. The tinsel and sparkle, the busy rushing around, the greetings from friends old and new, all add zest and gaiety to the holiday season. Festivities and the observance of special customs are a cherished and pleasant part of Christmas. But some people miss the true meaning of the day because they overemphasize the forms without thought of their content. The most significant Christmas customs, whether simple or elaborate, are the family's own personal observances which have grown out of day-to-day love and consideration for one another.

This is the spirit which underlies the happiness of a family, not for just a day but for a lifetime. Happy homes are those where the affection and kindness, generosity and understanding of Christmas continue throughout the year. If an unhappy couple can forget their differences for a little while during this holiday, perhaps they can do it for a longer period. The magic that can accomplish this is self-forgetfulness.

Although happiness comes from within, it perpetuates itself only through bringing happiness to others. Forgetting self is the secret of contentment. The wife who forgoes a new dress so that her husband may have a sorely needed suit, the father who struggles with an outworn car so his son can start college, have Christmas always with them.

Yes, Christmas is a day of promise and of hope. It is your opportunity to renew and reaffirm your faith—in one another, in humanity, and in God.

DO YOU AGREE?

My wife insists that I am being unfair to her if I do not spend every other night with her and our small baby. Must a man give up all his freedom when he marries?

No—but neither should he expect his wife to. Arrange for her to accompany you part of the time, and keep the baby yourself so she can get out. THE END

Lotus

BY APPOINTMENT PERFUMERS TO H. M. QUEEN MARY. YARDLEY, LONDON

"Lotus" Perfume $5 to $17.50 plus tax

a sophisticated new perfume by YARDLEY

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Or how to go from dolls to dates in four easy lessons

HOW are you making out on that Christmas list this year? Got me down in big red letters under the "good-little-girl" division? Well, listen, Mr. Whiskers—you'd better! Not only have I been a good gal this year, I've been smart besides. So when it comes to dealing out the goodies, I'll settle for the usual run of things—a cashmere sweater from mother, a red-leather shoulder bag from dad and the newest thriller in the Bobbsey Twin series from Aunt Nan, who hasn't seen me since I was nine—but this year something new had better be added! I rate a real Christmas surprise and I'd like it in the large economy size, thank you, suitable for Friday-night dating. You can skip the cellophane wrappings and the bright red ribbon, but make him about three inches taller than I am, a good dancer, and just a little on the Peter Lawford side in the face department. Sound like a big order? Well, just get these credits down in your little black book, and then see what you think!

One thing I've learned since last jingle-bell season was how to be a good gal pal. Remember how much trouble I used to have with the girls at school, even with the friendly characters in my own Sub-Deb club? Well, that's all over now and I made the first changes. First I decided that hurt feelings were all for the love-schmoes, but not for me. Now, if something goes wrong, I try to figure out what and why—and then forget about it without brooding. I don't want to give you the "dear Mr. Anthony" routine on my personal problems, but, Santa, it did help when I began to realize that I couldn't be invited to every party that I couldn't have dates any time I wanted and that I couldn't be the prettiest girl in the class just because I wanted to be. Had to let the other girls have a chance too! And do you know how I put the clinch on this gal-pal business? Well, shut my mouth—you guessed it. That's just what I did. I never was a washroom Winchell, but I did do my green-eyed share of gossiping about the girls. No more backbiting, no more cat chatter for me—I even talk like a good friend these days. So chalk one up for me, Santa—that should rate a little something extra in the toe of my Argyle!

> Nobody Loves You?
>
> Having trouble with the man in your life? In between beau boys have you never had a fellow you could call your own? Don't let it get you down! If you're stumped for the right answer to your boy problem, just write to Maureen Daly, Sub-Deb Department, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Maybe we can help you find the right answer!

AND by the way, while we're patting backs, have you "looked" at me lately? My mother always told me there was nothing wrong with me that a stretch of good grooming wouldn't fix—so I tried it. I've been on a daily rub-and-scrub routine for almost a year now, and you won't catch me popping into my little white bed, come shut-eye time, without a shower, teeth brushed and a brisk session with the hairbrush and bobby pins to get coiffured just right for the morning. And though I'm still not Lanalike around the waistline, I've now got a figure neat and trim enough to rate a whistle or two around high school. Posture did part of it, a few smart exercises rearranged the grouping so that now I go in and out in just the right places, and orange juice instead of a chocolate soda for my after-school pickup at the corner Casbah helped to slow down the extra curves. Of course, "beauty is its own reward," as somebody once said to somebody, but since we're totting up "good-girl" scores for the year—how about an E for effort on that one!

WHEN it comes to men, I'm still not so smart, Santa, but for a gal who has been dating only since the Junior Prom last year—well, I'm in there trying. Take that business with David, for instance. Sure, I dated him for six weeks and even got a little starry round the eyes before I realized that he was a corny character and just not the dream stuff I was looking for. But did I give him the king-sized brush-off? Not me! I played it smart and kind. I told him one Friday night that I had a date for Saturday—but how about joining our party as beau boy for my best friend, Evelyn? Not only did those two call it love-at-first-night, they've been dating ever since, with me looking on chummily in the background—with Evie's brother, of course. So what have you got cached away in your pack for a smart Sub-Deb who learned early that a girl can have boy friends who aren't always the hearts-and-flowers kind? Don't forget to score me on the credit side for that one.

And though I don't expect my change of heart to start a national Be-Kind-to-Animals-and-Little-Sisters Week, I think I deserve credit for getting some perspective on little Annabelle. You remember, she's the seven-year-old character who claims to be my sister and then puts on a strain that even blood can't take, by using my lipstick, listening in on my phone conversations, forcing me to serve as home-front baby sitter three nights a week on a noncommission basis and making herself generally a bother. Well, Annabelle and I are very buddy-buddy these days. Maybe I should have gotten the pitch long ago from a good child-psychology book, but since my scientific reading is confined strictly to Dick Tracy and what happened to Diet Smith, I just had to figure this one out myself. Here's my theory. Little sister Annabelle just tags round after me because she is a little sister, and only seven, and because she's lonesome! She's always right there, stepping in my footprints, just about the way I'd tag around after Rita Hayworth, if she'd let me. It's a pint-sized case of hero worship, a little girl who wants to do what the big girls do! So I changed my tactics and I treat her like a big girl now, tell her where I'm going on a date and with whom, put her hair up in pin curls occasionally when I'm doing mine, let her wear my red sweater on Saturdays (well, the old one, anyway) and sort of "share" my fun when she's around. And my little-sister problem—I just don't have one now! Frankly, Santa, I don't expect orchids for that one—but if you're tucking anything sharable in my stocking, please make it two, if you can. I'm a great kid these days for divvying up with Annabelle.

So that's it, Mr. S. If he's too big to slide down the chimney, just drop him by the front door. Around eight on Christmas evening will be fine. And will I be all dressed in my party best and ready to go? You said it, Santa! I told you I'm a smart girl now.

Keep your hands evening-soft all day long!

This fabulous lotion is double-beauty magic here... as well as here...

HARD-AT-WORK and "on display," your hands lead a double life. So—pamper them with the double-beauty magic of Trushay.

Trushay, you see, is first of all a velvet-soft lotion—with a wondrous touch you've never known before. A luxury lotion for all your lotion needs. Every fragrant, peach-colored drop is so rich, your hands feel softer and smoother instantly!

Yet . . . Trushay's magic doesn't stop there. It also brings to you a fabulous "beforehand" extra!

Smoothed on your hands before doing dishes or light laundry, Trushay protects them even in hot, soapy water. Guards against drying damage. So your hands stay evening-soft . . . lovely!

Adopt Trushay's double-beauty help—begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

the lotion with the "beforehand" extra

Wonderful Pie...
Wonderful YOU

when you bake him a holiday pie like this!

A traditional mince pie, as good as you ever tasted, made with modern-day ease and convenience.

9 full ounces—ample for a big, two-crust pie

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

You and Ann Pillsbury make a great team

Pillsbury has developed a new pie crust mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

It's EASY...QUICK...with the new

Pillsbury PIE CRUST MIX

P.M.I.

If I Had a Daughter . . . I'd Tell Her This

By CONSTANCE J. FOSTER

THEY told me, the old ones did when I was young, that childbearing was a sorrow and a pain. The pain tore your body, they said, and the sorrow came when you raised your young ones and saw them turn out a disappointment to you.

Times have changed and the old wives' tales that circulated around the turn of the century have a different tempo, but they are as pernicious as ever. I heard one the other day. A middle-aged father was objecting to his son's determination to marry.

"It's not that I mind your getting married," he said. "But I don't want to see you have any children for a while. It's too risky a world to bring any more babies into. Nothing but trouble ahead for them as I see it. Things are shaping up for a fine catastrophe. If other people want to be foolish, let them. But play safe, my boy, and don't have any family."

Older people do younger ones incalculable harm by offering advice which pretends to stem from their greater wisdom, but is actually based on cynicism, pessimism and frustration. In my own youth the viewers-with-alarm were the women who felt called on to express a masculine protest against their femininity. They were the early rights-for-women fighters, and having children, to them, was too much like playing the passive feminine role against which they were mentally and emotionally revolting. To this day their daughters are confused and tormented, torn between two conflicts—careers and children. As a consequence they are our present halfhearted career women, now in their late forties, with a flock of half-rejected, half-accepted children.

Even the child psychology of the years when they were having their first babies reflected the trend of the times and was definitely sadistic toward children. Don't kiss your child—you'll give him a mother complex. Don't feed him when he's hungry—make him wait for the clock. Start toilet training when his head is still wobbly. Don't hold him or rock him—let him cry it out.

Now that sound common sense and good emotional hygiene have made today's young mother willing and ready to accept her feminine role and play it gladly, along comes this new way of sticking a monkey wrench into the machinery. The wiseacres are at it again, frightening the future mothers and fathers of the land with a very streamlined old wives' tale, as old as sin and as dangerous as the atomic bomb itself.

THE myth is especially vicious because it gathers its pretense of reliability from the field of science which modern education has taught young people to believe in and respect. Actually, however, it is based on a fear and a rejection of the life principle which science itself has always accepted as a fundamental concept, essential to survival, regardless of the threats against it from time immemorial.

Don't have children, this newest of the old wives' tales groans to us today. It's not safe. The world is too dangerous a place right now to risk bringing new life into it. Play safe. Hide. Retreat. Dig in somewhere and expect the worst. If you can keep yourself alive you'll be lucky. But don't hand on the feebly flickering torch of life to others.

I have been forty years getting over the effects of the pessimistic and untrue things that were told me about the dangers of having children. I'd hate to see today's young people as badly taken in by the present crop of tall tales. This is what I would like to tell my daughter if I had been fortunate enough to have one. This is what I shall tell my sons when they fall in love and want to be married:

Having babies is infinitely more rewarding than getting a college degree, being elected President of the United States, or making a million dollars.

If you can't have a baby of your own, don't miss out on the experience. Adopt one—the younger the better, preferably early enough to change its diapers and feed it a bottle.

There are two principles in the universe—plus and minus. Having babies around the house is on the plus side. It's like walking on the sunny side of the street. Leave the umbrellas to the timid souls. Push a pram instead. It's good exercise for your heart.

BE a believer-in-something. If you aren't, a baby will teach you. Just let him grab your finger for the first time and see what happens to you. If it makes you vow never to let him down, how do you think the powers behind the universe feel about you? Or are you conceited enough to figure that you're the only one decent enough to have a sense of responsibility for what you've created?

There's faith and healing in a baby for whatever ails you, if only in the sense of continuity it gives you. Before your child was born, you belonged merely to the past. Now you belong to the future.

Of course there will be worries. But it's like the "for better or for worse" of the marriage service. The worries are always so much better than you dared to hope and so much less worse than you feared. Wait until the doctor comes and says it isn't appendicitis, but just too many green apples, and you'll know what I mean.

There are two ways of sweetening your coffee—with sugar and with saccharin. To try to enrich your life with the substitutes for children—good times, vacation trips, money in the bank, new cars, pedigreed pets—is a synthetic sweetening that will fail to nourish you in the end.

If you try to get more out of your children than you give, you will be grievously disappointed. But if you set out to give more than you expect to get, you'll be amazed at the dividends that accrue.

Should the world blow up tomorrow, I'd still be glad I had contributed children to it. But it has gone on a good many more years than the scientists themselves can agree on, and today's fears always yield to tomorrow's courage and initiative. Who knows? Maybe your child will be the very one the universe needs to help solve its problems.

These are the things I will tell my sons and would like to tell my daughter if I had one. Life goes on. Be a part of it—not a whiner, or a grouser, or a withdrawer. Nature hasn't stopped dropping her seeds, or building her birds' nests, or foaling her young. Why should man be the only fearful one in the vast scheme of things? He really isn't that important, if he only knew it. A little more humility would serve him well.

So knit your diminutive pink wool socks and hem your bird's-eye diapers, O young ones of America! The world goes on. Go with it, not against it. For my sons' wives my dearest wish is that they may "burp" their babies over their shoulders and belong to the universe.

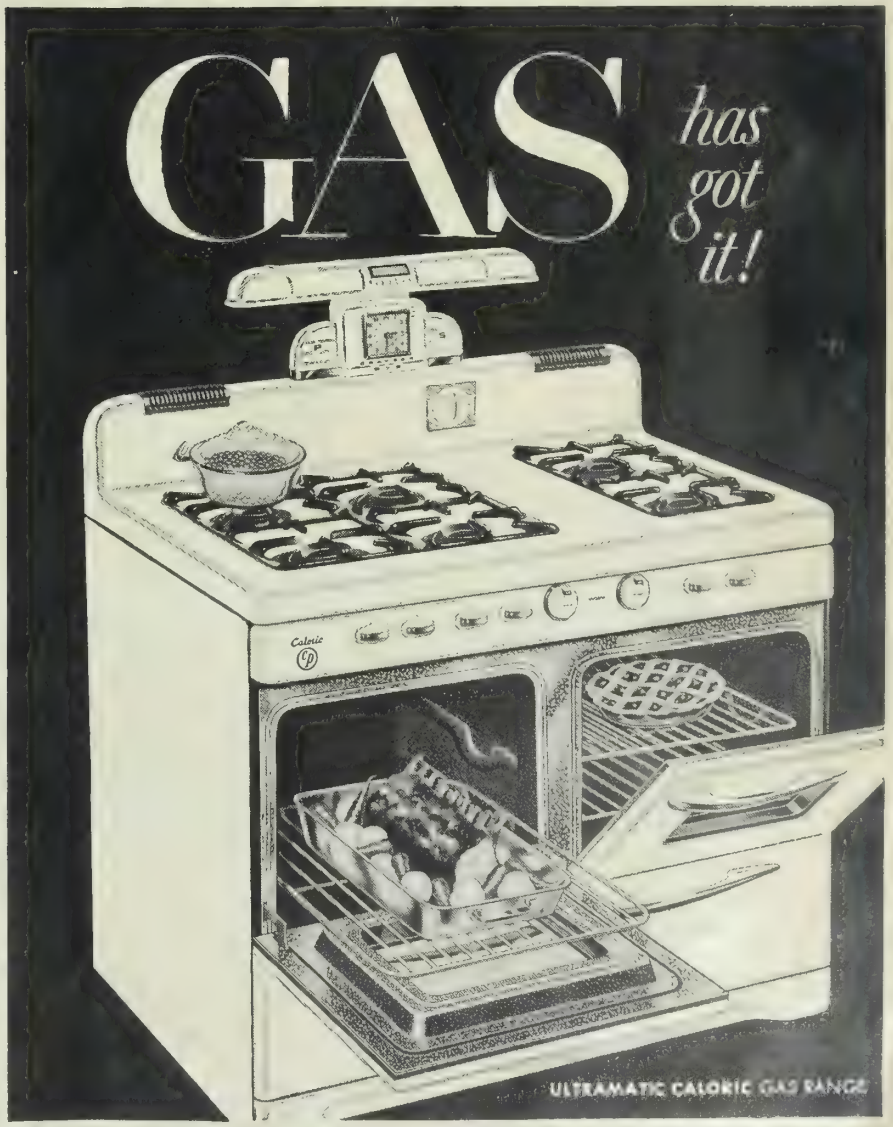
THE END

if you're pining for...

Automatic lighting
Top burners, oven, broiler—everything in new Gas ranges lights without matches.

Automatic heat control
Thermostat on air-circulated Gas oven sets and keeps any heat from 250° to 550°.

Automatic time control
Easy-to-set clock turns Gas on and off—cooks oven meal while you're busy elsewhere.



The fastest cooking
Only Gas can give you high-heat . . . slow-simmer . . . any heat you want . . . instantly!

The cleanest cooking
Smokeless broiling! New type oven vents! Non-clog burners! All Gas exclusives.

The coolest cooking
No lingering heat from Gas burners. And new Gas ranges have extra-heavy insulation!

Gas gives you everything faster, better, more economically! No wonder 95 out of 100 homes, in city after city, cook with it! Choose this CALORIC "CP" Gas range, or any of the other "makes" built to "CP" standards, now at your Gas company or appliance store. Then for the next work-saving step in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen,"* be sure to get a Servel Gas refrigerator. It stays silent . . . lasts longer!

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

*CERT. MARK, AMERICAN GAS ASSOC., INC.

Every time you wash a dish

Dreft

helps protect your family's health

as no suds ever could before!

Public Health authorities say new way of dishwashing reduces colds, flu, infectious sickness!

Perhaps you didn't know that danger lurks in your dishpan. But it's there! Glasses or dishes may actually carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

This is a proved fact. For doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film. Even dishes that you've scrubbed hard, and polished carefully . . . dishes that really look clean . . . often carry this germ-breeding film.

Dreft Ends Germ-Breeding Film

With this amazing dishwashing discovery—DREFT—you can wash your dishes in a way that puts an end to dishwater film... that actually helps protect your family's health.

And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New, Quick, Dreft Way

Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant lasting suds.* Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy and quick as that!

Dreft suds leave dishes shining bright . . . even without wiping. Healthfully clean . . . film free—as no suds before Dreft ever got them!

So heed the warning of Public Health authorities . . . help protect your family's health. Buy Dreft today.

*Dreft makes more suds... kind-to-hand suds... than any product before in history... no matter how hard the water.

® A HYMOSOL PRODUCT

Dreft washes dishes so clean they shine even without wiping

Point of no Return

Was marriage, like first love, to be a luxury he couldn't quite afford?

Beginning a new serial

By John P. Marquand

CHARLES GRAY had not thought for a long time, consciously at least, about Clyde, Massachusetts, and he sometimes wondered later what caused him to do so one morning in mid-April, 1947. It was a mental accident that reminded him of certain passages on telepathy in Man, the Unknown, the book by Alexis Carrel which everyone had been reading before the war. For a month Charles had read snatches of Man, the Unknown each morning on the train, after finishing the headlines and the financial page of The New York Times. In fact, he had done this while going through one of those self-improving phases that sometimes still infected him—although he had begun to doubt, even before the war, that you could materially better your general cultural deficiencies by thirty minutes' reading every day. Still he had those hopeful moods occasionally. When he looked at the sets of Conrad and Kipling around the fireplace of the knotty-pine library and at those newer books that Nancy kept buying and at the older ones of his father's that had come from Clyde, he could still feel that he, too, might become familiar with the world's great classics, provided he could get things sufficiently straightened out at home so that he could have a moment by himself without Nancy's coming in to take up some problem or without Bill's interrupting with his algebra. At least he had not yet lost his old desire to read, though Nancy said he had. He had read Man, the Unknown all the way through, sometime around 1934, and now in 1947 he could still remember that it had something in it about telepathy.

In Charles' own experience when something was about to happen to you, particularly anything rather unpleasant, something gave you a vague sort of preview of what was coming. At any rate, he did not feel the way he should have felt that morning. When Nancy woke him up, he had a slight headache—nothing that would not pass, however, when he had some coffee.

"Are you awake now?" Nancy asked.

"Yes," he answered, "naturally I'm awake. It's a terrible morning, isn't it?"

"If you'd only remember," Nancy said, "not to take anything to drink after dinner."

It always annoyed him when Nancy got on the subject of alcohol, because she invariably made it seem as though alcohol were a problem. She was always saying to people that she and Charles, when they were just quietly at home, enjoyed each other's company so much that they did not need a cocktail—which sounded well enough but was not strictly true, particularly when Nancy got started on the household bills.

"I hate sitting around with a lot of people," he said, "just talking after dinner. I can't take four hours of steady conversation after I've been talking all day."

"Now, darling, who was it who wanted to go to the Cliffords'?"

"All right, who was it?"

"I told you," Nancy said, "that we didn't have to go to the Cliffords'. They had us in January and we had them and everything was square and now we'll have to have them again."

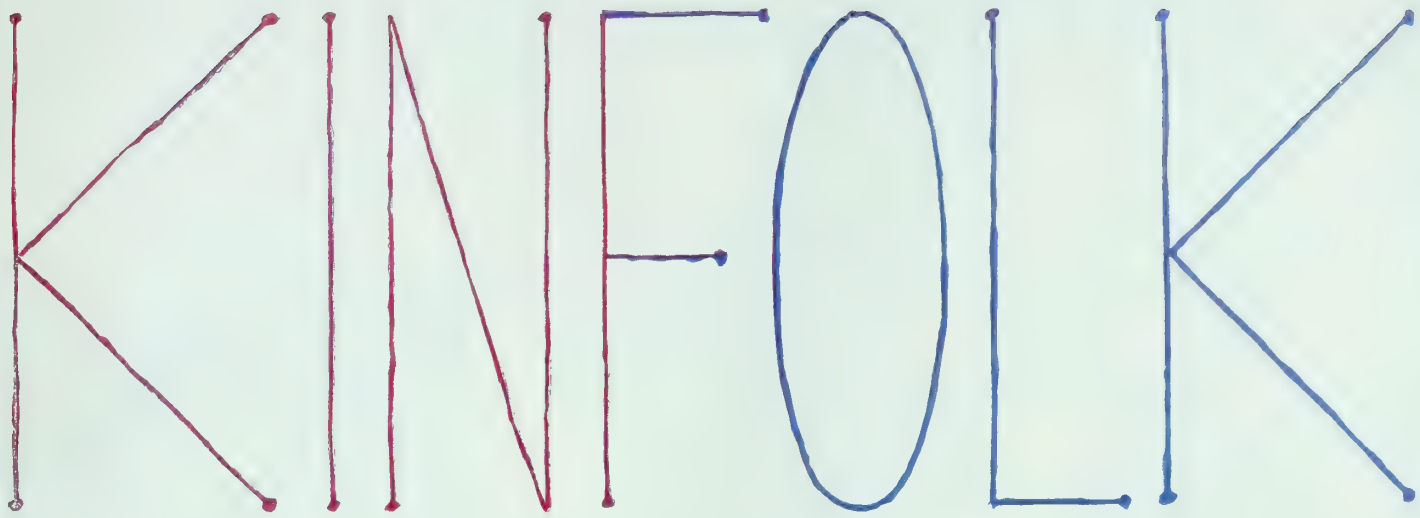
"Well, we don't have to have them right away," Charles said. "Let's try not to think about it now. She's the one who gets me down. You know, when I see the whole picture I can't help feeling sorry for Bradley Clifford."

"Everybody's always sorry for him. I wish you'd start feeling sorry for yourself."

"I do," Charles said, "right at this moment."

"And I wish you'd feel sorry for me."

"I do. I do feel sorry for you and for everybody else in the world. That's the way I feel, at the moment."



"Darling, don't be so broad-minded. You'll make me cry." (Continued on Page 113)

Copyright, 1947, 1948, by John P. Marquand

ILLUSTRATED BY ALEX ROSS

"When I get to our village," Mary mused, "I shall make a bathhouse first of all for the women."

BY PEARL S. BUCK

LIKE chips from the wood carver's knife, the family of Dr. Liang Wen Hua had fallen into confusion and disorder. Within a year, Liang, a distinguished Chinese scholar living in New York, had seen these events occur:

Against his will, his elder son, James, had returned to China to be a surgeon in a Peking hospital—even though it meant severing all ties with the beautiful but selfish Lili Li. Then his younger daughter, Louise, had rashly fallen in love with Philip Morgan, an American who refused to marry her.

Because, to Liang, Louise has dishonored his ancestors, he sends her and his other two children, Mary and Peter, to live abroad with James in a strange, walled house—a house that also shelters an intense young boarder named Dr. Liu Chen.

At dinner one day, the children read a letter from their mother, saying she fears Liang is about to take a concubine. Actually, this is not true, but he is drifting toward Violet Sung. Although this mysterious Eurasian is the mistress of an Englishman, Ranald Grahame, she begins to see in Liang the delicacy of mind that for her must spell fulfillment.

III

THE whole thing began at the chrysanthemum market on that bright autumn day. With some delay they had gone on with their afternoon's jaunt. Indeed, they were the more impatient to get out of the house and into a change of scene, because they felt helpless.

They all agreed afterward that there was something peculiar about the day. The air was so still and clear as to seem almost solid. People were magnified by it, faces were sculptured, eyes bright. Especially beautiful were the faces of old people, for every line seemed drawn with meaning.

When James led his brother and sisters and Chen to the great square which was the market place, the scene struck him with all the force of a magnificent stage. An old palace stood in the background, its heavy roof of blue porcelain tiles reared against the clear sky. Maple trees had been planted on either side of it, centuries ago, and these were gold and red with autumn.

The whole center of the court was filled with the chrysanthemums which venders had brought to be sold. They stood in plots, hundreds together, and each owner with his wife or son watched over his own. Between the plots the people walked, exclaiming and praising until they saw one bloom irresistibly beautiful, when reluctantly they felt themselves compelled to buy. Rich and poor were here together, for all alike revered these flowers, imperial in their size and hues. Yet here, as everywhere, the poor far outnumbered the rich. They were unable to buy any flowers, and even when one by some ill chance was broken off, these poor did not dare to pick it up.

Mary stopped and gazed at a small group of common-looking men, with their wives and children, who were staring with wide eyes at the purchase being made by an old lady in satin robes. A child touched a flower and his father reproved him in a low voice. "Eh, do not touch, little heart. One flower would take a seven days' wage."

"I can't bear it," Mary said suddenly.

James looked down at her and saw tears flooding into her eyes. "You can't change what has been going on so long, Mary," he told her. He, too, had felt very often this catch of the heart, this sense of shame, before the poor here in his own land. Yet what could any of them do?

They walked away beyond the square, apart from the others. "I am not satisfied, Jim," Mary said. "I want to go farther into the country. We're still on the surface here."

He knew what she meant, but he did not answer her quickly. In his own way he had been thinking and feeling deep under the surface of his daily life. Peking was a pleasant backwater, a charming, ancient pool. But one could live here and even do some good work and yet never reach the roots and sources.

"I'd like to go back to our village," Mary said. "Let's ask for a week away and see where we came from. Then I think I shall know what I want. Maybe you will too. As we are now, we are almost as far from our people as we would have been in New York."

James felt that with her usual directness Mary had chosen the next step. "I think it a good idea," he told her. "Let's keep it in our heads for a few days and see if it holds. And now we must go to Louise. Do you see that she is talking to an American soldier?" So indeed it was. Louise, wandering alone, had attracted the eyes of a fair-haired young man in uniform. He had drawn gradually nearer to her as she paused to admire a pale lavender flower, huge in its size, and with petals curled loosely inward.

"Do you like this one best?" he had asked boldly.

She answered in English. "It's nice."

He moved to her side. "I'm in luck—you speak English. But somehow I knew you did."

(Continued on Page 64)

★ Copyright, 1948, by Pearl S. Buck ★

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

The Gift That Mattered

BY JOSEPH AND ADELINE MARX

JONNO had not meant to mention it to Agnes again, but as he woke up it slipped out, through his sleepiness. He said, "Has he come yet?"

Agnes was standing by his bureau, taking out the clothes he was to wear that day. She said, without turning around, "Has who come yet?"

"My dog."

"Dog, indeed," Agnes said, and closed the bureau drawer with a snap. And that was even less than she had said last night, when he had first dared to mention the dog to her. She had looked surprised, and then annoyed, and then she had sniffed and said it was mighty funny, people thinking about bringing a dog into the house and not telling her about it.

He knew he was going to get it, though. Today was the day before Christmas, and tomorrow morning, surely, as soon as he woke up, his puppy would be there. Just because his father and mother had forgotten to mention it, it didn't mean they had forgotten all about it. They had promised him a puppy; of course he was going to get it. It was only a question of waiting till tomorrow; of getting through this day.

The dog had to be his... it was all the Christmas he wanted!

It was a long morning to get through. There didn't seem to be anything in particular to do, though everybody else in the house was busy—everybody except his father and mother, who were still asleep. The Christmas tree was already trimmed; Agnes and Daniel, the butler, had trimmed it the day before because his mother had said she wanted it to look festive for the dinner party she was giving. It was a beautiful tree, with an amazing number of lights. He spent a long time counting the bulbs, getting a different total each time. It would have been easier to count them if they had been lighted, but he was not allowed to turn them on. He asked Agnes to do it, but she only said, "What do you want to do, burn them out before it's even Christmas?"

The way he felt right then, it didn't seem as though it ever would be Christmas.

He put on his snow suit and went out in the yard to swing, but swinging got tiresome even faster than it usually did.

After a while he went, as he often did, to stand at the gate and watch the people going by. Several of them, as they went, smiled at him and said hello, and even added, "Merry Christmas." But Agnes had told him never to speak to strangers, because it might be somebody who wanted to kidnap him, and so he could not answer them. And besides, the words just did not seem to come. They were all hurrying, anyway; many of them carried packages, and several cars went by with Christmas trees tied on the running boards. Everybody had a lot to do, except him, and all he had to do was wait.

Tomorrow morning, though, it would be different. Tomorrow when he came out his dog would come with him, and he would start in right away teaching him tricks. He could teach him how to bring back a stick, and sit up and beg, and how to jump through a hoop—there was no end to the things you could do with a dog. And when the people going by spoke to him, he could answer; you didn't have to worry about kidnapers if you had a dog with you. And they would ask him the dog's name, and he would tell them. There'd be a lot to talk about, if you had a dog.

And, of course, he was going to get the dog. Just because Agnes didn't know about it ——

He turned away from the gate and wandered back toward the house, looking up at the shuttered windows of his (Continued on Page 77)

ILLUSTRATED BY

IF YOU ASK ME

By Eleanor Roosevelt

You described Russia in the Ladies' Home Journal as the virile adolescent among nations, hence difficult to deal with, and said that we must show patience and wisdom. Having a teen-age daughter, I know what you meant. Now the Russians talk and act as if they won the whole war singlehanded. How far should adolescents be allowed to boast and brag and take all the credit?

I think it is very good for adolescents to be told the exact truth, whether they are our own youngsters or whether they are a country like the U.S.S.R. People who brag know when they are bragging, and the U.S.S.R. knows quite well that singlehanded she could not have won the war. Just as youngsters need a firm hand, I rather think the U.S.S.R. needs a firm hand, but a just one.

I was disappointed in your answer to the lady who asked you to name ten books which one should read in order to be well educated. Those of us who married young and have spent our time cooking, cleaning and patching for a family are at a loss to know at this late date what to read to become more nearly on a mental level with our friends. We don't want to be quite so humble as to ask their opinion and create the very attitude we are aiming to prevent. It seems to me that there are some books without which one is not educated at all. One, of course, is the Bible. Can you tell me any others?

I can give you a list of books to read, but when you have read them, you will not be educated. All that a list may do, if you read the books, is to whet your curiosity and start you reading more. If that happens, it will have served a purpose and you will be on your way to an education. Most of us feel we never are educated, we are just acquiring a little more knowledge all our lives.

I do not know what you read as a child. If you have never read Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, I suggest you do so and then pick out one or two plays of Shakespeare and read them. If you have never read any of the classics, I would read one or two of the old Greek plays like Oedipus in a good translation, and perhaps you might read Plato's Republic. In the field of fiction I think you could read two of Thackeray—Vanity Fair and Henry Esmond; two of Dickens—David Copperfield and Oliver Twist; two of Scott, though you might want to skip some of the long descriptions, which most of us did as children, and I would choose, I think, Ivanhoe and The Talisman. This may lead to your reading many more by these same authors.

If you are interested in history, it is a good thing to read biographies and also historical novels which are based on fact. I cannot name for you all the people, but some of the more recent biographers are Carl Sandburg, Claude Bowers, Arthur Schlesinger. Carl Carmer has written several interesting historical novels. There are also many good translations of foreign writers, and among the great novels of the world are War and Peace and Anna Karenina, by Tolstoy. I happen to like the French author Anatole France's books, but I don't know whether there are good translations. There are, of course, German writers that one should know, in the translations if not in the original, particularly some of the poets like Goethe and Heine. Everyone should read Dante's Inferno. In the Home Book of Verse you will find that you have many poems by different authors chosen by a gentleman who selected very well, and this may lead you to get full volumes of poems by the authors you like.

One could go on giving a list of books which would keep you busy, but what I have given you here, I hope, will prick your curiosity and start you off on a search of your own.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the Ladies Home Journal. It cannot be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's views are right, and not open to question, and are not necessarily the views of the Editors of the Journal.

What is your opinion of the idea of teaching religion in the public schools?

I do not think that religion can properly be taught in public schools. We decided long ago to separate church and state. The public schools, being financed and run by the states, should not teach religion to children. That should be the responsibility of the home and the church primarily, though it may be possible in certain cases to work out some form of spiritual expression which is acceptable to all the children in a school. I feel, however, this should never be forced upon any of them.

What is the reason men of the North seemingly show lack of respect for women? Men do not tip their hats to women whom they meet on the street, neither do they rise from their seats when women come into the room. Southern men are more courteous. Why are Northern men not so?

You surprise me in your estimate of men in the North. I have never had a man greet me in the street without raising his hat, nor do I find that they do not get up when a lady comes into the room. In informal gatherings when people are coming and going all the time, it might happen that a man did not notice that a woman had entered or left; but on any formal occasion, I have never known a man to remain seated.

On streetcars and busses, since women have begun to work under much the same conditions as men, I think the men feel that the women want to be treated in exactly the same way and there is no longer the feeling that they must treat them as though they were meeting on a social basis. Of course, I realize that there are young people who are not trained at home to have good manners and who may not be taught to raise their hats to ladies, or to get up when a woman comes into the room, and our schools do not teach manners as a rule; but it takes a very short period of contact with good manners to bring about a knowledge and understanding of the things which are expected of well-brought-up people. I have always found that the people of this country learn quickly.

Southern men, of course, have a tradition of chivalry toward women. Many of my forebears came from the South, as well as the many who came from the North, but as I go back through the family history, I find that, on the whole, the Southern men did not treat their women any better than the Northerners, and so while there may be more of a veneer attached to Southern manners, I think the basic kindliness which is the root of all good manners exists both in the North and in the South.

I am seventeen years old and my problem is that I live with my grandmother, who disapproves of my going with boys. The girls I chum with notice this, but I always say I don't care to go out with boys. What should I do? How can I show my grandmother that I can be trusted and that, like other girls of my own age, I enjoy going out with boys?

Talk the situation over with your grandmother. She is probably anxious to keep you from temptation, and conscious of the fact that you may not perhaps feel free to come and tell her how you feel and what you are thinking about, because there is a great difference in age between you. If she knows that you are telling her all about what happens and that you will talk over any problems that occur and that you will not do anything without talking it over with her first, I think you will find that she is quite willing that you should have the normal relationships that should exist among young people.

I have often heard it said that behind every great man is a great mother or wife. I am wondering to what extent that was true of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. Did he have an inborn ambition to become the great leader he was, or to what extent were his aspirations nurtured and inspired by his mother and by yourself?

I think his mother had a great influence upon my husband, but his father's influence was very marked also. They did not specifically train him in leadership, but they gave him an all-around education and a great deal of general knowledge. His father gave him a sense of responsibility about the place in which he lived, the people in the neighborhood, the land, the stock and the employees with whom he worked.

His mother and her family had traveled a great deal, too, and had been in many parts of the world, and she stimulated him to interests in other countries. As far as I am concerned, I learned a great deal from my husband. I doubt if my influence was very important, except that I had a tremendous interest in certain concepts of social justice and I think our mutual play on each other was valuable in keeping before him the ideals which he held and which might have been obscured by his surroundings at certain times in his life.

I am a frightened and bewildered mother. Frightened because the radio and newspapers give us nothing to look forward to but atomic warfare. I cannot understand why this nation, founded by men fleeing from a government they thought wrong, can tell other countries what kind of government to set up. Isn't keeping communism from spreading in this country a big enough fight?

I think it would be well for all of us to stop talking about keeping communism from spreading and talk about making democracy a success. If it is going to succeed, your part in its success will be in making your own surroundings thoroughly successful in the use of the democratic processes, both in everyday living and in the political and economic life of your environment. If enough people do this, the success of democracy will be self-evident.

We must bend every effort to create a successful democracy here, because we believe people have greater control themselves politically under a democratic system, and we are convinced that from the economic standpoint a capitalistic system with proper democratic controls can give people more opportunity and greater satisfaction than can a communist system.

REPRODUCED COURTESY CHESTER DALE COLLECTION, NATIONAL GALLERY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Mother and Sister of the Artist, by Berthe Morisot

Biographical sketch of Berthe Morisot appears on Page 72

Letters

In June, 1905, Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt sailed for Europe. Jointly, to his mother, they pictured their escapades on the Continent, the people they met, the things they bought, their enthusiasm and their happiness.

NSTER
ight-seeing was done casually, with Münster Cathedral aking little of their time.

"Franklin's furs," of finest mink, add the finishing splendor to the young bride's Paris gown.

RIS
awed by the interior of a famous dress shop, nklin dozed peacefully while his wife bought dozen or so new dresses."

PARIS
A fortuneteller peered into their future. "You will be President of the United States," she told the bridegroom.

From Our Honeymoon

By ELEANOR and FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Two young people in love—destined with the passing years to become America's most famous couple.

IN order to finish the spring term at Columbia Law School, Franklin Roosevelt and his young bride postponed their honeymoon trip for several months. Early in June, 1905, the young couple sailed for Europe and in the morning of the second day at sea commenced to inform his mother of their whereabouts and daily activities. Marriage did not sever the close tie between mother and son. Nevertheless, the tie was altered somewhat, now there were two persons who addressed Sara Roosevelt as "Mama." Jointly they pictured for Sara Roosevelt their escapades on the continent of Europe, the people they met, the things they bought, their happiness and enthusiasm. Following are excerpts from the honeymoon letters of two young people, in love, who were destined to become America's most famous couple. ED.

S. S. OCEANIC, JUNE 7, 1905

Dearest Mama: I am all unpacked and settled and F. is now getting his things in order. Thank you so much, dear, for everything you did for us. You are always just the sweetest, dearest Mama to your children and I shall look forward to our next long evening together, when I shall want to be kissed all the time!

So far we have seen nothing of our fellow passengers, but Franklin will tell you about them the end of the trip when I won't be able to write!

Ever and ever so much love my dearest Mummy from your devoted ELEANOR

"When I won't be able to write" refers to A.E.R.'s (Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, hereafter designated by her initials) fear of seasickness, an ailment that has always plagued her.

POSTED AT QUEENSTOWN, R.M.S. OCEANIC
JUNE 11, 1905

Dearest Mama: So far we have had an almost perfect crossing. Eleanor has been a wonderful sailor and hasn't missed a single meal or lost any either.

Our fruit is delicious, but it is a case of "embrasse de riches" as we got six baskets of goodies, and are trying to do our duty to them even at the expense of chronic dyspepsia.

We expect to reach Queenstown tonight and Liverpool by 1 o'clock tomorrow, and shall see the Bullochs and Maxwells and take the 5 P.M. train to London, going straight to Brown's, where we hope to be welcomed by Aunt Kassie, P.C. and Muriel.

Loads of love from us both.

Ever your affectionate F.D.R.

"Aunt Kassie" was F.D.R.'s maternal aunt, Katharine Delano, whose first husband, Charles A. Robbins, had died in 1889. In 1893 she married Hiram Price Collier, whom F.D.R. refers to as "P.C." "Muriel" was Muriel Delano Robbins, Aunt Kassie's daughter by her first marriage; she married Cyril Martineau and lives in London.

BROWN'S HOTEL, LONDON. W.
(DOVER ST & ALBEMARLE ST)

JUNE 16, 1905

Dearest Mama: I will go back to tell you what your infants have (Continued on Page 95)

Copyright 1948 by Elliott Roosevelt. This is an excerpt from the book published by Duell, Sloan & Pearce, Inc., under the title F.D.R.—His Personal Letters: Volume II, 1905-1928.

Sedate in traveling clothes, and with piled-up luggage, Eleanor and Franklin wait to board their train.

AUGSBURG

Searching for old books, German beer and antique shops was among the pleasant ways the Roosevelts spent their time in Germany.

Security

How long can lovers wait for the moment which should be NOW?

By ALEC RACKOWE

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

IT was just five-thirty when Ed Carlin finished the brake job on Doctor Mostyn's convertible. He got the grease off his hands, though he would have to do a more complete job later on, shucked the grimy coveralls and got into a clean wrapper with "Froelick's" in red cotton on the back.

John Froelick was ringing up a gas sale at the register in the little office. He was six-one and broad all the way through. He had iron-gray hair, though he was still this side of forty, and serious brown eyes.

Ed gave John the work sheet. "I'm going to try her out," he said. He stood a good four inches shorter than John. With his wavy blond hair and fair skin he looked younger even than his twenty-two years.

John nodded. "You take her over? Doc wants the car tonight."

Ed hesitated. He said at last, "All right, Sarge, but I've got to be out of here by six-thirty."

"Big date?" John asked and Ed said, not smiling, "Big."

He hooked the three-wheeled motorcycle to the rear bumper of the convertible and spread a pad on the rayon seat cover before he climbed in and got behind the wheel. The service station was at the end of Maple Street where it ran into the state road between Fall City and Carlisle. It stood clean and bright in the early-November air, and the little cottage behind, that some previous owner had built as the first of a projected series of overnight cabins, looked snug and warm.

It was. Ed thought of that as he sent the big car up the state road, gave a flicking glance in the rear-view mirror to (Continued on Page 192)

She said brokenly, "I don't want to wait."
Her eyes were closed, the lashes sooty against her skin.

UNITED STATES: In the spacious Presbyterian church of Glidden, Iowa, the Pratt family sing the closing hymn. Their minister is a firm internationalist, who on this occasion preached a sermon calling for good will toward the oppressed peoples of Europe.

GERMANY: The Stieglitzes adhere to the strict faith of German Protestantism. This is the church in which they were married in the village of Wollau fifteen years ago. At Christmas they will sing the hymn heard round the world: Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht.

ITALY: Four young Guercinis kneel at High Mass in the twelfth-century church which rises above the hilltop village of Montefioralle. Women and children go faithfully, but male attendance has slipped. The village priest blames "modern ideas" (meaning Communism).

FRANCE: In Sunday best, the Redouins attend Mass in the ancient church of the village of St. Bohar. Their own village is Fossés, but owing to the shortage of priests the two churches alternate services, every other Sunday. The Redouins contribute a thousand francs to the church each year.

EGYPT: Mrs. el Gamel never a tends the mosque with her hu band, and proper Moslem wom do not show their faces pu

THIS IS THE WAY

THE people on these pages are indeed people. But, being people, they do not know all the answers. So each in his own way seeks his peace with himself, with his fellow man, and with eternity.

The Pratts of Glidden, Iowa, are Presbyterians, although Mr. Pratt was born a Methodist. The Hiatts of Hook Norton, Oxfordshire, are High Church Anglicans. The Guercinis of Tuscany practice the Catholic faith of their Roman forebears; the Redouins of France and the Gonzalezes of Mexico are Catholics also. The Stieglitzes of Germany follow in the footsteps of Protestant Martin Luther. In Egypt the el Gamels hearken to the words of the prophet Mohammed. In Japan and China the Okamotos and Hos bow quietly to Buddha. In mid-Africa the Zamba Alumas are mission Christians. And in their Slovakian village, the Baloghs walk each week toward the Byzantine spire which marks their church as Greek Orthodox.

Faith finds its common expression in prayer. On Egyptian Fridays you will find Hag Zaki el Gamel and his sons in the mosque, bowing toward Mecca in submission to the will of Allah. On the hard pews of the sixteenth-century Hook Norton church, EQUATORIAL AFRICA: The mission church at Lujulu, close to the Congo border, is packed each Sunday with tribesmen from the vicinity. Sermons are in three languages: Bangala, Kakwa, Kaliko. Hymns are sung with fervent rhythm. Sexes are segregated; small children sit with their mothers.

JAPAN: There are no regular services in the Buddhist church and people worship as they wish. Here the Okamoto family pray

This is the scene on Fri-when men and boys (over kneel on rush prayer and pray toward Mecca.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: The Baloghs belong to the traditional Greek Orthodox Church of most Slavic peoples. Joseph and Anna Balogh sit in the first pew, their children behind. The Greek Orthodox Church calendar is slightly different from that of western Christianity; festivals are gaily celebrated.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

THE WORLD WORSHIPS

the Hiatts read the Book of Common Prayer. Across the world, Ho Fu-yuan pauses in the rice fields to pray for the souls of his illustrious ancestors. And in the Presbyterian church in Glidden, the Pratts pray in unison with the congregation to "Our Father which art in heaven." Around the world, faces are earnest with humility.

The mission church in Lujulu, in the heart of Africa, is so popular that the congregation overflows onto the grass outside. But in other parts of the world church attendance has slipped. Ho Fu-yuan considers himself a good Buddhist, but seldom goes to temple. Grandmother Guercini and the girls attend Mass faithfully, but the men are lax. The Hiatts, tied to the farm by animals and children, get to church only on Easter, Christmas and Harvest Thanksgiving. And in Germany, the Stieglitzes' church services were interrupted while the local minister was a prisoner of war.

Neither the knowledge of Science nor the ignorance of Superstition has provided the answers to the eternal mysteries of the universe. Invoking their separate gods, these twelve families seek understanding through faith, and in Religion find a common creed: Love, and the international expression of Love: Peace.

e Buddhist temple in Shi-
. They also have family rs to the spirits of their an-rs each morning at home.

MEXICO: Serapes over their shoulders, Luis and Pablo Gonzalez wait for communion with their parents. Little Rubin Gonzalez peeps from the side and baby Maria is held by her father. In Mexico the long, hard battle between church and state has settled into acquiescence on both sides.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

CHINA: Bowing before the grave of his father, Ho Fu-yuan and his sons pause in a typically Chinese gesture of reverence for ancestors. Though avowed Buddhists, the Hos' religion is blended with superstition; each morning incense is lighted to the Kitchen God.

PAKISTAN: In the mosque, Mohammed Usman, himself named for the prophet of Islam, bows low toward Mecca. Like many of his impoverished neighbors, Mr. Usman is not particularly devout, and attends mosque faithfully only during the Moslem month of Ramadan.

ENGLAND: The Hiatt family (except for Joan, who is too small to go) stand up front in the nave of the Hook Norton church. Mr. Hiatt's mother, a regular churchgoer, frowns on the "Easter-only" churchgoing habits of the Hiatts, but their farm chores tie them down.

She whispered to herself the six magic words and waited for them to cast their spell.

The Incantation

When the moment comes that luck takes over, sit tight and maybe THIS will happen to you too. ★ By Marjorie Carter CHANCES are, when anybody says "incantation," you think of abracadabra, or open sesame, or one of those old, solid numbers. They were all right too. Did good work, in their time. But for smooth pickup, quick getaway when the lights change, nice handling in heavy traffic—oh, we were speaking about incantations? Well, come back and check on this when you have finished the piece!—for those things, it would be hard to beat a simple little six-word item Gail Thompson learned, in the most casual way imaginable, one rainy November morning. And work? Say, it worked like a charm!

(The only reason I bring this up at all is to warn you against it. It can be hard to handle, so take my advice and don't monkey with it.)

Gail? Oh, she was very nice, if you happen to like them small, slim, blond and with brown eyes. Her trouble was reconversion. She was especially good when the summer sun turned her a honey tan, and she wore one of those gasp-and-look-again bathing suits. This costume is seldom worn by a file clerk in November.

Gail was leaning against a file cabinet there in the outer office of Caruthers, Burt, Barton and Pruett, with a handful of papers in case Miss Moran, her boss, or Mr. Pruett, everybody's boss, happened to heave into view. She had a face about four feet long. She was staring absently at the rain sluicing down, and telling herself bitterly how lucky she was.

Lucky, lucky Gail! She had a good job, a nice apartment which she shared with her mother and her older sister, who also had good jobs. They all looked nice whenever they went anyplace together—and whenever they went anyplace, it was together. They just did not seem to meet interesting men. Mom felt pretty relaxed about it, but sis kept putting those advertisements in the Personal column of the Saturday Review. Gail sighed.

Her disillusioned brown eyes left the windows and moved slowly over the serried rows of desks in the big office. Her mind's eye went even farther, into the small cubicles where the Medium (Continued on Page 164)

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

HINING AND SHORT hair waves away from smooth bangs to a cluster of curls in back. Combs and a ribbon hold curls in place. (Glistening locks, courtesy regular shampooing!)

CRISP VEILING. Shape ⅓ yard veiling to fit back of head and attach beribboned bicycle clip. Add own flower

EVENING CHIGNON. 1½ yards of 15" veiling ties around a chignon and ends in a wide bow.

HEAD START... for the holidays and New Year

SOFT WAVES begin from a center part which goes down the back of the

A BANDEAU of folded veiling (or wide silk ribbon) goes over the head and pins in place over each ear. Allow two inches on each side for crisp, perky ends.

…NING AND SIMPLE for an elegant touch. Center part, wide …ie waves. Ends are looped up and pinned in knot effect in back.

HOLIDAY HAIR-DO'S take to flowers for evening. Front hair combs into bangs from a side part—the rest of the hair brushes into back curls.

… AND BRUSHED away from face, the short hair-do takes on a new look …w new year. Hair is cut 2½ to 3 inches all over the head. Easy and versatile.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

FOR ANY LENGTH of hair 1 yard of 15" veiling goes over the head …

…oose from these nine new hair arrangements the one that will turn you …o the prettiest girl at the holiday parties . . . and give you a brand-new …ok for 1949! THE FUTURE for short hair is a gentle winging away from …e face to a fetching back interest. THE FASHION for long hair lies in …e silken-smooth, close-to-the-head arrangements highlighted (and held in …ace) with veiling, combs, jewels or flowers. ★ By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

LOVELY EVENING . . . AT HOME

Mrs. Nancy Hawks, of Beverly Hills, California, in a greatcoat house coat of flame-red flannel with big saddlebag pockets. A fringed taffeta scarf is knotted under the collar, caught with a jewel.

Mrs. Henrik de Kauffmann, wife of the Danish ambassador in Washington, loves the ease and grace of a hostess robe for informal dining at home. Antique-white moire, embroidered in gold . . . designed by Joseph Whitehead.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Gossamer tulle, banded with metallic ribbon, by John Frederics. 2534.

Evening stole, black net, velvet ribbon, by John Frederics. 253

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Streamer stoles: long satin ribbons, twisted, fringed, by Mr. John.

Double satin triangle, fringed border, by Hattie Carnegie. Piguet's satin-and-velvet stole from Paris, 2535.

Christmas at Whitman's Mission

BY ROBERT ORMOND CASE

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

Editorial Note: The story of the Oregon Trail has often been told in terms of the heartaches, hardships and triumphs of the men and women who headed the emigrant armies of a century ago. But children were also there. What became of the orphans in a region where the struggle for survival left little margin of comfort for the weak and homeless?

One of the wagon trains of the '40's left a family of orphaned children at Whitman's Mission, at Waiilatpu, on a minor tributary of the Columbia east of the Cascades range. Dr. Marcus Whitman had no choice but to take them in. Their parents had died on the trail, and the dwindling resources of the train could no longer support them.

There were seven of these children. The two oldest were boys: Johnny, age fourteen, and Francis, age thirteen. Next to the boys was Catherine, age eleven. Then came the four "little" girls, including a baby six months old.

Catherine—or Cathy—was crippled. Just before their mother died east of Laramie, Cathy had fallen and broken her leg, and the constant jolting of the wagon had kept it from healing properly. Yet the two older boys depended on Cathy, and to the four little girls she was the mother of the family, now that their parents were gone.

It was a tremendous load for a girl of eleven years. Re-created here, by the author of The Empire Builders, is the manner in which little Cathy bore her burden when the loneliest night of all came to Whitman's Mission: Christmas Eve, 1845.

THE stars were like bright jewels that night above Whitman's Mission. It was bitterly cold. The storm that had raged all day was over, but surface snow still screamed across the whitened plateau. Long streamers hung from the chimneys of the big Whitman house inside its log palisade, and tiny particles swept across the roof like processions of fairy footsteps. Sometimes, when a big puff of wind came, the chimneys moaned together: Who-o-o . . . wo-o-o-o.

It was only nine-thirty, but everyone in the mission was in bed. Mrs. Whitman had seen to that. She was a big, capable, beautiful woman, but very strict. Doctor Whitman had had a hard ride that day—fighting the storm all the way back from Fort Walla Walla—so he had been glad to get to bed early.

It did seem to Cathy that on this particular night she and her brothers and sisters might have been allowed to stay up a little longer than usual. But Mrs. Whitman had been pretty short about it. The minute the clock struck nine, she had come out into the kitchen where the orphans were, looking like a big, severe angel with her yellow hair in braids and the candlelight glinting in her blue eyes.

"Well, children," she'd announced briskly, "it's time for bed. It's bedtime or all of us. Take the little girls up and tuck them in, Francis. Mind they say heir prayers now. You, too, young man!"

"Yes, ma'am." Francis was a shy, sensitive boy, and it had taken him a inute to get up his courage. "Have we got to go to bed now, ma'am?"

"Why not?"

But Francis couldn't go on. "You tell her, Johnny. You're the oldest."

"Not me," Johnny said, scowling. Johnny hadn't smiled once since the agons had gone off and left them here. "She'd say I was arguing with her."

"Johnny!" Cathy reproved. "You should be more polite to Mrs. Whitman."

"You tell her, then."

So Cathy had to do it after all. She said, "We thought we'd like to sit in here by the big fireplace for a while before we went to bed, Mrs. Whitman."

"Oh, no," Mrs. Whitman said. "We've got a lot to do tomorrow. It's Christmas, you know."

(Continued on Page 89)

MAKE IT A DRESS TO REMEMBER . .

A lovely pink lace to dance in . . .
a figure-flattering, ballet-length mauve jacquard satin . . . a stenciled velveteen skirt with a jersey top to wear at home . . .
all to be remembered.

By Nora O'Leary

Softly draped mauve jacquard satin makes a figure-flattering dinner dress; wear your prettiest jewel on the cuffed neckline. Vogue Design No. 6639, 12 to 20.

PHOTOS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Beautifully simple plaid taffeta; tremendous four-gore skirt, low, scooped-out neckline. Lovely, too, in black velvet; long sleeves. Vogue Design No. S-4892, 12 to 20.

For glamour at home . . . leopard velveteen skirt; simple blouse, brilliant cummerbund. Vogue Designs, skirt No. 6609, 24 to 32, blouse No. 6513, 12 to 20; "Easy-to-Make."

GLOVES BY VERA WEINBERGER. JEWELRY BY SEAMAN SCHEPPS.

A dress you'll never tire of! Pert tie-neckline and a shaped cuff on a button-front bodice; full, six-gore skirt. Vogue Design No. S-4915, 12 to 20.

The prettiest girl . . . the prettiest dress. Lovely pink lace with graceful skirt for dancing. Covered shoulder, low shaped neckline. Vogue Design No. S-4883, 12 to 20.

©VOGUE

Slimmest of velvet dinner dresses with bare shoulders, a draped hip line. The covered-up short jacket makes it a perfect theater costume. Vogue Design No. S-4937, 12 to 18.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 21 Dundas Square, Toronto, Ont.

Connecticut residents please add sales tax.

Back Views and Prices are on Page 164

Merry Christmas all

OPEN HOUSE
(Serves 25)
Triangle Sandwiches Cheese Daisies
Chocolate-Mint Wafers
Hungarian Nut Sticks Sultana Cake
Cranberry Punch
Orange-Nut Balls Coconut Chips

You needn't wait for New Year's to have an "open house" going strong. It's a whole week to New Year's. Any day is a good day for a party.

CHRISTMAS FAMILY BREAKFAST
Christmas Grapefruit
Ready-to-eat Cereal
Milk and Cream and Maple Sugar
Cottage Eggs Broiled Peach Halves
Bacon
Cinnamon-Biscuit Ring Jam
Coffee Milk

"Wait until after breakfast, children. Eat your cereal, Abby. And then we'll look at the tree." The big hour of the day: breakfast with the children.

day long

BY ANN BATCHELDER

I NEVER knew how many tried-and-true friends one can collect through a long space of years, until I knew you. All of you. Do you realize that I've been wishing you a merry Christmas for over fourteen years? And that unnumbered wishes for the same have come from you to me, year after year after year? When you stop to think of it, it's something. And I want to thank you, right now. It has meant a lot to me. I can't write each of you even a card. (How I love to think of Christmas cards. And stamps? Yes, stamps. All stamped and everything.) If I could I would, and I'd say from the heart, by which my pen would be guided, "A merry Christmas," and you would know I meant it. So take this "open letter" instead, and take it as meaning every one of you who have been and are my friends. And know that I'm your friend too. For it's Christmas all day long, and my day lasts all the year through. Just as you've made me feel yours does too.

Well, shall we start the day? Christmas breakfast is apt to fade into insignificance beside the rest of the festivities. But for those who go to grandma's on Christmas, let's start the day right. Up they get, the moppets whose stockings bulge with those (Continued on Page 187)

PHOTOS BY STUART - FOWLER

Line a Day

BY ANN BATCHELDER

1 Can it be that winter is shutting the doors and latching the windows against the somnolent world? Why, it was only a moment ago—it seems—that it was summer. Time is a gay deceiver—don't believe a word it says. Get out the woollies. December is here. Also—darn those socks!

2 Creamed celery isn't too glamorous, but wait a second. Add cheese to your creamed celery, season it well, then fill the hollowed out shell of an Edam round or pineapple cheese (not too hollow). Cover the top with buttered cracker crumbs and brown quickly in the oven. Get the idea? It's quite a dish.

3 Going to surprise everybody with squash croquettes? Go on and do it. And remember that I told you not to forget to add plenty of finely chopped walnut meats to the squash. The "marriage of true minds" has nothing on this.

4 Now, as to nuts, I ate a choice bit the other day at a sort of stylish place in town. And this was it. A ball of vanilla ice cream crammed full of peanuts all ground up to powder, covered with chocolate sauce littered with the same. Was it good? It was.

5 A first course for a bridge luncheon might be—and will be, once you get to it—a ring of tomato aspic filled with chicken or tuna-fish or crab-meat salad. In case the old tried-and-trusty fish cocktail needs a face lift, this would be it.

6 Griddlecakes for breakfast, for supper or for one of those exotic desserts. Let's take up the luncheon or supper dessert kind. Look into the heart of the matter, as it were. Are you with me so far?

7 Make a batch of thin griddlecakes. (When I get grown up and sophisticated I'll call them *pan*cakes. So far, they are baked on a griddle.) Have ready a thick, delicious blueberry or raspberry sauce. Encase large spoons of the sauce in each cake, rolling them up. Cover with more sauce, heat for a few minutes and serve quickly on hot plates. Pass heavy, plain cream.

8 From an old cookbook: "To select a proper chicken to cook and set before your family is an accomplishment to be desired. Twist the wing of the chicken to determine its age. Be sure the butcher hasn't twisted it first." Can't you trust anybody?

9 An old receipt that may be new to you, anyway, and that is stuffed oysters. Delicious too. Chop a dozen large oysters very fine. Mix them with the yolk of an egg, thicken with bread crumbs, add a tablespoon of heavy cream, salt and pepper to taste. Fill shells with the mixture, rounding the top. Brown in a hot oven.

10 Oysters are one thing you mustn't miss. Stews are superb if they are superb. Roasted, they're gorgeous. In a scallop you are safe and sure. If it's a two-layer scallop, of course. Done in a deep pie plate. And there are many other ways of cooking oysters, all delicious.

11 Scallopini of veal sound like something you hear about and never make? Try this one; it will bear repeating. Cook a sliced onion in salad oil until it is brown. Add three or four sliced tomatoes or a can of tomatoes with some sliced green peppers to make a sauce. Salt and pepper to taste. Take out the skins from the tomatoes and peppers as they cook. They'll loosen, so it's easy.

12 Canto II: Have the veal sliced almost paper thin. When the sauce is hot and ready, lay the veal slices in the sauce and cook them until they are very tender. Careful now. Don't break them. You can do chicken the same way. Sort of à la marengo, you know. Serve with mashed-potato puffs or croquettes.

13 Got one for you on the subject of—guess what? Corn-meal mush! Yes, the old familiar corn-meal mush with an Italian background. Make, then, corn-meal mush quite thick. Spread a layer in a casserole. Add bits of butter or margarine and a layer of Parmesan cheese. Add some very hot spaghetti meat sauce.

14 Chapter II: Continue, now, with layers of mush, butter or margarine, cheese and sauce until you come to the top, which will be the bits of butter and—generously—the cheese. Brown in the oven—about 400° F. Let the diners dip. They'll dip deep.

15 Surprise item, hors d'oeuvres dept.: Cream half a cup of butter or margarine. Add grated Cheddar cheese and keep on creaming until it's very thick, like butter again. Spread on bread rounds, small ones. Into the oven or broiler until cheese melts and browns. Very chi-chi.

16 And for the same dept. pops up another, to keep 'em happy and guessing. Take slices of white bread—cover with thin slices of Cheddar cheese. Then over this lay fillets of anchovies. Sprinkle with chopped capers. Grill them and serve instead of the usual cheese sandwiches. Nothing usual about these. But good.

17 Pumpkin pie topped with whipped cream sweetened with maple sugar and dusted with chopped toasted walnut meats is pumpkin pie de luxe.

18 You'll think I am nuts about cheese—and you're right. I love it. And it's just right in baked potatoes done this way: Bake, scoop out the insides, mash and for each potato add salt and pepper to taste, a generous dab of butter, two tablespoons condensed tomato soup and a good tablespoon sharp grated cheese. Mix well—stuff potato shells and brown under the broiler.

19 A dessert that is both simple and delicious is spiced applesauce, served with a ball of vanilla ice cream, lightly sprinkled with cinnamon. A recommended item.

20 Ever hear of English trifle? It's really spongecake at a fancy-dress ball. That's all. But for a dessert it's something. Now to make it the American way. First, have small, thin slices of spongecake. Put a layer in a shallow serving dish. All done, it should be about an inch and a half deep.

21 Chapter II: Saturate the cake generously with strong, heavily sweetened coffee, flavored with vanilla—but don't pour it on. Add a thick layer of vanilla-flavored boiled custard. Keep going and have the cake slices on top. Cover with wax paper and let it chill in the refrigerator. When ready to serve, heap it with whipped cream and garnish with crystallized preserved cherries cut into pieces.

22 Well, to get back to earth, take a can of peas and drain them so they are pretty dry. Chop a slice or two of bacon very fine, and add to the peas. Put in a frying pan and cook the peas and bacon together until the peas are puckered and the bacon done. Season and serve.

23 There are two things I want to mention that are wonderful to go with ham and chicken dishes. In case you've overlooked anything, cranberry jelly is good with both, apple butter is especially good with ham. Beach-plum jelly or jam is the perfect touch for chicken or guinea hen.

24 There's more to broccoli than boiling it and let 'er go. Cook until tender and purée the inner leaves and stalks, bind the purée with a beaten egg over low heat. Season with salt, pepper and a little nutmeg. Cool. Shape in cubes. Bread the cubes, put into the oven to heat and brown. Cut hard-cooked eggs in half, crosswise, press one in each cube. Serve with cream sauce.

25 Don't lay it up against me if I've told this one twice. Twice-told tales are twice as good the second telling. This one, as you'll see, deals with squash and oysters. You will thank me if it's a reminder and cheer me on if you haven't heard it before.

26 Make a cream of squash soup. Take two cups of cooked Hubbard squash, puréed, one quart of rich milk, salt and pepper to taste and a large piece of butter or margarine. Cook in a double boiler, stirring all the time, and when smooth add a cup of scalded cream. Now put in about two dozen small oysters with a little strained oyster liquor. Heat until the oysters curl. Serve in a tureen if such is in your cupboard.

27 Apricots à la Royale are rightly named. Royal indeed and one of the cook's gifts to the higher life. Bake little tartlets. In each one put half a chilled apricot, fill the shell with partially set apricot jelly. When it sets, mask the tartlets with currant jelly and cover with chopped pistachio nuts.

28 For a beginning at luncheon, add to clear chicken broth an equal quantity of clam broth. Season to your taste. Heat to hot and hot, and serve in cups with salted whipped cream on top, sprinkled with paprika. This is heart-warming.

29 Don't misuse an alligator pear by serving it with mayonnaise. The idea is to cut the pear in half lengthwise, take out the stone and present each half with half a ripe lime and let the guests do their own squirting.

30 Of the making—and I reckon, eating—of sandwiches there is no end. For a corned-beef sandwich—which, I understand, men go for in a big way—add a touch of curry to the salad dressing you use as a spread. It really does wonders—if one likes curry.

31 December finds me about to do my Christmas shopping as usual. Yes, ma'am, my cards are all done and gone. Merry Christmas!

DRAWING BY R. C. ATHERTON

Let Campbell's help with your PROBLEM MEALS

Lunch on Saturday

On Saturdays in many a home, lunch is when you get there—and everybody sets his own time! That's when a dish like Campbell's Vegetable Soup comes to Mother's rescue. She sets it a-simmer on the stove and everyone helps himself. She knows this well-liked soup of good beef stock and 15 garden vegetables is "almost a meal in itself." With hefty sandwiches, it's a lunch to satisfy. Try this plan!

CAMPBELL'S VEGETABLE SOUP

Supper on Sunday

Here's a delightful tip for that "oh-dear-what-shall-we-have?" supper on Sunday night: steaming plates of Campbell's Green Pea Soup. It's a smooth and nourishing purée of tender green peas—a soup to make any appetite sit up and take notice. With it serve, for instance, crisp crackers, a salad and a beverage. Try it. See if this soup isn't a real help to a lady as busy as you!

CAMPBELL'S GREEN PEA SOUP

Dinner on Monday

Dinner on Monday night is often a bother. Perhaps you will be serving a casserole of Sunday's leftovers, or an omelet. Anyway, here's something to give the meal a lift—fragrant plates of Campbell's Chicken Soup. Folks like the gleaming chicken broth, delicate rice and tender pieces of chicken.

CAMPBELL'S CHICKEN SOUP WITH RICE

Whenever "problem meals" occur
On certain noons and nights,
Wise mothers find that Campbell's Soup
Will spur folks' appetites!

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

"Indigestion"

ften is only a minor discomfort due to mproper habits of eating and drinking, nervousness, fatigue, and emo-ional strain.

Sometimes, however, "indigestion"

nay be a warning sign of certain iseases.

So, if you have "indigestion" freuently, you should see your octor. Remember... better digestion is step toward better health!

Good living habits can be an aid to good digestion

The digestive system has been likened a chemical factory. Here, innumerable gland cells manufacture juices which act chemically upon the food we eat, so that it can be absorbed and used by the body.

When the system fails to function properly, "indigestion" usually results. Fortunately, this condition can generally be corrected by following a few common sense rules, under the guidance of your physician. He may suggest changes in your diet, eating moderately, keeping in good physical condition, and avoiding mental or emotional tensions.

Whatever may be the cause of your "indigestion," prompt diagnosis and any necessary treatment offer the best chance for cure. Today, new drugs and new surgical methods hold promise for better control of physical diseases of the digestive system. In certain types of cases, some doctors are finding psychotherapy increasingly important.

If you have frequent attacks of "indigestion," don't try to be your own doctor. The continued use of home remedies may do more harm than good, and may delay the start of proper medical care.

COPYRIGHT 1948—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

KINFOLK

(Continued from Page 37)

"How did you know?" Louise asked him.

"There is something American about you," he declared, and knew that he had pleased her.

After that it was easy to talk. They exchanged names and ages, and she told him that her real home was in New York, and found that he, too, had come from New York. This was a miracle for them both, and they had just discovered it when James and Mary, Peter and Chen converged on them from different directions.

Louise introduced the uniformed boy, "This is Alec Wetherston, and he comes from New York, not terribly far even from where pa and ma live."

They bowed, Mary somewhat coldly and then she said in Chinese, "Now we must buy what we want and go home, Louise. It is nearly sunset and the best flowers will be gone."

Somehow or other their backs were all turned toward the American. But he was not to be discouraged. He said loudly to Louise, "Where do you live, Miss Liang? I'm coming to see you if I may."

She gave him the name of the hutung and the number of the house, and he tipped his hat.

"I'll be there one of these days real soon."

"Louise!" Mary cried. "How can you?"

Louise shrugged. "I didn't do anything." But all of them saw that her eyes had changed in this short time. The despondency was gone and instead there was a look of life and even of triumph.

"Come," James said, "let us buy this white one, this yellow one and this fine red one."

"I will choose also this red-and-gold," Mary said. She was too indignant to speak again to Louise.

Young Wang came forward and dickered over the price with the vender, then they gave him handfuls of paper bills and set out for home.

They walked along resisting the pleadings of ricksha men to ride. The evening was settling upon the city in a mist of color. Along the street near them a blind violinist walked, playing as he went. He was a tall fellow, stalwart and strong, and his whole heart spoke through the vibrating strings under his bow.

"See that man?" James said. "I wonder if he can be cured." He stepped a little nearer and then shook his head. "No hope. The eyeballs are quite gone."

"I cannot bear so much that cannot be helped," Mary said.

"You are getting too tense," James said. "And I think that idea of yours is good. We need to go back to the place from which we sprang."

Neither felt like talking more deeply. Thoughts were going very deep indeed, and speech must wait.

When the chrysanthemums were arranged to her liking, Mary went to find Louise. She was in her own room, experimenting with a new way of combing her hair. Mary sat down and, seeing her sister's face only from the mirror, she said, "James and I have decided that we ought to pay a visit to our ancestral village."

"Why?" Louise asked.

"We want to see the village so as to understand ourselves better."

"I don't need to see it for any such reason," Louise declared. "It has taken me long enough to bear this place and if I see more it will be too much."

"You cannot stay here alone."

"Peter will stay with me," Louise said. "Peter won't want to go."

So it proved. After the evening meal when they sat about the table in a pleasant mood of satisfied hunger and good exercise, Mary in her dogged fashion brought up the village again. Peter said that he would not be able to leave the university for so much as a day.

"What is going on at the university?" James asked.

"We have been studying our own ancient history," Peter said earnestly. He had grown taller since he came, and his looks had changed. He had a student haircut—and his hair was clipped close at the sides and stood upright on top. Moreover, he had stopped wearing his American clothes and wore instead a blue cotton Sun Yat-sen uniform, such as all the poorer students wore.

"Well, what has history to do with you?" James inquired.

"Scholars in our history have always undertaken the reform of the government," Peter said in a firm voice.

James was alarmed. "I hope you will undertake nothing so dangerous! I would fail in my responsibility if I let you get into trouble. You might even lose your life if you go too far."

Peter looked with disgust at this cautious older brother. "How do you propose to help our country?"

"I don't know," James said honestly. "But I think it would be no help if I were killed before I can do anything at all."

Mary listened, torn between her two brothers. She admired Peter's fire and forthrightness, and yet she held James in love and respect. "Peter, you would learn more about the people if you came to the village with us," she said.

(Continued on Page 67)

"Dr. Brown calling Freddie Gohman, Dr. Brown calling Freddie Gohman! Hello! Here are your orders. Proceed to stay in bed. Take medicine as instructed——"

THE MAGIC THAT IS YOU—— LIVES IN YOUR FACE

Mrs. Astor's beautiful skin has the clear, smooth look of faultless grooming

Mrs. Ellen Tuck Astor

You see her, and you feel the special quality of her charm. For her lovely face brings you the glamour, and distinction, and warm responsiveness that are so much a part of her inmost self.

So much that is You speaks for you in your face. It is the out-going expression of your inner-self—the you that others see first—and the you they remember best. Do help your face, then, to look clear and bright and lovely—so it can express you happily.

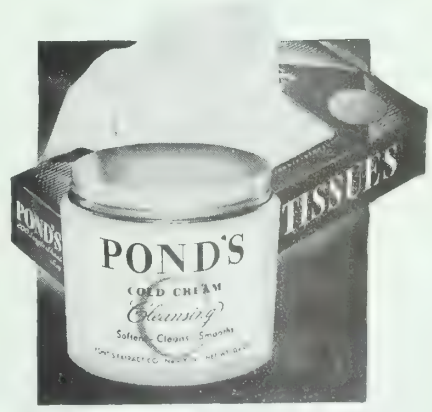
She uses Pond's!

"To my mind— there is just no better face cream," Mrs. Astor says

YOUR FACE has a fascinating way of telling the story of You. And—your face is what you make it! Never let your skin lose its soft color, get a grayed look. Always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too) do this "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with your Pond's Cold Cream. This is the way:

Hot Stimulation—splash face with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore openings. Tissue off well.



Cream Rinse—swirl on a second Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—give face a tonic cold water splash.

See your face now! It looks and feels re-made! So clean and rosy! So very, very soft!

Literally, this Pond's "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—Pond's Cold Cream wraps around surface dirt, as you massage—sweeps it cleanly away, as you tissue off. From the Inside—every step quickens beauty-giving circulation.

Don't ever believe it's just vanity to develop the beauty of your face. Look lovely and you'll find it slips over into how you think and feel and act. It gives you a happy confidence—brings the real Inner You closer to others.

Pond's—used by more women than any other face creams. Ask for this big, dressing-table size of Pond's Cold Cream today.

Inches deep in Alençon-type lace. Snow White, Pink Angel or Midnight Black. About Winter beauty frosted with lace...

IN YOUR OWN DRESS SIZE

Soft as the first snowfall—Textron's newest slip of finest rayon satin in a drift of lace.

Beautifully Textron-tailored... with a waist slim as an icicle, new, longer, fuller skirt.

Of course Textron's slip is dress-sized—fits exactly like your dresses at bust, waist and hips.

Just ask for your dress size 12, 14, 16, 18 or 20. Also in finest rayon crepe, at leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BLOUSES • HOSTESS COATS • MENSWEAR • TRICOT & WOVEN LINGER

(Continued from Page 64)

he people!" Peter exclaimed impatiently. "You and Jim are always talking about the people. It is their fault that the country is so rotten. Had they had even a little energy, things could never have come to this pass. I tell you, reform must be from the top."

The end of it was that some weeks later, before the cold weather set in, James and May, having received a leave of twelve days, set out for their ancestral village, Anching. Chen, after much indecision, stayed with Peter and Louise, but young Wang was faithful for his master's welfare and with many curses and threats to Little Dog and his mother, he went with James. The baggage he had prepared for the journey was formidable. Insisting that no one could sleep on the beds in the village inn, he had three rolls of bedding, a small portable earthenware cookstove, poker and tongs and teakettle, earthenware pots and dishes, chopsticks, several pounds of tea, two loads of charcoal, mosquito nets and foreign flea powder. The journey was by muleback and May wore Chinese trousers and jacket and James, too, put aside his Western garments.

The approach to an ancestral village is one of the spirit. Mrs. Liang had told her children a great deal about the Liangs who lived in it. There she had been taken as a young bride, less than twenty years old. To her children she could not, of course, tell the agonies of marrying a proud, discontented, even scornful young man. So she told them about the Liang village and the gentry into which she had married.

"The Liang village, your ancestral home," she had often said, "does not lie on low ground where it can be flooded. True, there are no high mountains such as those to the north of Peking. But the ground swells and the village stands upon the swell. A mud wall, strengthened with crushed brick, stands around it and there are four gates, east, south, west, north, studded with brass nails. The house lies to the north, and there are sixteen rooms, four to each court. When I went there the old parents were still living. Ah, my mother-in-law, your grandmother, was very severe. I cried every night. When-ever your father coughed or sneezed, I was blamed."

Doctor Liang, hearing this tale often, always smiled at this point.

"Yes, Liang," his wife would insist, "it is true. You do not know how much I suffered." She turned again to the children. "When he had cold feet I had to rub them warm with my hands. I tell you, to be the wife of a learned man is not easy. Your father's father, on the other hand, was kind to everybody. When he came into the room I must go out, but he always said to somebody else, 'Tell her not to hurry herself.' I wept when he died, I can tell you, because that left me alone in that house with my mother-in-law. But when she died, there was only Uncle Tao left. He is still there. Eh, that Uncle Tao!"

"WHAT about Uncle Tao?" the children would demanded.

At this point Doctor Liang always stopped her. "I forbid you to talk about Uncle Tao." She covered her face with her hands and laughed behind them until Doctor Liang began to grow angry. "I cannot tell you about Uncle Tao," she told them. "But someday you must go to your ancestral home, and then you will see."

"But suppose he dies first?" they had clamored.

"Uncle Tao will not die," Mrs. Liang had said. "He will live for one hundred years at least." And she would say no more.

Uncle Tao at this moment was sitting on the inner side of the spirit wall, impatient for his supper. The house was in a turmoil, for his third daughter-in-law, who was in charge of the kitchens, had mistaken his pronunciation of chicken noodles for lichen noodles. The sun was over the wall before the mistake was discovered, and then Uncle Tao declared that he would wait until midnight before eating lichen noodles. He sat down firmly in the large speckled-bamboo chair which some ancestor had once brought from Hangchow, and there he waited, smoking his yard-long pipe with ferocity. Meanwhile the lichen noodles were hastily fed to the children and the three daughters-in-law devoted themselves to the chicken, which was hiding in the cabbages.

THEY were further frightened to discover when the fowl was dead that by some mischance they had killed their best laying hen. The one due to be eaten was a yellow hen that laid eggs only occasionally, but this good hen laid at least three eggs a week and had for several years hatched and cared for flocks of chicks, whereas the yellow hen could never be kept on the nest long enough to hatch anything.

Behind the spirit wall Uncle Tao now rolled his head round and round and shut his eyes tight, preparing to shout yet another time that he wanted to eat. Before he could get up his wind, however, a tenant sauntered in from the street. He had been at the wineshop when two strangers and a servant stopped to ask the way to the Liang house. He had purposely misdirected them in order to warn Uncle Tao that he was to have visitors.

Uncle Tao opened his eyes when he heard this news. "Who are they?"

"They look like foreigners," the tenant replied. "A man and a woman. The woman has her hair cut."

"Tell them I am dead," Uncle Tao said, shutting his eyes. In a family of country gentry known for its courtesy and breeding, Uncle Tao showed these qualities only when he was in good mood.

Three things are known only in the following way—a hero in war, a friend in necessity, and a wise man in anger.
—ARABIC PROVERB.

It was too late to obey him. At this very moment young Wang appeared around the spirit wall. Uncle Tao opened his eyes and stared at the dapper young fellow in a strange uniform.

"What man are you?" Uncle Tao demanded.

"I am my master's head servant," young Wang began glibly. "He sends me to say that he and his sister wish to pay their respects. They are son and daughter of the Liang family, children of the Honorable One's elder brother's son."

Uncle Tao heard this with stupefaction. "Where are they now?"

"At the gate, Honored One," young Wang said.

He could scarcely keep back laughter. This old gentleman was of a sort he knew very well. Every village had someone more or less like him. True, he had never seen any country gentry so huge, so fat, so dirty as Uncle Tao, so like the Buddha in a forgotten temple. His great belly creased his soiled gray silk robe and his bare feet were thrust into old black velvet shoes. Upon the vast yellow face were a few sparse white whiskers, and the head had a handful of hairs at the back which were actually braided into a tiny queue. This queue should have been cut off more than thirty years ago when the revolution came, and that Uncle Tao had kept it was a sign of obstinacy, for he hated all governments alike.

"At the gate!" Uncle Tao exclaimed. "How inconvenient!"

"May they come in, Honored One?"

"I have not yet eaten," Uncle Tao replied.

Young Wang began to grow angry, and turning his back abruptly, he went back to the gate.

"Old One," the tenant said apologetically, "it is none of my business, but after all they are the children of your elder brother's son, who is the first in the next generation after you."

Uncle Tao lifted himself up by his hands on the arms of the bamboo chair and made as if he were about to heave himself at the tenant, who fled at once around the spirit wall

I'm a safety-first girl with Mum

You're a nimble number in a do-si-do, Honey. But it's not just your fancy footwork he admires; it's the daintiness you guard so well with Mum.

Remember—never trust your charm to anything but dependable Mum. For your bath only washes away past perspiration, but Mum prevents risk of underarm odor to come. Get Mum today.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safer for charm
Mum safer for skin
Mum safer for clothes

Mum checks perspiration odor, protects your daintiness all day or all evening.

Because Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Snow-white Mum is gentle—harmless to skin.

No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

and out the gate. There the miserable man saw the guests, who stared at him in surprise. He smiled in a sickly fashion, and jerked his thumb over his shoulder.

"The old man is getting his anger up."

A hearty red flew into Mary's sunburned cheeks. "Why should anybody be angry with us?" she demanded of James. "I'm going straight in. We belong here too." So saying, she walked briskly up the two cracked marble steps of the gate, went under the portal and around the spirit wall, where she came full upon Uncle Tao. She knew at once that it was he. No one else could have looked at the same time so absurd and so formidable.

"Uncle Tao!" Mary said.

Uncle Tao did not reply. He continued to stare at her.

"My elder brother and I have returned to our ancestral home," Mary said. "We are Liangs, and our father is Liang Wen Hua."

"Little Bookfool I always called him," Uncle Tao said suddenly. "Go away. I never talk to women."

As he spoke James appeared at Mary's side. He bowed slightly. "Uncle Tao, you must forgive us," he said in his best Mandarin. "We have rudely come here. But we think of ourselves as your children also, and of this as our home."

"Where have you come from?" Uncle Tao asked, and James told him respectfully:

"From Peking now, but some months ago we came from outside the seas, from America."

"I heard that the Bookfool had gone there. How does he earn his rice?"

"He teaches school," Mary said.

"Do they pay him well?"

"Well enough."

At this moment Uncle Tao remembered again that he was hungry. "I have not eaten," he announced.

"Neither have we," Mary said.

"We can eat at the inn," James said quickly. He was a little ashamed that Mary talked so much.

Before Uncle Tao could answer, his eldest daughter-in-law came briskly to the door. "The fowl is ready, Old Father."

Uncle Tao heaved himself out of his chair. He pointed a long and dirty thumbnail at the two guests.

"These are my brother's grandchildren," he told his daughter-in-law. "It is very inconvenient that they have arrived without telling me. Now we have only the thin yellow hen."

The daughter-in-law felt that this was the moment to confess the grievous mistake that had been made. She began smoothly, "Old Father, the gods have guided us. We chased the thin yellow hen under the cabbages and the youngest one among us reached her hands under and caught and twisted her neck. When she brought out the fowl, it was not the thin yellow hen but the fat red one. We longed to die when we saw this, but now I see the meaning of it. There is enough chicken flesh with the noodles and some eggs we found in the hen to make a meal for these two also."

Uncle Tao heard this and he glowered for a moment, but he did not speak. He turned to his daughter-in-law. "I suppose you have filled those rooms of my brother's with your children and that we have not an empty bed in the house."

"There is no truth in what you say," the daughter-in-law retorted. "I can brush the children away like flies."

"We have brought our own bedding," Mary said gratefully.

"Ours is clean," this kinswoman replied, somewhat hurt. "We have no lice in this house."

"Do not be offended," James said. " are only glad to be under the roof of our cestors."

"Then come and wash yourselves eat," the woman said, and she led them i the house.

The next morning began with a quarrel tween James and Mary. When they met the big central room of the house there only the eldest daughter-in-law there.

"The outside persons," she said, mean the men, "have gone to see to the planting the winter wheat. Uncle Tao does not get early. One of the children is by his door tening, and when Uncle Tao begins to ru ble he will come and tell us."

Mary said impulsively, "Don't treat us guests. Let us come to the kitchen with y and fetch our own food."

The kinswoman laughed and did not fuse, and so they followed her through t courtyard to the kitchen.

Mary looked at James with meaning, a
James said in a low voice and in Englis
"Never mind, most germs die with heat."

There was plenty of heat. The kinswom opened the wooden lid of the great caldro and steam poured from fragrant millet. Th heaped their bowls and went outdoors in t sun to eat. The house was quiet, for t other kinswomen and the older children h gone to the fields a to the ponds to wa
clothes.

"Let us go to t fields, too," Mary sa to James, when th had eaten and wash their bowls.

Now it was th
the quarrel began.
near were brother a sister that their min came together oft as one, and Mary d not doubt that Jam felt as she did th morning. She turne her glowing face him as they walke
along the stree

"Jim, let's com
here to live!"

It was a small vi
lage and there we only two main streets with a few alleyway running back to the foursquare wall. In a there were perhaps two dozen houses, mac of home-dried brick with roofs of black til Here and there was a poorer house of earthe walls under wheat thatch. The children we cheerful and dirty.

James looked at them and saw adenoic and tonsils, reddened eyes and bad die

"What would we live on, Mary?"

"We belong to the Liang family, don we?" she retorted. "I suppose we can ge our food and our rooms."

"We could not do with only food and shel ter," he said prudently. "I would want to se up a hospital and you, I suppose, would wan to do something about these children. Tha takes money."

"It wouldn't take much," she said, re luctant to grant that he was right. "I coul run the school in an empty room and i wouldn't cost anything to get these childre clean, at least."

James did not answer for a moment. The had reached the south gate in the villag wall, and as far as eye could reach the leve land stretched brown and shorn under th brilliant blue sky. The harvests had bee cut, and only cabbages and onions showe green. A flock of white geese, strolling acros a field to pick up lost grain, lent an accent o snow.

"Why don't you say something, Jim?"
Mary demanded.

"I am thinking," he replied. "I know very well that we have to do something abou this, Mary. I felt it coming over me in th night, as you did too, I suppose. It's a strang thing. We exiles coming home seem to tak two directions. Some want to ignore and es cape. Then there are those like us. We ar stunned—because nothing is like what w

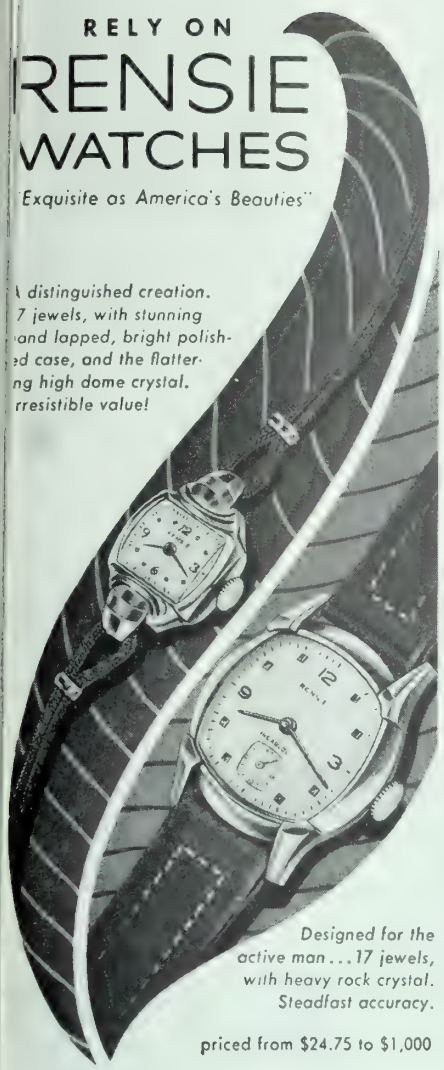
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Misunderstanding

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith



Of course I said that you must go;
That we were through for aye.
When true love prances on my pride,
What else is there to say?

I vowed we should not meet again,
But darling, how absurd
That you should bow, put on your hat,
And take me at my word!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

RELY ON RENSIE
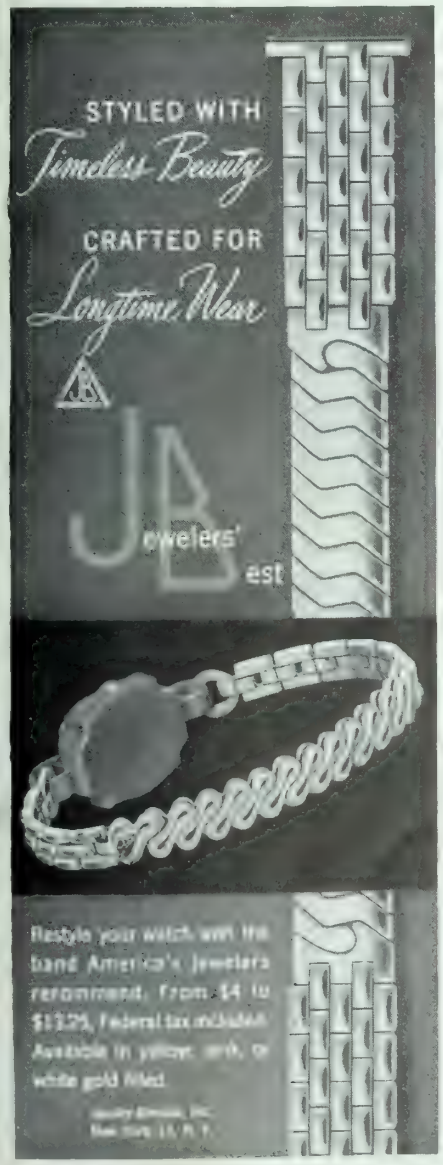
WATCHES
"Exquisite as America's Beauties"

A distinguished creation. 17 jewels, with stunning hand lapped, bright polished case, and the flattering high dome crystal. Irresistible value!



Designed for the active man . . . 17 jewels, with heavy rock crystal. Steadfast accuracy.

priced from $24.75 to $1,000

Sold by better jewelers

Rensie Watch Co., Inc.
580 Fifth Avenue, New York 19

thought it was—but we can't separate ourselves."

"Do you suppose pa knew it was really like this?" she asked.

"Like what?"

"Well—to put the worst of it—dirty," she said frankly. "Dirty and the children filthy and the people ignorant."

"I don't think pa thought any of this was his business. What makes us think it is ours?"

Here the quarrel began. While Mary argued, James resisted, until at last in a passion she stood her ground and refused to let him walk another step.

"But why are you so angry with me?" he protested.

"Because you know, and I know that you know, that you are not saying what you really think."

They had reached a wall temple to an earth god, a tiny dwelling scarcely taller than she was herself. Within, looking through the opening, were the little god and his wife. Behind this temple were grave mounds.

"Our ancestors, I suppose," James said. "They put them anywhere in the fields."

Mary looked at them for only a second and returned to her quarrel. "Jim, if you don't come, I shall come alone."

He looked grave at this. "My dear, I am sure you would," he said. "But I am not saying I won't come. I am only asking how—and perhaps when—and with what. We don't want just to bury ourselves—with our ancestors."

His gravity, his gentleness quieted her. He was right, perhaps. There was a world of difference between themselves and these kinspeople.

James went on. "I want to talk with Uncle Tao. If he were against us, we could do nothing. He'd have to understand."

"Do you think he understands anything except his food and his sleep?" Mary demanded.

"Underneath that mountain of flesh I think he understands a great deal."

The quarrel faded away like a mist.

"As long as you are thoroughly discontented with everything, as I am," Mary said, with a twinkle of laughter.

"I am quite discontented."

Mary laughed. "Then let's enjoy ourselves." She got up and peered into the tiny temple. "Poor little gods. They look terrified!"

When they got back at noon Uncle Tao was awake and walking slowly up and down the courtyard, digesting his late breakfast. On the table in the main room were a plate of persimmons and a square sweetmeat dish divided into compartments which held watermelon seeds, pumpkin seeds and some stale sweets.

"How are you, Uncle Tao?" James asked.

"Busy, busy," Uncle Tao said, putting his fat hands to his stomach. "Where have you been?"

"Out in the fields," James replied. "But we saw none of our kinsmen."

"They were to a distant part of our land," Uncle Tao said carelessly. "I sent them there to measure seed wheat. These old men of the earth will cheat the landlord every time if they can."

"How do you decide the rent?" James asked.

"We take half. Half the seed we furnish, half the harvest we get. The land is ours, the oxen are theirs. They have the easy work, we have the hard."

"How is that, Uncle Tao? You look easy enough sitting here."

"Ah, you don't know the truth of life here," Uncle Tao said with vigor. "Had it not been for me, the Liang family would have no place on the earth today. Your grandfather, my older brother, was nothing but a scholar. Full of good talk he was, and anybody could cheat him by agreeing with him. I suppose your father is the same way."

"Perhaps," James said.

"How so does he make his living over there?" Uncle Tao inquired with lively interest. "I send him so much of the rent each year, but I suppose it is not enough."

(Continued on Page 71)

Peggy and Bart's "first taste" of wedded bliss. Reception in Lloyd home, Beverly Hills.

Mr. & Mrs. Harold Lloyd announce the marriage of their daughter Marjorie Elizabeth
to Mr. A. Bartlett Ross

SHE'S ANOTHER WOODBURY DEB

Harold Lloyd, famed screen comedian, stars in role of "Proud Papa" to Woodbury-deb Marjorie . . . calls her his "Peggy." Fond kiss as honeymoon-couple depart.

ollywood Star-studded Reception. Yes, it's Shirley emple and John Agar! Peggy never signed movie ontracts—her "life contract" is Bart! "And Wood-ury," she adds, "for the smooth skin glow he loves!"

Bride—about to be kissed! Her sweet complexion beauty is a tribute to Woodbury. Made with rich beauty-cream ingredient. Made for one purpose only—to keep skin lovely! Kissable!

"Just Married" says it! Bart booked Peggy for this happy scene soon after first meeting at her sorority house. They were "campus sweethearts" at U. S. C.

'A beauty!" . . . the circlet-of-love that adorns [illegible] finger. Ah, girls, the quicker you win [illegible] dream-lovely complexion, the quicker [illegible] that treasured ring to your finger! "Yes, Bart reacted to mine," testifies Peggy.

"My must-do . . . each day, a Woodbury Facial Cocktail! First, rich Woodbury lather. Rinse warm 'n' cold. Result—sparkle, glow galore!"

NOW! Woodbury comes in two sizes! Bath-size and facial! Big new Woodbury is bath-perfection . . . for a beauty-complexion all over!

"California means playsuits, swim suits . . . a'plenty!" says Peggy. "So I take Woodbury right to my shower for shoulders—oh, so smooth!"

Much-in-love marrieds. Mr. Ross with his sweetheart, Mrs. Ross! For the loveliness that makes romance a continued story, it's Woodbury. Try this true beauty soap—made extra-mild, made for skin alone!

(Continued from Page 69)

"You send him rent?" Mary exclaimed.

"His share," Uncle Tao said. "Before New Year each year I divide everything in exact proportion, to each his share according to his place in the family."

"Pa never told us that!"

"Eh," Uncle Tao said. "Now why not?"

"I suppose he didn't think of it," James said reasonably. "What he earns at teaching is a good deal more."

"Is it?" Uncle Tao said. "Does he teach the foreigners how to read and write?"

"They know already," Mary said.

"Not our language."

Mary seized this change. "Uncle Tao! Do you believe in reading and writing?"

"Not for women," Uncle Tao said firmly.

"For men, then." Mary swallowed her pride for the moment.

"It depends upon what men," Uncle Tao said. "For men like me and my sons, certainly we all read and write."

James looked at Mary with warning in his eyes. Go slowly, leave it to me, they said. She rose. "I will go and see if I can help in the kitchen."

Uncle Tao looked slightly in the direction of her voice. "Very good," he said, "very right, entirely proper." He waited until she was gone and then he looked at James. "You must get this sister married quickly. To allow a female to run hither and thither is tempting the devils."

"She wants to teach school," James said boldly.

"Now you see," Uncle Tao said triumphantly. "I told you no reading and writing for women! Your father, I remember, would have your mother read. Well, I suppose she runs about everywhere. Never at home, eh? How many children?"

"Four of us."

"Do you teach school too?" Uncle Tao asked.

"No, I am a doctor."

"A cutting doctor or a treating doctor?"

"Cutting," James said, "although sometimes I treat first."

"Cutting," Uncle Tao said darkly. "I don't believe in it."

"Have you ever seen anyone at all who was cut?"

"No," Uncle Tao said flatly. "I don't believe in it." He yawned, fell silent for a moment, and then began to rub his belly slowly round and round with his right hand.

"What is it?" James asked.

"Nothing, nothing," Uncle Tao said. But without further warning he pulled at his girdle and jerked open his robe. His enormous belly sat revealed. "Feel this."

JAMES bent over him and pressed the huge soft mass.

"What is it?"

"A lump, and it should not be there."

"Crabs," Uncle Tao said dismally. "I ate too many crabs one year, and soon afterward this began."

"It is not crabs."

"Then what is it?"

"I do not know. I should have to look at it through a special glass."

"And then what?"

"I should probably have to cut," James said very gently.

Uncle Tao wrapped himself up again. "I don't believe in cutting," he said. "Let us talk of something else. The men of earth, for example ——"

But James was not listening. Everything seemed to fall quite clearly into place. The future, which had been confused this morning when he talked to Mary, came near, and he saw it step by step before him.

Mary and James had talked very little in the days they had spent in their ancestral house. Both were fermenting with ideas, and until these were clear they kept themselves separate. Mary had joined in the life of the kinswomen. She had worked with them and sat with them, answering their constant questions about herself, her clothes, her parents, her education, about America and all the strange folk there and their strange ways. Wherever they had got it, the women had heard something of the outer seas and the farther lands, but their information was woven upon dream and myth and imagination. Thus they thought that in the outer lands children were born with white hair which grew dark with age, and they thought that men and women did not mate and produce children in human ways—that is, their own ways—but in some unaccountable mystic fashion. The food in the outerlands horrified them, for they had heard that it was raw meat and cow's milk, which disgusted them. They had heard that the people were covered with hair from head to foot, and that their skin was of all colors and that their eyes were blue and purple and yellow like the eyes of wild beasts.

WITH the passion of one born to teach, Mary told them what she thought was the truth, and in her turn she asked questions. She learned that the eldest daughter-in-law alone dared to speak to Uncle Tao, and then only since the death of Uncle Tao's wife, a mild, gentle, small woman whom everybody had loved and who had disobeyed Uncle Tao in everything without rousing his anger.

It was a merry household, and the fear of Uncle Tao's anger only added liveliness to the days. He was a god under his own roof; and even his sons boasted of their father's rage and fatness, of his bellow and his roars of laughter. They loved him well, while they cherished their fear of him, and he gave direction to their lives. All this Mary saw, but she herself did not like Uncle Tao.

"For example, Uncle Tao," she now said to James as, the week over, their mules jogged homeward along the narrow footpath. "What is he but a mountain of ignorance and dirt? He despises women, but I despise him. I shall go my own way and do what I plan to do."

"What do you plan to do?" James asked, smiling at his downright sister.

"I am going back to the village to live."

"On what?"

"On pa's rents," she said calmly.

James was mightily amused at this, but he kept his face grave. "How do you think you will get the rents out of Uncle Tao?"

"I shall tell pa to write to him that I am to have them. If Uncle Tao doesn't listen to pa, I will make him miserable until he listens to me. After all, I have a right under that roof."

"You are declaring eternal war against Uncle Tao," James said.

"Yes."

They pulled their mules aside for a few moments, for they had met a long line of farmers carrying their grain to the city. Although the air was cold, the men were already sweating and they had thrown open their cotton jackets, showing brown bodies rippling with muscles.

"We are a handsome race," James said as he watched the men.

"We are wonderful," Mary agreed. They exchanged a long look of pleasure in themselves and then they went on again.

"You know," James said thoughtfully, "Uncle Tao is also wonderful, in his way."

She refused to be moved. "Jim, please don't pretend you really like Uncle Tao. You know that he will be your chief obstacle and enemy when you go there to live."

"Who said I was going there to live?" James demanded.

"I know you are. You may say even to yourself that you haven't decided. But I can feel it in you."

James yielded gracefully. "You are right, Mary, though I don't know how you know."

All Mary's good humor returned. "And how do you think you will make your living?" she asked with loving sisterly malice.

Judging others is a dangerous thing; not so much because you may make mistakes about them, but because you may be telling the truth about yourself.

—PHILEMON: Views and Vagaries (Fenland Press).

At Home Fashion by Dorine Lie

Only Razor CREATED TO MAK

LEGS MORE BEAUTIFUL

What an inspired gift idea—for Christmas. Never before a razor like this! C glimpse at Eversharp's new Fashion Razor—and other razors become old-fashion It's the quickest aid to that well-groomed look since the invention of lipstick!

Designed at just the right angle to slick away unwanted hair on legs a underarms—even if you don't use cream or lather. Positively does not promote h growth or coarseness!

...*The only razor with Automatic Blade Changer. Can't nick your finge No blade handling. Nothing to unwrap! So easy to clean!

The only razor smart enough for your dressing table! Buy yours today... yourself, for gifts!

P.S. LEGITIMATE LARCENY! It's smart to snitch your husband's Eversha Schick Injector blades for your Fashion Razor!

new... dazzling Fashion Razor BY EVERSHARP SCHICK

*PUSH, PULL CLICK, CLICK! The only woman's razor in the world with Automatic Blade Changer!

The FASHION RAZOR—$3

(With 10 Blades)

Introducing the DEB—$2

(With 10 Blades)

"I don't know. But I have an idea that somehow Uncle Tao will help me."

Mary shouted with laughter. "Oh, Jim, oh, Jim!" she cried. "Jim the Dreamer!"

It was night when they drew near to the house in the city. At the gate they had got off their mules stiffly, shouting for Little Dog to come and fetch the baggage. Little Dog came running and then Peter and Louise, and lastly Chen came out to meet them. Chen was glad to see James home again. A strange thing had shown itself at the hospital and he was disturbed by it. But he said nothing of it now.

"Eh, you two," he said amiably, his spiky hair standing on end about his big honest face, "you've come back safely from your ancestors, have you?"

"We'd have to come back for a bath if nothing else," James said gaily.

In a very few minutes the hot water was brought in great steaming buckets and poured into the tub in the washroom. This was for James, and Little Dog's mother fetched a wooden tub and put it in Mary's room for her, so that the meal need not be held back too long. How good was the hot water, and what a blessing the soap!

When I get to the village, Mary mused in the midst of this comfort, I shall make a bathhouse first of all for the women.

In his tub James sat cross-legged like a smooth young Buddha. A bathhouse for the men, he thought. That will be the first thing for the village.

They came to table with monstrous appetites, eager to tell everything, and to hear all. "First to hear," James said, "and then to tell."

But it seemed there was not much to hear. Louise was very silent. Questioned, she said that she had read some books Chen had brought her from the hospital library, and she had gone to a party Mrs. Su had given, where there was dancing.

"I want to talk to you alone about the college," Peter said abruptly to Jim. "There's stuff going on there that I don't like."

Chen made a brief report of the hospital. "The healthy season is coming in, and we have had no more cholera. We've had the usual number of childbirths already half ruined by stupid old midwives ——" He hesitated and then went on, "Later, Jim, when you have time, I want to tell you something."

"Why have each of you secrets?" Mary demanded.

"I have no secret," Louise said quickly. She glanced at Chen, who did not look at her or speak, and James, sensitive to some entanglement here which could not now be unraveled, began to speak of the village.

"I don't know how to explain to you Uncle Tao ——" He began to laugh and everybody laughed with him as he went on.

James talked well. Sitting around the table lit by candles, they all listened to him, and Chen was deeply moved. He opened his hands upward upon the table.

"All that you say is as known to me as the palms of these two hands," he said when James had finished. "Yet I never understood before that it had anything to do with me."

"We can do all that I have said," James went on, "but we must move in ways that seem slow at first. The people must be with us."

"Slow!" Peter cried. "So slow that we'll all be dead before we see the change."

Only Louise was not moved. Her face was set in its lines of prettiness. "It all sounds horrible," she said and she wiped her hand daintily on the napkin which, to the astonishment of Little Dog's mother, she insisted on having fresh at every meal.

Alone that night for a few minutes after the others had gone to their rooms, Chen said to Jim, "Do you remember the child that was born while you were away in Shanghai, whose mother died?"

Jim nodded.

"That child," Chen said with peculiar emphasis, "is not all Chinese."

"No!" James cried. "But you said the mother ——"

"The mother was certainly Chinese. She was a young girl—not a student, but one of these moderns—you know them, Jim. She had left her family. Well, that's not too strange. But ——" Chen pressed his lips together.

"Go on," Jim said. "How can there be anything you fear to tell me?"

Chen said, hesitating very much and turning red, "Here it is, then. After the dance, late that night, Louise went to see this child."

"But why?"

"I don't know why," Chen said. "She came alone and she asked the nurse in charge to show her the child. She used your name to get in."

The winter was drawing on in New York, and for Doctor Liang the best part of the year was at hand. Now that he had got used to a quiet house, he was beginning to like it. Moreover, the presence of the children in China gave him protection. When some of his enemies mentioned their surprise that he continued to stay abroad when his country so obviously needed all well-educated citizens, he could smile rather sadly and say, "I am supporting four young citizens now in China."

The fact that he had not yet sent them any money was beginning to weigh on his conscience. Mrs. Liang had asked him about it several times.

"Even though James and Mary have jobs, I am sure it is not enough," she said. "Besides, we should support the younger ones at least enough to pay for their rice."

"Certainly you are right. As soon as the lecture season begins, I intend to double my engagements and send them a generous amount."

"Meantime?" she asked.

"Well, well," he replied impatiently.

The end of this was that Mrs. Liang began another private savings account. One she already had. She had begun it aimlessly, merely for her own comfort in case she should decide someday that she could not bear America any more. She had put it thriftily out to loan in Chinatown, and a cousin of Billy Pan's managed it for her.

The second savings account she merely put into a box which she kept behind the towels and sheets in a closet. She thought of it as the children's money, though she had no idea how to get it to them. Yet the important thing was to have the money in hand. Mrs. Liang got it by charging Doctor Liang more for everything she bought. This, she told him, was the high cost of living, and she followed the price lists closely and made a new rise whenever they did.

Thus Mary's letter could not have reached them at a better time. It was written to them both. After some thought Mary had decided not to try to explain any of her feelings. She would merely say that she and James thought they ought to do something for the ancestral village, where the people were very poor. "It made me sad to see the children growing up with no chance to go to school and no one even telling them to wipe their noses. Really, pa and ma, you should have told us what things here are like, instead of letting us think that our country is one beautiful cloud of Confucianism."

Her father was displeased with this. "I don't see what Confucianism has to do with wiping children's noses," he said.

But the end of it was that Doctor Liang sat down and wrote a letter to James, which he was to show to Uncle Tao, asking that the rent funds be given to his son. "I have been stirred by my daughter's letter," Doctor Liang wrote. "She tells me that the village needs repairs and so on. I make my contribution thus to our ancestral family. Let the land keep its own."

"I hope Uncle Tao does not think that you mean for him to keep the money," Mrs. Liang said, taking the letter.

But Doctor Liang would not change what he had written. It sounded too well.

Nevertheless, the whole transaction made him melancholy. He went into his study, sat down in a deep leather chair and held his head in his hands. He was not pleased that his children had seen the village as he was sure it must be now. All these years since his childhood had passed doubtless without any improvement or repairs. As young men in the Liang family grew up they had simply gone away if they did not like the village and its ways. The ones who had stayed were the ones like Uncle Tao, who, although they belonged to the gentry, were very little above the coarse peasants. People, he reflected, must live at these different levels. Some must

(Continued on Page 74)

Berthe Morisot—1840-95

The question is constantly asked, "How should my son (or daughter) learn to be a painter?" When Madame Morisot put this question to Guichard about her daughter, Berthe, then aged fifteen, the painter answered, "The first thing to do, madame, is to get your daughter permission to work in the Louvre, where I shall give my instruction in front of the Masters." The answer was not surprising, for the Louvre was the traditional art school of all French painters of ability. There, as Ingres said, they sought to draw out from the Old Masters "le suc de la plante," that quintessential quality, which is in all great art. This intelligent use of the Louvre explains to a large extent the superiority of French painting in the last century.

Berthe Morisot was an assiduous copyist. She began with the Old Masters and ended with Corot, whose work she had the advantage of discussing with the artist himself. In the Louvre she often saw Manet, the brother of her future husband. During the winter before the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War, when she was just twenty-nine, she completed the portrait of her mother and sister (Page 41) and asked Manet to come to her studio to give her a criticism. He was delighted with the picture, but suggested a few changes and then seized a palette and laughingly gave the painting several brush strokes himself. These are still visible in the somewhat heavier touch around the eye and mouth of Madame Morisot and the thicker impasto of her dress. While Manet was working, the van to take the picture to the Salon arrived, and Berthe Morisot, though she was angry, could do nothing but send the portrait as it was. Fortunately, the canvas was received with enthusiasm by many artists, especially by Fantin-Latour, and the painter herself became reconciled to the changes.

Among women Mary Cassatt was Berthe Morisot's only peer, and they had much in common. Both tried to fashion a modern style from a lifelong study of the masters of the past, one with the guidance of Degas, the other with the help of Manet. Mary Cassatt showed a mastery of formal design combined with good taste; Berthe Morisot, a piquant delicacy joined to a Parisian chic. It is remarkable that the nineteenth century should have given us two women of such genius in art. How many, one wonders, will the twentieth century produce?

—John Walker,
Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art.

Garnish it gaily! Trim that magnificent Swift's Premium Ham with snowballs and snowflakes and holly you can eat! It's easier than you'd guess. Here's how: Bake a Swift's Premium Ham; to do justice to its matchless flavor, follow the simple cooking directions on the tag that comes with every ham. Decorate top with cream cheese snowflakes forced through a pastry tube. Place on a heated platter and surround with snowballs made by pressing hot, fluffy, well-seasoned rice together with two spoons. Use green pepper and glazed cranberries for the holly trim. Now serve it forth! You know that princely platter will do you proud. For every rosy slice of Swift's Premium Ham is mellow with luscious flavor and tenderness that come from Swift's famous Brown Sugar Cure and special way of smoking over fragrant hardwood fires. No wonder Swift's Premium is America's traditional favorite—the best-liked ham of all!

A perfect gift! A Swift's Premium Ham in its festive holiday wrappings is a gift to delight even "have everything" friends.

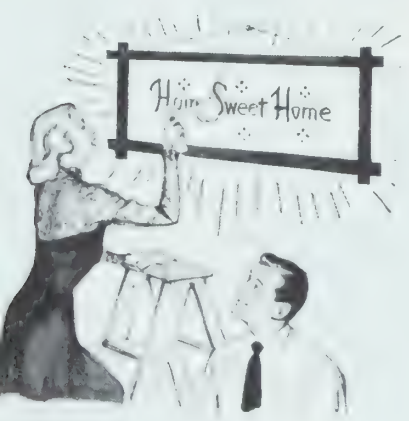
2 STYLES! Blue Label for easy cooking at home; Red Label for ham that's fully cooked, ready to eat.

'Tis the season to be jolly—with

America's traditional favorite

Swift's Premium Ham —

You couldn't see Jane's holly wreaths—
Her windows were a fright!



But speedy, thorough Windex made
Them sparkle clean and bright!

With just a spray and then a wipe—
Fast Windex cleans like magic.

It doesn't leave that waxy film,
That makes some cleaners tragic.

It never sticks in corners! And
It takes no time to dry!

And Windex leaves no after dust!
Just try it, you'll see why!

So many, many housewives say,
"Gee, Windex sure is nifty

"For everything that's made of glass
It's Easy! Quick! And thrifty!"

Why pay high prices for window cleaners? Windex is only 15¢! And nothing beats it for cleaning glass because it's made especially for [illegible]ndex leaves no oily, waxy [illegible] streaks, no dust. Insist on [illegible] every time!

Copr. 1948, by The Drackett Co.

Get Brighter Windows Quicker With—

WINDEX®

Spray

Costs only 15¢—even thriftier in the big 20-ounce size.

TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.

(Continued from Page 72)

work with the hands, some with the mind. The peasants should not be lifted from their place as workers with the hands, or the higher ones would starve.

At this moment he began to distrust his daughter Mary. Surely there was no reason for a peasant to know how to read and write. This would give him the means of rising out of his class. What would happen if the whole world were scholars? Who then would provide the food? He began to regret his generosity in the matter of the rents and he got up impetuously and went to find his wife.

But she was already gone. Doubtless she had already mailed the letter.

Later, in a remote corner of a small French restaurant, Doctor Liang met Violet Sung. Some vague feeling of revenge against his family had prompted him to call her and Violet was at home, feeling, she said, at loose ends.

"So am I," Doctor Liang said. "Will you lunch with me?"

She had hesitated a moment. Then she said delicately, "Are you sure you want me?"

"Quite sure," he said.

So they had met in the restaurant she suggested, a place where she often went when she was alone, because Ranald did not like French food. They were quite reconciled, the mutual bond between them stronger than ever. But she knew now that there were arid stretches in his mind.

With Doctor Liang she felt an intimacy that had nothing to do with the flesh. She was deeply attracted to the handsome, tall Chinese gentleman, whose black hair was silvery at the temples. Physically he pleased her without rousing desire and his approach was different from any she knew. Chinese men, when they noticed women at all, gave them a grave courtesy which implied the conviction of equality.

When Doctor Liang had telephoned her today it had been almost telepathy. She had been sitting alone in her room in one of her long fits of musing which were trancelike, and she had been thinking of him, as she thought of many men and women who interested her. She could sit motionless for hours at a time when she was alone, merely thinking over one person and another, remembering, probing, hearing again the sound of a voice, seeing the trick of a gesture. Thus was her inner solitude peopled.

Now seated opposite him in the restaurant, which at this late hour was almost empty, she felt a deep sense of peace. She had little wish to talk at any time and she floated upon the restfulness of the moment.

Doctor Liang looked at her with appreciation. She had slipped her brown mink cape from her shoulders and the deep violet velvet of her simply fashioned gown and small hat melted into the richness of her dark hair and eyes and her creamy skin.

"When I am with you I always feel like speaking only truth," he said. "So I will tell you that you are entirely beautiful today."

"Only today?" she asked, half smiling.

"Always, but today with an aura."

"Let's speak Chinese, shall we?" she said. "I can't very well, but I long to be able to."

"I also prefer our own tongue," he replied. "It has been spoken so long by human beings that it is shaped to human need. Had your father one of those hand pieces of jade or amber?"

"He held always a piece of onyx."

"And it became shaped to his own hand," Doctor Liang went on. "It was polished by his flesh until it shone in the light of a candle, did it not? It lay in his palm and he felt never empty-handed."

"He did find comfort in it," she agreed. "When I was a child I never knew why. I said to him, 'Baba, why not hold my kitten or some flowers? Why always the same thing?' And he said, 'I like it because it is always the same.'"

"Yes," Doctor Liang replied.

He murmured a few words to the waiter without asking her what she wished to eat, and she had confidence in his choice. When a delicate broth appeared, a sift of crisp croutons upon the clear surface, she drank it well

"that's why we both chose a

DEXTER TWIN TUB

It's the only washer with two washing tubs—that's the important difference between DEXTER TWIN and all others. Double sudsing does your entire week's washing so spotlessly clean in only one hour or less! No hand rubbing, soaking or pre-treating—and DEXTER TWIN saves hot water, soap and electricity!

FREE! WRITE TODAY! WASH HOUR MAGIC with Double Sudsing

COMPARE!!

Before you buy see your Dexter Dealer for a Free Demonstration of today's biggest washer value—THE DEXTER TWIN!

THE DEXTER COMPANY Dept. L128, Fairfield, Iowa

WASHES CLEANER • QUICKER • EASIER

QUALITY MARGARINE comes in Paraffined Cartons

All high-grade margarine is packaged in paraffined cartons. That's because the manufacturers rely on these sturdy, waxed packages to preserve fine flavor.

Also used to protect the quality and flavor of butter, ice cream, lard, shortening, and frozen foods.

For Finest Quality
Look For THE PARAFFINED CARTON

Get into the BIG MONEY!

NOW'S the time to get your share of big commissions! You'll be amazed how easily you'll make money. You'll sell because people want to buy! Whether you can spare only a few hours each day or give your full time, you can earn.

Join our Selling Staff and do it now! We'll furnish all the supplies you need without cost. Just send your name and address on a penny postal and let us do the rest!

M. E. Nichols

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
804 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

KVP Household PAPERS

tent, and in silence; the small fresh fish, owned in butter, she enjoyed. She liked his inese carefulness about food, that every outhful might be savored.

They talked very little during the meal, l this was Chinese too. But when tea came —and he was very firm in his directions t the tea leaves should be brewed without cloth bags—they looked at each other oss the table and Doctor Liang felt the pulse, rare indeed, to speak from his heart.

"My wife is jealous of you," he said with hint of a smile. "But that to you doubtless is no new thing in wives."

"I like your wife," she replied. "She gives a feeling that is good."

"What is it?"

"It is like firm hard earth under the feet," told him.

"You see what she is," he said. "That is y I am always faithful to her. I do not etend to be better than I am. My thoughts e to play sometimes, I own it. Ours was an d-fashioned marriage, made by our parts. I would have her read and write and met once before the wedding day."

"What a moment!" she murmured in ench.

"Yes, was it not?" he replied in the same nguage. Then he went on in Chinese. "I oked at her—short, even then a little fat, sy-cheeked, and frightened of me."

"So she is now."

"I did not love her," Doctor Liang said, but I knew that she would be a good wife."

"A good wife," Violet repeated. "It is hat a man like you must have."

Something naughty gleamed in the deure lines of Doctor Liang's smooth face. At the same time, there are other sides to y nature. A man's mind, if he be intelligent, eeks also female companonship. Yang and Yin are ot made of flesh alone. Mind and spirit are in the ircle too. That is why I elephoned you today."

He had never been so aring before. He had nade clear to her that he had no wish for passionate relationship. Nevertheless, he ad said boldly that he wanted a female mind o complement his, a female spirit to fulfill is. Whatever she was to the Englishman, he ad implied, had no more to do with him han Mrs. Liang had to do with her. They ould ignore such persons. She understood nd was entirely pleased. Now these long musings of hers need not be silent or lonely.

Doctor Liang leaned toward her slightly. "I should like to penetrate your mind with ny own," he said. "I should like to pierce he mysteries of your soul."

Mary knew that her father's letter had been mailed by her mother, for she had written a postscript. "While your father agrees to let you have his share of the Liang rents, do not think it came out of him easily," she wrote. "I stood at his side and I took the letter at once and now I hasten from this foreign pagoda house in which we still live to put it in the box. I will not give it to the man in the up-and-down because doubtless he will steal the stamp. For myself I am glad you and your brother will have this money."

But Mary's pleasure in being thus one step nearer to the village was tempered by two events which were not so much events as something still going on. Louise was excited, and Mary recognized certain signs within a few days after the return from the village. Her sister's eyes were bright, her cheeks pink, her voice high and she was easily angry, as she had been in the Vermont summer. This could mean only one thing: Louise was falling in love again.

"What have you done all day, Louise?" she asked each evening when she came home.

The answer was always idle. Louise had made a new dress, or she had washed her hair, or she had read a book or she had slept half the day away. Several times Mary, perceiving her sister's excitement, wondered if she had had a secret visitor. She was sorely tempted to inquire of young Wang, but antipathy forbade it. Young Wang disliked a mistress in the house he served and often he pretended not to hear what Mary told him. Of Little Dog no one could inquire, for he would lie as the moment demanded. Therefore was Mary constrained to wait until such a day as James came home with the cheerful look on his face which meant that he expected no one in his care to die at least before morning.

On that evening after they had eaten and Louise had gone early to bed and Peter had gone to a meeting at the college, Mary found herself alone with James and Chen. She pondered whether she should speak in Chen's presence, since she imagined him half in love with Louise secretly. When he left them for a moment, therefore, she took her chance and said quickly in English:

"Jim, I am sure Louise is in love with somebody again."

James lifted his eyebrows. "This time with whom?"

"Who knows?" Mary replied. "Unless it is with Chen?"

James shook his head. "Not with Chen," he said. At this moment Chen came back, and James went on easily. "Chen, Mary thinks that Louise is in love with someone." Chen looked thoughtful at once, as though he knew more than he wished to tell. "I can see that Chen agrees with you."

It was an evening too cold to sit as they used to do in the court, and they were gathered in the main living room of the house. The oil lamp burned on the table and gave a soft yellow light to the walls. Mary had cut a stalk of Indian bamboo with its scarlet berries, and this stood upon the table in an old brown jar. The room looked cheerful and warm to the young people in it.

However far a man goes, he must start from his own door.
—ENGLISH PROVERB.

To Chen this was exceedingly precious. "I do not like to see any change in this house," he said, "but we all know Louise is not here with her heart."

"Yet I never see her with anyone," Mary said.

"Young Wang has already told me that she leaves the house every afternoon," James said quietly. "He says she meets an American."

"An American!" Mary echoed, stupefied at Louise and her deception. "But why does she hide it from us?"

"I suppose she thinks that since pa sent her here to get away from Americans, we would prevent her." James looked weary.

"We shall have to stop her!"

Now Chen began to talk, still rather sadly. "Several things begin to be plain to me," he said. "That boy child at the hospital. Mary, have you looked at him lately?"

"He is quite well," Mary said with surprise. "Every day I pass his crib and he is sleeping or eating or lying awake. I think he never cries."

"Louise went to see that child," Chen said cautiously.

James took the pipe from his mouth. "There is no reason why you should shield Mary," he told Chen. They were still speaking in English, lest a servant should overhear them.

But it was no servant who overheard. Louise, always sensitive to Mary's watchfulness, had seen her sister's eyes follow her thoughtfully as she left the room that night. She had thrown her good night gaily at the three who sat on after Peter had gone, and when she herself said she was sleepy Mary had not answered. Mary had only looked at her with large quiet eyes, too full of thought. Therefore Louise knew she would not be able to sleep. In a few minutes she had stolen with noiseless feet along the corridors and had hidden herself behind the curtains which divided one room from another.

Now she heard what was being said and, filled with horror, she fled back to her room. There she put on a coat and outdoor shoes and, still silent, she slipped through the dark court, passed the lattice door of the living room, closed against the sharp night air, and went on through the gate.

(To be Continued)

Look! The finest
FLINT STAINLESS KITCHEN TOOLS

The girls will be green with envy when they see your new set of Flint Stainless Kitchen Tools. The lustrous black handles, modern design, sparkling finish—the sheer gracefulness of each piece gives a kitchen that "new look." Grand gift anytime—so gorgeous yet so practical.

Sold at department, hardware, appliance stores... in sets or single pieces.

EKCO FLINT Stainless KITCHEN TOOLS

SO GOOD THEY'RE GUARANTEED 15 YEARS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

7-Piece Set Including Wall Rack in Gorgeous New Gift Box $12.95

SINGLE PIECES BOXED INDIVIDUALLY, FROM $1.75 TO $2.25

Prices Slightly Higher in West

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 39, ILL.

SOMBRERO SALAD

Arrange desired number of Del Monte Pineapple slices on lettuce; top with cones of cream style cottage cheese which has been drained on paper towels. Stripe cones with thin green pepper strips (steamed till just limp) and pimiento strips. Serve with this piquant dressing—

- ½ tsp. chili powder
- ¾ cup syrup from Del Monte Sliced Pineapple
- ½ tsp. salt
- 2 tsps. cornstarch
- 3 tbsps. lemon juice
- ½ cup salad oil

Add chili powder to ½ cup of the syrup; boil down to half volume. Mix rest of syrup with salt and cornstarch; stir into hot mixture; add lemon juice, oil. Cook, stirring constantly, till thickened. Chill. Makes about 1 cup dressing.

Rich tropical flavor you can't keep under your hat!

You'll tell the world Del Monte is the real thing in pineapple! There's a tempting richness about it—a refreshing tart-sweetness—that always ends up in sunny satisfaction.

What makes it so good? Del Monte's special attention to full ripeness and speedy packing. The same flavor-care that makes you like all Del Monte Fruits so much.

So remember the name—Del Monte Brand Pineapple, any style. The flavor's unforgettable.

Two more ways to enjoy Del Monte Pineapple—always-handy Crushed, and sparkling Juice. Same glorious flavor in every style!

One more good food from the brand that puts FLAVOR FIRST

Del Monte

SLICED • CRUSHED • CHUNKS • JUICE

PINEAPPLE

THE GIFT THAT MATTERED

(Continued from Page 39)

rents' room. He was not supposed to go up ere until his mother had her coffee, and netimes, especially when she had been up e, it was noon before she had it, and before got a chance to see her it would be almost ne for his nap. Then she would let him get to bed with her for a few minutes, and she uld tease him and sing him a little song e had made up: "Jonno Taylor is a sleepy-ad; when it's time to get up, he goes to bed." e was used to waiting till noon to see her, it this morning he did wish she would wake . As soon as she was awake, he could ask r. Not ask her, exactly—just sort of hint ound and see what she said.

Not that he was worried about it, or any-ing. Of course he was going to get the dog. st because they hadn't mentioned it lately, at didn't mean anything. Just because gnes didn't think so ——

He turned around the corner of the house d went up on the back porch. And there, rled up in a chair, was his dog.

Betty Taylor was sitting up in bed sipping r black coffee; she looked grimly over the n of the cup at Glen as he came out of the ower.

"How you have the effrontery," she said, to come in here whistling at this unearthly ur, I do not know. Stop it at once."

"This unearthly hour," Glen said, bending er and kissing her dark, soft curls, "hap-ns to be nearly noon."

"It could be six in the evening," Betty id, "and I still wouldn't have had enough eep."

"Your trouble, my dear madam," Glen id, "is that you take this Christmas busi-ss too seriously. Did you ever stop to think at you don't really have to see every single iend you've got and wish them a Merry hristmas personally? That nobody's Christ-as would actually be ruined if you didn't t their present off on time? That nothing tal would happen if we didn't have an egg-g party every Christmas Eve?"

They both heard the noise at the same me; they stopped and listened, looking questioningly at each other, while the front door slammed, while Jonno's feet went pounding through the downstairs hall, came pounding up the stairs, came pounding toward their room.

"I seem to hear," Betty said, "the patter of tiny feet." And then she put her coffee cup down hastily as the door burst open and the boy and the dog came tumbling through it.

Jonno threw himself on her, for a moment too excited to do anything but hug her and bury his small face against her. Then he was off again in a flash, grabbing for the dog, letting the dog lick his face, holding him up so that he might lick her face too—half anxious to have her hold the dog, half unwilling to let him go.

He said, "Oh, mummy, he's exactly the one I wanted, he's the very kind I was hoping you'd get me. Look, he even knows his name already—here Spot, here boy, here Spot—look at him come, daddy."

They were both staring, in thunderstruck silence, at the dog. He was an enchanting pup: he had long soft ears and a smooth coat and a perpetually waving tail; his feet were many sizes too big for him, and he bumbled around the room with all a puppy's clumsiness and enthusiasm. But his eyes were brown and gentle; you could tell he was going to grow into a good steady dog. He was a small boy's dream of a puppy.

"Where," Betty said slowly, "did you get that?"

"He was asleep on the back porch." He looked at her anxiously. "You don't mind, do you, that I saw him before Christmas? It's almost Christmas anyway." He threw himself on her again. "Oh, mum, I don't care if I never get another thing, I wouldn't care if there wasn't another single present! He's the only thing I wanted!"

"But Jonno," Betty began. "Jonno, dear ——" Over the top of his head she saw Glen signaling to her, and she stopped.

Glen cleared his throat. "He's just a pup, Jonno," he said. "Sometimes pups don't have very good manners. Er—perhaps you'd better take him out for a while."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mary . . . BY ETHEL BARNETT DE VITO

Before the Journey to Bethlehem

Now I am blessed with patience these last days
More than my meet, it seems, and
Joseph says
All things indulge me: every stick and stone
Now shares the end that once was his alone.

Such talk recalls Elizabeth once more:
Months gone I bode with her and taxed her sore
By being always curious to know
Why we two cousins might be favored so,
Till she said softly, "Dwell not on this thing.
None come to praise the robe that cloaks the king
And so the cup where golden wine brims high
Bears, and forbears to think on whence and why."
Sweet, wise Elizabeth: She could not stir
But my admiring eyes must follow her.
I thought I glimpsed her but the other day
And though I knew that she was far away
So lost was I in what I wished might be,
I called her thrice before it came to me
It was a stream I gazed in, I alone,
And the joyous face I saw therein, mine own.

I must make Joseph's supper, it grows late.
Dear Joseph, how he bears with my foolish prate.
Once I said even if I did not know
My son would shine, I still would know it so,
For not as other men, so it is told,
Is the son of a mother young and father old.
And he said, "What older Father could there be
Or mother younger and more fair than thee?"
And touched my hair so gently that,
with surprise,
I felt unbidden tears start in my eyes.
Perhaps for such as this, I do not know,
Or perhaps again I only think it so,
But it seems to me beneath the rustling trees
That never have shone so starry nights as these.

Christmas Snowballs—Frost cupcakes or balls of angel food cake with fluffy white icing, then snow them under with Baker's Coconut. Set a gay Christmas candle in each glistening snowball.

(Look for coconut holiday excitements in bakeries and fine food shops, too. Make 'em or buy 'em—or both! Then maybe you'll have enough to go around.)

Whe-e-ee! There's coconut this Christmas!

DAZZLING, snowy Baker's Coconut! It looks like Christmas—and this year it's here in old-time Christmas plenty!

Drift its luscious whiteness in a bowl filled with fresh-cut orange slices! Swirl it high on lavishly iced cakes for your Christmas table.

Fold it into your macaroon batter . . . for moist, tender macaroon wreaths to hang on the tree! Fill gift boxes with your own home-made candy . . . crunchy-sweet and chewy with tender-fresh Baker's Coconut!

Tint your Baker's Coconut. Toast it! Sprinkle it—always luscious and freshly-moist—on a horde of holiday surprises! Want some ideas . . .?

Send for new Glamour Recipe Book! Full of beautiful ideas for parties and every day. Send 10¢ to Baker's Coconut, Box LHJ22, Battle Creek, Mich.

Quick Coconut Macaroons—Combine 1½ cups Baker's Shredded Coconut and ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar and mix well. Beat 1 egg white with a dash of salt until stiff but not dry. Add to coconut mixture and blend. Drop from teaspoon on greased baking sheet, bake at 350° 15 minutes, or until golden brown. Makes 12 tender, flavorful macaroons.

BAKER'S COCONUT

Grocers have two kinds of Baker's Coconut—Baker's Southern Style (so good it seems like fresh-shredded coconut, sweetened) and Baker's Premium Shred (more moist and tender than ever before). Both superb coconut . . . and both delicious!

FLUFF-DRI CLOTHES

Sweet as fresh-cut Clover in minutes—not hours!

You'll breeze through washday when you get your Hamilton Automatic Clothes Dryer. You'll save hours. You'll not have to struggle with heavy baskets, nor cope with clothespins, clotheslines and props.

What'll you care if the weather's rainy or murky, or the air's dusty or smoky? You dry indoors!

Your Hamilton will be waiting to tumble your clothes fluffy-dry in a matter of minutes, ever so gently and quietly. Put them in right from your wringer—flick the switch and—go read a poem, or phone to Myrtle. Your Hamilton will turn itself off when the drying's done.

Your clothes will dry wrinkle-free (towels and such won't need the touch of an iron!). They'll be sanitized, too, by a powerful ultra-violet sun-lamp, and sweetly freshened with sunshine-and-breeze ozone. They'll smell like the very breath of Spring.

You'll vote the whole deal the smartest step you ever made—or almost. Don't you want to hear more about it? Then do see your Hamilton dealer. (For his name, call Western Union—Operator 25.) HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CO., TWO RIVERS, WIS.

Dry clothes indoors, automatically, any time!

In Canada the Hamilton Dryer is known as the Coffield-Hamilton Automatic Clothes Dryer, and distributed by Coffield Washer Co., Hamilton, Ont.

Hamilton Automatic CLOTHES DRYER

GAS AND ELECTRIC MODELS

Jonno picked the dog up and started to run out; at the door he paused. "I told Agnes I was going to get him!" he said triumphantly. "I told her you wouldn't forget about him!" Then he went tearing out and down the stairs almost as noisily as he had come up.

Glen walked over and closed the door; then, for a minute, they stared at each other helplessly.

"Good heavens!" Betty said at last. "But I didn't even know he wanted a dog!"

"He did mention it," Glen said, "but I didn't think he meant it." He lit a cigarette, shaking the match out angrily. "You and I, Mrs. Taylor," he said, "deserve to be paddled."

"And to think how I shopped," Betty said, "for some toy he didn't already have! And all the time all he wanted was a dog."

"You haven't yet taken in how bad this is," Glen said. "Don't you realize that dog must have an owner?"

Betty stared at him, her eyes round and dark in her distress.

"It's a good dog," Glen said. "A beagle, and a nice one. A good hunting dog. And just how are we going to explain to Jonno when the owner turns up and claims him?"

"Oh, no!" Betty said. "Oh, no, it couldn't happen! Glen, we should have explained right away! I tried to, and you stopped me. Oh, Glen, it's terrible! Why didn't you let me explain?"

"I couldn't," he said miserably. "He was too happy."

"I know," Betty said. She looked away; she said, a little hesitantly, "He was acting the way a little boy should act."

"Yes," Glen said, and touched her shoulder gently. They were both so friendly, so much at ease with the world; they had never been able to understand why Jonno was not—why he lived as he did, shut up inside himself, afraid to come out. It was something that they seldom mentioned, and, most of the time, tried not to think about. "Maybe the dog will help," Glen said. He turned away from her suddenly and started dressing hastily.

"What are you going to do?" Betty said.

"I am going to find out who owns the dog," Glen said, "and offer him everything I own, almost up to and including you, my dear, if he will let us keep the dog."

When Lincoln Steffens tried to explain to Judge Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, why workers do not always appreciate welfare work and prefer to get all that is coming to them in cash, he asked the judge for the privilege of living in the latter's apartment in the Waldorf the next time the judge took a vacation.

"What will you do?" asked the puzzled Gary, thinking of the works of art and expensive furnishings.

Steffens explained that he would replace the furniture with pieces more to his taste, do over the walls and floors and discard the paintings. "When you return," said he, "you will be amazed. It will be a costly change because I will be spending your money. But I will do it for your good, and better than you could possibly do it."

The judge interrupted, "I see. That's it, is it?"

"Yes," said Steffens, "That's welfare work."

It wasn't hard to find out who owned the dog; not many people around there had beagles. He belonged, it seemed, to a family named Slater who lived a few miles out of town, and Glen felt a great deal better as soon as he heard that. The Slaters were poor, and they owned a lot of dogs. Surely they would be more than glad to sell one.

The Slaters lived in an enormous, crumbling old house that once had been a show place; a driveway a quarter of a mile long, lined with dogwood trees, led up to a white-brick Georgian house with many chimneys. They once had owned the land for miles around the house, but most of it had been sold now, a small lot at a time. They had kept just enough to farm in a casual sort of way, enough to make them a meager living. There was always a lot of life around the old Slater house; there were chickens and geese and a cow and four children, and yet as you drove by you got the impression that the place was part of something that was dead and gone.

Glen did not bother taking the dog with him when he drove out to see Mr. Slater. In the first place, he would have had to explain it to Jonno; in the second, he was certain that the Slaters would be willing to sell. He had been ready to pay a quite unreasonable amount for the dog, if necessary; now that he knew he was dealing with the Slaters he realized that he could offer quite a small sum. Twenty-five dollars would be a fair price for the dog, and it would seem like a lot of money to the Slaters.

As he turned into the driveway the dogwood trees, without leaves or blossoms, looked scrawny and sad; on this cold day neither chickens nor geese were there to flutter out of the way of the car, and everything about the place seemed dreary and deserted. What a way to live, Glen thought, and he stood whistling, his back to the door, after he had thumped the ancient knocker.

Mr. Slater himself answered. In Glen's mind the entire transaction was going to take place right there on the doorstep; he was going to explain what he wanted, turn over the money, and start for home. It was as simple as that. But Mr. Slater's courteous, almost stately greeting changed it entirely. Looking at him, you could see why the farming was done in so careless a manner; this man should have been sitting in his study writing his memoirs, not trying to farm. He was a tall, thin man, rather stooped, with beautiful, delicately boned hands. His eyes were blue and keen, but his mouth was kind and humorous.

He said, "Come in, sir, come in. No need to stand in the cold."

It was exactly as cold inside the house as out. Glen followed Mr. Slater through the wide hall; his eyes took in, without meaning to, the gracious curve of the stair rail and the beautifully proportioned stairs. Surprisingly, everything was clean and in perfect order. There was little furniture, but what there was would have made Betty, who loved antiques, quite speechless with envy.

"I hope you don't mind," Mr. Slater said, "coming back to our sitting room. Mrs. Slater has not been well; she doesn't often come as far as the drawing room."

Glen did not mind at all; in three minutes in that drawing room, he felt, a man could easily freeze to death.

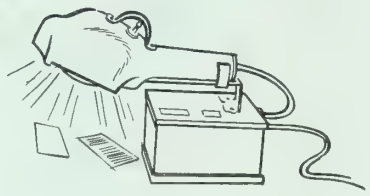
The sitting room was, actually, only one end of the enormous kitchen. It must originally have been the cooking, or business, end of the room; there was a large fireplace with an iron crane in it, and a Dutch oven. A merry fire was burning, and beside it, her feet on a stool, sat a lady. Once you had said that, you had described her. Her hair was quite white now, and she looked thin and tired, but as you looked at her clear-cut features you knew you were looking at all that was left of a great beauty. Glen bent over her hand, feeling that he should raise it to his lips.

She said, smiling up at him, "You will forgive our informality. There is so much to be done, and we like to be back here while it is going on; it gives us all a chance to be together."

She looked across, smiling, at the other end of the room. A coal stove was going full blast, and a pretty girl stood at a large square table, rolling out piecrust.

"My oldest daughter, Catherine," Mrs. Slater said, and the girl smiled and said, "How do you do," as graciously as though she were in evening dress, and had no flour on the tip of her pretty nose. She had a surprisingly deep voice; just hearing it, you guessed that she could sing. "And Bradford and Victoria," Mrs. Slater said. "Children, up, please—and Kevin."

(Continued on Page 80)



VISI-FLECTS

—a great boon to women!

BY MARY McCAY

Who would think that an invention used in sweeping mines during the war would prove a great boon to every woman who ever does any laundry? Not I.

BUT IT HAS. It's called Visi-flects and it brings a brand-new principle to the old problem of laundering clothes. Different from soaps, or detergents, or bleaches, or blues, or water softeners, or what have you. It's wonderful. Let's see how it works.

To a physics professor (and to you and me, though we may not know it) white clothes are white because they reflect light. Colored clothes are bright because they reflect light. The more reflection, the whiter or brighter.

But not all light is visible to the naked eye. Ultra-violet and infra-red, for instance... two names every sun lamp owner or camera fan knows. Those are kinds of light you can't see.

But what if you discovered a scientific compound ... one which would turn invisible light into visible light? Wouldn't it make white clothes brighter than they were before, by adding whiteness? It would.

And wouldn't such a compound make colored clothes brighter than they were before, by adding brightness? It would.

A European chemist asked those questions, came up with the answers and invented the compound. It is called Visi-flects because it makes invisible light reflect so you can see it. It was used in the war by both sides. Minesweepers used it, for example, to make the flags on their floats easier to see at a distance. If you have a navy son or brother, he'll tell you.

But after the war some General Foods chemists asked themselves a question. Would it be possible to find a method of application for Visi-flects, so simple any housewife could use it?

If so, any woman could keep white clothes as white as new, or even whiter ... could keep colored clothes as bright as new, or even brighter! This would be entirely apart from soap's function of removing dirt, entirely apart from bleaches' function of removing stubborn stains.

They found the answer! They perfected a compound of Visi-flects which they called Luminess. And they added Luminess to an old established bluing product called La France, which millions of women were familiar with, and which was as easy to use as adding salt to a recipe or putting sugar in coffee.

Whee!—say I, who have hated washing all my life. And hated the way clothes kept getting dingier and duller.

All you have to do to use Visi-flects in improving the appearance of your wash is to add a little La France to your soap or detergent. It takes 10 seconds to do. It's harmless to fabrics. It works perfectly in washer or washtub. Presto! Your whites are whiter, your colors are brighter! Luminess — it's wonderful!

Remember, this is not a matter of splitting the fine points of difference in the cleansing power of two soaps or detergents. This is a brand-new principle. This is a radical departure. This is whiter and brighter clothes with almost no effort ... clothes which keep on improving in whiteness and brightness over the same clothes right off the store shelf.

Praise to science, say I. Hail to New La France with Luminess! Every woman who wants to better the looks of her wash should try it for a month. You'll see a great difference, I promise you.

And all it costs is 2 to 3 cents a week. Try new La France with Luminess! A product of General Foods.

Richer Cream Style Corn -you can eat it with a fork

Del Maiz Brand Cream Style Corn is taste-fun by the forkful. (It's not the soupy kind—you can actually eat it with a fork.) Tender, golden kernels in their own rich cream. Same fine freshness in every can. Look for the Green Giant on the label.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

"Del Maiz" and "Green Giant" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © MVCo.

Del Maiz CREAM STYLE Corn
BRAND

The Minnesota Valley Canning Co., headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ont.
ALSO PACKERS OF GREEN GIANT BRAND PEAS

(Continued from Page 78)

Two children, possibly ten, both equally blond and handsome, scrambled up from the floor where they had been sitting cutting out strips of red paper; and a lanky boy of sixteen unfolded himself, with amazing slowness, from the floor near the fireplace.

"Kevin, a chair," Mrs. Slater murmured, "and one for your father."

Barely moving from where he stood, the boy shot out one long arm, picked a chair up as though it weighed nothing, and put it near Glen. It was a fine old ladder-back, almost entirely held together by string. It was as complete a patching job as Glen had ever seen, and when he sat down on it he was relieved to see that the patching job was also successful.

"Let me see, now," Mrs. Slater said. "You live on . . . Pine Street, is it?"

"Oak Street," Glen said.

"Oh, yes," she said, gently apologetic, as though she should have known, although both of them knew that there was no earthly reason for her knowing. "I used to have such a dear friend who lived on Oak Street," she said. "Long before your time, I'm afraid. . . . You remember, Theodore, the Russells—her mother was a Calhoun ——"

Her voice, so soft and clear it was almost like music, went on with an inconsequential story out of the unimportant past. Glen knew he should have explained what he wanted and brought the visit to a close, but for some reason there did not seem to be any hurry. Mrs. Slater created her own atmosphere around her, an atmosphere of leisurely courtesy; she wore it as gracefully, and almost as visibly, as the Paisley shawl she wore around her thin, straight shoulders.

"Kevin, another log," she murmured, and the boy, again almost without moving, took a log from the pile and threw it on the fire. It blazed at once, with a small rush of sweet-smelling smoke.

The first art of being a parent consists in sleeping when the baby isn't looking.

"Cherry wood," Mr. Slater said. "The sweetest-burning wood there is."

Glen looked more closely at the woodpile. He could see that wood around here was a precious commodity; along with the few cherry logs there were pieces of broken fence rails, the leg of a chair, and even small twigs that somebody had laboriously picked up. He thought of the logs that went into his own fireplace—long, massive logs, almost too heavy to lift, ready to be fed into a fireplace that was seldom, if ever, used. The house was warm without it, and the huge logs threw off too much heat.

"Chekhov," Mrs. Slater said suddenly.

Glen looked around, wondering if it was the name of another child or if she had simply taken leave of her senses; she saw his start of surprise and smiled at him.

"The Cherry Orchard, you know," she said. "I always felt so sorry for them, having to destroy their cherry orchard because they needed money. And now here we sit, destroying our own orchard because we need to be warm." She did not say it in a complaining way; she seemed rather to be stating an interesting, academic fact.

"But we still have plenty of cherries, mamma," Kevin said.

She smiled at him. "Yes, dear, we do." She turned to Glen. "Do let us send you some next summer," she said. "We have so many."

It occurred to Glen that it would have been more sensible to say that they would like to sell him some of the cherries; if they sold enough cherries they might be able to buy some firewood, and so save the cherry trees. He did not suggest it. For one thing, it was none of his business. For another, he knew without thinking about it that it was impossible. You could not imagine Mr. Slater selling cherries from door to door. For Mr. Slater it would be far more important to give the cherries away, a cordial gesture, and to burn up his trees if he chose to.

The question of selling, though, had come back into Glen's mind, and he told them about the dog. They listened courteously to the whole story about Jonno's thinking the dog was his Christmas present; they smiled sympathetically as he tried to describe the child's delight and excitement. When he came to the end and said he would like to buy the dog, he was upset to see that Mr. Slater looked both disturbed and thoughtful. He took off his glasses, blew on them, and polished them before he answered. Then he said:

"The trouble is, sir, the amount the dog is worth."

Glen was prepared for that. "The price really isn't important," he began.

"He's not worth a great deal," Mr. Slater said. "And so I'd far rather give him to you."

"But that's not what I meant at all!" Glen said.

"You see," Mr. Slater said, "I don't have papers for the sire. I have papers for Brownie—that's the mother—but the pups can't be registered. A dog without papers doesn't bring much money. And for a small amount of money, sir, it's silly to do business. It's better to keep things on a friendly basis."

Glen could only sit and look at him, not able to answer for a minute. It was a nice philosophy, certainly. It was also the philosophy that was reducing the house to ruins, and was changing a cherry orchard into firewood.

He looked at Mrs. Slater. Her beautiful face was as placid as ever; it expressed nothing except quiet agreement. He understood then, a little, the complete repose and serenity in her face. Her orchard might be going, but she still had all she believed in.

He looked around the shabby kitchen. He thought of the Christmas preparations that were going on at home: of the big tree with its many lights; of the yards of garlands strung all through the hall; of the closets bulging with presents—presents for everybody, even the milkman and the postman, because that was what Betty liked to do at Christmas. He thought of all that, and compared it with this poor house, and he felt an overwhelming urge to change things here. These people, in their queer way, were far too nice to be having a dreary Christmas.

He said, slowly, "I see what you mean, Mr. Slater. I like to have things on a friendly basis too. But I must ask you to consider my feelings."

The Slaters looked startled. It was obviously surprising to be accused of being inconsiderate.

"You see," Glen said, "the dog is worth a great deal to me. There isn't enough money to pay for what that dog did for my little boy this morning. And if I let you give me something that's so important to me, then I would always be indebted to you. And I hate to feel indebted."

Mr. Slater nodded. "I hadn't thought of it that way," he said. "I know how you feel."

"So, if you don't mind, I'd rather pay you for the dog," Glen said. He opened his wallet and took out some money; he handed it to Mr. Slater without counting it, and Mr. Slater took it without counting it or looking at it. "You have no idea," Glen said, "how much better I feel now," and Mrs. Slater smiled and said:

"I'm glad."

He stayed only a few more minutes after that, wrapping himself up for the cold trip home.

"It was a pleasure to have you come in," Mrs. Slater said. "You must come again, and bring your little boy to play with the children. Bring his dog too. We can supply companions for both of them."

"He doesn't usually like to go to new places," Glen said, "but I think, if he could bring his dog with him, he'd probably come." He bent over her hand again. "Thank you, Mrs. Slater."

Mr. Slater took him to the door; the two young Slaters waved from the kitchen win-

(Continued on Page 82)

ACTUAL PHOTOGRAPH OF A JANE PARKER FRUIT CAKE

M-m-m... U-m-m! Imagine!
Over 2/3 of every cake is fruit and nuts—
M-m-m... U-m-m... Yummy!

Jane Parker
AMERICA'S MOST POPULAR
FRUIT CAKE
AT ALL A&P FOOD STORES
MADE BY THE BAKERS OF QUALITY-RICH MARVEL BREAD

A&P

An open letter about Perfume

Many women and men are not sure of the right perfume to choose for themselves or for a gift.

It is easy to choose a good and refined perfume.

The first guiding rule is simple: be discriminating, and be sure that the fragrance is a genuinely pleasant one to you.

Anyone can recognize a pleasant odor. Be sure the fragrance you select would please you, even if it were not a "perfume",—for instance, if it were a flower. Moreover, be guided only by the feeling of well-being, delight and luxury the fragrance gives you.

A perfume should be lasting, but more important yet, it should be refined—a PLUS, not a MINUS to your personality. A good perfume should be lasting yet refined.

A refined and good perfume will add to your personality and charm; it will give you a feeling of well-being, delight and luxury, and will create an atmosphere of happiness around yourself.

Never forget that you will be remembered by your perfume.

PRESIDENT
COTY, INC.

(Continued from Page 80)

dow as he got in the car, and even Kevin actually moved far enough from the fireplace to stand beside them and wave a little too.

It didn't seem nearly so cold as it had when he came. Maybe that was because of the way he felt; he felt warm and good, and really like Christmas. He didn't know exactly how much money he had given them, but he knew it was well over a hundred dollars. A hundred dollars in that poor house on the day before Christmas—he could imagine what they would do with it. The biggest tree that money would buy, and boxes of bright new ornaments. Presents for everybody, of course, where there had been no presents before. And food—a turkey, of course, and sweets of all kinds for the children. He could picture it all; he only wished he could be there to see it. Just thinking about it, and telling Betty about it, would make their own Christmas better.

He stopped whistling suddenly. They would have a big Christmas, of course; they always did. There would be people coming and going, and many presents, and a big dinner, and all the excitement and fun that Betty loved to pack into Christmas. But, except for a lucky accident, it would have been a terrible Christmas for Jonno. He had wanted a dog more than anything in the world, and they hadn't even known about it.

We ought to do better than that, he thought. The trouble was that there was so little time; always so much to do and so little time. But when you got to the point where you didn't even know what your own child was pining for—then you had to stop and do better.

Jonno had never been an easy child to get close to, but it had never been this bad before. They would have to find the time now to see more of him; to play games with him and take walks with him and read books to him. They would have to see to it that he saw more of them and less of Agnes. They would have to get much closer to him. It was important.

It was important, and he was certain they could do it. He thought of all the things they had on their side—they had youth, and money, and Betty's wonderful, brimming vitality. He thought of Mrs. Slater, who had neither youth nor money nor even health, and it made him almost humble to think of how much he and Betty had, if they just knew how to use it.

HE remembered what Mrs. Slater had said: "We like to be back here, it gives us all a chance to be together." That was the thing about them; they were together. That was something they had shown him that, in the end, might be just as important to Jonno as the dog.

He was more pleased than ever to think of the wonderful Christmas he had given them.

Back in the kitchen, Mr. Slater lifted the old sugar bowl down from the high shelf and put the money in it. "He gave us a lot too much," he said, "but I know it made him feel good."

"What are you going to do with it?" Mrs. Slater asked.

"I don't know," he said. "Things keep coming up. There's nothing special right now." He looked across at her. "How about you, my dear? Is there anything in particular you'd like?"

She studied the fire, frowning a little in her concentration. "There really isn't anything in particular," she said at last. "Just little things, that don't really matter. I'd like to have the piano tuned, Theodore, it's really dreadful—and—oh, yes!" She smiled, suddenly pleased that she had thought of it. "I would like to have that dent taken out of my silver teapot; it's such a little thing, but it always annoys me."

"We'll do it," he said. "You shan't be annoyed any longer."

"We don't have to think about it now," she said. "We've got enough to think about, today and tomorrow."

SHE sat on by the fire, thinking of what had to be done, checking the things off in her mind. The twins had finished stringing the popcorn and the cranberries for the tree; they had made yards and yards of chains out of red paper and silver, and they had made tiny paper lanterns, as her mother had taught her to do when she was little, to hang on the tips of the branches. The goose—a good fat one—was already killed and plucked; it was in the cold closet now, just ready for the stuffing. Catherine was nearly finished with the pies, and she could tell by the smell that they were going to be good; the mincemeat had turned out especially well this year.

Later in the day they would all start out, in their heavy boots and their warm coats, and walk into the woods to cut the tree. Every year until this one she had been able to go with them; perhaps she would be able to next year. Whether she went or not, she knew just how it would be; she knew the way the light crust of snow would crunch under their feet, and how bright and clear all their voices would be in the sharp stillness of the woods. She knew how the tree would smell when they brought it in, fresh and sweet, so that just smelling it seemed invigorating. Their tree was always so fresh that they dared to burn candles on it, using the little clip holders that she had used when she was a little girl. When the candles were all lighted, on Christmas Eve, the whole tree seemed to be alive with light, and by its brilliance the whole family would stand around the square piano and sing Silent Night.

Everything was ready; everything was just the way it should have been at this hour of this day: the way it had been every year before, and the way it would be again. The only thing that had been different about it had been the call from the strange young man, and he was gone.

"Who did you say that young man was?" she said. "I didn't quite place him."

"You know, mamma," Catherine said. "They're the ones that bought the Duvernoy place. They have that little boy that stands there at the gate all the time, and looks so lonely, but if you say hello to him he's too shy to answer—you know the one."

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Slater said. "Those people." She looked thoughtful for a minute. "Well, I'm glad he got his dog, at least," she said. She looked at the pie Catherine was sliding out of the oven: brown and crisp, a small circle of perfection. "I wonder what people like that do for Christmas, anyway?" she said.

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

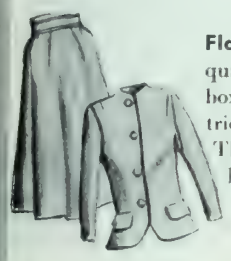
Song by Night Light

By Gladys McKee

Who can cling as soft, as tight
As a small child wakened, scared at night?
Who can lie as still, as warm
As close to your heart, curved to your arm?
Who quiet so quickly into a dream
And leave you waking, binding a seam
For the sly tomorrows that slit the sky,
So swiftly do nights such as these go by?
How shape a haven to last the length
Of the way he must go, to match the strength
He will need for world faring, how still the fears
He must know and face down the road of years?
Faith is the seamstress, stitching a part
Of this love and light . . . bright shield for his heart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Look what a woman can do with a Christmas present like this!



She can iron up to half the clothes without dampening when she has a General Electric Combination Dry and Steam Iron. She can whizz through light cottons, crepes, silks and synthetics without first sprinkling!

A crisp chambray dress, for instance, is a real pleasure to iron with the G-E Combination Dry and Steam Iron. With the steam control turned on, wrinkles simply disappear as the iron glides over the fabric.

Woolen suits can be ironed to tailor-like perfection without a pressing cloth. And there will be no shine, either! The General Electric Combination Dry and Steam Iron permits ironing with as much steam—or as little—as is wanted.

Flannel skirts and jackets can be quickly and easily renewed to bandbox freshness with the General Electric Iron. No sprinkling necessary. The fabric is simply steam-ironed at low temperature.

Cotton suits are ironed best with a dry iron after dampening. The G-E Combination Dry and Steam Iron becomes a dry iron when the steam control knob is turned off. You can switch from steam to dry ironing and back again without removing the water.

Expensive silks and sheer fabrics need not be an ironing worry. The General Electric Combination Dry and Steam Iron has the famous "Dial the Fabric" control that gives the correct temperature for each fabric when ironing dry.

Even marked velvets and velveteens become fresh, downy soft! Just place the material next to a turkish towel, and iron ever so lightly with full steam on the back of the velvet. It fluffs up like new!

This Christmas, present her with the remarkable

G-E COMBINATION DRY AND STEAM IRON

$17.95

She can iron with ease...press like a tailor...

WITH THE GENERAL ELECTRIC COMBINATION DRY AND STEAM IRON!

WHEN SHE SEES this remarkable General Electric Combination Dry and Steam Iron, you will know from her enthusiasm that it is one of the finest gifts you could have chosen.

This gleaming, streamlined beauty is two irons in one . . . a dry iron and a steam iron. It cuts ironing time, makes ironing a real joy.

She can iron with as much steam—or as little—as she desires. Or, she can iron perfectly dry. All she need do is turn the steam-control knob!

And note this: There's no bulky boiler on this streamlined beauty. Instead, this iron has a small reservoir from which water—one drop at a time—instantly turns into steam as the iron is used.

So drop in to your G-E retailer's for this timesaving gift. We predict she will thank you all year long for being so very, very thoughtful!

General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut. Price subject to change without notice.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Christmas Table Topper-the Fir

SWANS DOWN FIR TREE CAKE

Eyes will glow like Christmas candles . . . as your cake knife lifts out the first tender brown slice, shows the luscious, light inside that's Swans Down's own miracle!

No lingering long in the kitchen away from fun—it's a Swans Down "Mix-Easy." Guaranteed—but not with any other flour!

Preparations. Have the shortening at room temperature. Line bottoms of two deep 9-inch layer pans with paper; grease. Start oven for moderate heat (350° F.). Sift flour once.

Measure into sifter:

2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
1⅓ cups granulated sugar, or 1½ cups firmly packed brown sugar

Measure into mixing bowl:

½ cup shortening

Measure into cup:

*Milk (see below for amount)
1 teaspoon vanilla

Have ready:

2 eggs, unbeaten
3 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate, melted

*With butter, margarine, or lard, use ⅞ cup milk. With vegetable or any other shortening, use 1 cup milk.

Now—Swans Down's "Mix-Easy" Part!

(Mix by hand or at a low speed of electric mixer.) Stir shortening just to soften. No creaming! Sift in dry ingredients. Add ¾ cup of the milk and mix until all flour is dampened. Then be 2 minutes. Add eggs, melted chocolate, a remaining milk and beat 1 minute longer. Bea ing cut in half! And fewer dishes to wash! (Cou only actual beating time. Or count beatin strokes. Allow about 150 full strokes per minut Scrape bowl and spoon often.)

Baking. Turn batter into pans. Bake in modera oven (350° F.) about 30 minutes. Spread seve minute frosting between layers and on top ar sides of cake.

How to decorate the Fir Tree Cake

Cut Christmas trees out of slices of citron an color green with vegetable coloring. Inse toothpick stems and arrange on cake. Or us Christmas tree-shaped lollipops or gumdrop

Bake a better cake with Swans

...ree Cake!

First-Time Offer! Featuring Wear-Ever Pans!

2 Wear-Ever aluminum cake pans!

50 waxed paper pan liners!

1 Rubbermaid bowl scraper!

1 set of aluminum measuring spoons!

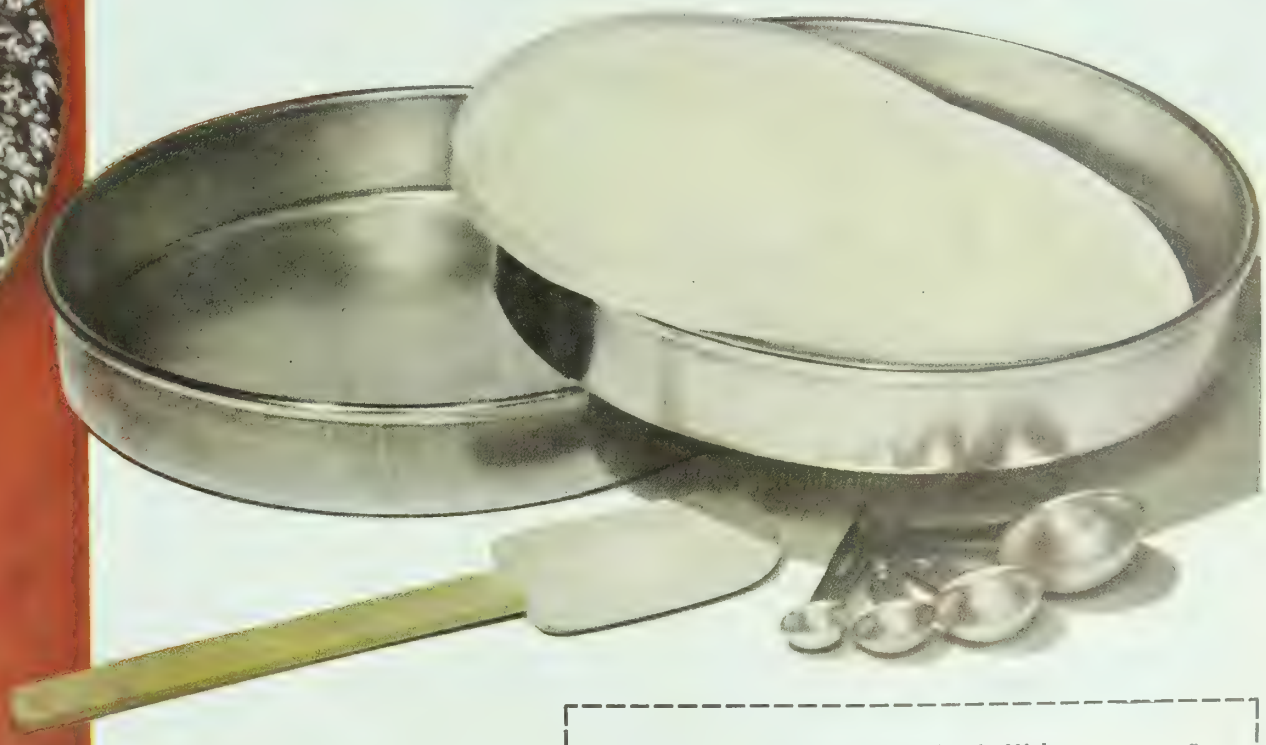
ALL YOURS FOR ONLY

$1.00

and picture of Swans Down package cut from recipe folder insert.

Here's an offer a cake-fancier like you will want to snatch up!

It brings you a just-what-you've-wanted cake baking set—inspiration to tie on your apron and start cake baking!



Always a pleasure when you use wonderful Swans Down. More women use Swans Down than any other packaged cake flour in America!

Look! Two Wear-Ever Aluminum 8-inch layer pans—made of lifetime heavy-gauge aluminum that conducts heat fast and evenly, assures just-right crust and even texture!

Plus 50 pan-size waxed paper pan liners—no greasing needed—your cake floats out without sticking!

PLUS a Rubbermaid bowl scraper and set of accurate aluminum measuring spoons!

Simply get your package of Swans Down and tear off the picture of the Swans Down package on the recipe insert. Mail with a dollar. Allow three weeks for delivery.

...Down!

HURRY!

GET YOUR CAKE BAKING SET NOW! MAIL COUPON TODAY!

Swans Down, Dept. R, Battle Creek, Mich. L

For the enclosed dollar and picture of Swans Down package cut from recipe insert, please send me my Cake-baking Set, consisting of 2 Wear-Ever 8-inch layer pans, 50 pan liners, 1 Rubbermaid scraper, 1 set measuring spoons. (Offer may be withdrawn without notice if supplies are not available. Good only in the U.S.A. This offer void in any state, municipality or locality where prohibited, taxed, or otherwise restricted.)

NAME_____

STREET_____

TOWN OR CITY_____ STATE_____

Allow 3 weeks for delivery. Offer expires February 1st, 1949

ARVIN Lectric Cook

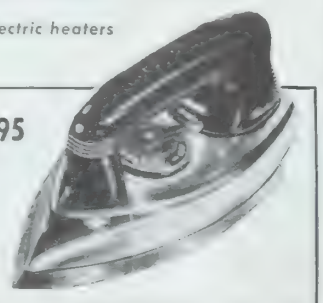
GRILLS! FRIES!
BAKES! TOASTS!

$27.95



Here's the gift of gifts for everybody who cooks! Arvin Lectric Cook is beautiful to look at, useful for all occasions. Its double cooking area equals 3 ten-inch skillets — big enough to serve a hungry family or a large party without keeping anybody waiting. Converts in seconds to a fully automatic waffle baker. Built for years of dependable service. Underwriters' listed. See the Arvin Lectric Cook at your dealer's!

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC., COLUMBUS, INDIANA

Also makers of Arvin radios and Arvin electric heaters

Top quality at a low price!
ARVIN AUTOMATIC IRON $10.95

Less weight, less effort—the even heat does the work. Faster heating, faster stepdown saves ironing time. Plain-view heat control for all fabrics. Cool comfort-grip handle. A modern iron at a money-saving price!

Homemade Christmas . . .

BY NORA O'LEARY

Amusing BEANBAGS with clown faces in three different sizes. Felt makes eyes, ears, nose, mouth; yarn for the hair. 2516.

Easy-to-make RAG DOLL dressed in peasant clothes. Made in two pieces, stitched at joints for movement, cotton-stuffed. 2517.

Oilcloth BLOCKS buttonhole-stitched together, cotton stuffed. Each a different size, color. Transparent drawstring bag. 2518.

Terry cloth BABY BIBS trimmed with rickrack. One has baby's name, other a ship design, crisscrossing in back. 2519.

Amusing ANIMALS in durable plastic fabric. Yarn embroidery gives dimensional effect. They sit up! Dog, 2520; elephant, 2521.

15¢ for each pattern. Order by number from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Mother's Love IS NOT ENOUGH

WHEN A CHILD IS FRAIL AND NERVOUS

Here's something practical you can do to help him—today!

The more you love him, the more desperately you want him to be tall, strong and happy. So it is well to remember, when a child becomes frail and nervous or underweight, the most common correctable cause is faulty nutrition. And this cause is one which you, the mother, can do something about.

In situations like this, many mothers are now turning to Ovaltine. Because Ovaltine contains a very wide variety and scope of food elements, both common and rare. Particularly those elements that are most apt to be lacking in the daily diet.

For Ovaltine, mixed with milk, is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes of an otherwise "good" diet. It contains, in addition to essential high-quality proteins and quick-energy foods the important vitamins A, B_1, C, D, G, Niacin, and the valuable minerals Iron, Calcium and Phosphorus.

It is also important to know that Ovaltine is specially processed to make it very easy to digest. A child with a "delicate" stomach will usually digest and absorb Ovaltine very readily. Ovaltine even makes milk more easy to digest.

So when you give two to three glasses of Ovaltine a day, plus normal meals, you can be certain that you have done just about everything you can do to improve your child's nutrition.

A New Flavor

Ovaltine is available in plain and in an improved, sweet, chocolate flavor which children really like —an important consideration in getting children to take the nourishment they need.

So, why not give your child Ovaltine every day for 30 or 60 days and carefully note the results. When you consider all the food values which Ovaltine supplies, you will find it economical.

OVALTINE

SWEET CHOCOLATE FLAVORED AND PLAIN

let's give a party!

Come and get it!

Party-giving's fun, when lighthearted furniture welcomes gay gatherings. Like this graceful table, topped with plastic for easy care and hard wear. That smart mother-of-pearl pattern's brand-new. So are the richly padded dining chairs, with their comfortable spring cushions. Upholstered in Duran, pertly piped for sheer cheer! (Did you know every inch of Daystrom furniture is washable?)

Restful as a yawn!

Pamper your guests (and yourself, too!) with the lazy luxury of these lounge chairs. There's comfort in those spring cushions, and a long-wearing future in the colorful upholstery. All Daystrom furniture is designed for comfort and real livability, in sleek, clean-lined electroplated chrome.

The heart of the party!

The kitchen, of course! And lucky the lass with a kitchen table like this, that doubles for heavy duty and cheerful beauty. That plastic top is Daystrom's own. It begs for hard wear—shrugs off scratches and stains—swishes clean with a damp cloth. Be sure it's Daystrom. At furniture and department stores everywhere.

-it's DAYSTROM furniture!

DAYSTROM
AN ITT ASSOCIATE

furniture for casual living—featured by stores from coast to coast

Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N. Y.; Daystrom Pacific Division, Pasadena, Calif.

Don't worry! All Daystromite table tops are laminated plastic—resist heat, scratches, stains! They're even cigarette-proof!

CHRISTMAS AT WHITMAN'S MISSION

(Continued from Page 57)

Cathy nodded. "We know," she said.

"The doctor's going to preach a sermon at oon, just for us," Mrs. Whitman went on. I'm sure it'll be beautiful. Then we'll have big dinner. After dinner, the doctor's going o baptize some Indian children. Won't that e nice?" But they all just looked at her, so he said, a little impatiently, "All right, let's o in by the fireplace for a few minutes. I'll ead you the story about the three wise nen. . . . Now what, Cathy?"

"We—we meant just us," Cathy explained. "Just us orphans. We could sit there nd pretend that mommy was there too."

"No, no," Mrs. Whitman said. "That won't do at all. It isn't good for you to sit here and brood. It isn't healthy. Just remember that your dear father and mother are in heaven now. Someday you'll see them again, if you're good Christians, but meantime we have to make the best of it. It's God's will. Now, let's all just go to bed, eh?"

"You see, Cathy?" Johnny said. He mimicked Mrs. Whitman: "'It isn't good for you. It isn't healthy.' . . . Oh, I know we're not her kids. She didn't invite us here."

"Johnny!" Cathy said. "You better apologize to Mrs. Whitman."

"Oh, all right. I'm sorry, ma'am."

"I do the best I can, young man," Mrs. Whitman said. "I try to do my duty."

No, you couldn't argue with Mrs. Whitman. She was doing the best she could. She was doing her Christian duty. And still ——

Cathy just couldn't seem to get to sleep. She knew the boys weren't asleep, either, up in the attic. Cathy's bed was on the first floor, under the stairway. Her leg was better, but she couldn't climb stairs yet. The baby's crib was beside her, and the baby was asleep.

Cathy felt sorry for the boys and the three little girls, away up there in the east gable. They were right under the roof, and the wind sounded just like it did that night at Laramie when their mother died. Like it was blowing from beyond the desert where nobody lived—from beyond the high, cold mountains. Yes, from beyond the lonely stars.

Suddenly the stairs creaked above Cathy. She thought at first it was Doctor Whitman wrapped in a blanket, but it was Johnny. Francis was right behind him.

JOHNNY whispered, "Cathy! Are you awake?"

"Of course, Johnny. Quiet! Don't wake the baby."

"Come on. We're going to sit by the fireplace for a while."

"Oh, but we musn't," Cathy said. "Mrs. Whitman doesn't want us to."

"She's asleep up there. The doctor's snoring. Come on!"

"All right," Cathy said. "But take the baby too. And Francis, you go up and carry one of the little girls down. Johnny'll help you get the other two."

"But suppose they wake up?"

"They won't. They're too sound asleep. We've got to have all of us together, don't we? Wrap them all in blankets. Be careful with Helen. If she wakes up, she's liable to cough."

They were soon gathered by the fireplace. It was in a big alcove, just opposite the foot of the stairs. The doctor had hung two blankets over the opening, so it was like a warm cave even when the rest of the house was cold.

The coals left from some big logs were still glowing on the hearth. Cathy sat in a rocker at one side, holding the baby. There was a bench on the other side, against the wall, and they put the three little girls in a row there, still sound asleep. Then Johnny sat in one corner by the fireplace, his back to the wall, and Francis sat in the other. Boys were funny that way. When they were lonely—real lonely—they liked to sit in dark corners.

"WELL," Johnny said, clearing his throat, "we're all here. Just a mess of orphans, without any home. Now what?"

"Sh-h," Cathy said. "We musn't let the Whitmans hear us. Don't feel badly, Johnny. We're all together. They take care of us. They give us food. They give us a place to sleep."

"Just like the horses," Johnny said. "But what do they care about us?"

"Wait, Johnny," Francis said in a low voice. "We're gonna do some pretending. Aren't we, Cathy?"

"Yes, but sit quietly first. Let's think about mom and what she said to us that last night at Laramie. The wind was blowing just like this, remember?"

It had been dark in the wagon, too, with the end flaps drawn. Just the three of them had been in there with mom when she was ready to die. She had already said good-by to the little girls, and had touched the baby's cheek with her fingers, and the woman from the next wagon had taken them away. Now she was saying good-by to the big ones—Johnny and Francis and Cathy.

It was easy to remember what she said. All you had to do was close your eyes, and you could almost hear her whispering in the dark.

"You're going to be hungry sometimes, my dears. You'll be thirsty and cold. But don't be lonely, will you? I'll be near by, wherever you are. Remember that, won't you, Cathy?"

"Yes, mother."

"Poor Cathy! Your leg will get better."

"It's getting better. It only hurts when we go over rocks."

"You'll help Cathy with the little girls, won't you, Johnny?"

"Yeah. Sure, mom."

"Somebody will look out for you. They'll learn to love you. You're good boys and girls. . . . Cathy will have to be the little mother for a while. She's so little yet—and crippled—to do it alone. You'll help, won't you, Francis?"

"Yes, mother."

"There's so much to say. There's so little time. . . . Cathy! Can you hear me, Cathy?"

"Yes, mother."

"Cathy . . . they're liable to be pretty lonely on Christmas Eve. It'll be the first time we weren't all together. But I'll be there with you. I'll be near by. Remember that, Cathy . . . wherever you are."

Yes, it was easy to remember. In fact, it seemed to Cathy, as the embers died slowly—and glowed again, when the wind roared in the chimney—that her mother was there, close by. But the coals slowly turned to ashes on the hearth, so that only a pale glow

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Come Home, My Love

By Elizabeth McFarland

When winter winds about you storm,
Come home, my love; I'll keep you warm,
And I shall shelter you from harm.

When gardens of the world have died,
It will be summer by my side.
Come home, my love; I am your bride.

There is a fire in my breast,
And on that hearth your flame burns best;
For you are love, and loveliest

Are harbor days—no more to roam—
When love comes home.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Please address requests for Booklet to Dept. 612

Several times a day— this gift will say— Merry Christmas!

Yes, this is an ideal gift — a year 'round time-saver — for with only a few strokes, your Wagner whisks up all surface litter from any rug thickness. It's the only sweeper with Mov-O-Matic Combs that move in and out of the brush to keep it clean! Remember — only a clean brush can sweep clean. See your dealer. E. R. Wagner Mfg. Co., Dept. J, Milwaukee 9, Wis.

WAGNER KOMB-KLEANED SWEEPER

Better, Easier "PICK-UP"

© 1948

Better, Easier "PICK-UP" of thread and lint.

Better, Easier "PICK-UP" of litter and crumbs.

Better, Easier "PICK-UP" of hair and dirt.

lighted the walls and everybody was sitting in the darkness on each side.

"She isn't here," Johnny said suddenly. "She isn't here, I tell you!"

"Sh-h," Cathy whispered. "I think she is, Johnny."

"All right, then. . . . Mom! Where are you, mom? . . . There, now!"

"Don't, Johnny," Cathy said. "Don't cry."

"I can cry if I want to," Johnny said fiercely. "I'm not too big to cry! And have you got anything to say about it, Francis? You better not!"

"He won't," Cathy said. "He's crying too."

"I can't help it," Francis said, and suddenly he blubbered out loud. "Cathy—where's mom?"

"She's here, all right," Cathy said, rocking a little and holding the baby tight. "She can't answer us, of course, but she's here. You bet she is, Francis! . . . Aren't you, mommy?"

Upstairs in the big bedroom, Mrs. Whitman was awake. She had always been a light sleeper, and even after seven years in this wilderness she had never quite trusted the Indians. She knew the doctor had barred the big gate and locked all the doors. And still, between gusts in the wind ——

"Mark!"

"Eh? What?" The doctor sat up. "What's wrong, my dear?"

"There's somebody downstairs. I'm sure of it."

"Nonsense! It's just the wind."

"No, I distinctly heard voices."

"It's probably one of the boys. Or Cathy talking to the baby." The doctor groaned. "All right, I'll go see."

In difficulty you understand your friends.
—CHINESE PROVERB.

He got up quietly, wrapped himself in a blanket and went softly down the stairs. He soon located the voices in the alcove, and paused by the blankets to listen. He didn't like to spy on them, but what were the orphans doing here?

"We can't see the stockings in the dark," Cathy was saying, "but they could be hanging up there, couldn't they? All seven of them in a row? Of course they could, just like they did back in Missouri."

"All right, all right." This was Johnny. "Go on with the show."

"It isn't a show, Johnny. We have to pretend about the stockings, maybe ——"

"And pretend there's presents in them for the baby, and the girls! And for you and Francis!"

"Give her a chance, Johnny," Francis said, in a low voice.

"Oh, all right. Sure, there's seven nice stockings hanging in a row. Then what?"

"Don't pay any attention to him, mom," Cathy apologized. "You know Johnny. . . . Now then, mommy wants to know how we've been getting along since she left us at Laramie."

DOCTOR WHITMAN backed away quietly as an Indian and tiptoed upstairs and into the big bedroom.

"Get up, my dear. All the orphans are down there by the fireplace."

Mrs. Whitman was astonished. "What? After I told them ——"

"Sh-h. Get your wrapper on. Where's that bundle I brought back from Walla Walla? Here it is." The doctor chuckled. "D'ye know what's in it?"

"Just some new shirts, wasn't it?"

"And some things for the children. I was going to surprise them at dinner tomorrow."

"And I've got some apples for them," Mrs. Whitman whispered. "And some brown-sugar taffy. They're up on the shelf. . . . Oh, Mark—I thought you resented having the children thrust upon us. I thought they worried and bothered you."

"And I thought, my dear—but never mind. You've got some of the children's stockings here, haven't you?"

"Why, yes. In the sewing basket. But ——"

"Pick out seven of them. Hurry!"

They soon stood together outside the blanket that hid the alcove. It was completely dark in there now, except for the faintly illumined arch of the fireplace. The children were hidden in the black shadows at either side.

"They're pretending their mother's with them," the doctor whispered.

"That isn't good for them, Mark. I told them ——"

"Sh-h. Listen."

CATHY was talking. "So you can see that the baby and the little girls are all right, mommy. Don't you worry about them. They cry for you sometimes, but Mrs. Whitman lets them sit beside me for a while before they go to bed, and I tell them stories."

"She doesn't tell them any stories," Johnny said. He mimicked Mrs. Whitman: "'Run in to Cathy now, children. . . . Put them to bed, Francis. . . . Get them up, Johnny. . . . My, it'll be such a relief when we get rid of these orphans!'"

"Johnny! She didn't say that!"

"She thought it, didn't she? What's the difference?"

"Well, she didn't invite us here. Of course she'll be glad when we're gone. We're not her children. Mommy understands that."

"Oh, Mark!" Mrs. Whitman whispered. "I've tried to do right by them."

The doctor squeezed her hand. "I know. And still we haven't given them what they needed the most, my dear. . . . Listen. Let's go back upstairs—and walk right down again, making plenty of noise, just like we didn't know they were in there."

"And then what?"

"Go right in and hang up the stockings. It's dark in there. They'll sit quiet as mice. We can do some pretending, can't we? I mean—pretend we have real affection for them?"

"But we do!" she told him.

The doctor chuckled. "Exactly. Only they don't know it. Come on!"

Cathy went on talking: "All right, Johnny, before we take the stockings down she'll want to know about you and Francis and me. Tell her we're doing fine."

"Not me!" Johnny said.

"At least you could tell her how the Whitmans have fed us and given us a place to sleep and ——"

"Like they do the horses. We work for it—like the horses."

"But Johnny, if they didn't take care of us, wouldn't we all starve to death?" Cathy asked.

"Sure. And when I'm big enough, and earn some money, I'll pay them back. But don't pretend we've got a home. Don't pretend anybody cares about us."

Cathy was a little discouraged. "Francis—can't you tell her something?"

Francis waited, then said, "I guess you better, Cathy."

"Well," Cathy said, and thought for a minute. "My leg is better, mommy. It's true they don't want us, I guess. The little girls are all right." It got hard for Cathy to talk too, but she went on: "The baby's . . . all right."

"Sh-h!" Johnny warned. "Someone's coming. It's the doctor and Mrs. Whitman!"

"Oh—what'll we do?"

"Maybe they won't come in here. Everybody keep perfectly quiet."

The Whitmans walked right in, and the doctor kept on talking. "Nonsense, my dear. They should have been asleep long ago. We'll just hang up these stockings and hurry back to bed." He led the way directly to the fireplace. "Here we are—we don't need a light. Let's hang up the baby's stocking first."

"She's such a sweet baby," Mrs. Whitman said. "Where did you get that rattle, Mark?"

"Over at Fort Walla Walla. From an Indian medicine man. There—I hope these pins hold 'em. Now for the three littl Tied to a greasy skillet?

Don't slave over messy, crusty skillets with a limp dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine 'em quick with BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap whisks crust off pots and pans. Shines 'em fast. Use Brillo every day!

GREEN box—pads and cake soap
RED box—soap-filled pads

Shines aluminum fast!

girls. . . . D'ye know who made these rag dolls? Stewart's wife, over at the fort. I spoke to her a month ago. I told her what fine little girls they were. . . . What's all this in the bottom of the stockings?"

"Sh-h," Mrs. Whitman said. "Some nice big apples, all the way from Fort Vancouver. I've been saving them. And some brown-sugar taffy."

"There! . . . And now—Cathy! A china doll for her. With a silk dress and bonnet. It came all the way from London. There was only one at the fort, but Stewart let me have it when I told him about Cathy. . . . She isn't too old for a doll, is she?"

"A china doll? Don't be ridiculous. I'd like one myself. . . . Oh, Mark, Cathy's such a good little girl. I don't know what I'd do without her!"

"And now—Francis. There's a boy for you!" The doctor whispered, "As a matter of fact, my dear, just how did we get along before the children came?"

"Mark—they won't take them away from us, will they?"

"You bet they won't," Doctor Whitman told her. "No, sir!"

"I'd be so lonely without them. They've made all the difference in the world. This has been a home since they came."

"Don't worry, my dear. Look—what d'ye think I got for Francis over at the fort? A muskrat trap! Remember how he'd been wishing for a trap? He thought nobody noticed, but I made a note of it. He's a trapper now!"

"Good. He's a fine, dependable boy, that Francis."

"We couldn't get along without him," Doctor Whitman said. "Now, here's Johnny's stocking. I don't know whether the pin will hold it or not. There! . . . D'ye know, my dear, there isn't a better hunting knife than that in the whole country? It's a real Nor'wester! Wait till Johnny sees that knife in the morning!"

"But is Johnny old enough to carry a knife as good as that?"

"Certainly he is. He's our oldest boy, isn't he? Nothing's too good for Johnny! . . . Well, let's get back to bed. Quiet, now."

"Oh, Mark, I can hardly wait till morning!"

"Neither can I. It'll be our first real Christmas in five years. . . . Listen to that wind!" The doctor chuckled again as he held the blankets aside. "It's a kind of cheerful sound, isn't it, on Christmas Eve?"

After they were gone it was quiet by the fireplace. Then Cathy said, "Well! Mrs. Whitman would be lonely without us! What do you think of that, Johnny?"

Johnny whispered, "Boy!"

"They didn't forget any of us!" Francis said. "Even a rattle for the baby. And I've got a muskrat trap."

"And a hunting knife," Johnny said. "A Nor'wester!"

"And a china doll!" Cathy said. "And rag dolls for the little girls—and taffy and apples ——"

"Shall we look at them now?"

"I should say not!" Cathy said. "We've got to be surprised in the morning, Francis."

"No, let's go to bed," Johnny said. "Tomorrow's Christmas! Come on, Francis—we got to carry the girls upstairs."

But Cathy kept on rocking a little. "Wait," she said. "Johnny."

"Yeah?"

"Those aren't pretend stockings, are they?"

"Nope." Johnny laughed. "You're a regular magician, Cathy!"

"Isn't there something you want to tell mother now? About us?"

"That's right," Johnny said. He was quiet for a minute, then he cleared his throat and said, "We're getting along all right, mom. Don't you worry about us. We're doing fine." Then he said in a lower voice, "Merry Christmas, mom . . . wherever you are."

"Why, Johnny," Cathy said, "she's right here! She's smiling, I betcha! . . . Good night, mommy."

THE END

MAKE
...use you win HER year 'round praise
...On Christmas give her Hasko Trays.

THIS lovely TRAY 'N' TUMBLER Set
Is such a gem to give or get.

A HASKO
...it saves work—adds pleasure.
...year 'round gift she's sure to trays-ure.

CHRISTMAS
Make HER Christmas a HASKO
...stmas and make a year 'round hit!!
HASKO TRAYS and TUMBLERS come
...ombination sets, with matching
...igns or separately as you wish.
...y are on display at Department,
...and Jewelry Stores. Beautifully gift-
...kaged ready for giving or getting.
KELITE MANUFACTURING CORP.
143...135 So. La Salle Street, Chicago 3

The Beautiful New

NORGE GAS RANGE
with the SENSATIONAL CONCENTRATOR BURNER

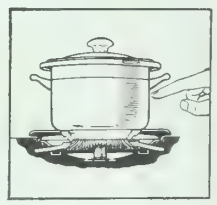
Exclusive
HERE IS WHY IT'S BETTER



NEW TRIPLE-ACTION FLAME
PROVIDES FAST, EVEN-FLOW, ALL-OVER HEAT, AT LOW COST!

1. Flames travel inward toward the center of the cooking utensil.

2. Angle-port openings impart swirling action to each flame as it travels.

3. Flames reverse and move outward; heat concentrates on utensil.

IT'S NICE...IT'S NEW...IT'S NORGE with all these important FEATURES

Ultra-modern in every detail!—that's why you get such features as: Tilted control panel to save stooping. Electric clock and timer to help assure perfect results. Built-in electric appliance outlet that saves steps. One-piece top makes cleaning easier. Extra-large oven with time-saving window and inside light. Balanced heat for uniform cooking. Heat control and automatic lighter saves work, worry and gas. Extra-thick insulation saves gas and assures a cooler kitchen. The big broiler, with drop front, is smokeless-type with reversible grill to secure satisfaction. All this engineered for economy...built for long, trouble-free life...and contained in easy-to-clean porcelain-enamel. Norge Division, Borg-Warner Corp., Detroit 26, Mich. In Canada: Addison Industries, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

A BORG-WARNER INDUSTRY

SEE NORGE BEFORE YOU BUY

REFRIGERATORS • ELECTRIC RANGES • HOME FREEZERS • ELECTRIC

Children in the Kitchen

A planned space for children in the kitchen saves young mothers worry and steps.
Later, the space can be used for other activities.

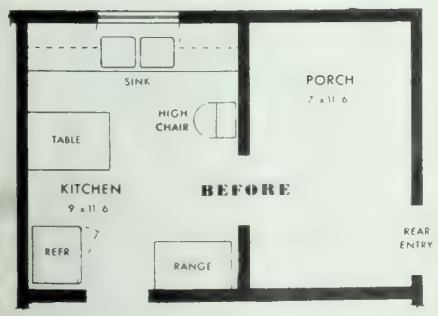
BY GLADYS TABER

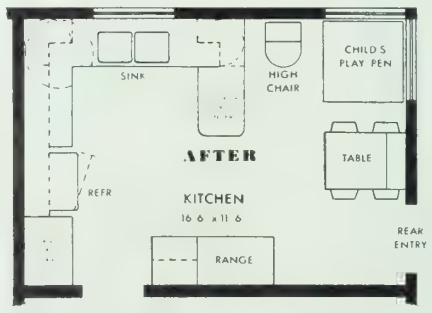
"IN sheer desperation, to keep a roof over our heads," wrote Mrs. E., "we've recently bought a house ——" Many American families are in just this predicament, especially if there are small children. A couple can get along in a two-room flat or a fold-up apartment, but the children need something that is a home. The house in Denver which Mrs. E. chose was typical of the kind built before the war—not a new house, just a house, period. It wasn't bad on the whole, but the kitchen was maddening. It was the "steproom" of the house.

"You should try to get a meal ready in it with two babies underfoot"—you could almost hear the tension in her voice, even if she was writing. "We have three children, the youngest is just learning to crawl. That means we need a place for the baby's play pen, so he will be within sight as I work, and room for a high chair at mealtime." (Continued on Page 94)

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

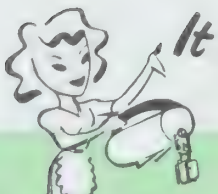
While the children are small, the eating area for the family is limited but adequate. Later a larger table can be used in the corner window. Here, too, will be room for a sewing center. The seldom used back porch, now in the kitchen, teems with activity preparing for Christmas.





Separating the children's corner from the rest o

Space at the end of counter has shelves for children's toys and folded play pen. Later, this space can be used for bridge table and electrical appliances.



...en, a lower counter open from both sides with a stool that pushes underneath. This provides a comfortable working area for many sit-down jobs.

With no small children to consider, an L-shaped kitchen could have been planned, bringing the range to the right of the sink. For the mother of small children, space for play pen, high chair and storage for toys was more important now and useful later.

Lazy-Susan storage in corner cabinets provides easy accessibility for cooking supplies, baking utensils, china and glassware.

It couldn't be Simpler to operate!

the New HAMILTON BEACH

...with Mixguide

Mixguide puts speed control right under your thumb. Right under your eye, magnified for flash reading, are these ten thoroughly tested speeds:

1 SLOW MIXING	6 WHIP CREAM
2 SLOW BEATING	7 WHIP POTATOES
3 HEAVY BATTERS	8 CANDY, BEAT EGGS
4 JUICING FRUITS	9 COOKED ICINGS
5 ICINGS, CREAMING	10 ATTACHMENTS

FINGER-TIP BOWL CONTROL, TOO! Shifts bowl while beaters are turning. Blends all ingredients evenly. Exclusive!

TAKE THE KINKS out of cookery with the help of speedy one-hand operation. You hold the mixer in one hand and set the speed with your thumb. Exclusive!

MAKE MEAL-GETTING minutes count with easy one-hand portability. Lighter-weight mixer glides off the stand for use anywhere. No tricky catch to release, nothing to detach. Exclusive!

LOADS OF OTHER "extras" make Hamilton Beach the easiest mixer to use. Full power even in heaviest batters. Comfortable, balanced handle fits your fingers, frees you of strain. Grooves in mixing bowls are easy to grip, guard against slipping.

SEE THE NEW HAMILTON BEACH at your dealer's. Test it—see for yourself why this is the easiest mixer for you to use. Hamilton Beach Company, Division of Scovill Manufacturing Co., Racine, Wis.

the New HAMILTON BEACH Food Mixer

Beats Everything for Saving You Work!

(Continued from Page 92)

Now in the Early-American Tearoom period in which this house was built, a model kitchen consisted of a sink under the window with cabinets on either side. The range was dropped in one corner and the refrigerator in another (sometimes they even were pushed into an entry). Then a table was moved into the space that was left, placed so it was neatly in the path from sink to refrigerator.

It makes my feet ache just to think of the running around in a kitchen like this, and when you add young children with nothing to do but swing on mamma's skirt, you are really in trouble.

In all the JOURNAL kitchens, we try to have one area which may serve as eating center, place for homework or mending, room for father to drop down for a chat while supper cooks, or a neighbor to share a quick cup of tea.

In this kitchen of Mrs. E.'s the flexible area was planned as a place for the children. And the thing I like best is that the kitchen looks ahead to the time when the children are older, for the space that holds the folded play pen will accommodate a card table later, and the corner will be just right for a larger eating table, and a sewing machine will fit against the wall where the table is now.

It seems to me too many young mothers work so hard that they don't have a chance to enjoy the children when they are at their most lovable age. All too soon they are grown up and gone. Babyhood is the time to store up precious memories, and to have fun with them every day. If the little folk are penned up in a far-off room, the mother has to run back and forth constantly just in case someone is eating the paint off the chair rung. And cooking, dishwashing, cleanup jobs are pretty nervous things when you cock an anxious ear for a possible wail.

And truly then it is that sense shines with the greatest beauty, when it is set in humility.

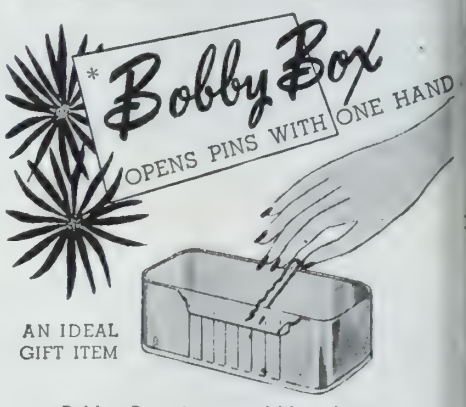
—WILLIAM PENN.

Good planning and the use of the old back porch made a kitchen that is a real family room in the house the E.'s bought.

The isolated refrigerator was brought up near the sink, with work surface and storage between them. A cabinet and counter were added by the range, and utensils hang above it within easy reach. Under the counter a wheeled table can be rolled out for step saving in serving.

A cleaning and storage cabinet fitted in where the refrigerator once stood—wonderful to have a place for the vacuum cleaner.

Roll-around shelves behind closed doors in the corner cupboards provide accessible storage space, and make less work too.



Near the sink a counter at sit-down height with a pull-out wooden cutting board was built, and this is the handiest feature imaginable. The stool can be pushed under the counter when not in use. There are a host of kitchen tasks that could be done sitting down and resting your feet—if you had a place to sit! Not only shredding and paring and chopping—but sandwich making can be fun if you sit comfortably while you do it.

A table near the window gives the family a place for breakfast, and above it go the cookbooks, recipe file and radio—out of reach of young Michael and right where Mrs. E. can reach them.

This kitchen is full of two-way affairs, and they are wonderful step savers. Every step saved is an extra dividend for the mother of bouncing children. The tray racks open both ways. Doors open from both the washing and the eating side of the dish cabinet with roll-around shelves.

The color in the kitchen is practical and gay. Red, washable wall covering makes gray days cheerful, and the windows are easy to take care of with Venetian blinds and bands of the washable wall covering in a flower design for trimming. Blinds are especially good for baby's eyes, which need to have light carefully regulated. Mottled green plastic Bobby Box, in crystal-like plastic, opens pins with one hand. Saves teeth and manicure. Holds large supply of bobby pins. Cover keeps pins dust free.

Available at notions and novelty counters or send 50¢ in coin to

ARLIN INCORPORATED

238 Garces Drive San Francisco 12

*T. M.

Help your budget by asking your MAIN STREET STORE or your favorite nationally famous CHAIN STORE Manager for FRUIT OF THE LOOM Men's GIFT BOXED HANDKERCHIEFS

● Extra large • Fine quality cotton • Genuine hemstitched hems • Soft • Absorbent • Makes useful appreciated gift for CHRISTMAS, BIRTHDAYS, and all "OCCASIONS" Gift box of 10, pin money priced, 1.25

Loom-tex Corporation, Empire State Building, New York City.

GIRL SQUEALS

(With delight)
Over that distinctive tangy flavor of CHEEZ-IT crackers!

America's
Largest selling cheese cracker!

A Quality Product of Sunshine Biscuits, INC.

HOW YOU CAN SAVE FOOD & MONEY WITH HANDI-BAGS

More than 150,000 enthusiastic housewives are using this convenient way to keep foods fresh, tasty at low cost—with plastic Handi-Bags. They keep lettuce, vegetables crisp—bread, pastry, fresh and moist for more than a week. Wonderful for meat, cheese, fish too. Can be used over and over, will not crack. Set of six bags $1.75 value for only $1.00 includes:
1—14"x21" bag for turkeys, roasts & clip
1—14"x18" bag for fruit, vegetables & clip
1—8½"x18" bag for celery, bread & clip
1—8½"x15" bag for cheese, fish & clip
2—8½"x12" bags for butter, chops & 2 clips
Enjoy economy of foods kept fresh in space saving Handi-Bags right away. Send $1.00 for each set today. We ship immediately prepaid. Money back guarantee. No C.O.D.

6 Bags $1. AMG Handi-Bags

A.M.G. PRODUCTS CO.
P.O. Box 717-B, Pittsburgh 30, Pa.

UP OR DOWN?

Little Jimmy refused his morning cereal.
"It's Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal," coaxed his dad. "It tastes so good I'll bet if you taste one spoonful you'll eat it all up."
Jimmy took one bite, stopped, and then sneaked another. Two minutes later his bowl was empty, and Jimmy was sitting there looking sheepish.
"You see!" said his dad triumphantly. "I knew you'd eat it up."
"I didn't either eat it up," said Jimmy, defiant to the last—"I ate it down!"

(Advertisement)

JOLLY TIME FOR YOUR HOLIDAY FUN ALWAYS POPS
JOLLY TIME POP CORN

tile for floor and green linoleum for counter surfaces are practical and attractive too.

At this season, Christmas preparations are in full swing. Mrs. E. can bake the Christmas cookies while Michael plays in the pen, and take time for the fancy decorations she loves. The packages can be wrapped while she watches him haul his new Teddy bear back and forth. The older children can have a pickup lunch at the counter or the table, and father can check the Christmas list while he has an extra cup of hot coffee.

Christmas comes but once a year, but I think every day will be a holiday in this kitchen!

LETTERS FROM OUR HONEYMOON

(Continued from Page 43)

been doing for the last three days. We had a comfortable night in Liverpool, leaving at 8 yesterday A.M., getting here at 12. We were ushered into the royal suite, one flight up, front, price $1000 a day—a sitting room 40 ft. by 30, a double bedroom, another ditto and a bath. Our breath was so taken away that we couldn't even protest and are now saying, "Damn the expense, wot's the odds"! Aunt Kassie met us and it was so nice to see her again.

Today we have shopped wildly—saw the Reids yesterday in the palatial Dorchester House, and Eleanor's schoolmate Miss Bennett has come up to spend two days with us. Tomorrow P.M. we go down to Allenswood and Sunday to the polo match at Ranelagh. We go to Paris Tuesday and to Venice on Friday night. We have ordered thousands of dollars' worth of clothes, and I am going to send you several cases of champagne, as I know it is needed at Hyde Park.

Ever your devoted
F.D.R.

The young couple "were ushered into the royal suite" because they had been identified with Theodore Roosevelt, then President of the United States and A.E.R.'s uncle. F.D.R. enjoyed teasing his mother with a pretense of wild spending. Whitelaw Reid was at this time United States Ambassador to England. "Allenswood" was the school where A.E.R. received her formal education.

LONDON, JUNE 19, 1905

Dearest Mama: Franklin wrote you our doings up to Friday so I shall begin on Saturday. In the A.M. we did a little shopping and then went to the Royal Academy, which was interesting as far as the Sargents went, but seemed to have a good deal of trash also. After lunch we paid a number of calls and in the evening dined at Prince's and went to see a play called "Lady Madcap" which was most amusing. Nathalie and a Mr. Welch went with us and he afterwards took us to supper at the Carlton, where we saw a great crowd and were much entertained by some of the English women. It is quite out of date over here to appear with your own face or hair. In fact it really looks immodest!

Sunday A.M. we rested and went to lunch with the Reids. I sat next to Mr. Reid!

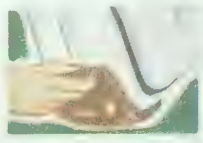
This A.M. Franklin had to go to Baring's so I went out to Allenswood. Afterwards I went and tried my habit and rough suit on at Nicoll's and I think they will be satisfactory. At 1:30 F. and I went to Mrs. Carter's for lunch, and had a very pleasant time. F. then went to his tailors and Jean took me driving and left me at Lady Bridge's at 5 where F. joined me for tea. The charming English women are more of a surprise to me than the uncharming ones even, for they look frumps even when they're not.

Tonight we are packing as we leave at 11 tomorrow for Paris. Tissie has gone to St. Moritz so I doubt if I will see her until the autumn!

Hall's coat can stay hung up till the autumn, as it is to be given away and I think the autumn is a better time unless you think it will bring moths.

Everyone says F. is looking so well and I think he is feeling finely and so am I. Don't

Fair Trade Price $21.50



Your gift of the new "Toastmaster" Toaster says Merry Christmas . . . and means it! For most everyone knows it takes a bit of doing to snare this widely sought-for prize. Your efforts can't fail to be remembered. Neither can the name that identifies America's finest toaster escape attention. So when you buy—look for the "Toastmaster"* name on your toaster . . . others will!

JUST PRESS THE KEY
—and the Superflex toast timer automatically delivers perfect toast every time.

TOUCH THE BUTTON
—and watch the crumb tray swing open instantly for quick, easy cleaning.

LIFT THE TOASTER
—easily, safely, by finger-fitting handles that are always cool to your touch.

THE NEW TOASTMASTER Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"TOASTMASTER" is a registered trademark of McGraw Electric Company, makers of "Toastmaster" Toasters, "Toastmaster" Electric Water Heaters, and other "Toastmaster" Products. Copyright 1948.

The Ironer that Folds Away

● Yes, here's a delightful new ironer that fits right into your kitchen, utility room, or wherever you prefer to iron. When you're not ironing, the FOLD•A•MATIC folds away into a compact, table-top cabinet that gives you valuable extra work surface. Now, you can choose the room in which you'll iron sitting down in comfort! Exclusive Apex "Floating Roll" speeds ironing, makes it easier to do large pieces. See your Apex dealer next time you shop, and try the ironing magic of the FOLD•A•MATIC.

THE APEX ELECTRICAL MFG. CO. • CLEVELAND 10, OHIO

The Peak of Quality

FOR MORE THAN THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

Apex

CLEANERS
WASHERS
IRONERS

FREE! Write for new folder on automatic ironing with "The Ironer That Folds Away."

worry about us and take good care of your own dear self and write us all the news.

Best love from us both,

Your ever devoted

ELEANOR

37 AVENUE DE L'ALMA, PARIS
JUNE 22, 1905

Dearest Mama: Here I am writing in Aunt Doe's apartment, but I will go back and tell you first that we had a very comfortable journey leaving London at 11 A.M. and getting here at 7. The channel was perfectly smooth I am glad to say.

Yesterday A.M. Aunt Doe went with us to Hugon's where Eleanor ordered a cloak and one dress, a cloth skirt and coat, very dressy. Then we went to Combe & Levy and ordered thousands of dollars' worth of linen, 8 doz. tablecloths, 6 napkins, ½ pillowcase and a handkerchief, all very attractive and full of holes or à jour, as they say here. Then we lunched with Aunt Doe and she took Eleanor out afterwards to buy Sarey Gamps and chests of drawers and other unmentionables. I went on a book hunt and spent all I owned in the first shop I went into and had to quit.

We went to see "Manon" at the Opera Comique—very delightful and well rendered. We didn't get back till nearly 1 A.M. and were dead this morning. Today we went to various dressmakers, at one of which I distinguished myself by going to sleep. Eleanor got a dozen or so new dresses and two more cloaks. We haven't been to the fur place yet. I am getting Eleanor a long sable cloak and a silver fox coat for myself. We go to Milan tomorrow night and continue to Venice Sunday, getting there at 6.30. After that we may take a shot at the Damnation Coast or the Passion Play, according to the state of our feelings.

Ever your devoted

F.D.R.

Don't believe all this letter please. I may be extravagant but—!! E.R.

"Aunt Doe" was F.D.R.'s maternal aunt, Deborah Perry Delano. In 1903, several years after the death of her first husband, Willa Howard Forbes, she married his young brother, Paul Forbes. Aunt Doe moved to the French capital and her apartment soon became the Roosevelt family headquarters in Paris.

Although it was true that A.E.R. purchased the linen for her new home on the occasion mentioned, it was not in such quantities as F.D.R. describes. "Sarey Gamps" was another name for underclothes.

HOTEL DE FRANCE & CHOISEUL
239-241 Rue St. Honoré (Place Vendôme)
JUNE 23, 19[illegible]

Dearest Mama: Franklin wrote yesterday so this is just a line to tell you that we were delighted to get your letter at Aunt Dora's last night. We dined with her and afterwards went to the Alcazar on the Champs-Élysées. It was very funny and very vulgar, but as we couldn't hear very much the vulgarity didn't matter and the crowd was most amusing.

You would have laughed if you could have heard Mme. Howland flatter Franklin yesterday. It made him cross but I thought he most appreciative as she kept repeating "Qu'il est beau, qu'il est charmant!"

This isn't true—Eleanor got buttered on both sides! F.D.R.

Aunt Dora has been an angel and trotted from shop to shop with us every day. This A.M. we went out and Franklin got me such lovely furs. I don't think he ought to give them to me but they are wonderful and of course I am delighted with them. He has found some lovely books here too and has spent most of this afternoon rummaging round an old shop, while poor Aunt Dora and I were trying on clothes! She is dining with us tonight and seeing us off for Milan.

Much, much love dearest from both your children.

Ever devotedly

ELEANOR

HÔTEL BRITANNIA, VENICE, JUNE 26, 190[illegible]

Dearest Mama: Here we are, quite overcome by the wonders of Venice, and settled comfortably for ten days.

American Dinnerware of Distinction

SALEM CHINA CO.

GODEY PRINTS

Add beauty to your table . . . enhance every meal with Salem Dinnerware. Choose from Salem's many lovely patterns . . . all moderate in price . . . to match period or modern interiors. Ask for Salem at your favorite store. For the unusual gift at low cost, also see Salem Fancy Plates, Demitasse cups and saucers, and Salt and Pepper sets.

THE SALEM CHINA CO.
SALEM, OHIO

We left Milan at 1 P.M. and got here at 7, stepping from the station into a gondola, and got to the hotel which is on the Grand Canal and but a block from the Piazza di San Marco. I had telegraphed ahead for an excellent gondolier recommended by Cousin Julia Delano and this morning at 10 we went out with him and explored the Piazza and the buildings around it. After lunch we went the whole length of the Grand Canal, examining the wonderful palaces along it.

I think I had expected to be disappointed in Venice, but the reality is far more wonderful than the pictures I had made. We are glad that our stay will be long enough to let us assimilate the beauties of it.

Ever your devoted

F.D.R.

Loads of love from us both.

CORTINA, JULY 12, 1905

Dearest Mama: Here we are at Cortina and a more simple and charming place it would be hard to imagine. The scenery is magnificent and there are any number of lovely walks and difficult ascents to keep even energetic folks busy.

Conceit, God's gift to little men. —BRUCE BARTON.

Yesterday morning after breakfasting outside, we wandered down through the fields to the village and poked about till nearly lunchtime. This morning we have again been to the village and I have bought six of the peasants' handkerchiefs to make a kimono! They are rather brilliant colours but Miss Van Bibber has just made one so I thought I would try and see the result.

This afternoon we are going to walk to the Belvedere where I hear one gets a lovely view. This is only about a three hour walk and we get tea up there so it sounds very easy and pleasant.

Franklin wants to add a line so I will stop. My very best love dear ——

ELEANOR

Just a line to say that we are just able to sit up and take a little nourishment. This hotel is too angelic for me. I am even afraid to swear and have "queered" myself with several old ladies already—in fact this is an old lady's Paradise Regained and I feel like Satan all right—TaTa. Lots of love.

F.D.R.

TRAFOI, ITALY, JULY 15, 1905

Dearest Mama: On Thursday morning I got up at the UnChristian hour of 7 and started at 8 with Miss Gandy to climb the Faloria, about 4000 feet above Cortina. It took us nearly four hours up but the view was well worth the pull, and gave an idea of the wonderful colors of the Dolomites—pink and yellow rocks, and white slopes of pure limestone—and the clouds were magnificent. We came down a landslide (it happened before we came down it, don't be worried)—almost perpendicular—and got back late for lunch.

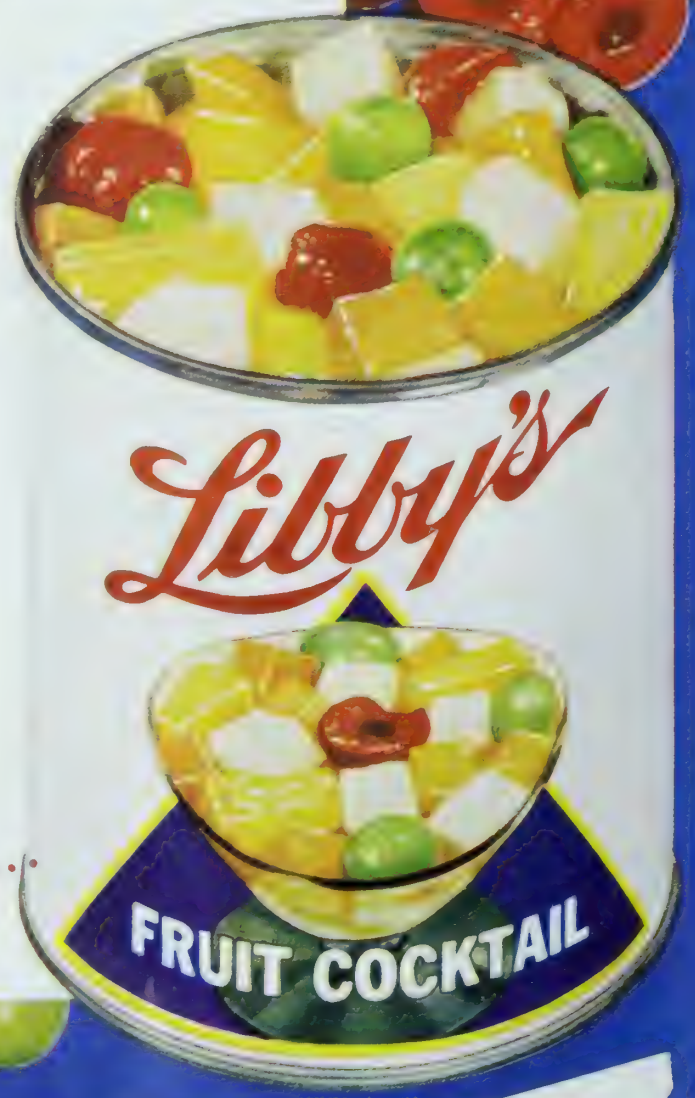
After supper the lady who runs the hotel and who is our bosom friend, and an intimate of indeed all her guests, gave us a dance in the dining room. The hotel maids, cook, etc. and some of the villagers did a "Schutplatten"—the native dance. It beats a cake walk and a court quadrille and a Robinson Virginia reel all to pieces and smacks of all three. We are going to introduce it next year. I danced with Mme. Menardi and talked to the cook and smoked with a porter and had the time of my life.

This A.M. at 7:30 we started in the landau we shall have for four days and drove up a picturesque valley with many ruined castles on the eminences. It was very dusty and the horse flies were so bad that I had to get out my revolver and shoot several brace. I only skinned the horse once and shot one fly off the end of the driver's nose without scratching him. Next winter I am going to take a job at the Hippodrome.

We left the main road to Landeck at about 4, started up hill towards the Stelvio pass,

(Continued on Page 99)

For you...a real "FRUIT FESTIVAL" in every can of Libby's Fruit Cocktail!



● That can of Libby's you open for cocktail, for sparkling salad or dessert—it truly is a "festival" of glorious fruits!

Just the right fruits in the right proportions for a perfect flavor-medley! Lush peaches and pears . . . sparkling pineapple . . . delicate green grapes . . . rich maraschino-style cherries! In Libby's they're always uniform, always luscious . . . "little jewels" cut from the very same quality of whole, hand-picked fruits that Libby packs individually!

Yes, every can of this de luxe cocktail is a real feast from pick-of-the-crop fruits! Just taste Libby's to discover how extra luscious canned fruit cocktail can be! Do that real soon.
Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

Hear radio's greatest morning show!
"MY TRUE STORY"—mornings,
Mon. thru Fri. 10:00 EST, 9:00 CST,
11:30 MST, 10:30 PST, ABC Stations.

Look to Libby's for Perfection . . .

(Continued from Page 97)

l passed through a very narrow valley, ting here at 7. Tomorrow we actually ss the Stelvio—the highest wagon road in rope—9200 feet—four hours up to the top e boundary between Austria, Italy and itzerland meeting there) and they say re is ten feet of snow on each side of the d—indeed the pass was opened only two eks ago. Tomorrow night we spend on the lian side, and on Tuesday cross the Ber- a down into St. Moritz.

Lots of love from us both—All well.

Ever your aff.

F.D.R.

ST. MORITZ, JULY 19, 1905

Dearest Mama: Could you find out whether e house in town is for rent and if it could had for two or three years at $2500. If it n be, will you try to get it for us as it is st about the size we want, near you and I ppose in good order which would make it rth the extra $500.

Now I must go back to Monday morning d our wonderful drive over the Stelvio. We arted at about 8 A.M. and climbed steadily l lunchtime. Franklin sent you a post card om the top, but of course it could give you idea of the marvelous snow peaks all ound us. We had a lovely day and Franklin imbed to the highest peak d took some photographs hich I hope will be good. took us about two hours drive down to Bormio, here we spent our second ght, and the views all- e way were enchanting. Even very near e top there were beautiful wild flowers nd as Franklin walked a good part of the ay up he picked a number of them and e wild jasmine smells sweeter than any- ing I have ever had. The hotel at Bormio as comfortable and we both went to bed arly after a good dinner and a little piquet. have actually been beating Franklin lately t the game and I feel so proud that I know must soon have a fall!

Tuesday we started at 7:30 A.M. and limbed almost to the top of the Bernina ass before we stopped to lunch. (You can nagine how Franklin loves now to arise with he lark after so much practice!!) The scenery as beautiful over this pass too but I don't hink it is as fine as the Stelvio. Unluckily ranklin's panorama got out of order so he nly got little photographs of this last day's rive, but as it was rather cloudy and show- ry in the afternoon he could not have got- en very good ones with the big camera any- way. Just as we were driving up the last hill o St. Moritz, we saw a trap coming down vith Auntie Tissie. We yelled and a more urprised and bewildered person you have never seen, for she had no idea what time we would arrive. She had got our rooms for us, but her ideas of the necessities of life nd ours differ, so I was a little anxious as to what we would find awaiting us. However, we are surviving her extravagance and find our- selves very comfortable in rooms which look over the lake and have a nice balcony where we have breakfast and tea. After unpacking our belongings we dressed and went down to dinner. I felt very shabby in my old black dress with wonderfully dressed ladies all about, but what does it matter. We found our rooms full of flowers which Auntie Tissie and the children had picked for us and I also found my wedding presents here from them. Auntie Tissie has given me a really lovely old French pendant which I think is going to be very nice under my dog collar. It is small diamonds with two emeralds and Franklin loves it and says he knows you will too, so I am crazy to show it to you! Uncle Stanley gave me a white ostrich-feather fan with light tortoise-shell sticks and my initials in dia- monds and the children gave me a dear little chain with a little pendant parrot, very pretty and original and their own choice.

This place is lovely. Franklin says the loveliest place we have seen yet but I can't make up my mind.

Much much love dearest fr... us both.

Every ... devoted

... ELEANOR

I'm afraid parts of this letter sound quite mad and I must apologize for the tear but I can't rewrite it so please forgive me!

ST. MORITZ, JULY 22, 1905

Dearest Mama: We were so glad to get your letter and delighted to hear about the Draper house. We had been told that we couldn't get it—and though the price is a good deal more than we want to pay, yet we want a house for two years and you say that for $2400 Mrs. Draper will do a good job for us. It is just the right size and our one hope is to hear very soon that you have got it for us. Today we had another excursion—this time to the Fexthal. After lunch we climbed quite high up and got over a dozen edelweiss. It was too lovely and I am convinced that for an all-round place this is by far the most attractive I have seen in the Alps.

Sunday July 23rd—

This morning Eleanor went to church with Tissie, and I climbed a hill to recover my gold pencil which I had left there and luckily found it safe.

Now we are packing and leave at 6 A.M. (This is a yawn) and get to Augsburg at 7 P.M., a long day, but better than stopping at a stupid place. There we stay two days and go to Ulm for another two, then to Titisee and St. Blasien, where we shall have a quiet week; then up to Feldberg to see the sunrise, to Freiburg for a day and to Strassburg and Amiens for a day each, getting to Paris about August 12th.

Kissing don't last. Cookery do. —GEORGE MEREDITH.

By the way, I don't suppose Mrs. Draper will want to start the work on the house till we get back and of course we want to choose the papers. I want the plumbing examined, even if it was put in two years ago, and of course the woodwork etc. will need redoing. Eleanor says that if you happen to see in the paper of any sale of servants' cotton sheets, towels, etc. and happen to be in town that day or could write and get us some, she would be very grateful. Loads love from us both.

Ever your loving infants.

F.D.R.

It was "the Draper House" (125 East 36th Street), located only three blocks from Sara Roosevelt's home that became the residence of F.D.R. and his bride until Sara Roosevelt purchased the plot on East 65th Street.

AUGSBURG, JULY 25, 1905

Dearest Mama: We actually got up yesterday morning at 4:30 A.M. and left St. Moritz at 5:55 and wonderful to relate we are still alive to tell the tale! It rained all day and we hopped from one train to another four times and went through two custom houses successfully, Franklin having hid part of his cigarettes among my veils. In Brigens we had an hour to wait and the rain held up for about half an hour so we got a walk through part of the little town and it looked very quaint and attractive. About two hours before we reached here, four large and burly Germans got into our compartment while Franklin was getting some beer and as they at first paid no attention to me, I thought Franklin would find no seat on his return. However, by dint of piling coats and cameras up opposite me I succeeded in keeping it, but to my horror the train began to move and there was no Franklin and I had no ticket and no money! You can imagine my feelings but luckily we returned to the station and Franklin reappeared. Of course the Germans proceeded to make themselves comfortable and at one time I thought Franklin would burst and a duel would ensue, for one of the Germans, after pulling the blinds across our windows, leaned across Franklin and closed the window without so much as saying "by your leave"! However, we arrived here safely at 7:30 P.M. and the place looked very attractive even last night so we were glad we came through in a day. This is said to be the oldest hotel in Germany and it is very comfortable. We dined and went straight to bed and slept until nine o'clock this morning! We just went out and wandered up the principal street to

(Continued on Page 102)

SMALL-FAMILY GINGERBREAD with the sun-rich flavor of real New Orleans molasses

In early Mississippi steamboat days, folks up-river joyfully welcomed molasses from New Orleans

Brer Rabbit's new, quick SMALL-FAMILY GINGERBREAD

¼ c. shortening
¼ c. sugar
½ c. Brer Rabbit Molasses
1 egg
1¼ c. sifted all-purpose flour
¾ tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. ginger
¼ tsp. cloves
¼ tsp. salt
½ c. hot water

Slowly melt shortening in saucepan; cool. Add sugar, molasses and egg; beat well. Sift together flour, baking soda, cinnamon, ginger, cloves and salt; add alternately with hot water to first mixture. Line 9¼" x 5¼" x 2½" greased loaf pan with greased waxed paper; pour in batter. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 45 min. Cool 5 min. Remove from pan. Delicious served warm with ice cream.

SEND FOR MY NEW COOK BOOK

FREE! 50-page book. 124 valuable recipes. Substantial washable cover. Illustrated. Mail this coupon to: BRER RABBIT, c/o Penick & Ford, New Orleans 7, La., Dept. J-3.

*Name*_____
(Please print name and address)

*Address*_____

_____ *Zone*_____

BRER RABBIT New Orleans MOLASSES
Rich in Iron—needed for good red blood!

money saver
FOR WINTER MEALS

Try Herb-Ox Consomme

—served piping hot, its delicious piquant flavor is heartening, satisfying—makes mealtime pleasure time. Just one Herb-Ox cube in an 8-oz. cup of boiling water—yum, yum!

Quick-trick Soup Recipe

To serve 4, put 4 cups of Herb-Ox Chicken Consomme in a pot. Chop and add ½ cup celery, 1 tablespoon onion, 1 cup fresh mushrooms, 1 oz. egg noodles. Cook about 10 minutes . . . For free menu book, write The Pure Food Company, Inc., Dept. LHJ-12, Mamaroneck, N. Y.

First in Quality, too, for making gravy and adding flavor to low-cost main dishes

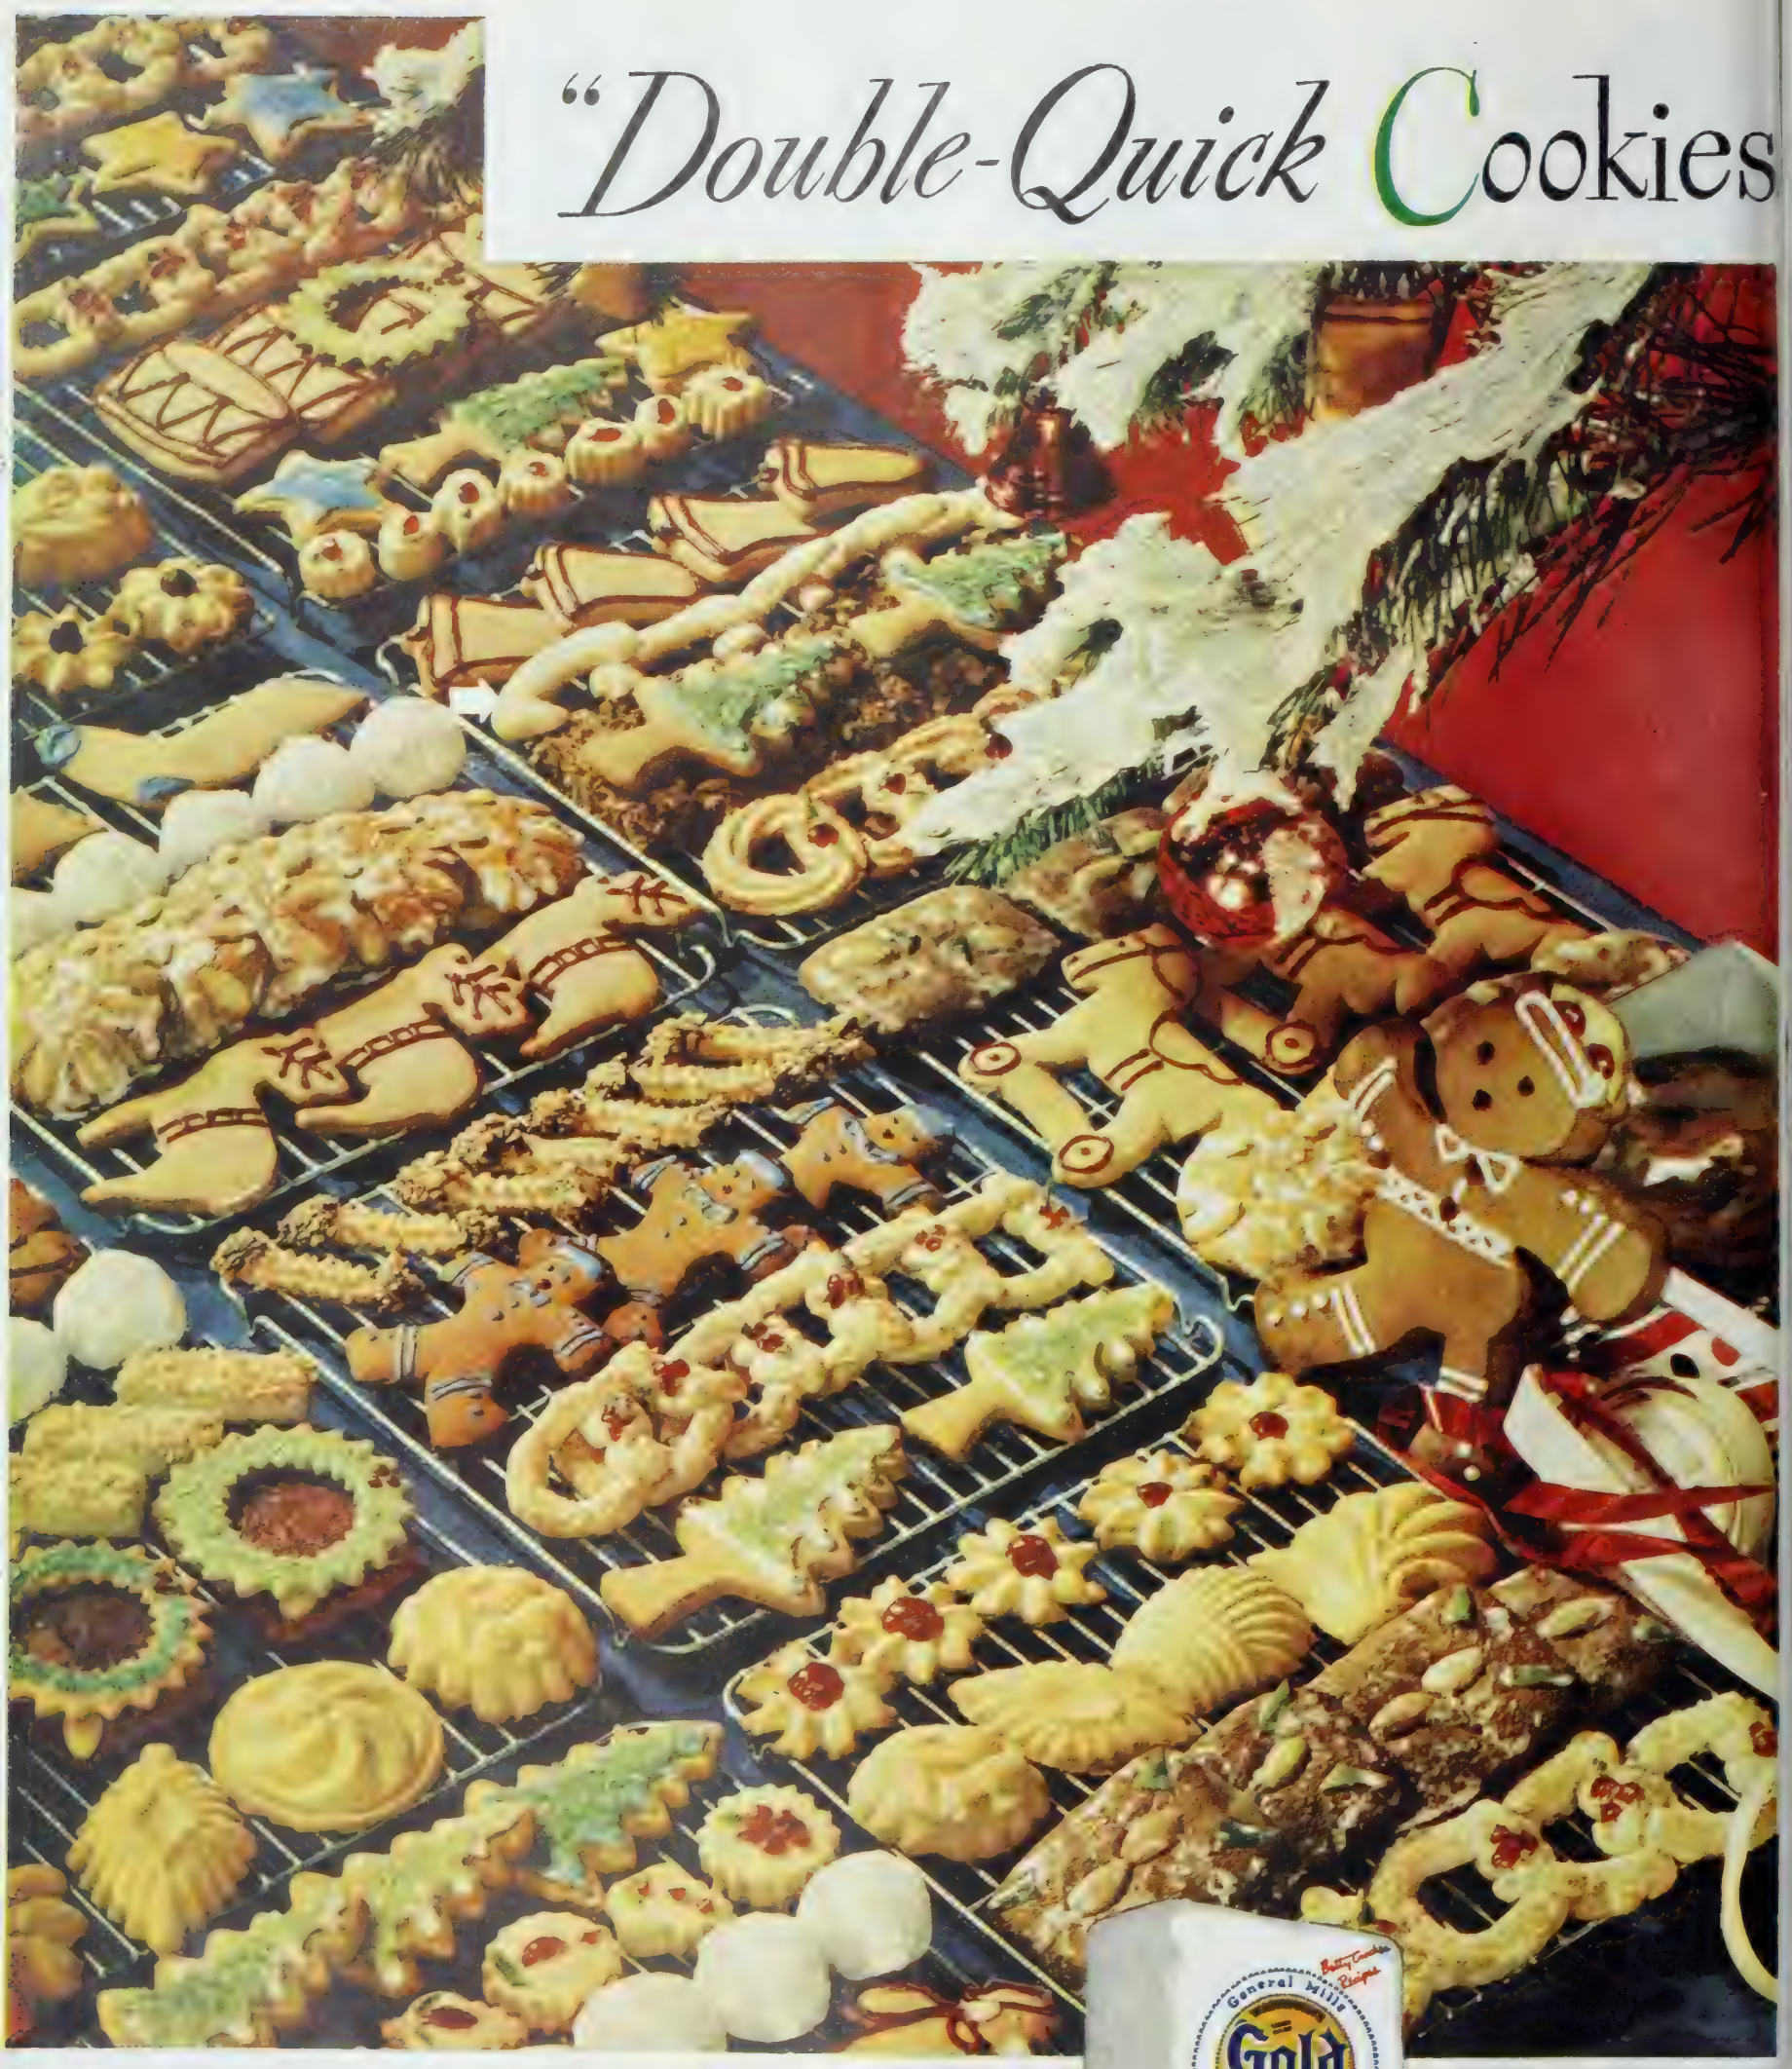
Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

Baker's Coconut Quickie #6

Casserole of Candied Sweet Potatoes
Baker's Coconut

Drift snowy, tender-moist Baker's Coconut on candied sweet potatoes a few minutes before removing from the oven. You never knew such heavenly eating! Keep Baker's Coconut handy—use it often. With peaches and cream, with puddings, on bread n'butter tea sandwiches. Your grocer has both Baker's Premium Shred and specially moist Baker's Southern Style.

BAKER'S COCONUT



— SECRET OF 100 GLAMOUR TRICKS

Products of General Foods

SEND! New Recipe Book. "Coconut Glamour Desserts"—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut, Box 39, Battle Creek, Mich.

"Double-Quick Cookies

Nothing like it before . . . a "bible" of cooky-making!

In the Cooky Book you'll find this tempting array of holiday cookies, also pictures, recipes and methods for every other type of DOUBLE-QUICK cooky. All streamlined by General Mills' famous Betty Crocker Staff of experts.

A finely-balanced recipe collection for every possible occasion. Includes best type cookies for lunch box, gifts, midnight snacks, parties, mailing to youngsters at school, etc. A truly sensational collection of cooky recipes!

Betty Crocker "Chiffon" cakes, butter cakes, pies, pastry, biscuits, bread . . . you'll find Gold Medal good for everything you bake . . . and everything you bake with Gold Medal good! In every ack—a colorful folder with a wide va- of Betty Crocker "success recipes." your

"Betty Crocker" and "Kitchen-tested" are reg. trade marks of General Mills Copr. 1948

...are happy Holiday News!"

says

Betty Crocker

What is holiday-time without cookies? For parties, for gift boxes, to hang on the Christmas tree! Our new Cooky Book will enable you to delight the family and friends with cookies that are traditional at holiday-time . . . make tempting treats all year 'round!

Any day's a holiday when you make cookies easier, faster by this double-quick method! The recipes in the new Betty Crocker Picture Cooky Book (below) will make you a cooky wizard!

"Now . . . cookies in less than half the usual mixing time! Without creaming, separate egg-beating! . . . Our Picture Cooky Book introduces another grand new idea of our Staff—'key' recipes. Master the 'key' recipe and automatically you're able to make several different kinds of cookies.

"The Merry Christmas cooky recipes at right are an example. You use just one basic dough, varying the recipe ever-so-little to make light cookies (for some shapes) or dark cookies (for others). Ten different-shaped cookies in the photograph are made from either this light or dark dough. So festive . . . ideal for decorating your Christmas tree!

"Whenever you make cookies, be sure to use Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour! Next to the recipe, flour is the biggest factor in baking success. We've tested these cooky recipes with Gold Medal Flour, and know they work. Gold Medal gives the moist, full-flavored eating quality everyone wants in cookies.

"Gold Medal is the favorite of more women because it makes possible failure-proof bakings. Testing from wheat to sack makes Gold Medal uniform, dependable . . . for all bakings. Millions have learned it's a flour you can trust! Why don't you try it too?"

Betty Crocker
of General Mills

New! Features double-quick cooky method!

Step-by-step pictures tell how to save ½ your mixing time . . . make cooky-making simple as A-B-C! Has 175 helpful and how-to-do-it illustrations . . . 120 success tips . . . 128 prize recipes (each complete on one page).

Yours for only 25¢! An ideal Christmas gift . . . send convenient dollar bill for four "Tells all" in clear, easy-to-follow pictures. Tells and shows how to make all types of cookies, the faster Betty Crocker DOUBLE-QUICK way. How to make many cookies from one "key" recipe.

The most complete, up-to-date, illustrated selection of Betty Crocker cooky recipes and tips ever offered! Cream of her incomparable collection. Simplified and speeded up for modern busy cooks!

Betty Crocker favorite recipes marked with star—so you can try them first. Contains every hint, short-cut, and trick of cooky-making Betty Crocker has found useful. Striking color photographs. "Method" pictures galore!

Ideal for the holiday season—and all-year use. It's worth many times the price. You'll probably want several for Christmas gifts—mail a convenient dollar bill for four! Only limited printing—so order today! Order blank at right.

Use GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour only, for the Betty Crocker recipes below . . . any other flour would risk a failure. These recipes have been perfected and tested for Gold Medal.

MERRY CHRISTMAS COOKIES (Key Recipe)

Soft, cushiony cookies, dark or light . . . a Christmas delight!

DARK DOUGH for animal and toy shapes and boy and girl figures in photo:

Mix together thoroughly . . . . . ⅓ cup soft shortening; ⅓ cup brown sugar (packed in cup); 1 egg; ⅔ cup molasses

Sift together and stir in . . . . . 2¾ cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour; *1 tsp. soda; *1 tsp. salt; 2 tsp. cinnamon; 1 tsp. ginger

Chill dough. Roll out thick (¼"). Cut into desired shapes. Place 1" apart on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake until, when touched lightly with finger, no imprint remains. Ice and decorate when cool.

Temperature: 375° (quick mod. oven).
Time: Bake 8 to 10 min.
Amount: 4 to 5 doz. medium sized cookies.

*If you use Gold Medal Self-Rising Flour (sold in parts of South) omit salt and reduce soda to ¼ tsp.

LIGHT DOUGH for bells, toys, stars, etc. Follow recipe above for Dark Dough except substitute honey for molasses and granulated sugar for brown. Use 1 tsp. vanilla in place of cinnamon and ginger.

DECORATIVE ICING
Into 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar stir just enough water (about 1 tbsp.) to make an icing that will hold its shape when forced thru a pastry tube. Tint if desired with a few drops of food coloring. (Pile into pastry tube and squeeze thru narrow opening to make lines to outline cookies.) For spreading on cookies thin icing with a little water.

STARS
Cover with white icing. Sprinkle with sky blue sugar.

STOCKINGS
Sprinkle colored sugar on toes and heels before baking. Or mark heels and toes of baked cookies with icing of some contrasting color.

TO HANG ON CHRISTMAS TREE
Just loop a piece of green string and press ends into the dough at the top of each cooky before baking. Bake with string-side down on pan.

CHRISTMAS TREES
Spread with white icing . . . then sprinkle with green sugar. Decorate with silver dragées and tiny colored candies.

TOYS
(Drum, car, jack-in-box, etc.): Outline shapes with white or colored icing.

ANIMALS
(Reindeer, camel, dog, kitten, etc.): Pipe icing on animals to give effect of bridles, blankets, etc. Delights youngsters!

BOYS AND GIRLS
Pipe figures with an icing to give desired effects: eyes, noses, buttons, etc.

BELLS
Outline with red icing. Make clapper of red icing. Very picturesque.

ALMOND CRESCENTS

Rich, delicious, buttery (top third of picture—marked with white arrow).

Mix together thoroughly . . . . . 1 cup soft shortening (half butter); ⅓ cup sugar; ⅔ cup ground blanched almonds

Sift together and work in . . . . . 1⅔ cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour; ¼ tsp. salt

Chill dough. Roll into pencil-thick rolls. Cut in 2½" lengths. Place on ungreased baking sheet in form of crescents. Bake until set . . . but not brown. While still warm, roll in 1 cup confectioners' sugar and 1 tsp. cinnamon mixed.

Temperature: 325° (slow mod. oven).
Time: Bake 14 to 16 min.
Amount: About 5 doz. cookies. 2½" in diameter.

Do not use Self-Rising Flour with this recipe.

CLIP AND MAIL THIS ORDER BLANK . . . TODAY! PRINT NAME AND ADDRESS

Send 25c to Betty Crocker, Box 1024, Minneapolis, Minn.

Please send me your new PICTURE COOKY BOOK. I enclose 25¢ in coin No stamps please! Send convenient dollar bill for four.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

(Offer good in U.S.A. only, until June 1, 1949 or while supplies last)

Test your wax paper 3 ways

1. AFTER 3 DAYS SEE WHICH KEEPS BREAD FRESHER! Cut-Rite really protects expensive foods—it's waxed-through, not just surface waxed! Wrap leftover meats, vegetables in extra-heavy Cut-Rite when you whisk them off the table. Flavor-robbing air stays out, fresh flavor stays in. More compliment-winning meals all week with food that's flavor-saved with Cut-Rite!

2. SEE HOW CUT-RITE FOLDS WITHOUT SPLITTING! Wrap, twist, fold—Cut-Rite's so pliable it won't crack . . . wax won't flake off. Save icebox space and extra dishes—wrap small things small and tuck in corners. Flavor-strong fish, cheese, onion wrapped in Cut-Rite can't taint other foods. Moist foods, like half a tomato, won't soak through extra-heavy Cut-Rite.

3. SEE HOW CUT-RITE TEARS OFF EVENLY, ALWAYS!

Cut-Rite's famous cutting edge makes it extra convenient, easy to use. A Scott Paper Product.

"CUT-RITE" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

All's Copr.

(Continued from Page 99)

the cathedral which is nice but nothing wonderful.

We found only one antiquity shop where Franklin got a book of prayers in a very nice binding, the queerest old compass, broken, but in a nice old wooden case and two little boxes. Then we came back for tea and Franklin is now studying Baedeker and trying to settle our future route! He has hives again and I cannot understand it, as he seems quite well and we have been leading a very quiet life in a very cool and healthy climate since we left Venice, with the exception of yesterday! I think it may be white wine which we had in St. Moritz and now that he doesn't drink it, I hope the hives will depart.

I am reading a French book by Anatole France but he occasionally disgusts me so that I have to stop, and yet it is a mild and proper book for French, devoted so far to the problem of our future life!

We start at ten tomorrow for Ulm so I thought I had better finish to-night as we are usually hurried in the morning!

Poor Mama, I am afraid we've given you lots of work about the house. Much, much love from us both,

Ever your loving
ELEANOR

ST. BLASIEN, AUGUST 1, 1905

Dearest Mama: We are having such a nice lazy time here that I'm afraid my letter is bound to be unbearably dull!

Our room has a small balcony and after breakfasting out there yesterday morning we sat there and read and wrote until lunchtime. Then we went down to the Tusculum waterfall and up to Gross-Herzogin-Lusien-Ruhe where we sat most of the afternoon. Several people came up there but the only people who stayed at all were an English and an American couple who sat down back of us and conversed in loud tones much to our amusement. Needless to say the Americans were common and the man had evidently been a German at no very distant date. They were impressing the English couple with their wealth and after explaining that in America there was no such thing as a season for eatables, that strawberries were much better in January than in June and that of course the price was no consideration, they proceeded to discuss the government of the country and finally the negro question while Franklin and I pretended to do accounts and in reality nearly expired with suppressed laughter! In the evening we returned to our balcony and played piquet and watched the most wonderful pinky clouds I've ever seen and listened to the band which plays every night in the Kloster garden but which sounds far nicer from here, I think. Franklin has been doing accounts all this morning and he is really marvelous for he always comes out exactly right!

A fault denied is twice committed.

Wednesday afternoon. Dearest Mama, we have just had a dreadful shock, in the shape of several letters, among them yours of July 2nd! Where they have been all this time I don't know. Well, we are glad to get them at last. Also we have only just heard of your present to us, you dear, dear Mama. It was too sweet of you to send us such a wonderful present and I shall enjoy spending my share in London or Paris. Franklin is going to add a line at the end so I'm not thanking for him! How I would like to kiss you and tell you instead of writing my thanks. You don't know how pleased we both are and I can't half express the pleasurable thrills I have when I think of the fun I shall have in Paris!

Now I must answer the questions in your first letter about clothes, furs etc. though as I haven't tried any of them on I can't say how they will look. Franklin's furs are lovely, a long stole and big muff of the softest, finest mink I've ever seen. Aunt Doe helped us choose them as well as everything else and of course she was a great help as she knew so much about furs compared to our ignorant selves. I am ashamed to tell you how many clothes I ordered but as you will see them all soon perhaps it is as well to prepare you! We got a white cloth evening cloak and I had my old white fur lined and arranged so that in winter it buttons into the cloak and keeps me wonderfully warm. Then I got a very grand three quarter coat and a whole dress for the afternoon in pastel blue with a short skirt to wear if I want to be a little less grand. For the evening I got a white net dress with a collar so I can have it high or low necked and black gown which Aunt Doe ordered after I left for the same kind of use. Then a pompadour silk low neck gown, a pale mauve crepe de chine high neck gown and a pale blue tea gown complete my list except for a rough tweed coat and skirt and a riding habit I ordered in London. Are you horrified at my extravagance? I am, but Franklin hasn't begun to complain as yet.

And now for your letter of the 20th which caused us great excitement! You are an angel to take so much trouble about the house, but I am so glad you are going to see it and I do hope you will take it if it is possible! What a wonderful thing it would be if you could work the extension but we hardly dare hope for such luxury and will be quite happy if the plumbing is good and the paint and papers fresh and new.

It rained hard all yesterday so we spent the day on our balcony, reading, writing, sewing and playing piquet. Today has been cloudy too and it rained this morning, so I finished up the family mending and Franklin read and this afternoon we had a good walk through the woods up to the Sandboten and down by all kinds of wrong paths which lengthened our walk and did us lots of good! This hotel has afforded us lots of amusement for they have all kinds of strange rules and regulations! Notices such as "Türe Leise Zumachen" are everywhere and in consequence we always slam the doors. You are also requested to make no noise after 10 P.M. in your room and Franklin is not even allowed to light a cigarette after dinner on the piazza! I think we may be thrown out before Sunday, but we hope for the best!

I will leave the rest of the paper for Franklin, so good-by dearest and a thousand thanks and kisses. I feel as though we would have such long arrears of kisses and cuddly times to make up when we get home! Lovingly,
ELEANOR.

Dearest Mama: You must have thought it very queer indeed that we did not thank you before this. With your belated letter came also one from the Barings saying £100 had been credited to my account. It is really too sweet of you and all afternoon we have been talking over what we shall get with it. Indeed we had decided not to look, even, at anything pretty or go near any more antiquity or book shops, but now we shall sail around Strassburg and Amiens and Paris like a "Pierp" Morgan. I shall certainly take the driving lessons unless it is frightfully hot—and you know what Paris can be the middle of August.

Ever your loving
F.D.R.

STRASSBURG, AUGUST 8, 1905

Dearest Mama: We arrived here about half an hour ago and found your two letters with the good news that you had taken the house! We are so glad and think you have done wonders for us, in the way of a good bargain. I am looking forward so much to getting it in order with you to help us. I am afraid my unaided efforts would not be very successful!

After Franklin wrote you yesterday we went out and walked round the "Munster" which I think lovely in spite of its many different periods of architecture and then we found a book shop. This morning we returned to the book shop and Franklin got a few volumes on Maximilian in Mexico, two of which are in French, so I am going to begin my education on the subject by reading them! Franklin says I am ruining him, I read so much trash in such a short time, so he is quite pleased at the thought of a few days spent on "The Letters of Maximilian's Private Secretary!"

Nancy—August 10th. Franklin sent you a post card yesterday so you saw that we had

(Continued on Page 104)

Want to go fancy without too much fuss?

here's the way—with DIAMOND WALNUTS budget-wise

WALNUT-APPLE SALAD BOUQUETS

SURPRISING HOW tempting your thrifty dishes can be—when you add Diamond Walnuts for good looks and flavor.

Here's Waldorf Salad, a bit different with slices of sweet pickle, and better than ever with plenty of chopped Diamonds. Arrange on apple slices as shown, top with a golden Diamond half—and it's a party salad!

easy-going

THREE-DECKER WALNUT DELIGHT

TAKE A VACATION from your oven and make this delicious dessert from store-bought cake. A real treat for your family! But be sure to use Diamond Walnuts! Those plump, crisp, golden kernels will make your cake as pretty as this picture.

- 1 small loaf plain cake, bought or homemade
- ½ pound (32) marshmallows
- ½ cup syrup from crushed pineapple
- Dash of salt
- 1 cup drained crushed pineapple
- ½ cup whipping cream
- ½ cup coarsely chopped Diamond Walnuts
- Diamond Walnut halves
- Maraschino cherries

Cut cake into 3 layers. Melt marshmallows with pineapple syrup in double boiler, stirring occasionally. Add salt. Cool until partially thickened, then beat with rotary beater. Fold in the pineapple and whipped cream. Spread between cake layers and sprinkle generously with chopped Diamond Walnuts. Use the rest to frost cake. Decorate with plump Diamond halves and cherries. Chill. This recipe makes enough filling and frosting for a 7x3x3-inch loaf. Serves 6 to 8 delighted people.

branded
DIAMOND WALNUTS
California's finest

To get the most for your walnut money—buy Diamond Walnuts. Sold in bulk and 1 lb. cellophane bags (red bag for large-size, blue for medium-size walnuts). The Diamond brand on every shell is your guide to more perfect, usable kernels per pound. Available also ready-shelled: Plump halves and pieces, mixed, in 8 and 4 ounce vacuum tins—keep fresh and crisp for months.

SAVES food money every day!

SAVES money on baby food! Makes delicious food for baby from same foods you serve your family!

SAVES money on meat! Grinds meats for croquettes; makes jar of spread from 2 wieners, 1 pickle!

SAVES money on vegetables! Makes soups from leftover vegetables. Cost? Only a few pennies!

SAVES money on fruit! Makes pint of juice from one orange; delicious drinks from all fruits.

K-M Liquidizer

PAYS FOR ITSELF IN NO TIME AT ALL!

Here's how! You need never throw aw one bit of food! Almost magically, yo Liquidizer turns bits of meat, cheese, ve tables into sandwich spreads; mak inexpensive mayonnaise; grinds, cho grates—blends bar drinks; does countl chores no other appliance can do!

Does every job—in seconds!

Easy as 1-2-3! One, flip switch; two, put in ing dients; three, pour out the delicious results!

Modern Magic—here's some more! See them at your K-M st

K-M Corn Popper—Completely automatic! Pour in oil (measuring cup comes with it), watch corn pop! Ovenproof glass top, aluminum base. For deep-fat frying, too!

K-M Quad Waffle Baker—Makes 4 waffles in any of 3 shades. Signal light, current go off when waffles are ready. New grid (sold separately) fits baker... makes 4 sandwiches!

Knapp-Monarch

ST. LOUIS 16, MISSOURI

Makers of Sparklets, Repel-A-Mist, Magik Mist. K-M Appliances also tea in a very pretty place! In the morning we really saw the Munster well, watched the wonderful self-regulating clock (which is already half an hour slow!) strike the quarter, whereupon a few of the figures performed, but they don't all work except at twelve o'clock and we could not wait as we wanted to climb the tower. We only went up 383 steps to the platform but that is very high and the view marvelous. Franklin got several pictures from there which ought to be good.

(Continued from Page 102)

This A.M. we came on here and have spent the whole afternoon walking around. The town is attractive and there are several fine

Warren to marry a foreigner—not of his religion—and will live to be 105 in the shade and I am to be President of the U. S. or the Equitable, I couldn't make out which!

Forgive haste, writing and uninterestingness, but we are having a scrumptious time.

Loads of love,
F.D.R.

PARIS, AUGUST 22, 1905

Dearest Mama: Our stay in Paris is nearing an end, for we leave for London on Thursday and we shall both be sorry, for our two weeks here have been very delightful. Last Friday I began taking driving lessons of Howlett—two lessons with a pair last rags, etc., and after lunch at Aunt Doe's, she and E. went to the dressmakers, and Warren and I went to the bankers and various book poster and liquid refreshment shops! We met LeRoy King and George Burnett and Jack Minturn and Stuart Preston have also turned up.

Sunday morning we went to the Sainte Chapelle and to Notre Dame, St. Étienne and the Panthéon! In the evening Warren and I joined LeRoy and George at 7 and went on a prolonged bat. I got back at 1:30 A.M.

Tuesday—Yesterday morning Aunt Doe took us for a drive in the Bois and in the afternoon Warren, E. and I went to Mme. de Noël, the clairvoyant lady. We were told delightful things. E. is to inherit a fortune:

night journey. The country is too beautiful, hills all around and a lovely firth below us. The house is run casually but comfortably and such a dear old place and Mrs. and Miss Ferguson are both very sweet. Miss Chamberlain and her aunt came to lunch.

It was so nice seeing Muriel in London and I hope we will see her again though the family all go to Leamington this Saturday. Muriel gave me a dear little fan in London and brought F. from Russia a very pretty cigarette box of colored wood. She told me you had sent her such a wonderful present and she thought it so sweet and dear of you.

She has decided not to marry a lord. She says she "has seen too much of them and their ways!" A statement which made me gasp!

Thursday. This morning I went for a drive with Mrs. Ferguson and we visited various people, first a Mrs. Munro who sat on the edge off her chair and trembled with excitement, then an old widow, and finally the gardener at Novar showed us the garden. Mrs. Ferguson to my surprise talked of "peace" to them all and they all seemed to know about it and take an interest. It is nice news isn't it? We had really begun to think it would not be and I think Uncle Ted must be gratified to have done so much towards it. To return to Novar, we did not go to the house but the garden is quite lovely, full of flowers, with the old sundial in the middle, a pond, a few big trees and lovely paths. Mr. & Mrs. Webb (they write books on sociology) came to lunch and Franklin discussed the methods of learning at Harvard with the husband while I discussed the servant problem with the wife! Incidentally, F. worked on law all the morning and this afternoon he and Hector went on a long tramp over the hills and saw some of the queer little crofts "en route." Miss Ferguson and I drove in a two-wheeled cart called a float (isn't it a lovely name?) to Strathpeffer, 14 miles off.

We got home here just in time for dinner and since then Miss F. has been showing us her political cartoons which are very amusing though I miss half the point as I don't know the people. Mr. Hector F. gave me the sweetest little blue enamel box this evening. It is very old Battersea and I believe very rare nowadays.

Good-by dearest, and much love from both.

Your devoted
CHILDREN

A sister of Neville Chamberlain, Miss Chamberlain was a graduate of Allenswood. "Novar" was the Ferguson family home for many generations; the head of the house was traditionally known as "The Novar." The "nice news" refers to the fact that several days before the writing of this letter Japanese and Russian peace plenipotentiaries had reached an agreement that brought hostilities to an end. The luncheon guests who "write books on sociology" were the noted British sociologists and economists, Beatrice and Sidney Webb.

KIRCALDY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1905

Dearest Mama: Just a hurried line before the post goes to thank you for the three letters of the 19th, 21st and 22nd. F. is busy watching a bowling match or he would write.

We opened the flower show at Novar last Saturday and F. made a very good speech. I will bring you the local paper in which it was reported, though he says no one is to see it! We had tea with Miss Chamberlain and on Sunday we tea'd at Novar, otherwise we were quiet walking and driving. This place is wonderful but the country not as beautiful as the north. Today Mr. F. took F. and me to St. Andrews and we saw the old town and they played one round on the links.

Love from both your devoted
CHILDREN

The "Mr. Ferguson" of this letter was the older brother, Sir Ronald Ferguson, who lived in the family's other home, "Raith" near Edinburgh on the Firth of Forth, and who later served for seven years as Governor-General of Australia.

OSBERTON-IN-WORKSOP, SEPTEMBER 7, 1905

Dearest Mama: The visit to Novar was delightful and quite restful as we had five days there. Eleanor has written you about the flower show. She opened it very well and wasn't a bit rattled and spoke very clearly and well—but I had an awful time of it and wasn't even introduced. I had to wander up to the front of the platform and the foolishness of my smile was only equaled by the extreme idiocy of the remarks that followed. You can imagine what a speech on gardening, and the raising of vegetables in general, by your son must have been like.

Yesterday A.M. I had a long ride and E. a quiet morning and we left at 7, getting here at 8:30 P.M. after many vicissitudes, for we got out at the wrong place, got the wrong tickets and had a generally exciting time. We got to this house at 9 and Mr. Foljambe and Lady Gertrude are just the same, Mr. F. of course a little older and more feeble, but most delightful, and Lady G. hasn't altered one scrap. I have had many long and interesting talks with Mr. Ferguson on forestry, and with Mr. Foljambe and Mr. Kaye on farming and cattle raising, and the plans for Hyde Park now include not only a new house but a new farm, cattle, trees, etc.

Friday morning—By the way, before I forget it, will you bring down to the dock when you come to meet us a small sum of gold? I have ordered a most wonderful tandem harness and we must pay on that as well as on the linen. I think $300 will be enough.

Everyone is talking about Cousin Theodore, saying that he is the most prominent figure of present-day history, and adopting towards our country in general a most respectful and almost loving tone. What a change has come over English opinion in the last few years! Even the French were quite enthusiastic, but the German tone seemed to hide a certain animosity and jealousy as usual.

This afternoon we are to drive over to Welbeck Abbey, the Duke of Portland's place, to tea, and tomorrow we leave early for London. I cannot tell you how delighted we shall both be to get home again.

My exams are on Thursday and Friday and then we can go to Hyde Park for a few days' good rest.

Au revoir for a very little while.

Ever,
F.D.R.

F.D.R.: His Personal Letters, Volume II: 1905–1928, edited by Elliott Roosevelt, is published by Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $5.00.

THE END

WHAT ONE WOMAN CAN DO

(Continued from Page 11)

Philadelphia, and other incidental expenses. But ever since Mrs. Hugg thought up the button business, real financial worry has been a thing of the past. Seven years ago, when garments came in minus buttons, Mrs. Hugg sent out an SOS. As she received more and more unusual-looking buttons, she realized there might be financial value in buttons, and joined local, state and national button collectors' organizations. Now she's an authority—and has made more than $1500 on the sale of buttons.

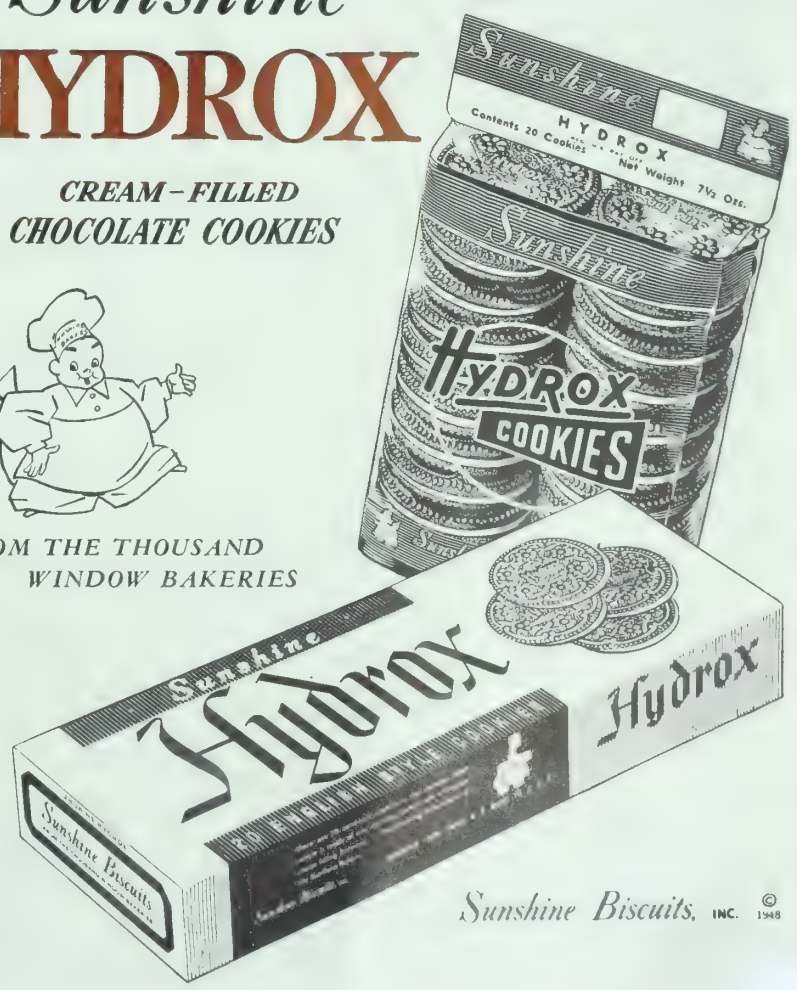
Her Button Teas, which particularly appeal to collectors, bring in the most profit and are "the most fun." Thousands of buttons are carded on uniform white cards, then placed on huge pieces of wallboard—browns, tans and golds on one; turquoise and gray on another; black and red on a third. At one tea in Birmingham, two rooms were filled with tables of all sorts of buttons. The result: $53 from buttons, $25 in contributions. One button sold for $10—the highest price so far.

Volunteers in the Detroit workroom sew, knit, furnish buttons, chauffeur, collect and pack clothes, mend, and even wash and iron. None is paid. They include forty church groups of many denominations, women's clubs and sororities, and hundreds of individual volunteers. They each pledge one day a year to the workroom, but many come more often, and work at home and in their groups.

This, then, is the story of one woman working with a strength of conviction and concern reflected in hundreds of women. They are working for a cause common to us all. You can help by sending contributions of clothing and money to your local American Friends Service Committee, or to the central warehouse at 23rd and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. You can help further by sending old buttons to Mrs. Mary Hugg, 8448 Yale Avenue, Detroit, Michigan. For buttons become money, and money becomes material, and material becomes clothes. Clothes are an important pointer on the path to peace.

THE END

The original cream-filled chocolate cookie!



NO ONE but the Sunshine Bakers has ever succeeded in creating a cookie exactly like HYDROX. There has never been a cream filling quite as smooth as this, and those two chocolate cookies have a fresh chocolate flavor and tenderness that can't be matched. That's why HYDROX has always been first choice...with milk, desserts or between meals. Order HYDROX from your grocer today... in the pantry package or the handy cellophane bag.

Sunshine
HYDROX

CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIES

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES

Sunshine Biscuits, INC. © 1948

The happiest brides have Community

Make it a Community Christmas . . . give a gift she'll love for keeps!

There's MORNING STAR! That's the latest Community pattern—hailed with delight by decorators, artists, experts in good living, happy choice of thousands of first family brides.

There's MILADY—How your favorite lady will love it! Dainty floral design, quiet, enduring charm—it's a pattern to live with . . . for keeps!

There's LADY HAMILTON—Sophisticated simplicity, traditional distinction, good line, good design, good taste!

There's CORONATION—That's the all-time favorite—fluted columns, costly-looking piercing, elegance for any table!

They're all Community—all correct—all protected with Community's own long-life "Overlay"—all at budget-thoughtful prices. Sold by your town's best jewelers!

(No Federal tax)

If it's Community*. . . it's correct!

COMMUNITY . . . THE FINEST SILVERPLATE . . . ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, NEW YORK

*TRADE MARKS OF ONEIDA LTD. COPYRIGHT 1948 ONEIDA LTD.

Homemade Christmas . . .

BY NORA O'LEARY

For BABY: drawstring ribbon sachets. Hang on hangers. Grandmother will love bow sachets with favorite scent. 2522.

SISTER could wear this black velvet ribbon and ermine-tail belt. Tiny pearls cover bowknot, hooks underneath. 2523.

Your favorite AUNT would be enchanted with two-color ribbon scarf with double bow at neck, especially if you made it. 2524.

Week-end GUESTS love small carryall bags in taffeta, lined with waterproof fabric. Fill with toilet articles. 2525.

Delight MOTHER with quilted satin slippers and drawstring bag for packing. Sized by tracing around her foot. 2526.

The whole FAMILY will love a soap mitt for the shower! White terry-cloth soap mitt with a color pocket-palm. 2527.

The SUB-DEB will be delighted with a peplum belt and mittens made from stenciled leopard velveteen. 2528.

15¢ for each pattern. Order by number from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Cape Cod hand-crafted crystal
. . . for yourself and to give.
It is the finest, the loveliest, most wanted, most useful table crystal service
made in America.

The smallest piece a brilliant gift
. . . holding enchantment . . . unending pleasure to the eye . . . rare durability!

It is a pattern of heirloom beauty to which you can add and match in the future.

IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION
Bellaire, Ohio

PATENT PROTECTED CAPE COD CRYSTAL IS SOLD IN AMERICA'S FINE STORES. OPEN STOCK

"A Joy to give — A Jewel to own"

● Give Revere Ware this Xmas. Here's why.

It's a gift of beauty. Every woman loves these "Kitchen Jewels."

Revere Ware is a useful gift. Revere "waterless" cooking makes food easier to prepare, more enjoyable to the taste, more healthful to eat. It saves fuel, guards against kitchen heat and odors, is easy to keep clean and ever new-looking. It is a lifetime gift. Revere Copper-Clad Stainless Steel Ware is practically indestructible. We've never heard of one of these cooking utensils wearing out!

But, in selecting your gifts, make sure you get Revere Ware. Like all good things it has been imitated. So look for the trade mark in the extra-thick copper bottom.

Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated,
Rome Manufacturing Company Division, Rome, N. Y.

3-qt. Pistol-Grip Whistling Tea Kettle . . . 6 and 8-cup Coffee Percolators . . . 1, 2 and 3-qt. Covered Sauce Pans . . . 1½ and 2-qt. Double Boilers . . . 4-qt. Covered Sauce Pot . . . 5½-qt. Dutch Oven . . . 8, 10 and 12-in. Covered Skillets.

PS. New items are constantly being added to the line. Look for them at your dealer's.

Conversation Piece

Beforehand preparations and careful planning will make your Christmas Day feast as serene and gay as your holiday spirit.

BY RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

A spiced cider punch, piping hot, begins the festivities.

Christmas fruit torte iced with hard sauce gives a light and delicious conclusion to Christmas dinner.

Any heart that's in the right place will just naturally overflow with hospitality at Christmastime—I don't see how the season's warm tide of good will could be resisted even if one tried. So I won't spend time rhapsodizing on the theme that the Christmas dinner, that special come-but-once-a-year event, should be as memorable as the occasion. How to make it so is the problem: sufficiently traditional to be appropriate, Christmasy but unexpected; bountiful but not cloying; and above all, a gastronomic experience worthy of the day.

Let's see if we can put together a menu that will meet these specifications. And it will be one that can be prepared almost entirely in advance of the great day.

(Continued on Page 110)

PHOTOS BY STUART

The goose, poached and browned, is served with a fine caper sauce, bright mounds of sweet-sour beets and string beans—as good as they are beautiful.

Aspic-coated liver pâté makes a rich and satisfying appetizer, with sharply seasoned, frappéed tomato juice the perfect accompaniment.

ECONOMY CUTS
are fit for a King when you add Heinz Tomato Ketchup
Many a thrifty meat dish... or leftover combination... takes on a world of luxurious flavor by the simple addition of spicy, wonder-working Heinz Tomato Ketchup!
Makes Low-Cost Meals Delicious!
HEINZ TOMATO KETCHUP
57 VARIETIES MADE BY H.J.HEINZ COMPANY
H.J.HEINZ CO.
HEINZ Tomato Ketchup
57

As a welcome, to put everyone in a fine mood for the festivities, we'll have Christmas cider punch, a spicy hot drink to enjoy while the crowd gathers. It can be ladled from a punch bowl or poured from a big pitcher—the important point is that it should be piping hot.

And now to the dinner proper, with goose as the focal point. All the other dishes of the menu are designed to glorify that luscious bird. First there will be an aspic-coated pâté, made from the goose liver and some other things. This is a rich appetizer—any pâté, to be good, must be rich—and for contrast and a perfect supplement we'll have frappéed tomato juice, seasoned to the hilt, and crisp unbuttered Melba toast. This combination provides appetizer and first course all in one, and it can be served in the living room if you like, which will make the dining-room service so much easier.

Our main dish, stuffed poached goose with caper sauce, is something I can't resist. Not that I do much resisting where food is concerned, but this is truly a chef-d'oeuvre. If you can't get a goose, a young turkey can be prepared in the same way—I've done it many times and we love it—but for Christmas I want goose if I can find it. I'll save further comments about the sauce and the special stuffing until I get around to recipes—and I'd better hurry. On the platter with the goose there will be leaves of flaky piecrust filled with currant jelly or Bar-le-Duc.

We'll have two vegetables—sweet-sour beets and string beans with drawn butter. They will provide a pleasant variety of tastes and their bright red and green colors will be in the Christmas spirit.

A beautiful dish of relishes, pickle fans and carrot boats and celery, the two latter stuffed with cheese, will substitute for salad. A real salad would be too much, I think—capacity has to be considered—but we shall want something crisp and tart. For bread, a sliced toasted loaf already spread with butter will be just right, and no strain on the cook.

The dessert, Christmas fruit torte, will be definitely on the light side compared with most of the traditional Christmas puddings, which suits me perfectly. The idea of a rich plum or fruit pudding brought flaming to the table is most exciting, but when it comes to eating same at the end of a hearty meal, I bog down. Heresy, I know, but there must be a lot of people who feel as I do on this subject, and if you disagree you don't have to listen to a word I say anyhow. Christmas fruit torte is a ring of spiced spongecake, cut in two the round way, with loads of candied fruits, nuts and sauce between the top and bottom layers. It is iced thickly with hard sauce mixed with candied cherries. For decoration—and they're mighty good to eat too—we'll put a rim of frosted grapes around the torte.

We'll plan for eight people.

CHRISTMAS CIDER PUNCH

In a saucepan put 1 quart sweet cider, 1 cup orange juice, ½ cup lemon juice, 3 cinnamon sticks about 4 inches long, 1 teaspoon whole cloves with heads removed, candied ginger to equal about 2 tablespoons, and light brown sugar to taste. Bring to a good boil, lower heat and simmer 15 minutes. Strain through a sieve lined with cheesecloth into a preheated punch bowl or pitcher and serve. You can substitute a dry red wine for the cider if you like. The punch can be prepared in advance and brought to the boiling point just before serving, but be sure to strain it after the first 15 minutes' simmering or it will be too spicy.

GOOSE-LIVER PÂTÉ

Calling this goose-liver pâté, when only one goose liver is involved, is stretching the facts a bit, but who has a pound of those precious articles to play with? Not I, and anyhow, this pâté tastes as if it were full of them.

When your goose is cleaned have the fat on the inside and around the neck saved for you. Boil neck and gizzard in a very little salted water until tender. A pressure cooker speeds up this job, and it doesn't make any difference if they are overcooked. They must be very tender. Grind together, using finest blade of meat chopper, t meat from neck and gizzard, ½ pound r calf's liver, ½ pound smoked liverwur ¼ pound goose fat and 1 clove garlic. M thoroughly and grind two more times. Se son with salt, freshly ground black pepp 1 teaspoon dried sweet basil, ½ teaspo marjoram and 2 dashes Tabasco. Taste f seasoning. I won't eat raw liver, so I put little dab of the mixture in a skillet a cook it a minute or two for tasting. C rect seasoning if needed, add 3 tablespoo broth from neck and gizzard and, if y like, a little Madeira. Pour boiling wat over goose liver, let stand 5 minutes a cut into thin slices.

This is to be a molded pâté with a coatin of aspic, and it should be cooked in som thing the same shape as, but smaller tha the dish that will serve as a mold. A shape is okay. Put a layer of pâté in the bo tom of the dish in which it is to be bak and cover with some slices of goose live Continue with these, alternating layers u til you run out of materials, finishing wit the pâté. Put on cover or fasten a piece parchment paper over top, set dish in pan of hot water and cook in a 350° oven for 3 hours. When cool, put in refrige ator. Do this much several days in advanc and fill the mold at least a day before it wi be needed.

To make aspic, soak 2 envelopes un flavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water an add 2 cups highly seasoned hot bouillon Set bowl of aspic in cold water. Now we' ready to fill the mold. Remove pâté fro dish in which it was cooked. It will be quit stiff, and if its shape needs improving thi can be done easily with your hands or spatula. Cut some thin rounds of stuffe olives and some strips of pimiento. Pour thin layer of aspic in the bottom of th mold and set it and the rest of the aspi in the refrigerator. As soon as aspic in bot tom of mold begins to congeal, arrange th olive rounds and pimiento strips on it i an attractive pattern. Press them down s they will stick in place and put mold bac in the refrigerator. When the rest of th aspic has become slightly thick, put pât into the mold. There must be room for a layer of aspic all around the sides and over the top of the pâté. Spoon aspic in care fully until the mold is full to the top and return it to the refrigerator. Pour remain der of aspic in a flat-bottomed pan or dish and dot here and there with olive slices and bits of pimiento. This will be used as decoration around the pâté.

To serve, unmold pâté in center of serving dish and surround with water cress or other greens and little piles of chopped aspic.

FRAPPÉED TOMATO JUICE

To 2 quarts tomato juice add 1 tablespoon mixed whole spice tied in cheesecloth, 3 cloves garlic cut into chunks, a little vinegar, and salt, pepper and sugar to taste. Boil ½ hour, but remove spice bag after first 15 minutes. Strain and chill. Two or three hours before serving put into freezing tray of refrigerator, and just before serving beat with rotary beater. The tomato juice should be frothy and slightly mushy.

POACHED GOOSE

Get a young, especially fattened goose that has been raised in confinement for the table, weighing about 14 pounds. You can be sure the bird is young if the bill is pliable and the feet are soft to the touch, and it should be very fat and meaty; if it meets these specifications it will also be tender and succulent. An old goose that has had the run of the barnyard may have a very fine taste, but its texture may closely resemble rubber. Pull the skin of the neck down and cut the neck off close to the body.

Stuffing*. For the base of the stuffing you will need 3 cups wild rice, boiled until tender and dried for a few minutes in a low oven. In a skillet melt a piece of butter or margarine the size of a big egg and add 2 cloves garlic, finely minced, 4 medium-sized onions, chopped, and 1 cup finely chopped celery. Sauté until golden brown. Drain juice from 3 small cans minced clams, add clams to skillet and cook 1 minute, stirring constantly. Fresh clams can be used, of course, but the canned ones are delicious, inexpensive and no trouble at all. Mix contents of skillet with rice and add ½ cup milk, 5 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 teaspoon rosemary, 1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper and salt to taste. The little pieces of clam have a chewy texture nd their taste is delicate and does not ominate the stuffing. If you're an ardent am fan, ½ cup clam juice may be subituted for the milk.

Fill both neck and body cavities with uffing and sew up openings with string. ush legs and wings tight against the body nd fasten with string. Now enclose the hole bird in a piece of muslin. The muslin an be sewed or pinned with safety pins. his makes the goose easy to handle and iminates the danger of tearing the skin hen it is turned. Put it, breast down, in a ettle that has a tight lid, cover with cold ater and add 2 carrots, 1 medium onion, handful of parsley, 1 teaspoon whole epper and 2 teaspoons salt. Bring to a oil, lower heat and skim. Put on cover nd cook gently until goose is tender, addng boiling water from time to time to keep ater level at its original height. Cooking me varies with the size of the goose, but will be around 3 hours.

When tender, take goose from pot, remove muslin wrappings, and put it, breast p, in a roasting pan that has a lid. Strain roth, cool as quickly as possible and skim ff grease. I never hrow away goose rease. It's wonderul for cooking—eseially for frying ashed-brown potaoes or potato pankes. Pour enough roth over goose to eep it moist and oil the rest, uncovred, until it is reuced to 3 or 4 cups. This much can be one the day before, that suits your onvenience—and if here is no one to elp you in the kitchn, I should think would. However, it ouldn't be a great hore to do the oaching on Christmas Day. A fowl ooked this way requires very little atching. Once the eat is regulated to immer you can go bout your other usiness and take nly an occasional eek to see if more ater is needed. Compared with oasting, and the onstant basting hat dare not be negected, this is child's lay. Before serving ut the goose, covred, in a 300° F. oven o get it piping hot. Remove cover; let kin brown to a golden color under broiler.

Caper Sauce. Melt 5 tablespoons butter r margarine, add 1 clove garlic, minced, ook for 1 minute and blend in 7 tablepoons flour. Cook over low heat 2 minutes, tirring constantly. Add 3 cups broth in hich goose was cooked, 1 cup cream or unluted evaporated milk, ⅛ teapoon cayne pepper, 1 teaspoon gourmet or other hinese seasoning powder and ¼ teaspoon affron, and cook over low heat until sauce s smooth and boiling. Add salt cautiously ntil the taste is right, and stir in 6 or 7 ablespoons drained capers. Make sauce head of time and reheat in double boiler. ust before serving, remove from heat and tir in 4 well-beaten egg yolks. (You'll have gg yolks left from the dessert.)

PIECRUST LEAVES

Roll piecrust as for a pie and cut it in the hape of leaves. I make a paper pattern and ut around it so that all the leaves are the ame size and shape. No matter how many ou make, they'll all be eaten—at least hat's my experience—so suit yourself as o quantity, but make enough to go all round the edge of your goose platter. Brush outside edges of leaves with beaten gg and fasten a rim of piecrust all around ach leaf, fluting the rim as you would for pie. This isn't at all hard to do, and if the esult looks homemade and not at all as f you'd bought the jobs at a bakery, that's ne. Put leaves on a lightly floured cooky heet, prick centers with a fork and bake in 50° F. oven until nicely browned.

To arrange the platter, remove all sewing and binding strings from goose, place it in center of platter and, if you like, put paper frills on the ends of the legs. Pour about a cup of caper sauce over the bird and serve the rest in a bowl. Put a good spoon of Bar-le-Duc or currant jelly in each piecrust leaf, arrange the leaves around the edge and garnish with lots of parsley. The wings of the bird won't look pretty, so tuck big bunches of parsley between them and the body so that they are practically covered.

SWEET-SOUR BEETS

I like to use the tiny bite-size whole beets for this dish, but if you can't get them, cut large beets into squares or strips. Melt 1 tablespoon butter or margarine and blend in 2 tablespoons flour. Add ½ cup orange juice, ½ cup beet juice, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 tablespoon vinegar, 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind, 3 tablespoons light brown sugar and 1 teaspoon salt. Cook until thick, stirring constantly, and add the drained beets. This is enough sauce for 2 No. 2½ cans of beets.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Keep Me the Country

By Cora Wilcox Dreyer

Keep me the country, for I shall be coming;
Stay me the summer, for I shall be there;
Save me the singing, and hold me the humming
Of birds and of bees in the soft-moving air.

Here at my window the gray fog is trying Harder to enter than ever before;
Down on the cobbles the city makes crying;
Winter and hunger stand watch at my door.

But I shall elude them and I shall come running Back to the thatch and the spread of the tree;
Guard me the green where the white lambs are sunning;
Keep me the country, for I shall be free.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

STRING BEANS WITH DRAWN BUTTER

Use fresh or frozen beans, either whole or Frenched. My favorite is the Kentucky Wonder. We grow them every summer and I watch like a hawk until they are four or five inches long and still very slender, then off the vines comes a big batch to be frozen for the next winter. I don't cut these, but I do tie them in neat little bundles, each bundle enough for one serving, before I put them in the boxes. I don't do this with all the beans I put up—heaven forbid—but these are special-occasion beans and I like them to look neat when they are served.

Cook the beans in a very little water until barely tender. To make drawn butter, melt 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, add 1 tablespoon flour and stir in 1 cup boiling water to which 1 tablespoon bouillon powder or 1 bouillon cube has been added. Bring to a boil and add salt to taste.

To serve, arrange the two vegetables on a hot platter and pour the drawn butter over the beans.

RELISHES

Cut long peeled carrots in half and split them down the center. Gouge out the centers with a sharp knife or apple corer, and round the ends to make them look like little boats. Cut strips of celery about the same length as the carrot boats, and store the two vegetables in ice water in the refrigerator.

Get some fairly large sweet pickles and make 5 or 6 long slices in each one, almost but not quite through the stem end. Gently press the pickles into fan shape and store in refrigerator.

Blend together until smooth 9 ounces cream cheese, 3 ounces Roquefort-type cheese and ⅓ cup cream. This will be the stuffing for the carrot boats and celery; and if you're going to use a pastry bag for this job, you might as well put the mixture right into the bag and store in refrigerator ready for use. The cheese will harden under refrigeration and should be left at room temperature for a while before it is used.

Fill the carrots and celery an hour or so before dinner and arrange them with the pickle fans on a relish tray.

Now you see 'em... now you don't!

FOLKS MAKE BORDEN'S FINE CHEESES DISAPPEAR QUICKER THAN YOU CAN SMACK YOUR LIPS!

It's NEW! It's a PIP! IT'S BORDEN'S PIPPIN ROLL!

ANOTHER NEW one from Borden's . . . for folks who like American cheese with a bite!

Borden's PIPPIN ROLL is just the finest natural American Cheddar Cheese . . . aged more than one year then ground for you, making it smooth and easy to spread.

Sharp, rich, and satisfying—a superb cheese for snacks and appetizers.

Look for Borden's 3-oz. PIPPIN ROLL at your favorite dairy counter today.

Mild and Sweet as a Nut—Borden's Gruyere!

Now, for the first time, Borden's is making famous Gruyere Cheese from the finest Wisconsin Swiss.

Even folks who seldom get worked up over cheese rave about the delicate, nut-sweet flavor of Borden's Gruyere. No cheese tray is complete without it.

It's a smart and delicious dessert, too, with crackers or fruit. Six individual 1-oz. foil-wrapped portions in each circular box.

Borden's Fine Cheeses

IF IT'S BORDEN'S — IT'S GOT TO BE GOOD!

Icing . . . snowy white! Cake . . . so heavenly light! A perfect dream of a Chiffon Cake . . . raised to perfection's peak by the gentle, even, double-action of Calumet Baking Powder.

GETS NICER RESULTS THAN MISTLETOE!

Christmas Tree Chiffon Cake

Go ahead and be his Christmas angel. Try this lovely Chiffon Cake.

It's easy to make really superb chiffon cakes if you depend on Calumet's double-action to help you. For Calumet raises your batter twice . . . first in the mixing bowl, later on in the oven . . . protecting your cake all the way.

And what happy results! Chiffon cakes so high, even, and light. For this cake —for all the new chiffon cakes which specify double-acting baking powder —depend on Calumet.

It's wonderful what Calumet does for all your cakes and muffins, waffles and biscuits, too!

CHRISTMAS TREE CHIFFON CAKE

Preparations. Sift flour once before measuring. (To measure lift sifted flour lightly by spoonfuls into measuring cup. Level off, but do not pack into cup.) All measurements are level. Start oven for slow heat (325°F.).

Measure into sifter:

2¼ cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
3 teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder
1½ cups sugar

Measure into mixing bowl:

½ cup salad oil (Mazola or Wesson Oil)
5 egg yolks, unbeaten
¾ cup water
2 tablespoons grated orange rind
1 teaspoon vanilla

Measure into large bowl:

1 cup (8 to 10) egg whites—at room temperature
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cream of tartar

Now you are ready to mix

1. Sift flour mixture into mixing bowl over oil, egg yolks, water, rind, and vanilla. Beat about 150 strokes, or until smooth.

2. Beat egg whites, salt, and cream of tartar with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in very stiff peaks—stiffer than for a meringue or angel food cake. (Takes 5 minutes with a good egg beater.) DO NOT UNDERBEAT.

3. Fold egg whites thoroughly into batter (about 150 strokes). DO NOT STIR OR BEAT. (Use rubber scraper or wooden spoon for this and strokes that cut down through mixture, lift it up, and roll it over in one motion.)

Baking. Turn into ungreased 10-inch tube pan and bake in a slow oven (325° F.) 1 hour and 5 minutes, or until done.

Cooling. Invert pan until cake is cool (about one hour), propping it up to avoid pressing rounded top of cake against table. Place tube part of tube pan over neck of funnel or bottle. To remove cake, loosen from sides of pan with spatula or knife.

To Decorate. Spread with seven minute frosting. Cut slits in tops of 12 large red gumdrops and insert a green paper Christmas tree in each. Place gumdrops around cake on serving plate.

Note. This cake may also be baked in two ungreased 8 x 8 x 2-inch pans in moderate oven (350°F.) 30 minutes, or until done. When cooling, rest corners of each square pan on two other pans.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

Double-acting... for Double-sure Success!

Calumet is a product of General Foods

TOASTED BREAD LOAF

Remove all crusts from a loaf of bread and cut bread into thick slices almost through bottom of loaf. Spread both sides of slices with butter or margarine, wrap loaf in brown paper and tie with string. This can be done the day before if you like. Shortly before serving, put the package in a low oven to heat, then remove paper and toast loaf on all four sides.

CHRISTMAS FRUIT TORTE

This recipe will fill an 11-inch ring mold. Beat 6 egg yolks until light, add gradually 1 cup sifted sugar and beat until creamy. Add 1 cup flour sifted with ¾ teaspoon baking powder, 3 teaspoons cinnamon, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, ½ teaspoon cloves and ½ teaspoon allspice. Beat until smooth. Beat 10 egg whites until stiff but not dry, adding ⅓ teaspoon salt and ¾ teaspoon cream of tartar. Mix 1 cup coarsely chopped English walnuts with batter and fold in egg whites until thoroughly blended. Grease and flour ring mold and spoon the batter in carefully, almost to the top. Bang the ring on the table occasionally as you fill it and smooth the top of the batter with a spoon. Bake in a 325° F. oven for 50 minutes, lower heat to 250° and bake 10 minutes more. As it bakes the cake will rise above the pan. When baking time is up, take ring out of oven, let stand on top of oven 5 minutes and invert on a turkish towel. When cool, remove cake from ring and cut through middle with a sharp knife to make two layers.

You will need 4 cups chopped fruit for the filling. I use 1 cup dates, ½ cup citron, ½ cup dried apricots, ½ cup candied cherries, 1 cup candied pineapple and ½ cup candied grapefruit peel. Add ½ cup coarsely chopped nuts to fruit. Soak 1½ envelopes unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water, add ¾ cup boiling orange juice, stir until gelatin is dissolved and add 1 cup cold orange juice. Pour this over fruit and nuts, mix well and set in refrigerator. When thick enough not to run, spread the fruit mixture on the bottom layer of cake ring, cover with top layer and set in refrigerator.

Cream together ⅓ cup butter or margarine, 3 cups confectioners' sugar and 1 raw egg. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla and, if you like, 3 tablespoons rum or brandy. Beat until very smooth and creamy. Stir in 1 cup candied cherries cut into pieces, ice the cake with this hard sauce and return it to refrigerator.

FROSTED GRAPES

These will make a lovely and edible decoration for your torte. Cut some Malaga and Tokay grapes into small sections, leaving a piece of stem on each little bunch. Boil 1½ cups sugar and ¾ cup water for 5 minutes and cool to lukewarm. Using stem as a handle, dip each little bunch of grapes into the sirup, sprinkle at once with granulated sugar and put on a greased platter. When all grapes are frosted, put some confectioners' sugar in a fine sieve and shake just a tiny bit over them and store in refrigerator.

Both the Christmas fruit torte and the grapes should be done the day before. To serve, put the torte in the center of a round platter and arrange the frosted grapes in a border around it. If you have a tall compote, it will look lovely in the center of the ring, filled to the brim with grapes.

Service. If you take advantage of all the preparation possibilities of this meal, you need spend very little time in the kitchen Christmas Day. And that's as it should be. I think it's fun to cook practically any day in the year except Christmas, and yet I don't want anything casual about Christmas dinner. It must be a real feast and as nearly perfect as I can make it—and I don't think for a minute that I have a corner on such sentiments.

But this dinner is only one of the many responsibilities of Christmastime, and to swing them all with equal success and still have fun with your dinner guests—that calls for organization of the first order. I'm always talking about organization, it seems, but Christmas Day provides the supreme test of your capabilities along that line. If the dinner hour finds you unhurried, serene and gay, and if the dinner itself appears as if Santa Claus had brought it, then yours will be a Merry Christmas. And that's what I wish you all. THE END

Best new food idea in years!

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan.

Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good, rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS!

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "Meal Makers"
Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

The gathering of Vermont maple sap starts with a rush when frosty early spring nights are followed by brilliant, sunshiny days.

Gives you real maple sugar flavor

The delicious taste of real maple sugar—it's a downright mouth-watering treat! And it's a treat you get in every bottle of our Vermont Maid Syrup.

Our skilled blenders take maple sugar with a full, rich flavor, then blend it with cane sugar. This blend gives you, at moderate cost, uniformly rich and delicious real maple sugar flavor. At your grocer's.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.
Burlington, Vermont

Vermont Maid Syrup

POINT OF NO RETURN

(Continued from Page 35)

"Is Bill awake?"

"Yes," Nancy said. "There's no excuse for you to lie there. You'd better get up or there'll be the usual morning marathon."

"Is Evelyn up?"

"She's up and she's studying her geography," Nancy said. "And besides, she doesn't use your bathroom."

"All right," Charles said. "All right."

"And don't go to sleep again," Nancy said. "I have to go down and cope with the coffee."

"What's happened to Mary?"

"She went to spend the night with her sister in Harlem. She won't be back until this afternoon."

"Are you sure she's coming back?"

"Oh, yes, she's coming back," Nancy said. "She's left everything in her room."

"All right," Charles said. "All right. Is it raining?"

"Yes, it's raining hard, and the windshield wipers on the car hardly ever work."

"Well, that makes it swell," Charles said. "It's nice it's come to your attention."

"I thought that might wake you up," Nancy said. "You'd better wear your herringbone suit. It came back from the cleaners yesterday. I've put your ruptured duck on it."

She was, of course, referring to the gold emblem which had been issued to ex-soldiers and sailors by a grateful Government, but there was no reason why she had to call it by its G. I. name, as though she had been in the service too. Also there was no reason why she should keep inserting it in his buttonhole. The emblem placed him in a youthful category in which he did not belong. He was not sure how well it looked at the bank either.

"Never mind it," Charles said. "I'm not running for any office." Then he checked himself because he knew exactly what she would say before she said it.

"Oh, yes, you are," she said, "and don't you keep forgetting it. You're right in there polishing apples."

"All right," he said, "I'm not forgetting." There was no way to forget, since most of his life had been spent polishing some apple or other. If you had to earn your living, life was a series of apples.

"And don't forget"—and Nancy shook his shoulder—"to put two hundred into the housekeeping account. It's down to twenty dollars and I'm going to draw on it today."

"What," Charles asked, "again?"

"Yes, again and again and again. I thought you'd like some cheerful news, darling."

"All right," Charles said. "It's a terrible morning, isn't it?"

"And don't forget that herringbone," Nancy said, "and don't take that thing out of the buttonhole. No matter how well Roger Blakesley looks, he hasn't got a duck."

"No," Charles said, "that's right. He was too bright to get one."

"And remember we're going to the Burtons' Friday night," Nancy said. "Don't forget to tell Mr. Burton you're looking forward to it when you see him." Nancy was good at putting details into useful order. She hardly ever forgot things like that.

When Charles was in the bathroom shaving he disassociated himself from the acitvities of the moment, and though he had always heard people say that you had your best thoughts while shaving, all that he usually thought about at such a time was that he was in a hurry. Now that he looked in the plate-glass mirror in the baked-enamel medicine cabinet—the expensive cabinet that Nancy had induced the architect to install instead of a cheaper fixture—the brushless cream on his face, the battered safety razor he was holding, and in fact the entire bathroom gave him a transient feeling. He had been moving about in the last few years from one set of plumbing appliances to another, in Pullmans, hotels, in ships' heads and in Quonset huts, and he was still paying for this unfamiliar bathroom.

The house had been a thirty-thousand-dollar house before the war, not including extras—and there had been a number of extras. It had been more than they could possibly afford, but then the house itself had never looked expensive. He should have felt at home in that bathroom because the architect had drawn and redrawn it, and he and Nancy had quarreled over it twice. But now, although the building of the house and the bathroom and all those struggles with copper pipes and automatic gas heaters were a part of the comparatively recent past, the memories seemed as hazy as those of childhood. The whole house now seemed to belong to him only vaguely. It was the same way with the branches of the oak tree that he saw outside the window.

It was, as he had said, a terrible morning. The sky was leaden and the air was full of the pervasive, persistent sort of rain of early spring. The water was soaking into the frostless ground and was dripping from the bare twigs of the oak tree, giving them a purplish-silver tinge, and the buds on the branches were already swelling. He was thinking of the family bathroom in Clyde, Massachusetts, which everyone had used before his father had added others in 1928. He was thinking of its white walls and its varnished floor, its golden-oak-framed mirror. For a second this recollection had been so vivid that the tree and the rain had not seemed right. Trees and the rain were different in Clyde, particularly at that season in the year. April rain was colder in Clyde. It generally came with the east wind, so it would beat hard on the windows; and the house, in spite of the hot-air furnace, was always damp and chilly. There were more elms than oaks in Clyde, and in April there was hardly a hint of spring.

The only way to regenerate the world is to do the thing which lies nearest us, and not hunt after grand, far-fetched ones for ourselves.

—CHARLES KINGSLEY.

His herringbone suit had a slight benzine odor, which showed it as just fresh from the cleaners. He had worn it very little, though it was five years old and now it was tight in the waist and shoulders, but not too tight. It was not a bad-looking suit, and in fact it made him look rather like one of those suburban husbands that you saw in advertising illustrations, a whimsically comical man who peeked naïvely out of the corners of his eyes at his jolly and amazed little wife who was making that new kind of beaten biscuits.

There were ten minutes left for breakfast and it was important to keep his mind on the immediate present, yet when he went downstairs that memory of Clyde hung over him in a curiously pervasive way, almost like a guilty secret, not to be discussed. Clyde had always bored Nancy and he could not blame her much. Nancy had come from upstate New York and he seldom wanted to hear about her home town either.

"Darling," Nancy used to say, "we never saw each other in either of those places, and thank heaven we didn't."

She was absolutely right. Thank heaven they hadn't, or they might have misunderstood each other. He had first seen Nancy in a partner's outer office in a law firm downtown on Pine Street. He could remember the exact, uncompromising way that she sat behind her typewriter and the exact amount of attention she had given him, not a bit more than was necessary—and that was not much.

"Mr. Jessup's in conference and he won't be free for half an hour," Nancy had said. Nancy was always able to keep track of time as readily as a railroad conductor. That was the way he and Nancy had met and that was all there had been to their meeting.

"You needed a haircut," Nancy told him later, "but not very badly, and the way you

(Continued on Page 115)

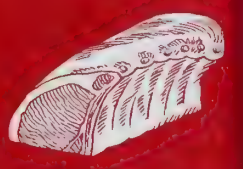
he Meat page

ow to get 3 resh-cooked meals rom a pork oin roast

Select the more economical rib cut of pork loin. The larger your family, the larger the cut you will need.

Ask your meat-man to saw off backbones leaving an inch-thick layer of meat on them, then to chop backbones into serving-sized pieces.

Meaty Barbecued Backbones



You can easily cut chops for another meal from the remaining piece by slicing between the ribs. The drippings make good cream gravy.

2 Sizzling Pork Chops

Roast the chunky piece that's left for your third fresh-cooked meal. Don't forget, dressing extends the good meat flavor.

3 Easy-to-Carve Pork Roast

Well-planned use of meat and careful buying can help you cut the cost of individual meals . . . keep them "squared up" with the nourishment that makes meat such a valued food. Remember meat's complete protein for sound bodies, meat's essential B vitamins for that extra spark of vibrant well-being.

Illustrated booklet, showing six "thrifty use" ideas like this, yours for 5¢ in coin sent to Box 1133, Chicago 77, Illinois.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

(Continued from Page 113)

held your brief case showed you weren't one of those bond boys, and you didn't have a handkerchief in your breast pocket."

"Well," he had told her later, "you didn't look so lovable either."

"Darling," Nancy said, "that's one of the nicest things you've ever told me. I spent a long time cultivating just that look."

When he came down to the dining room, Nancy was sitting in much the same posture, very straight in her bleached-oak chair. Instead of a typewriter she was manipulating a toaster and an electric percolator, and there was a child on either side of her—their children.

His son Bill rose from the table and pulled out his chair for him, a respectful attention on which Nancy insisted and which always made Charles nervous.

"Well, well," Charles said. "Good morning, everybody. Hasn't the school bus come by yet?"

"It's not the school bus," his daughter Evelyn said. "It's the school car. Why do you always call it a bus?"

"It ought to be a bus," Charles said. "You kids ought to be going to a public school."

NANCY was looking at him critically, as she always did before he went to town. "You've forgotten your handkerchief," she said.

That idea of hers that every well-dressed man should have a corner of a handkerchief peeking from his breast pocket, he often thought, must have been a hang-over from Nancy's earlier days; but then perhaps every woman had her own peculiar ideas about male dress.

"Now listen, Nance," he said, "never mind about the handkerchief."

It surprised him that she let it pass. "Evelyn, pass your father his coffee," she said.

"And don't look cute when you're doing it," Bill said.

"Mother," Evelyn said, "won't you tell Bill to stop that, please?"

"Yes," Nancy said. "Stop, Bill, and go and put the eggs in and watch the clock."

There was no necessity for listening carefully to the voices of Nancy and the children. He could go on with his orange juice, toast and coffee as though the conversation were a background of words issuing from a radio. He had heard the program again and again.

"You've got to leave in five minutes," Nancy said. "The roads will be slippery. And remember, you'll have to go and get the car out. Something seems to be wrong with the automatic choke."

"Didn't you send it down to be fixed?"

"Yes, but you know what they're like at that service station. They just look at the carburetor and don't do anything. I wish you'd go to that new Acme place."

"Acme. I wonder what 'acme' means exactly," Charles said.

"Why, daddy," Evelyn said, "don't you know what 'acme' means? It means the top of everything."

It startled him to have Evelyn tell him something which he should have known himself and which, of course, he would have known if he had put his mind on it. The trouble was that he had not been back long enough for broken links of habit to be wholly mended, and everything at home still seemed to have sprung ready-made out of nowhere. Before the war, Bill had been nine and Evelyn had been six, and now Evelyn was able to look up "acme" in the dictionary.

He was in a ready-made dining room, though he had been responsible for its having been built in 1940. He and Nancy had bought the bleached chairs and table and sideboard and had agreed that the walls should be done in pickled pine because they had wanted it to look light and modern. The glazed-chintz draperies still had their original luster and the begonias and ivy and geraniums in the bow window looked as though they had just come from the florist, because Nancy had made an intensive study of the care and feeding of household plants. There were no finger marks or smudges on the table or the chairs and the light carpet was just back from the cleaners without a smudge on it either. It was amazing how beautifully Nancy could keep a house with only one maid to help her.

"You'd better get the car now," Nancy said. "There's no use killing ourselves getting to the train."

The rain gave the blue gravel near the garage a metallic sheen. The water on the lightly whitened brick of the house—he believed it had been called Southern brick—made the variegated color look like new plastic, and the leaves of the rhododendrons and the firs near the front door glistened like dark cold water.

The car started easily enough, though it was a 1940 model. It reminded him of a well-preserved old gentleman with an independent income, cared for by a valet, and he did not see how Nancy could have kept it looking so well considering all the bundles and the children it had carried.

"Move over," Nancy said. "I'll drive."

WHEN they were out of the drive and safely through the gates marked "Sycamore Park," he glanced at her profile. The rain had made her hair, where it showed at the edges of her green felt hat, moist and curly. They always seemed much more at peace when she took him to the station than at any other time, and for some reason it was always the friendliest moment of the day. He and Nancy were alone together, undisturbed by all the rest of the world.

"You didn't forget your reports, did you?" Nancy asked.

"No," he said. "I've got them."

"Have you still got that headache? There's an aspirin in the glove compartment."

"It's all right," he said. "It's gone."

"Well, that's good," she said. "Darling."

"What?" he asked.

"It's nice driving you to the train again. It's sort of like coming back to where we started."

He looked at her again. She was glancing straight ahead of her, but she was smiling. "Yes, I know what you mean," he said. "It's funny, when I came down there to breakfast this morning the whole place seemed ready-made."

"Ready-made?" she repeated.

"Yes," he said. "Just as though I'd never done anything about it."

"I know," she said. "I'm too efficient."

"That isn't what I mean."

"It's all right, as long as you don't mind."

He was never nervous when she was driving. She had a peculiar gift in being able to divide her concentration, which permitted her to drive and at the same time balance the household budget or quarrel artistically or give intelligent answers to the children's questions about God and the life hereafter. The casual way in which she spoke told him that she was thinking very carefully about what she was saying.

"I wish I could help coaching from the side lines, but I can't help it, can I?"

There was no use answering, because of course she knew what he would say, but still he answered. "Of course you can't."

"Someday you're going to say you don't like it. I'm afraid of that."

There were drawbacks, he was thinking, to knowing anyone too well, and yet there was no way to help this. There was no actual chance for decent concealment when you knew someone's voice as well as he did hers. It was all part of the relationship that was known as love, which was quite different from being in love, because "love" had a larger and more embracing connotation. It was a shadowy sort of edifice built by habit, without any very good architecture, but still, occasionally you could get enough impression of its form to wonder how it had been built.

"Darling," she was saying, and her voice broke briskly into his thoughts, "why don't you ask Burton what the score is? Aren't you tired of waiting?"

The question made him edgy because that phrase about the score was as out of place as her allusion to the ruptured duck. She might just as well have said, "Why not go and ask Burton what's cooking?" and he was very glad she hadn't. The car had stopped at the Post Road for the red light. They were almost at the station.

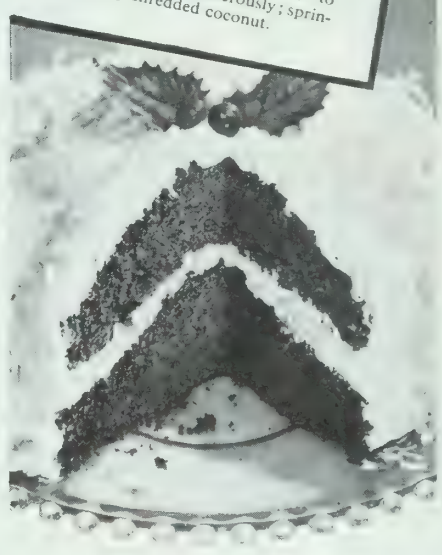
"That would be stupid," he said. "Naturally he knows I want to know."

"Well, can't we get it over with?"

"It will get over. Everything does."

"John, I was just thinking, you won't need a pillow when you play Santa this year!"

IT'S SUPER! says SUE BEE



SNOWBALL FUDGE CAKE

2 cups sifted cake flour
1½ teaspoons soda
1 teaspoon salt
¼ cup shortening, softened
1¼ cups Sioux Bee Honey
⅔ cup water
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2½ squares (2½ oz.) unsweetened chocolate, melted

Sift together dry ingredients. Blend into softened shortening. Add ½ cup of liquid and eggs and mix until flour is dampened; then beat one minute. Add remaining liquid, vanilla, and melted chocolate and beat two minutes longer. (Batter is thin.) Pour into 2 greased 9" layer pans and bake in moderate oven (350°-375° F.) about 30 minutes.

Frosting: Beat 2 egg whites with ¼ teaspoon salt until stiff enough to hold up in peaks. Pour 1 cup honey in fine stream over egg white, beating constantly until frosting holds shape (2 to 4 minutes). Frost cake generously; sprinkle with 1 cup shredded coconut.

SIOUX BEE honey keeps it honey-moist

● That's a magical way Sioux Bee Honey has with all sorts of baked things. They stay delicately fresh days longer. You'll be surprised!

Sioux Bee is choicest clover honey, pure as pure can be . . . with its quality controlled by the world's largest honey-packers. Ask your grocer, always, for Sioux Bee!

Griddle cakes, waffles, hot biscuits ...they're marvelous with Sioux Bee Honey. And do you know Sioux Bee Honey-Creme? It's a different pure-honey spread. Delicious!

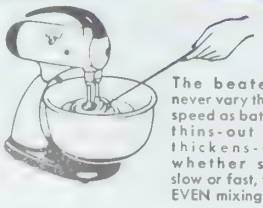
WRITE for booklet containing 93 unusual honey recipes. Address Sioux Honey Association, Dept. L-128, Sioux City, Iowa.

for finest honey, say

"SUE BEE"

SIOUX HONEY ASSOCIATION
SIOUX CITY, IOWA

...ew Sunbeam
AUTOMATIC
MIXMASTER



...th two great new automatic features

...amous
...UTOMATIC
...ER EJECTOR
...the handle—drop beaters vidually, for cleaning. No ng. No messy ers.

Famous POWERFUL MOTOR

Because MIX-MASTER has a powerful, patented-governor controlled motor, the beaters automatically maintain Full Power on all speeds.

The beaters never vary their speed as batter thins-out or thickens-up whether set slow or fast, for EVEN mixing.

Now—you never have to turn the mixing bowl by hand, even when beating eggs. Nor do you ever have to slow it down by hand with the heaviest batters. One of the beaters of the new Mixmaster has a control button that contacts the inside bottom surface of the bowl, keeping beater-speed and bowl-speed uniform—automatically.

...Y NEW FREEDOM FROM THE TIRING ARM-WORK OF COOKING, BAKING, GETTING MEALS

...y the new Sunbeam Mixmaster gives you all these special advantages you want ...deserve when you buy a food mixer. So be sure the mixer you get (or the one ...receive as a gift) is the original and the ONLY Mixmaster. There's only one ...hat name. Mixmaster puts that EXTRA deliciousness, EXTRA success into every ...be. Nearly five million enthusiastic users are its best advertisements. Though ...endous popularity has made Sunbeam Mixmasters scarce, despite constantly ...ving production—hold to your purpose and be richly rewarded. See your dealer.

...SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., So. Toronto 9

"Well, if we just had the cards on the table. If you just said to him ——"

"Now don't tell me what to say to him," Charles said, "because I'm not going to say anything."

The light turned green and the car moved forward.

"Well, I hope Roger Blakesley likes it. Do you know what Molly told me yesterday?" Nancy asked. "She said Roger's so glad you're back and settled down."

"Well, that's swell," Charles said. He had observed that Roger Blakesley had lately been assuming the attitude that Charles had only just returned from the service and was still getting adjusted. He was glad they were reaching the station. "If the officers and directors want him, they'll take him."

"And you'll have to resign," Nancy said.

"The next thing," Charles said, "you'll be asking me to think of the children." Charles began to laugh. "'He hears thy voice above the drums that beat the battle where he stands, thy face across his fancy comes and gives the battle to his hand.' Alfred Lord Tennyson." They were stopping at the last light and the station was just ahead of them and there were still three minutes before eight-thirty. "This whole business sounds like Tennyson. It's exactly as contrived."

"All right, why is it so funny?" Nancy asked.

"I didn't say it was funny," Charles said. "I said it was contrived. The little woman kissing her husband good-by. Everything depends on this moment. He must get the big job or Junior can't go to boarding school. And what about the payments on the new car? Good-by, darling, and don't come back to me without being vice-president of the trust company. That's all I mean."

Nancy threw the car into gear. "Don't say that."

"Why not?"

"Don't say it," Nancy said, and her voice was louder, "because maybe you're right."

"Now wait a minute ——" he began, but she did not let him finish.

"Because if you say that," she said, "if you mean that—maybe it isn't much, but it's all we have. Maybe it isn't much, but then maybe we aren't much and if you feel that way then there won't be anything any more."

It was a discordant instant of revelation and it broke unpleasantly into the morning. He thought of Clyde again, and Clyde was suddenly more real to him than the car in front of the station. He was thinking of peaceful voices saying that you often had moments of doubt or disappointment, that you often wondered whether what you were doing was worth while. The solution was to continue doing the best you could and everything would turn out all right in the end.

"Now listen, Nance," he began, and then for some reason he felt as deeply moved as if he were saying good-by to her for good. "Let's not get so emotionally involved."

"Involved with what?"

"With each other. Let's get some sense of proportion."

"Don't talk about proportion," Nancy said. "There isn't any time."

It was only one of those minor partings, but he was leaving her again.

"If you're not taking the five-thirty," she said, "call me up. Good-by."

"Good-by," he said. "I'll make the five-thirty all right."

SHORTLY before the outbreak of the European war, Charles had begun taking the eight-thirty. This was a privilege that had raised him above the ruck of younger men and of shopworn older ones who had to take the eight-two. It meant that he was no longer one of the salaried class who had to be at their desks at nine.

The eight-thirty train was designed for the executive aristocracy, and once Mr. Guthrie Mayhew, who was president of Mayhew Brothers at 86 Broadway, had even spoken of getting an eight-thirty crowd together who would agree to occupy one of those club cars with wicker chairs and card tables and a porter, to be attached to the eight-thirty in the morning and again to the five-thirty in the afternoon. Mr. Mayhew had suggested the idea first to Tony Burton. That car would be a sort of open forum, Mr. Mayhew said. They could talk about the Chinese war and about Hitler and Mussolini and the whole European mess. It ought to make the ride to New York a real occasion to which everyone could look forward, because there were a lot of interesting people going to New York if you only got to know them. That was Mr. Mayhew's idea, but naturally it had evaporated after Pearl Harbor. Charles remembered Mr. Mayhew's idea vividly, if only because it had come up at the same time that Mr. Burton had suggested that Charles call him Tony.

Husbands are awkward things to deal with: even keeping them in hot water will not make them tender.
—MARY BUCKLEY.

CHARLES could still recall the glow he had felt on this occasion and the sudden moment of elation. Mr. Burton had just made one of his favorite remarks, which Charles had heard often before. It had happened, Mr. Burton had said, that when he was a sophomore at Yale he had studied Greek.

"Now you'd think, wouldn't you," Mr. Burton said, "that the order of Greek verbs would be a long way from banking. Well, I can only tell you that Greek verbs have taught me more about corporate figures than anything else I ever learned at Yale. You see, banking basically is only knowing how to use extraneous knowledge. I like to think of banking as being not only the oldest but, well, the most basically human business that there is in the world. In fact, I don't like to think of banking as a business or even as a profession. Banking—it may startle you a little that I say this, but I know I'm right—banking, for a good banker, is an art. The last of the arts, perhaps, but the oldest of the professions."

Charles had heard Mr. Burton advance the idea several times before, but he did not interrupt.

"Now you may remember," Mr. Burton had said, "that Mrs. Burton and I took a little trip in nineteen-thirty-three. You hadn't been with us long then, but I don't believe that you or anyone else will forget how tense things were then, and now and then I found I was getting a little taut, so when things eased up I decided to go away somewhere to get a sense of perspective. That was when Mrs. Burton and I went to Bagdad."

Charles could not imagine what had ever made Mr. Burton want to go to such a place, unless it had something to do with Burton's Arabian Nights, and he wondered also what connection it had with all the reports that lay on Mr. Burton's mahogany roll-top desk. Mr. Burton had placed his elbows on the desk, had linked his fingers together and was resting his narrow chin on them, and there had been nothing for Charles to do but listen.

Well, it appeared that it had been a very interesting trip to Bagdad. The cruise ship had stopped at Beirut and from there everyone who wanted to take the side trip, including Mr. and Mrs. Burton, had embarked on busses right across the desert to Bagdad, and there it was at dawn—a city on a muddy river, spanned by a bridge of boats.

The first morning he and Mrs. Burton had gone to the museum to see the treasure from Ur, parts of which looked like something in a case at Cartier's. There had been a man in the museum who showed him some mud bricks that were actually parts of an account book. You could see how they balanced their figures; and on one brick, believe it or not, there was even an error in addition. This had meant a great deal to Mr. Burton. That clerical error in mud had given him an idea for one of the best speeches he had ever written, his speech before the American Bankers Association. Mr. Burton had opened a drawer and had pulled out a deckle-edged pamphlet.

"Take it home and read it if you have the time," he said. "I dashed it off rather hurriedly, but it has a few ideas. It starts with that mistake in addition."

"Why, thanks very much, sir," Charles d said. "I certainly will read it." It was t the time to say that he had read the eech already, or that for years he had made oint of reading all Mr. Burton's speeches.
"Look here, feller," Mr. Burton said, and had blushed when he said feller, "why not t out this 'sir' business? Why not just ll me Tony?"

That was in 1941, but Charles still reembered his great joy and relief, with the ief uppermost, and that he could hardly ait to hear what Nancy would say.

"You know, Charles," Mr. Burton had ntinued, "Guthrie Mayhew and I have ite an idea. We're going to get hold of ommy Mapes on the New Haven and see he can't get us a special car on the eight-irty. How about getting aboard? My idea to call it the Crackerbarrel."

"Why, thanks," Charles had said. "I'd e to very much, Tony."

He had worked late that night and he uld not remember what train he had taken me, but Nancy had been asleep when he t there.

"Nance," he said, "wake up. I've got mething to tell you. Burton's asked me to ll him Tony." And Nancy had sat bolt right in her twin bed.

"Start at the beginning," Nancy had said.
Exactly how did it happen, and don't leave
t anything."

They must have talked for a long while, ere in the middle of the night. Nancy had own what it meant because she had worked wntown herself.

"Now wait," Nancy had said. "Let's not t too excited. Who else calls him Tony?"

"I don't think anyone else does," Charles d told her, "except the officers, and old ke when he speaks of him."

"Who's old Jake?"

It surprised him that Nancy did not know, r she usually kept everything straight, but hen he told her that old Jake was the day atchman in the vault, who had been there hen Mr. Burton had first started at the nk, Nancy had remembered.

"Darling," she said, "I knew it would appen sometime. I'm pretty proud of you, harley."

T was only a week later that they found t that Mr. Burton had also asked Roger lakesley to call him Tony and they never uld find out whom Mr. Burton had asked rst.

Tony Burton always boarded the eighthirty at Stamford and it occurred to Charles hat it might be a good idea to walk through he cars and to sit by him if the seat beside im should be vacant. He had nothing par-icular to say to him, but it might be a good dea.

The station was crowded and damp, but in spite of the crowd the atmosphere was restful. You had a feeling that the rush of commuters was nearly over for the day and that of the whole army that had marched to the city only the rear guard was left. As Charles moved to the newsstand to buy The New York Times he nodded to Courtney Jeffers, of the New York Life, and to Rodney Bishop, in the General Foods sales department, and to Bill Wardwell, in Eckert and Stokes. He had just turned away from the newsstand when he saw that he was face to face with Roger Blakesley.

ROGER was wearing a blue pin-striped suit, double-breasted and carefully pressed. His dark brown hat went very nicely with his cheviot overcoat. He was polishing his rimless glasses with a fresh handkerchief and his face, which had grown plumper and more rotund lately, was fresh and shining.

"Why, hello, Charley," Roger said.

"Hello," Charles answered, and then he went on because one had to say something. "Are you still using that electric razor, Roger?" It must have been the smoothness of Roger's cheeks that made him say it.

"Frankly, yes," Roger said. "My beard is just the thing for it, and besides"—he put on his glasses and laughed—"it makes me feel like a putting green." It was just the sort of thing that Roger would have said, and his broadening smile showed he was pleased with it.

"Or a bowling green," Charles said.

"All right, a bowling green, as long as you don't cut it too fine. That was a swell party last night, wasn't it? I couldn't tear myself away."

"Neither could I," Charles answered, and they both smiled.

"Listen, Charley," Roger asked, "will you have any time on your hands today?"

"Not much. How about lunch?"

"I can't make it," Roger said. "I have a date with Tony at the University Club. After that Mapes is coming in, but we've got to check up on that Catlin thing sometime before we meet the attorneys."

There was a roaring sound outside and everyone was moving. The eight-thirty was coming in.

"We can go over it on the train if you want to," Charles said. "I've got the papers here."

Roger Blakesley patted his shoulder. "Boy, I simply can't," he said, close to Charles' ear because of the roaring of the train. "Tony wants me. He's saving me a seat."

Charles also raised his voice. "There's a lot more to banking than you think, isn't there? It's an art, isn't it?"

Roger laughed and linked his arm through Charles'. "Charles, you're always subtle in the morning."

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, ETC.,

Required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946, of LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, published monthly at Phila., Pa., for October 1, 1948.

TATE OF PENNSYLVANIA } ss.
OUNTY OF PHILADELPHIA }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared Bruce Gould, (h), having been duly sworn according to law, deposes nd says that he is the Editor of the Ladies' Home ournal and that the following is, to the best of his nowledge and belief, a true statement of the owner-hip, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication or the date shown in the above caption, required by he Act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts f March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946 (embodied in section 37, Postal Laws and Regulations), printed on the re-erse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, ditor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, The Curtis Publishing Company, Inde-pendence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Editors, Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Hopewell, New Jersey

Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman, Philadel-phia, Pa.

Business Manager, None.

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immedi-ately thereunder the names and addresses of stock-holders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock.)

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.
Cary W. Bok, Ardmore, Pa.
Curtis Bok, Philadelphia, Pa.
Mary Louise Curtis Bok Foundation, Philadelphia, Pa.
W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Locust Trust, Wyncote, Pa.
W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Swastika Trust, Wyncote, Pa.
Trustees U W of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Deceased, Philadelphia, Pa.
Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are:
None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security hold-ers, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the com-pany as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting is given; also that the said two para-graphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and con-ditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

BRUCE GOULD,
Editor.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 2nd day of September, 1948.
[Seal] W. C. Turner, Notary Public.
(My Commission expires April 1, 1951)

Sunbeam
AUTOMATIC
COFFEEMASTER

a perfect cup of coffee every time

COFFEEMASTER coffee is ALWAYS delicious—because everything is automatic. The secret of delicious coffee-making is correct water temperature, agitation, and brewing time, just as a perfect cake requires perfect baking time and temperature. In Sunbeam Coffeemaster, the water is always at the same high heat—automatically. Brewing time is always the same—automatically. Coffee is kept piping hot, at the perfect drinking temperature, after it's made—automatically. You get all the requirements for perfect coffee in Sunbeam Coffeemaster every time—automatically. You can't miss.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Whether you make one cup or eight, you always get the same perfect cup. That's because ALL the water rises. Not a drop ever remains in the lower vessel to dilute the coffee when it comes down. Sunbeam Coffeemaster is the ONLY vacuum-type coffee-maker that gives you this important advantage. Be sure your coffee-maker is the Sunbeam Coffeemaster to get the same clear, taste-tempting perfection in every cup. The only truly automatic coffee-maker. See your dealer.

SET IT! FORGE
Read the pa dress the child
a few minutes,
. . . it shuts itse
when coffee is Resets itself to coffee hot.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois • Toronto 9, Canada

6 ways to make ironing easier!

with the most convenient ironing table ever developed

With an ARVIN you're free forever from the discomforts of old-fashioned ironing tables — because it lightens your work in all these important ways:

1 Opens and closes with one motion from either end.

2 Perforated top carries moisture down from fabric and pad for easier, faster ironing.

3 New Safety Lock falls in place by itself. Can't work loose. Absolutely secure.

4 Lighter and easier to handle.

5 Stands on, or hangs from, either end.

6 Stays steady and firm on strong tubular legs with non-skid rubber feet.

Beautiful, durable baked enamel finish. Table top white, framework black. See it today at your Arvin dealer.

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC., Columbus, Indiana

Arvin Metal Chrome Dinette Sets • Arvin Metal Outdoor Furniture • Arvin All-Metal Ironing Table

Flame-Proof
IRONING BOARD COVERS

Made Safe with

ASBESTON

Praised by over 2,000,000 women

★ Greater ironing safety.
★ Longer life.
★ Easier ironing.

Asbeston is a patented fabric — woven with a rock asbestos fibre content that prevents it from burning. Ready-made covers are made from this new U. S. Rubber development—by leading manufacturers.

LOOK FOR THIS LABEL—AND SAFETY

FLAME-PROOF
ASBESTON
A U.S. Royal FABRIC®
PRODUCT OF UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

AFRICAN VIOLETS

Large, healthy plants out of 4 inch pots. Blue Girl (Pat.), Lavender Lady, Pink Beauty (Pat.), White Lady (Pat.) each $1.25

Blue Girl Supreme, Blushing Maiden, Dupont Blue, Dupont Lavender Pink, Pink Beauty (Pat.) each $2.00

Add 50c packing and postage on orders less than $5. We pay postage on all orders over $5. Order today, send check or money order. (No C.O.D.) VIRDANS PLANT TONIC, $1.00 postpaid, Makes Violets Bloom.

VIRDANS FARMS Box 123-L PHELPS, NEW YORK

ADD A GAY NOTE TO YOUR TABLE with "Hostesset"

• SANITARY PLASTIC
• SAFE TO WASH AND SCALD

FEDERAL Functional HOUSEWARES

Smartly modern in design . . . comes in complementary colors, red and ivory. Molded of long-life plastic that can be washed and scalded — safely — without effect on material or color. A popular, practical gift.

Mfd. by Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 45, Illinois

AT DEPARTMENT, HARDWARE, 5c to $1 STORES

New TELEPHONE SECRETARY

An Ideal Gift

Keeps Pad and Pencil Handy

Fits Your Phone or Money Back

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ORDER DIRECT—ONLY $2.65 POSTPAID

Set includes pad and pencil, plus extra refill—in handy, rigid, permanent plastic. Holds 1 to 4 pads. Size, 4x6". All metal Non-breakable. (Not pictured.) Beautiful enamel finish matches phone, stands securely—simply snaps on base. No more hunting for pad, pencil or writing on wall—just ordinary pad and pencil. The original, patented Tel Set, with over 100,000 enthusiastic users. Order yours today!

COMPLETE SATISFACTION OR MONEY BACK

Set(s) @ $2.65, 5 set(s) @ $2.45, 2 set(s) @ $2.95, 3 set(s) @ $2.85, Enclosed find $[illegible]. No C.O.D.'s. Dealer inquiries invited.

LANKO INDUSTRIES SALES DIVISION
(Formerly Nati Distributor)
6774 Taft Dept. G-12 Detroit 8, Mich.

"That isn't subtlety. I'm just saying banking's an art."

"That's so," Roger said. "It is. Well, I'll see you in the studio."

"All right," Charles said. "Don't mix your colors wrong, Roger."

But Roger had not heard him. He was already bounding up the steps of the third coach. Roger was always quick on his feet and this sort of thing had been going on long enough for Charles to understand its shades of meaning. He was reasonably sure that Tony Burton had not asked Roger to sit with him, and he was not even entirely sure that Tony Burton had asked Roger to lunch at the University Club, even though Tony Burton tried to lunch there when he could on Tuesdays.

Charles found a seat by a window and opened The New York Times to the financial page. There was nothing like competition. His mind was working more alertly since he had met Roger Blakesley and everything assumed a new significance. They were both assistant vice-presidents in the trust department now. Either could handle customers about as well as the other. They both were very bright boys, but he had never worried about Roger much until lately. There would have been no reason to do so now if Roger had gone to the war instead of using that period to make himself useful. The financial page was dull, but Charles put his mind on it. His mind was working smoothly now that he was on the train.

When the train pulled into the lower level of the Grand Central Station, habit made Charles move instinctively to the broad stairs on the right, up which he ran for no good reason except that he had always taken them at a run. On the upper level he turned, walking past the parcel checkroom to the ramp on the left and past the heaps of newspapers by the doors and out to the corner of Forty-second Street and Vanderbilt Avenue.

An average man who lives to the age of fifty spends 6500 days in working, 6000 days in sleeping, 4000 days in amusements, 1500 days in eating, and 500 days in being ill.

Whenever he emerged from the station and set foot on Forty-second Street, he experienced in varying degrees a sense of coming home. Sometimes this feeling was one of deep gratitude and more often only one of boredom. He was always able to lose himself in the city's abstractions. The place was changing—new stores, new façades, new plastics—without his being able one jot to influence that change, but still the changing place belonged to him.

The only institution in the neighborhood that had not been altered much was the Stuyvesant Bank, which had been given its name when Murchison Brothers had first started the business on lower Broadway in the early 1800's. It had moved uptown long since then, but almost from the beginning of its history the Stuyvesant had been what it still was, a family bank. It was a bank in a former private dwelling, a big New York corner house of somewhat sooty brick and brownstone. Year after year there had been talk about a new building, but the directors had always in the end turned down such proposals. It paid to keep the Stuyvesant in that ugly old brownstone mansion with its floor plan about the way it had been when the Stuyvesant had first moved there. It paid to keep everything looking essentially the same. It paid to keep the open fire that burned real logs and to encourage tellers and investment counselors to be patient with confused old ladies and genial with arthritic old gentlemen. The employees of the Stuyvesant understood rich clients and knew all the pains and drawbacks of being rich, although they were not rich men themselves. They had to deal familiarly, almost jovially, but always scrupulously with large sums of money, while living usually on modest salaries.

If you were successful at the Stuyvesant you ended by developing a priestly, untouchable, ascetic attitude. If you did well enough to become an executive in the Stuyvesant—and this required a long time and an arduous apprenticeship—you found yourself solving the problems of individuals who had difficulty living within incomes approaching a hundred thousand dollars a year. You found yourself spending the working day discussing the investment of huge sums of money only to get home yourself and to worry because the butcher's bill had risen nine twenty dollars above the month before. In time this gave you a split personality, so you had to toss your own problems completely aside and never allow them to meddle in any way with those of clients and depositors when you reached your desk at the Stuyvesant.

Charles was already forgetting Nancy and the children, already assuming his business character, when he said good morning to Gus, the doorman, on the sidewalk outside the Stuyvesant.

"Is it wet enough for you, Mr. Gra[y]" Gus asked.

"It has to rain sometime," Charles said. "Are you a grandfather yet?"

"No, not yet, but any minute now."

When Charles said good morning to [Gus] inside the door. The bank was scrupulously neat and cleared for action. He could hear the click of the adding machines in back and he could see the new pens and blotters on the depositors' tables as he walked past the tellers behind their gold wickets and turned to the right past the foreign department to the coatroom. When he had hung up his coat and hat, he looked at himself in the mirror. He automatically straightened the knot and adjusted his tie. His slightly freckled face was moist from the rain, and his sandy hair, though it was carefully trimmed, needed brushing, so he went to the washroom. He had learned long ago that if you did not neglect external details when you sat near the vice-presidents' desks by the front window.

Though you seldom talked of salaries at the Stuyvesant, your social status was obvious from the position of your desk. Charles occupied one of the two flat mahogany desks that stood in a sort of no man's land between the roll-top desks of the officers and the smaller flat-tops of lesser executives and secretaries that crowded the floor of the bank outside the cages. A green rug extended from the officers' desks, forming a neat and restricted zone that just included Charles's desk and the one beside it which was occupied by Roger Blakesley.

Charles was pleased to see that he had got there first from the eight-thirty, a minute or two ahead of Roger and Mr. Burton and ahead of everyone else near the windows. Mr. Burton's desk, which had the best light, was opened already, and so was that of Mr. Stephen Merry, the first vice-president, and so were all the others except one. This was Arthur Slade's desk; Arthur was the youngest vice-president of the Stuyvesant, who had died in a plane accident months before.

The closed desk still gave Charles a curious feeling of incompleteness and a mixed sense of personal gain and loss, because he had been more friendly with Arthur Slade than with anyone else in the Stuyvesant—but then you had to die sometime. Once Arthur Slade had sat at Charles' own place, but that was before Mr. Walter Harry, who had been president when Charles had first come to the bank, had died of an embolism and everyone had moved like players on bases—Burton to Harry, Merry to Burton, Slade to fifth vice-president, and so on down to Charles himself. The Stuyvesant was decorously accustomed to accident and death and now it was moving time again and it was so plain that one of the two persons might be moving next that it was embarrassing.

Charles pulled back his mahogany chair and sat down. Miss Marble, his secretary, had already arranged his engagement pad and now she was standing beside him with his morning mail.

(Continued on Page 120)

Table of Contents

A completely different silverplate story! . . . . . 1.

The Holmes & Edwards story disproves the old chestnut that all silverplate is alike! Holmes & Edwards is finer, different from the usual extra plated (overplated) kinds.

Special feature . . 2.

It's Sterling Inlaid!

Two blocks of sterling silver are invisibly inlaid at the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks. Thus Holmes & Edwards silverplate stays lovelier longer!

Beauty . . . . . 3.

Beautify your table with one of these three exquisite patterns: Lovely Lady, Danish Princess, Youth. All made in the U. S. A. by The International Silver Company.

Guide to shoppers . . . . . 4.

You'll find Holmes & Edwards at the silverware counter of your jewelry or department store. And you'll find this surprising fact: Holmes & Edwards prices have not gone up! The beautiful 52-piece service for eight with chest is still only $68.50 (No Federal Tax).

... Meriden, ... in Canada by ... Co., Ltd. ®Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

You can say "yes" to Romance

because

Veto says "no" to Offending!

Veto says "no"—to perspiration worry and odor! Soft as a caress . . . exciting, new, Veto is Colgate's wonderful cosmetic deodorant. Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use, keeps you lovely all day! Veto stops underarm odor instantly, checks perspiration effectively.

Veto says "no"—to harming skin and clothes! So effective . . . yet so gentle—Colgate's Veto is harmless to normal skin. Harmless, too, even to filmy, most fragile fabrics. For Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. No other deodorant can be like Veto!

TRUST ALWAYS TO VETO
IF YOU VALUE YOUR CHARM!

(Continued from Page 118)

"There's nothing on your calendar," Miss Marble said, "before the meeting, but Mrs. Whitaker has just called you."

"You mean she's called this morning already?"

"Well, not Mrs. Whitaker," Miss Marble said, and smiled sympathetically. "Her companion called. Mrs. Whitaker's very anxious to speak with you."

"All right," Charles said. "Get her for me in five minutes," and he picked up the letters.

Then Roger Blakesley and Anthony Burton came in from the coatroom and Charles nodded at them and smiled. Roger walked to his own desk, but Anthony Burton stopped for a moment. As he did so, it seemed to Charles that the whole bank was watching them, and Mr. Burton must have been aware of this, too, but he was more used than Charles to being watched. He stood straight, white-headed and smiling, dressed in a pearl-gray double-breasted suit with an expansive, heavy, gray-checked necktie. He was slender and athletic, almost young-looking considering that he was close to sixty-five.

"I didn't see you on the train," Mr. Burton said.

Charles glanced at Roger Blakesley's desk. It was an opportunity, but it was also a time to be careful. "I didn't see you either," Charles said. "Mrs. Whitaker is after me." It was better to do it that way. It did no harm to have him know about Mrs. Whitaker.

"Well, as long as she's after you and not me," Mr. Burton said. "We'll see you at dinner Friday, won't we?"

"You can count on it," Charles said. "Absolutely." And he laughed and Anthony Burton laughed.

"Yes," Mr. Burton said, "I suppose we can, Charley. How are Nancy and the children?"

"They're wonderful," Charles said.

"Nancy's a great girl," Mr. Burton said. "You boys are getting together at eleven, aren't you? I'll be there." He smiled and nodded and walked over to his desk in the corner.

"Mrs. Whitaker's on the telephone now," Miss Marble said, and Charles picked up the desk telephone, speaking softly as one always did in the bank.

"Good morning, Mrs. Whitaker. This is Mr. Gray."

He could recognize a particular tone in her voice. It was the gracious, informal tone that she was in the habit of using when she wanted to make a pleasant impression on people who handled her affairs.

"Oh, Mr. Gray," he heard her say, "it's so nice to hear your voice. Hewett and I are so dreadfully worried."

"Why, I'm sorry," Charles said. "What have you to be worried about?"

"We have to sell something, Mr. Gray, we have to sell something right away. We literally haven't got a cent of money."

At least he was able to smile, since Mrs. Whitaker was not there, and the strange thing about it was that her tone of desperation was completely genuine, as genuine as though she had to sell some piece of furniture to pay the grocer. One part of him could smile, but another part was honestly sympathetic. This was one of the things that the bank had taught him. "Oh," Charles said, and he was about to add that he was sorry, but he checked himself because he had learned that it made depositors angry if you became too actively sorry.

"We would like to sell something that has a loss to it," Mrs. Whitaker said, "but there literally isn't anything. Everything shows a profit. Why don't you ever leave us anything with losses?"

Charles drummed his fingers softly on the desk and raised his eyes to the baroque ceiling with its new indirect lighting. "Well," he said, "I see what you mean, but the object usually is to show a profit. Most of our friends like it better that way. There are still advantages to having a profit rather than a loss."

"Are there?" asked Mrs. Whitaker. "I know it's so if you say so, but you've simply got to help us, Mr. Gray—anything you decide on—you will help us, won't you?"

"Of course I will," Charles said, and his voice was gently reassuring. "That's what I'm here for. Let me see, you have a number of short-term Governments."

"I know. Mr. Whitaker doesn't want to sell those. He refuses, absolutely."

"Oh. Why does he?"

"Because his father always said that you mustn't be a bear on the United States. He says that we must back up the Government no matter what it does. I believe that, don't you?"

"I wouldn't say it would be disloyal," Charles said. "Short-term Governments are about the same as cash. That's the way they're generally used."

"Suppose we try to think of something else," Mrs. Whitaker said. "There must be something else."

"Yes," Charles said. "I'll tell you what I'll do. I'd better get a picture of the whole situation. As long as you're ill and can't come in yourself, I could send Mr. Joyce over to see you."

"I don't think Mr. Joyce has the experience, do you?" Mrs. Whitaker said. "I know he's a charming young man, but he is still rather immature and he's always so—well, so indefinite. And Mr. Thingamajig, what's his name? The one Mr. Burton turned me over to the last time I came in, when you were out. He was indefinite too."

"Whom do you mean?" Charles asked. "I can't exactly place him from your description."

"That round-faced, pussycat man with glasses. The furtive, pussycat one."

"You don't mean Mr. Blakesley, do you?"

"That's it," said Mrs. Whitaker. "Mr. Blakesley."

Charles glanced across at Roger Blakesley, who was busy dictating. "I know him pretty well," Charles said. "I wouldn't say he was a pussycat."

"It's a compliment to you, Mr. Gray," Mrs. Whitaker said, "that Hewett and I both want you to help us, and we simply have to find a hundred thousand dollars somewhere. It isn't asking too much for you to come over, is it?"

"No," Charles said. "It's rather hard for me to get away, but I think we could make an exception as long as you're not well."

"You see, we've decided after all to buy that ranch. Albert's fallen in love with it, and I think Mr. Whitaker has, too, a little. You'll come at five, won't you, when we can all be quiet at teatime, and tell us how unwise it is?"

"I suppose it depends on the ranch," Charles said. "Why, yes, I think I could arrange to come at five."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Granddad

By Mary Wilder Pease

My granddad was the captain
Of the schooner Mary Jane;
She floundered in the Arctic
And he righted her again.

He sailed her into harbors
Where no other ship could ride;
He did not need a compass
Or the North Star for a guide.

He lives with us this winter
And is jolly as can be;
He never lets my mother know
He's homesick for the sea.

But he told me, it's a secret,
That he's scary of the land,
And when we walk across the street
He asks to hold my hand.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"But don't say it's too unwise," Mr. Whitaker said. "You're so New Engla sometimes, Mr. Gray. Don't be too uncor promising, will you? Just say it's a little unwise."

"All right," Charles said. "At five. I'll member. A little bit unwise."

Charles put down the telephone and ra for Miss Marble. He would have to call Nancy to tell her he could not take the fi thirty train, but it was already ten-fifte and Nancy would be at the chain store. B fore he forgot, it would be well to tell Mi Marble.

Down there on the floor of the Stuyvesa you worked with the privacy of a goldfis There might be certain sheltered corners the neighborhood of the officers' desks, bu there was no shelter at the edge of the gre carpet where Charles and Roger Blakesle were stationed. They sat there in a kind advanced bastion, barring the way to th higher executives, like a knight and a bisho on a chessboard, Charles sometimes though Of course there was an outer ring of pawn in front. Individuals like Tom Joyce, his a sistant, at his smaller desk well off the carpe or Holland just behind him, or Miss Marbl were all protecting pawns. There was n physical railing to guard any of them fro the customers.

Old Joe, who stood just inside the door, i a neat business suit instead of a uniform was in the most exposed position. He wa the one who helped with the counter check and the deposit slips, who directed traffi and estimated the preliminary situation. I was he who decided that our Mr. Joyce o our Mr. Holland or, if it seemed justifiable our Mr. Gray or Mr. Blakesley would b glad to help you.

Charles often wondered why this systen of everyone's working in the open shoul exist. At any rate, he had developed an abil ity to concentrate so he could block off th mechanical sounds and the sounds of voice and footsteps. He was also able to break of from abstraction to immediacy. When h heard Joe speak to him, he was able to lay down his paper instantly and still to remem ber for future reference exactly where h left off.

"Mr. Gray," Joe said, "here's a gentle man to see you."

Joe had not said there was a gentleman who wanted to see him. There was no opportunity to ask who he was or what he wanted. The gentleman was right there.

Charles often wished that he was a back-slapping type like Roger Blakesley. Roger had a habit of cultivating acquaintance and contacts as scientifically as a market gardener could start young tomatoes in flat boxes and tend them until they grew into vines. Charles had never been good at using personal liking for business purposes, yet naturally he had developed some sort of technique, since he was continually dealing with people.

Charles could see that the man whom Joe had brought to his desk was eight or nine years older than he, and this would place him in his early fifties. It was always hard for him to recall, when he met anyone of this age suddenly, whether he had ever known him before, because fifty is a period in life when time begins altering faces in all sorts of disagreeable and incongruous ways. Charles knew instantly that he was not a salesman and that he was not connected with any gainful occupation. His face was not smooth enough, his manner did not have that sort of breezy assurance, his clothes lacked uniformity. His face might have been that of a college professor or some minor employee from a Washington bureau.

"Good morning," Charles said carefully.

The stranger answered in a nasal, twanging voice. "Well, if it isn't Charley Gray."

Charles tried hastily to recall where or when or in what phase of his life they could have met. It might have been at Dartmouth. It might have been in Boston. It might have been somewhere in the war—they all looked different out of uniform.

(Continued on Page 122)

Portrait of Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting II, from the Dorothy Gray Gallery of Fascinating Women. By the celebrated artist Julian Levi.

Merry Christmas ~ ~ From Dorothy Gray

A. Elation Cologne, a soft, subtle fragrance. In plastic snow Christmas Tree. Wonderful holiday table favor. $3.75.

B. Three unusually distinctive colognes. Siren, a flirtatious, seductive scent. Suggestion, a fanciful, sophisticated bouquet. Spindrift, an adventurous, carefree fragrance. Each beautifully wrapped for Christmas. $2.50.

C. Magic Hour. Superlative scent. Perfume, $20.00, $5.00. Magic Hour Eau de Parfum. Softer than a perfume, stronger than cologne. $10.00. All in faceted flacons.

D. Beauty Case. Fitted with Dorothy Gray creams and make-up. $14.50.

E. Beauty Case. With creams and make-up essentials in removable tray. $25.00.

F. Savoir Faire Perfume. Provocative, sophisticated fragrance. $25.00.

G. Savoir Faire compact. Gold plated, exquisitely designed. $10.00. Matching gold plated Savoir Faire Lipstick. $3.00.

H. Nosegay Dusting Powder. Nostalgic fragrance; luxurious puff. $2.00.

I. New Moon single compact. $3.50.

J. Modern Design in a double compact with affixed lipstick. $5.75.

K. Cologne Bar. Three fragrances in vase-like bottles. Nosegay, Night Drums, On The Avenue. $3.50.

L. "Three to Get Ready." Provocative lipstick trio in new fashion shades. $2.00.

M. Belle-Hop Zipper Kit. Beauty essentials in gay, convenient carrying case. $3.95.

N. Nosegay Cologne. Nostalgic fragrance; a great favorite. $2.50.

O. Santa Claus covers new Suggestion Cologne. $3.75.

(All prices listed plus tax.)

Dorothy Gray

THE DOROTHY GRAY SALON • 445 PARK AVE., NEW YORK

Get a natural lift with

Spirella

You'll find new corset comfort with Spirella

BUT comfort isn't all my new Spirella gives. Now my figure gets proper support. The perpetual tiredness that spoiled my fun is gone. I look and feel younger with more pep than I've had in years. All because I tried the "press and lift" test (shown below) and learned the secret of healthful Spirella support.

Press down on stomach. That's the cramped feeling of ordinary garments.

Now lower your hands and lift up! That's like Spirella's all day comfort.

How do you get this new comfort? Only from the Spirella Corsetiere who calls at your home. In quiet and privacy, while you're comfortably supported in a special modeling garment, she measures you for your Spirella.

For name of your local Spirella Corsetiere, write

In the U. S. THE SPIRELLA CO., INC. NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

In Canada THE SPIRELLA CO., LTD. NIAGARA FALLS, ONT.

AT BETTER STORES EVERYWHERE

Someone is looking at your legs..

ALBA Nylons

MADE OF DUPONT NYLON

PILOT FULL FASHION MILLS, INC., EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, N. Y.

KNITTING WOOL

SEND FOR 250 FREE SAMPLES

Prompt Mail Service

Colonial Yarn House

1231 F CHERRY ST. PHILA. 7, PA.

CUT ME OUT!

If You Want to Make Money!

We need live wire men and women as Subscription Representatives! Here's a part-time job that will pay you Big Commissions! No charge for particulars or supplies. Write at once to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY

801 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

HEAR in SECRET!

Maico

HEAR RINGS

Dress as you please, with ANY hair style; few will notice you wear a hearing aid. Clever new Maico Hear Rings conceal your receiver as a tiny, powerful hearing aid tucks comfortably away. Learn the secret today—mail this ad with your name and address to 314 Maico Bldg., Minneapolis 1, Minn.

Maico inc.

(Continued from Page 120)

"Charley," the stranger asked, "don't you remember me at all? I'm Malcolm Bryant."

Then, of course, he remembered. The deep eyes, the large mouth, the heavy hands—everything came together into sudden focus. He had been thinking of Clyde that morning and there in front of him was Malcolm Bryant, who, of course, had been untidily away in memory.

He found himself shaking hands again with Malcolm Bryant and Malcolm was saying that he had dropped in to cash a Government check and the cashier had asked him if anyone in the bank could identify him. Then he had looked across the room and there was Charles.

At least the business of the check was useful, because it placed everything on a routine basis. He initialed the check and gave it to Joe to cash and asked Malcolm Bryant to sit down in the visitor's chair beside him.

"How's Jessica?" Malcolm asked.

"I don't know," Charles said. "I haven't seen her for quite a while."

"What?" said Malcolm. "Didn't you marry Jessica?"

"No," Charles said. It seemed to him that the tellers were unreasonably slow.

"How's Clyde?"

"I don't know, Malcolm," Charles said, and, though it was the truth, the bareness of his answer made him feel uneasy.

"Aren't your family still living there?"

"My father's dead," Charles said. "My mother's living with Dorothea in Kansas City. She married a man named Elbridge Sterne who was a metallurgist at Wright-Sherwin. He's in Kansas City now."

"Oh," said Malcolm. "Elbridge. What about the old house?"

"I guess it's still there," Charles said. "We sold it. I haven't been there for a very long time."

"A ghost town," Malcolm said. "A vital sort of ghost town. That's the way I described it in the introduction. Haven't you seen the book?"

"No."

"You've never seen it?" Malcolm said. "It's the best thing the foundation ever got out. A Yankee Persepolis. That's what I called Clyde—Persepolis."

CHARLES wished Joe would come back with the cash. "Why Persepolis?" he asked.

"Where the Persians worshiped memories," Malcolm said. "I stopped off there in 'Thirty-five on my way to India and looked in on the University of Chicago dig. I was studying some dog worshipers in India."

"So you're still on primitive man, are you?"

"Yes. But don't forget all man is primitive. You ought to know that. You're primitive."

"Yes," Charles said, "I suppose I am."

"And so is Clyde," said Malcolm. "Primitive, like any other social structure."

"I don't know much about anthropology," Charles said, "except what I learned from you, but it always seems to me you people oversimplify."

"Man only has a few basic behavioristic patterns," Malcolm said, "that are constantly repeated with silly variations. You can't oversimplify. That's the beauty of it."

Charles laughed. Joe was moving toward them with Malcolm's money and Miss Marble had also appeared.

"It's eleven o'clock, Mr. Gray," Miss Marble said.

"Here is your wampum, Malcolm," Charles said. "You'd better count it. I have to go to a meeting."

"How about lunch?" Malcolm said. "Come on over to the Harvard Club."

Charles glanced meaningly at Miss Marble. "Have I a luncheon engagement, Miss Marble?"

"Why, no," Miss Marble said. "Not today, Mr. Gray."

It was very obtuse of Miss Marble and now there was no reason for him not to have lunch with Malcolm Bryant.

"Well, thanks," Charles said, "if you don't mind lunching early. Can you make it twelve-thirty?"

Fibs tampons

Rounded Ends

See how the gently rounded ends make Fibs tampons really easy to use!

"Quilted" Comfort

Only Fibs are quilted . . . to keep Fibs from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size!

"Quilted" Safety

Fibs' quilting helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues!

Internal Sanitary Protection

T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF

Eyes tired?

Two drops

Quick relief

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

NO OTHER RUB GIVES FASTER RELIEF IN

CHEST COLDS!

To Relieve Coughs—Aching Muscles

Musterole instantly starts right in to relieve coughs and tight aching soreness in chest muscles. It helps break up congestion in upper bronchial tubes, nose and throat. No other rub gives faster relief and it lasts for hours! Musterole is the only chest rub made in 3 strengths.

MUSTEROLE®

"Meet me there at twelve-thirty," Malcolm said. "Good-by, Charles."

The depositors' room off the vaults had just been refinished and redecorated and Tony Burton had called the conference here because he wanted to see how everything looked. Hugh Garrity, an old Second Division veteran of World War I, dressed now in a Confederate-gray uniform, was on duty at the gate, and Mr. William Poultney, who led clients to their boxes and put both clients and boxes into the private alcoves, was seated watchfully at his desk behind the bars. Hugh Garrity, and Mr. Poultney, too, wore an air of lynxlike alertness, which was to be expected since the bank officers were making this unaccustomed use of the new room.

"Good morning, sir," Hugh said, and he saluted in that heavy, half-formal way common to all civilian guards. If he had been a dog, Charles thought, he would have slowly wagged his tail.

Charles waved his hand to William Poultney and it occurred to him that William Poultney still owed him fifteen dollars, but it was not the time to mention it. Somehow there never did seem to be a suitable occasion for taking up this detail.

"William," Charles asked, "do you use an electric razor or a safety razor?"

William Poultney looked startled and passed his hand carefully over his smooth and rather heavy jowls. "What's the matter?" he asked. "Don't I look shaved?"

"You look beautiful," Charles said. "I was just thinking of something else."

He was thinking of Roger Blakesley's electric razor, but Mr. Poultney still looked startled. It was seldom in order to joke in an eccentric way down there in the vaults.

"As a matter of fact, now you bring it up, I have this shaving problem licked," William said. "The truth of it is, the razor doesn't matter. It's the soap. I use a brushless cream. You just rub it on and there it is."

"Well, well," Charles said. "But you have to get it off later, don't you?"

Hugh Garrity smiled sourly. "The whole secret is the lather," Hugh Garrity said. "Get a good heavy lather and swab it on your face with a big brush ——" His face froze suddenly and he stiffened to attention and Charles saw William Poultney square his shoulders and he heard a light, quick step behind him. It was Mr. Anthony Burton, coming down for the conference.

"Hello," Tony Burton said. "What's the discussion?"

"I don't know how the subject came up," Charles said. "We were talking about shaving and electric razors." He was relieved to see Tony Burton smile and he remembered what Tony often said about the bank—that everyone in it was part of one big family.

"I wouldn't have one of those damned electric razors in the house," Mr. Burton said. "My wife gave me one for Christmas and it blew out half the fuses. Come on, Charles."

CHARLES had a vicious fleeting thought, which he immediately dismissed, that it might be appropriate to say that Roger Blakesley used an electric razor. It was one of those small matters that could possibly count for something, but as he weighed the question he was appalled at his own smallmindedness, and he followed Mr. Burton to the depositors' room without speaking.

The group had already gathered. Stephen Merry was there, wearing his new oversize tortoise-shell glasses, and Roger Blakesley with his rimless glasses, and Alfred Brock from trust administration and Tom Joyce and two other men from the trust department. When the door was closed everything was friendly, because they were one big family.

"That was an awful rain last night," Steve Merry said. "Our cellar leaked again."

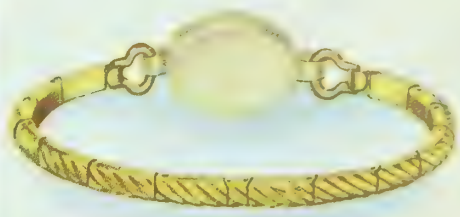
Then they all sat down and talked for a few moments about cellars and the difficulties of subsurface drainage and Tony Burton began to tell about his own cellar and heating plant until he checked himself and said they had better get to work.

Charles sat listening attentively with his eye on Roger Blakesley as Tony Burton took the meeting over. As it was a routine conference, he knew most of the subject matter already—the general money situation, the holdings in new accounts, the stability of certain industries. Roger Blakesley, it seemed to Charles, was talking more than usual and trying almost too hard to contribute useful ideas. Charles could follow the discussion with no difficulty and at the same time think of Malcolm Bryant upstairs. He remembered, too, that he must have two hundred dollars transferred to the housekeeping account for Nancy, but his watchfulness never flagged. No matter how dull and how meaningless it was, you had to be very careful at a meeting. You had to remember the arguments and the way the minds had worked around the table. At any moment Tony Burton was apt to ask your opinion.

IT was only after half an hour that anything of an unusual nature came up. Somehow the thread of the meeting and its purpose had been dropped and Tony Burton announced, out of a clear sky, that a new depositor, with whom Charles was not acquainted, was applying for a six months' loan of two hundred thousand dollars. He was a man named Godfrey W. Eaton, who was the head of a substantial company manufacturing tiling. Roger Blakesley had seen him first and he had taken him to Stephen Merry and afterward to Tony Burton. The bank had investigated Mr. Eaton through all the ordinary channels and now all his business life was down on a memorandum that sounded like the dossiers of a hundred other people whose names had come up at loan conferences. Mr. Eaton was from the Middle West, where he had owned a number of small factories, and Mr. Eaton had obviously done well for himself, because now he owned two apartment buildings free and clear, was a director of a chain of stores, and a part owner of a sugar refinery. He was obviously one of those adroit people who could move from one enterprise to another. The purpose of the loan was for additions to the tile plant. Part of the collateral was in Government bonds and part in stocks. It surprised Charles that the officers had not given him the loan at once, particularly since it appeared that Mr. Eaton was a director of the Pacific Investors Trust and thus indirectly controlled several large accounts at the Stuyvesant which were not his own. If Mr. Eaton were disappointed personally, the disappointment might go much farther, but recently Tony Burton and Stephen Merry had been exhibiting an unusual slowness in making decisions.

"I wonder why he didn't go to his own bank," Charles said. "Not that it's any of my business."

Clearly Roger Blakesley was delighted by the question. "Because I met him first, Charles," Roger said, "and I'm selling him on the personal service of small banks. I met him playing golf. I've seen quite a good deal of Godfrey Eaton. He's a friend of Sam Summerby. You know, Tony, Sam Summerby from Baltimore."



Perhaps it was Charles' imagination, perhaps he was becoming unduly sensitive, but it seemed to him that there was a slight rustle around the table. It seemed to him that everyone was watching them, and he realized that Roger had made a very good point. He knew that Roger was implying, without being obliged to say it, that he had brought in a very nice piece of business to the Stuyvesant, which was more than Charles had done lately. He was implying, without having to say it, that he brought in new business because he got around and sweetened contacts and played golf with people like Samuel Summerby. He was Taking the first footstep with a good thought, the second with a good word, and the third with a good deed, I entered Paradise. —ZOROASTER.

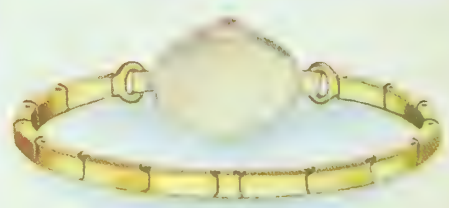
Bretton "Bretweave"— $12.50



Bretton "Rope" Queen — $10.50

No. 1227 — $9.50

All prices include federal tax

Bretton "Queen"— $10.50

for timeless beauty everyone treasures

Bretton

first among fine watch bands

People may disagree about watches, but watches and the people who wear them agree that superbly styled, expertly made BRETTON bands supply the supreme beautifying touch. Which explains why more famous watches proudly wear BRETTON bands than any other kind. Giving or getting, there are none finer. Created in yellow, white or pink, 1/20 12-kt gold filled. At better jewelers everywhere. Bruner-Ritter, Inc., Fifth Avenue, New York, and Montreal, Canada.

BRILLIANT, WORLD-FAMOUS STAGE STAR . . . says:

"for Dream hands, Cream your hands!"

Lynn Fontanne says: "An actress's hands must be beautifully groomed . . . that's why I CREAM my hands . . . with Pacquins, of course!"

Try her method for 3 days . . . a 12-second hand massage with non-sticky, non-greasy

Pacquins Hand Cream

. . . morning . . . night . . . and whenever housework roughens your hands!

TRY THE hand beauty treatment of famous stars . . . a Pacquins massage morning . . . night . . . whenever skin needs softening. Your own softer, smoother hands will tell you why Pacquins is the largest-selling hand cream in the world!

When household tasks roughen or chap your hands, regular massage with snowy, fragrant Pacquins will soothe them . . . soften them . . . give them a well-groomed smoothness. Pacquins leaves no greasy after-film.

Cherish your precious hands . . . keep that Pacquins jar within reach. For dream hands . . . take a hint from lovely Lynn Fontanne: cream, cream, CREAM your hands with Pacquins!

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins are: GLADYS SWARTHOUT • VERA ZORINA RISE STEVENS • GERTRUDE LAWRENCE

GLENYA WESTBROOK, NURSE: "Pacquins and I are old friends. It was originally formulated for nurses and doctors. Nurses' hands take a nasty beating—scores of washings and scrubbings a day. We must have this kind of hand care."

On sale at all cosmetic counters in United States and Canada

Also. For extra dry Skin—Red Label Pacquins contains Lanolin implying, without saying it, that it was too bad Charles played a very poor game of golf, and it seemed to Charles that he was called upon to give some sort of answer.

"Are you on a first-name basis with him, Roger?" he asked.

"Of course I am," Roger said. "I've known Godfrey Eaton for a year. Everybody at the club knows Godfrey."

"What club?" Tony Burton asked. "Where does Eaton play golf?"

"Why, the Seneca Club," Roger said. "I've got in the habit of playing there lately instead of at Oak Knoll. It's a sportier course."

Mr. Burton nodded and made a note on a memorandum pad. The meeting had turned into a club's committee on admissions.

"I rather liked him myself," Tony Burton said. "He's breezy, but he has an agreeable personality. But Charles has put his finger on it. Why should he come around to us?"

"Because he likes us," Roger said. "He told me he liked you very much personally."

"Why shouldn't he?" Stephen Merry asked. "I like Tony personally."

Roger Blakesley laughed. "As a matter of fact, I do too," he said. "That's why the Stuyvesant is a great bank. Everybody likes Tony."

"I'd love Tony myself," Charles said, "if he'd lend me two hundred thousand dollars. That's the way it is. Love and money."

The officers laughed. Even the younger men around the table smiled, and Mr. Burton picked up a piece of paper. "He's putting up enough," he said. "There's only one security I question. Here's an unlisted company from a place called Clyde, Massachusetts—a block of five thousand shares at thirty dollars a share."

Never give a man up until he has failed at something he likes.
—WARDEN LEWIS E. LAWES.

That was how Clyde came into the conference room, suddenly, out of nowhere. It came because Tony Burton's mind had been on a loan when he should have been discussing the trust business. It came like an unexpected gust of wind through an open window, except that there were no windows in the conference room—nothing but scientific air conditioning.

"I remember that five thousand shares," Roger Blakesley said, "but he has enough without it, hasn't he? We ought not to disappoint him. He's just the sort of person who in different ways controls a lot of business."

"THE Nickerson Cordage Company, Clyde, Massachusetts," Mr. Burton said. "Five thousand shares. Now, of course, we don't want to disappoint Mr. Eaton, but has anyone here ever heard of the Nickerson Cordage Company? Wait a minute—Charles, didn't you come from a place called Clyde?"

"Yes, sir. I was born there, but I haven't been there for quite a while."

"Well, what about the Nickerson Cordage Company?"

"They used to make rope," Charles said, "and twine and fish nets. They were near the Wright-Sherwin Company. I didn't know it was incorporated. It must have grown."

"If Godfrey Eaton has money in it, it must be good," Roger said. He spoke as an authority, as a golf partner and an intimate, personal friend of Mr. Godfrey Eaton.

"Well, we'll leave this for now," Mr. Burton said. His voice was resonant and agreeable, but it seemed to Charles that it had changed slightly.

Charles glanced at his watch. It was ten minutes past twelve, and in five minutes everyone was standing up, looking almost carefree because there would be a breathing spell for lunch.

"I didn't know the Eaton thing was coming up this morning," Roger Blakesley said.

Probably, under the circumstances, it was right to hover around Tony Burton and to show eagerness and zeal, but at the same time it might be possible to go too far.

"Speaking of electric razors," Charles said, "there was a story in the war ——" He had decided that he would bring up electric razors after all.

"What's that about electric razors?" Roger asked quickly.

"There was a story in the war," Charles said, "about someone who brought one to Port Moresby in New Guinea and there weren't any outlets at Moresby."

Charles was pleased to see that Tony Burton looked amused.

"Do you use one of those damned things, Roger?" Tony Burton asked.

"Of course," Roger said. "When you get the hang of one, you never want anything else."

"Don't you?" Tony Burton said. "Well, I wouldn't give one houseroom."

There had been times in the past when Charles was embarrassed because he was not a Harvard or a Yale graduate, as the New York banks he dealt with most were full of Harvard and Yale men, but in recent years he no longer felt any particular handicap. He had lunched at the Harvard Club often enough to find his own way to the checkroom, and Malcolm Bryant had left word at the door that he would be at the bar.

CHARLES found Malcolm at once, standing beside a middle-aged man who wore a tweed coat and gray slacks. The sight of a tweed coat in the city made Charles slightly uneasy, for it showed that Malcolm's friend, like Malcolm, belonged in some category where correct dress was not necessary. The tweed coat meant that he had just dropped into the city from the country and that he was a teacher or writer or something, and though it was a relief occasionally to meet personalities like this, still it was an effort in the middle of a crowded day to shift to them from people like Tony Burton and Roger Blakesley.

"Hello, Charley," Malcolm said. "This is Guy Lake. Mr. Gray, Mr. Lake."

Mr. Lake shook hands with Charles unsmilingly. His brown hair was closely cropped. His face was thin and studious.

"Malcolm says you're a banker," Mr. Lake said. "Malcolm says he picked you up somewhere at a desk. It's been quite a shock to Malcolm."

"It was quite a shock to me, too," Charles said. "I still haven't got over it." Charles smiled. At least he was able to deal with people. Experience had finally taught him to watch and wait and to find out what people were like.

"What'll you have to drink, Charley?" Malcolm asked.

At first Charley thought of saying that he would not have anything, but this would have been needlessly austere, so he said that he would like a sherry.

"That's the boy, Charley," Malcolm said, and he waved one hand at Charles and put the other on Mr. Lake's shoulder. "You know when I was doing that job on Yankee Persepolis, Guy ——"

"Yes," Mr. Lake said. "I know when you were doing it."

"Well, that's where I met Charley—and he never read it. It hurts me. In fact, it hurt me so much that I went right to the store and bought him a copy. Where's that book?"

"You left it at the other end of the bar, sir," the barman told him.

"Oh, yes. Well, get it for me, will you?"

"Are you going to give it to him?" Mr. Lake asked. "You ought to make him buy it. It shows you're an amateur."

"He wouldn't buy it," Malcolm said. "Do you buy Guy's books, Charley?"

Charles smiled again. "No," he said, "but I suppose I should."

The barman had passed Malcolm an academic-looking volume in a plain dust wrapper with "Yankee Persepolis" printed on it—"A Social Study—Malcolm Bryant."

"There you are," Malcolm said.

"Why, thanks, Malcolm," Charles said. "Thank you very much."

"Charley's a nice boy, Guy," Malcolm said. "You see why I like him, don't you? He has that repressed quality."

(Continued on Page 127)

He's dependent on your wise care to keep him comfortable at all times

The sturdiest baby's skin needs gentlest care

You keep his little shirts soft as soft—thoroughly rinsed of every smitch of irritating soap. He's a huskie, but his delicate baby skin is really much thinner than a grownup's. Even the slightest roughness might chafe it. Recent studies show his skin would actually "rub off" more easily. Your baby looks to you to guard his tender skin from discomfort.

It takes time to change him—but it's so important to his comfort to keep that tender skin dry. Another little irritation you can spare him is the discomfort of a harsh or flimsy bathroom tissue. Look for 3 "tender skin" qualities. Softness that doesn't chafe. Immediate absorbency for quick cleansing. Strength that resists tearing or shredding even when moist.

More mothers every day are finding this ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue. You know ScotTissue will give your baby's skin the gentlest care. Up to 6 months, fluff up 20 or more sheets of ScotTissue and try using it as a lining for baby's diaper. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Saves laundering—keeps baby comfy, too. Trade Mark "ScotTissue" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

ScotTissue is soft as old linen

A romantically fragrant gift . . . Evening in Paris Bath Powder and Eau de Cologne in holiday package $3.00

Perfume $1.65 and $3.00; Triple Vanity $6.75; Lipstick handsomely encased in gleaming gold-color metal $1.00

Gift of Beauty! Evening in Paris Eau de Cologne, Face Powder and Flacon of Perfume in holiday box $2.75

She'll love you for this! Perfume, Toilet Water, Face Powder, Rouge and Lipstick in gay blue and silver box $8.50

Gifts with the Fragrance of Romance

Evening in Paris

BOURJOIS

Gorgeously decorated Gift Chest containing Perfume, Face Powder, Talcum, Eau de Cologne, Rouge, Lipstick $5.00

Evening in Paris Perfume, Eau de Cologne, Rouge, Lipstick and Talcum . . $4.00

Sweet duet of Evening in Paris Perfume and Eau de Cologne, a charming gift, enchantingly packaged $1.50

The gift supreme! Evening in Paris Perfume, Eau de Cologne, Talcum, Face Powder, Rouge, Lipstick $10.00

All prices plus tax

(Continued from Page 124)

"It's too bad you haven't got some of it yourself," Mr. Lake said. "You'd better get lunch, Malcolm, I've got to be going now. I'm glad to have met you, Mr. Gray," and he shook hands and walked away.

Malcolm Bryant scowled and shook his head. "Conceited, isn't he?" he said.

"I didn't have a chance to find out," Charles said.

"Well, he's conceited," Malcolm said. "He's an ornithologist. We were on a trip once in the Orinoco."

"Oh," Charles said, "I remember. You used to talk about the Orinoco."

Up to that moment, it had been hard to remember much about Malcolm Bryant, but now everything was beginning to be clearer. The mention of the Orinoco gave Charles a slightly guilty but at the same time a pleasant feeling. It brought him back to a time when he had been able to consider seriously regions like the Orinoco as places he might conceivably visit.

"I guess you have to have a Ph.D. to go to places like that," Charles said. "You have to know about bugs or snakes or rubber, I suppose."

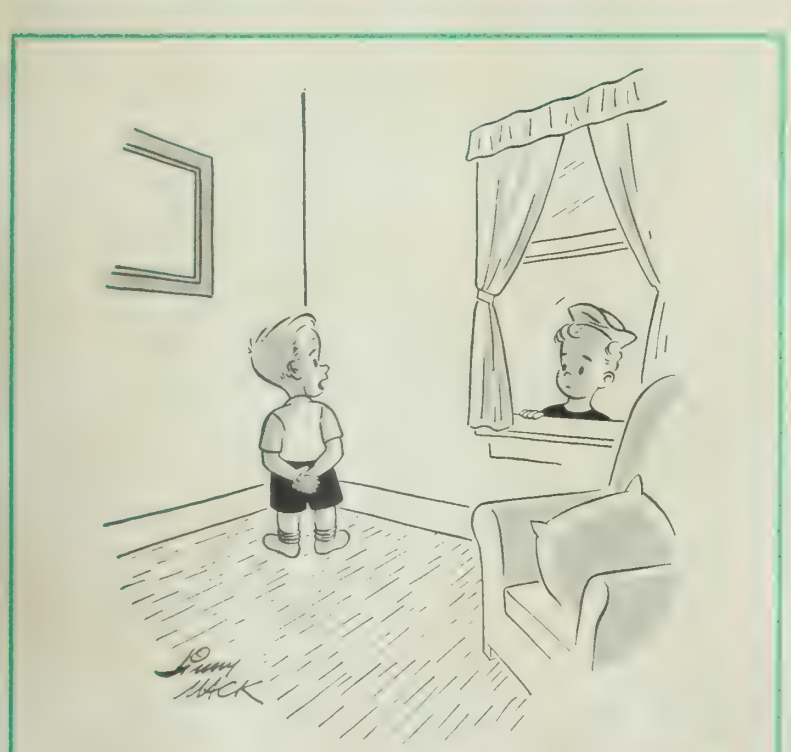
Malcolm was regarding him in his old friendly, detached way, as though he were examining a strange human specimen. "Yes," Malcolm said. "It's better to have a Ph.D., but it's more important to think of a project. Then you sell that project to somebody and they give you the money and you go. That's why I'm going to New Guinea tomorrow."

"Oh," Charles said, "are you going to New Guinea?"

"Yes," Malcolm said, "for the Pacific Relations Institute."

One of the club attendants interrupted them. It was a telephone call for Mr. Bryant.

Malcolm said, "I'm sorry, Charley. That will be about the penicillin. Just wait for me in the other room, will you? I won't be a minute."



Charles walked into the other room and sat down in a red leather chair. He opened the book which Malcolm Bryant had given him. It was published, Charles saw, by a university press, but even university presses had bright accounts of their books' contents inside the dust wrapper.

"Yankee Persepolis," Charles read, "appears as the final and considered summation of part of a study of a typical New England town, its culture and its social implications. This volume has been written by Malcolm Bryant, in general charge of the survey. The result is a brilliant and exhaustive case history which can serve as an adequate text ——" Charles' attention had wavered. His eye traveled without reading down to the last paragraph. "Malcolm Bryant, though stemming from the Middle West, took his doctorate at Harvard University, is at present a Fellow of the Birch Foundation, and is widely recognized through his papers in scientific journals and as a lecturer."

That was all there was about Malcolm Bryant, and it conveyed very little to Charles. The book, as he glanced at it, was written in an abstruse and awkward way, adding up to something that he could not possibly read continuously, though he knew the book was about Clyde. The first chapter was entitled "Yankee Persepolis, Its Geography and Population," and the second "Social Structure," with a number of charts and drawings which Charles could not understand.

Turning the pages hastily, Charles could see the names of streets and neighborhoods and buildings, thin and inartistic parodies of real names. Johnson Street was called Mason Street, the North End was called Hill Town, Dock Street was called River Street, and so it went, down to the names of families. The Lovells were obviously called the Johnsons and the Thomases were called the Hopewells, in a chapter entitled "Family Sketches."

"For the purposes of distinction," Charles read, "it will be well arbitrarily to define the very definite and crystallized social strata of Yankee Persepolis as upper, middle and lower. These will be subdivided into upper-upper, middle-upper and lower-upper, and the same subdivisions will be used for middle and lower classes." Charles turned to the middle of the book. "Typical of a lower-upper family," Charles was reading, "are the Henry Smiths—father, mother, son and daughter. Like other lower-upper families, they dwell on a side street ('side streeters'), yet are received on Mason Street. Mr. Smith, with investment interests in Boston, whose father owned stock in the Pierce Mill, is a member of the Sibley Club, also the Country Club, but is not a member of the Fortnightly Reading Club, belonging only to its lower counterpart, the Thursday Club. Though a member, he has never been an officer of the Historical Society or a Library trustee. His wife, Mrs. Smith, was Miss Jones, a physician's daughter (middle-upper). She runs their home in the lower-upper manner, with the aid of one maid (middle-lower) coming in daily. The son Tom, a likable young graduate of Dartmouth, works ambitiously in the office of the Pax Company and is thinking of leaving for a job in Boston. He and his sister Dorothy are received by the upper-upper, but are not members of the committee for the Winter Assembly. They are, however, in a position to

"I'm not a constant source of joy and amusement any more!"

You'll be an angel from every angle

Warner's 3-Way-Sizes fit you for the loveliest feeling this side of heaven your right cup size

You're sure to be letter perfect in Warner's* Alphabet* bras. They come in not 3 but 6 ABC cup sizes* . . . one just right for you. And you'll love the breathe-easy hug of Warner's all around satin elastic A'Lure* bra. In A, B and C cup sizes.

Warner's satin elastic A'Lure bra #1050. In pink and white. $5.00 your choice of band

Warner's bands will set your heart singing. You can choose from no bands and narrow bands, deep bands and Warner's own elastic bands. The Warner's that is "individually yours" does away with band bug-a-boos like under-the-arm spread and binding that you find in standard sizing.

the uplift you want

Need a real lift or just a little? There's a Warner's bra "just for you." In a modified or extreme uplift, the Warner's bra you choose will make you feel as heavenly as you look. At finer stores.

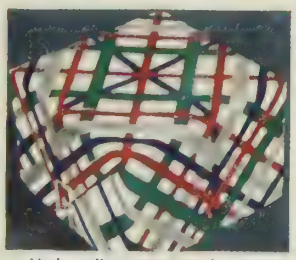
Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC ALPHABET • REDFERN*

"Now another strip of 'Scotch' Tape to keep his hat on, and we're all set."



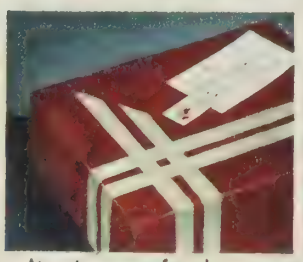
THIS CHRISTMAS

Personalize Your Gifts

WITH "SCOTCH" TAPE IN COLORS

Letter names and greetings.

Make all-over tape designs.



Give cellophane extra glamor.

Cut novel designs from tape.

Make greeting cards, envelopes.

Accent corners of packages.

Seal with transparent tape.

Tape greeting cards to mirrors.

Transparent "Scotch" Cellulose Tape in Utility Dispensers—15c to 39c. Colored "Scotch" Tape in a variety of designs—10c a roll. "Scotch" Tape Christmas Seals, too. 108 seals in 7 different designs—35c in dispenser. At stores everywhere.

SCOTCH Brand TAPES

MADE IN U.S.A. BY MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO.
ST. PAUL 6, MINN.

Also makers of "3M" Abrasives, Adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry

For Export: DUREX ABRASIVES CORP., 63 Wall St., New York 5, N. Y.
In Canada: CANADIAN DUREX ABRASIVES LTD., Brantford, Ontario

© 1948 3M CO.

move by marriage to middle-upper or possibly upper-upper status. There is even talk that in time Tom may be taken into the Fortnightly and he is on friendly terms with the daughter of Mr. Johnson (upper-upper), though there is little prospect of more than friendship. Dorothy is occasionally squired by Arthur Hopewell (upper-upper), but here, too, the prospect of marriage both recognize as small."

Charles felt his face redden, because it was easy enough to read between the lines. It was his own family there in black and white, starkly indecent, without trimming or charity. He was Tom, that likable young graduate from Dartmouth. It was indecent and infuriating, but still he read farther. His eye was still on the page when he heard Malcolm Bryant's voice.

"All right, Charley," Malcolm was saying. "Let's go in and have some lunch. So you've been looking over the opus, have you?"

Charles stood up with the book under his arm and tried to look calmly placid, especially as he saw that Malcolm was regarding him with a detached, scientific sort of curiosity. "Yes," Charles said, "I was just glancing through it."

"It's a professional sort of book. Everybody has to publish something."

"It's like all sociological books. It's a little over my head. It has a queer style."

"It isn't meant to have style. Scholars suspect anything with style."

"It has a lot of facts," Charles said, "but it doesn't sound much like Clyde."

They were already at the door of the long dining room and the clatter of dishes and voices was all about them so that Malcolm had to raise his voice.

"It isn't meant to be Clyde. It's only meant to represent a characteristic social unit. . . . Let's not wait on ourselves. Let's get a table at the end."

"All right," Charles said. "You're paying for it. I can't. I'm a likable Dartmouth boy."

Malcolm looked startled, but he laughed. "So you read that piece, did you?"

"I just glanced at it," Charles said. "There wasn't much time to go over it."

Success is getting what you want; happiness is wanting what you get. —ANON.

The headwaiter was leading them to a table at the end of the room, and Charles was looking at the faces of the diners because his training had taught him that it was worth while to recognize people. He smiled and waved his hand to a vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company and he was back in his own life again, just out from the Stuyvesant for lunch with an unconventional acquaintance, an anthropologist who was going to New Guinea.

"That book," Malcolm said, pointing at it. Charles had been carrying it and he had put it down on the table beside a small basket of rolls. "I thought everything was pretty well scrambled in that book, but you picked yourself out, didn't you?"

"Yes," Charles said. "The Smith family."

"I'm afraid it made you sore. Get it out of your head that it's personal."

"I wouldn't say I was sore, but of course it's personal and I can't say that I like the idea of someone like you coming there and treating us like guinea pigs."

"Now, listen, Charley, a social survey hasn't anything to do with friendship. Besides, it was twenty years ago."

"That's right," Charles said. "It was quite a while ago."

"Just remember," Malcolm said, and he looked hurt, "it hasn't got anything to do with friendship, Charley. I wish you'd get it into your head that I liked a lot of people there. I liked you, for instance, heaven knows why."

"I used to like you, too," Charles said.

Then they were silent for a minute, but it was not a constrained silence.

"Did you ever get married?" Charles asked. "You were always talking about marriage."

"Never mind it," Malcolm said. "Women always forget me when I go away. What happened about you and Jessica?"

"Never mind it now."

"All right. What's happened to you since? I mean since I used to know you."

"Why don't you say what you really mean?" Charles asked. "You mean you want to fill in the end of a case history about likable Tom Smith from Dartmouth." He shrugged his shoulders. "You and that bird man in the bar were talking about it before I came in, weren't you? I don't mind. I rather like being a part of a case history."

"That's true," Malcolm said. "I was telling him. Charley, you've got a damned tough mind."

"I have to have one. I've cultivated it, I suppose. There are a lot of tough minds in New York."

"Oh, no, you haven't cultivated it. You've always had a tough mind, Charley, and a sensitive disposition. Clyde was full of minds like that."

"Never mind Clyde," Charles said. "Go ahead and ask me questions."

"All right," Malcolm said. "What have you been doing?"

Charles looked at his plate. It was empty. He had finished the main course of the lunch without knowing what it was and now the waiter was taking away the plate.

"Well," he said, "I met someone in Boston once who asked me to look him up in New York. That was when I was working in E. P. Rush & Co. I got a job in the statistical department at the Stuyvesant and I did well enough so I held it through the depression. I married a girl who worked downtown in a law office. We have two children, and we've built a house in the suburbs that I'm still paying for, and now there's a vice-presidential vacancy. It rests between me and another man, who has a tough mind too. That's about all I've been doing."

Malcolm had lighted a cigarette. "Of course you haven't filled in many details. For instance, do you love your wife?"

"I thought you'd ask that," Charles answered, "and the answer is yes. I love my wife. I love my home and my children."

"I thought you would. You're an essentially monogamous type."

"Your categories and groupings bother me. I like individuals, not groupings."

"Now look here, Charley, whether you like it or not, everybody's in a category. I'm in one. Just remember that no matter what sort of system he lives under, man still stays the same."

"Do you mean to say that a political system doesn't change the mental habits of individuals?" Charles asked. "What about Fascism? What about communism?"

"It doesn't matter," Malcolm answered "All ideologies arise from instincts. You can't change instincts. Man is always the same."

It was getting to be one of those conversations that would never get anywhere and it was too heavy a one for lunch. Charles looked at his watch and it was a quarter after two.

"I've got to go," he said, and suddenly he realized that he had found out nothing, or almost nothing, about Malcolm Bryant. "I wish you hadn't made me talk about myself all the time," he said.

They were out of the dining room and Charles had put his brass check on the coat-room counter when Malcolm put his hand on his arm.

"Charley," he said, "you've got a lot of guts."

"How do you mean, guts?" Charles asked.

"Saying what you do," Malcolm said, "doing what you do, takes guts. You're a very nice boy, Charley."

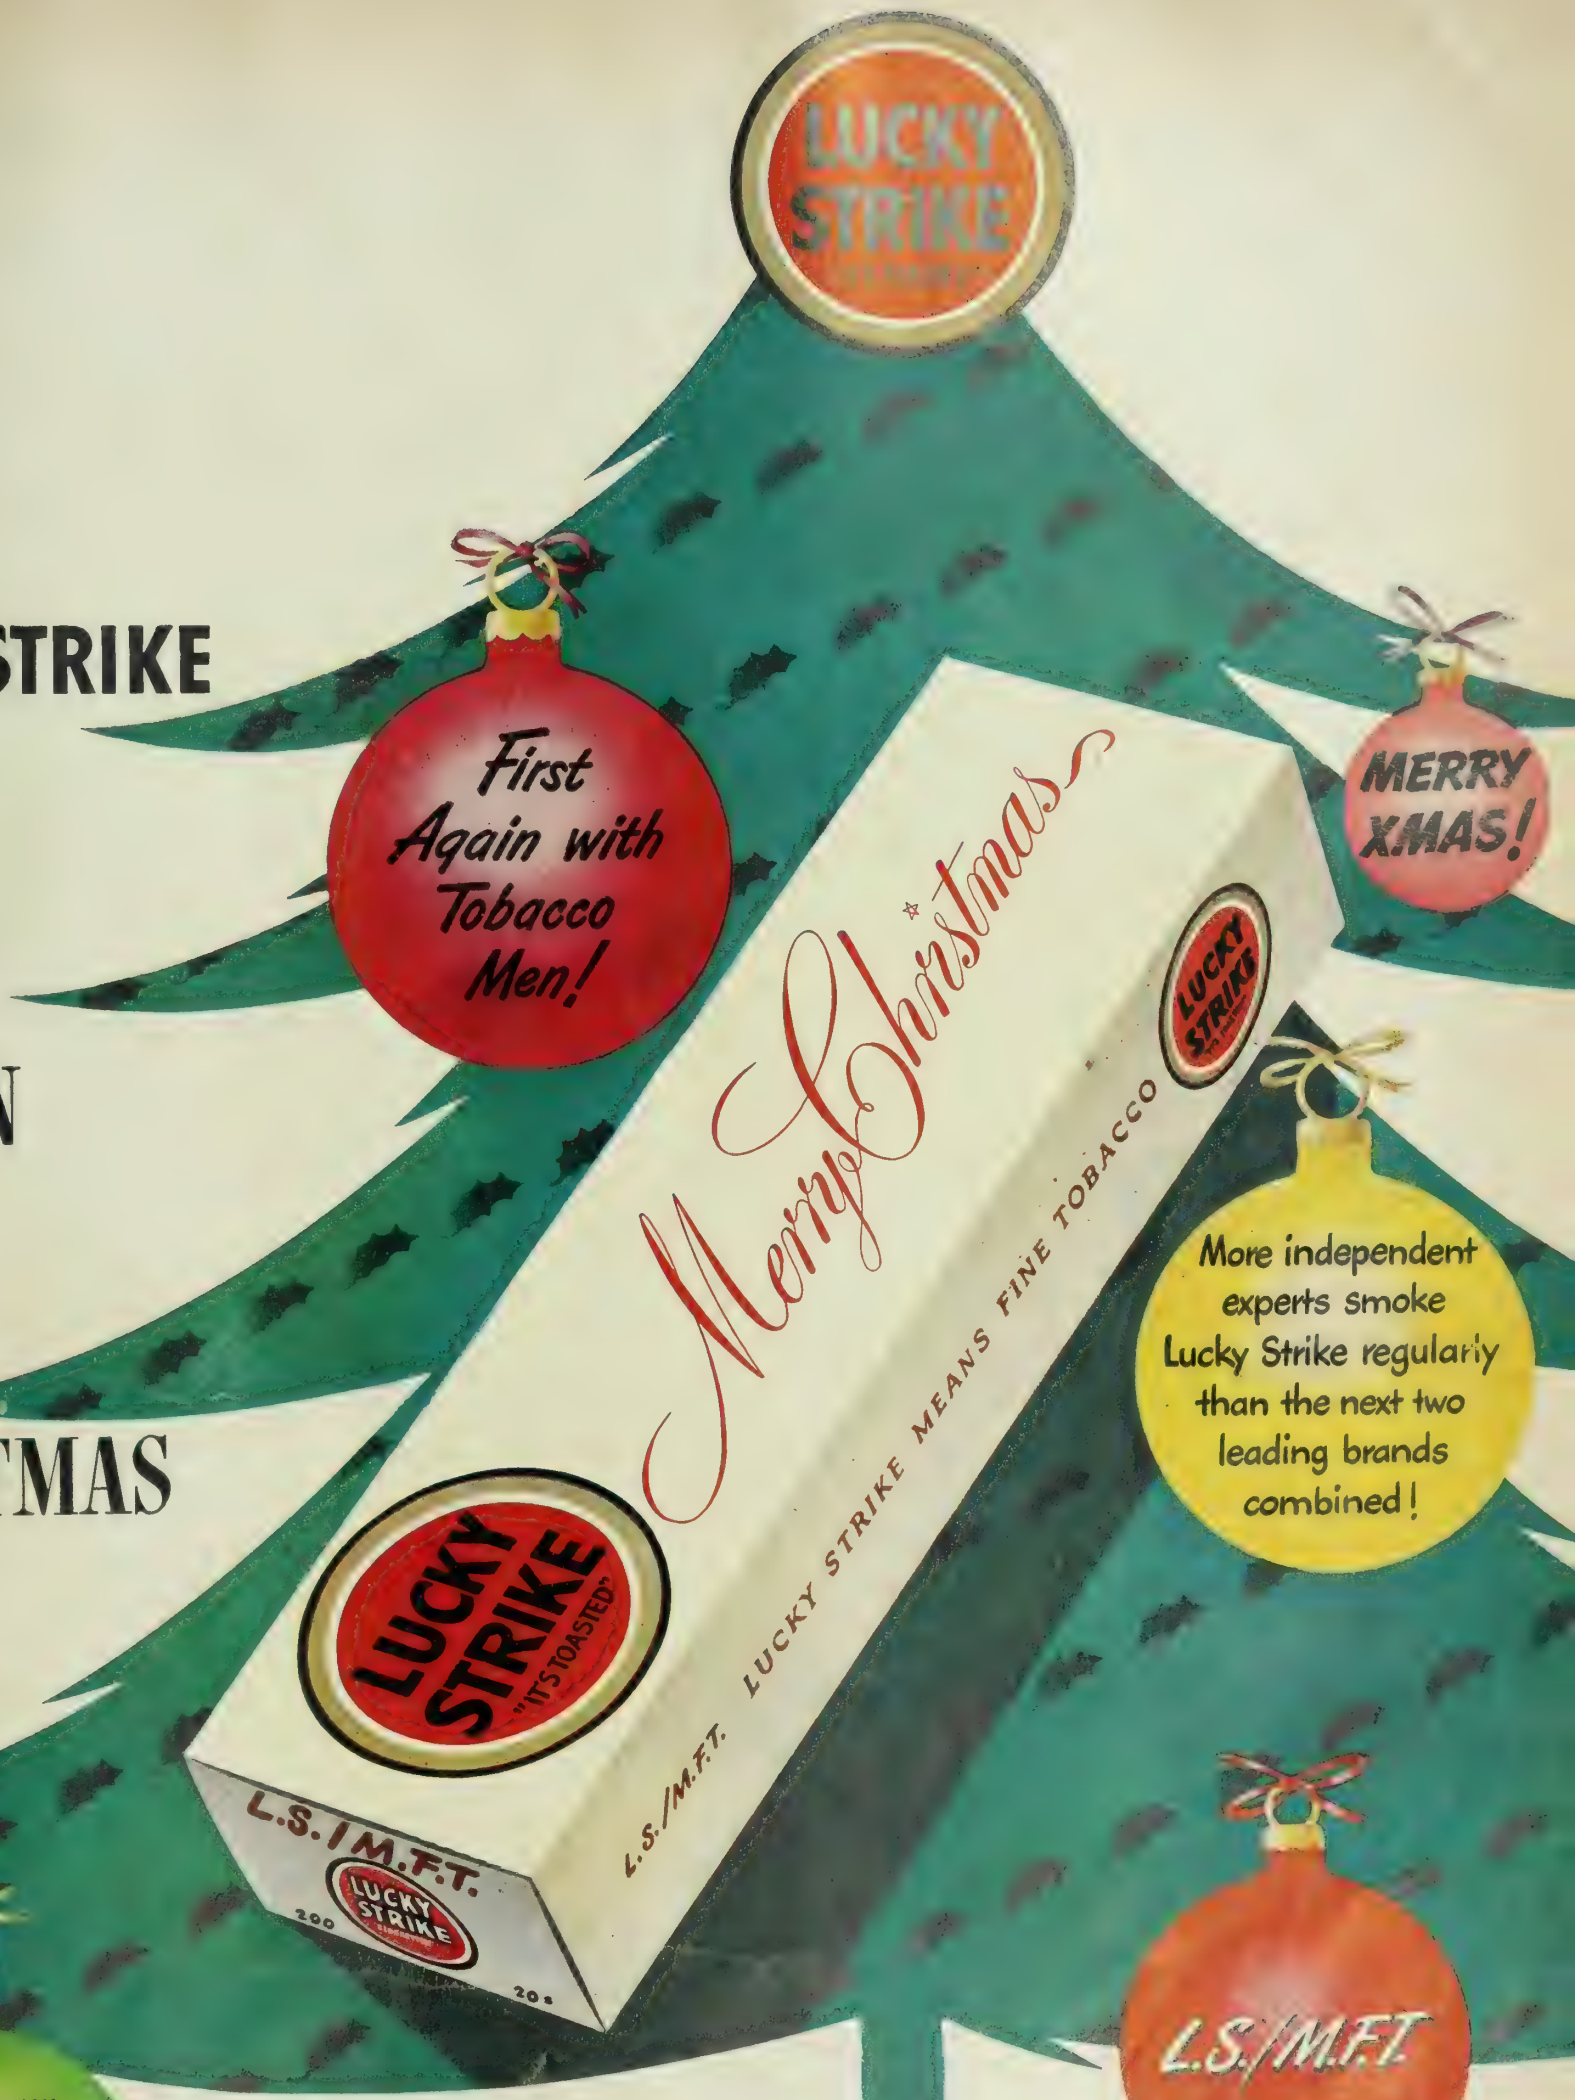
"I wish," Charles said, "you'd stop calling me a nice boy."

"Well, you are," Malcolm said, "and it takes guts to be your type, these days. Good-by, good luck, Charley."

"Put me down in Category E," Charles said. "Good luck, Malcolm, and thanks."

(Continued on Page 130)

UCKY STRIKE



uggests:

IVE A

ARTON

OR

HRISTMAS

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

LUCKY STRIKE MEANS FINE TOBACCO

So round, so firm, so fully packed—so free and easy on the draw

The Royal Pair

by Trifari

King-size and Queen-size Crowns, so exquisitely designed, so superbly crafted, they could be fashioned only by that royal house of jewelry art—Trifari.

Rhinestones, bright with all the fire of fabulous diamonds, and magnificently worked in Trifanium, lend coronation splendor to this royal pair of pins.

Housed in a royal box of pearl gray velvet, Trifari's crowns pay lavish Christmas tribute to Her Majesty, your Queen of Hearts. At quality stores everywhere.

*The Pair of Pins, boxed . . . $17.50

Jewels by TRIFARI

*Tax extra.

(Continued from Page 129)

"Thanks for what?" Malcolm asked.

"Since you ask me, I don't exactly know," Charles said, "but thanks."

It had been quite a while—in fact, not since he had been upstairs at the Stuyvesant—since anyone had made a remark to him about staying out too long at lunch. Nevertheless, Charles knew that Miss Marble and Joe had been wondering where he had been, and it did not help to see that Roger Blakesley was busy at his desk already. Charles repressed an instinct to hurry and hang up his hat and coat and instead he walked slowly past the desks and stopped where Miss Marble was typing and asked her if there was anything new.

"Nothing new," Miss Marble said. "I called up Mrs. Gray and told her you couldn't catch the five-thirty. She said to remember that you're going to the country club tonight."

"Well, call her again and tell her I'll meet her there," Charles said. "I'll get there as soon as I can, but I'll be late."

The tellers' cages would close at three and already, as was usual in the afternoon, the pace was growing more leisurely. There were always new problems in the morning, but these grew old by afternoon, fitting with still older problems into a symmetrical design so that you had a sense of everything running smoothly.

Charles had devised a system that permitted him to examine every trust account personally at least once a month, and now Miss Marble brought to his cleared desk the ones which he was to review that day. As he thanked her and settled himself in his chair, he glanced across at Roger Blakesley. Roger's desk was heaped with piles of papers. It was a habit of Roger's always to shove a great many papers around in the afternoon, especially toward closing time.

"Hello there, Charley," Roger said. "Everything's backing up on me."

Charles knew this was not true, but it gave the picture that Roger wanted, a picture of heavy and unremitting labor.

"You're back early," Charles said. "I thought you were going to have lunch with Tony."

"He canceled it. Something came up the last minute. Who was that bird you went to lunch with?"

There was no privacy. Everyone heard everything, particularly Roger.

"A man I used to know," Charles said. And then some impulse made him explain it further. "He's an anthropologist."

"He looked like a teacher in business school," Roger said. "One of those 'if you can't do, teach' boys."

As far as Charles could tell, everything in Roger's career had stemmed from his stay at the Harvard School of Business Administration, where business was the oldest of the arts but the newest of the professions. He had to admit that Roger used his academic background adroitly, extracting the last drop from it. Roger was always saying it was a great place, the Harvard business school. When you studied under the case system, you became aware of practicality and theories at the same time.

Charles began on the first account. He was in the middle of the security list when he realized that Miss Marble was waiting by his desk.

"It's twenty minutes to three," Miss Marble said. "Mr. Selig is coming in at a quarter of—the one who is coming to open an account. I thought you'd like to see the credit department memorandum."

"Selig?" Charles repeated.

"The matter that Mr. Burton asked you to take up," Miss Marble said.

An anticipatory quiver in her voice showed that Miss Marble was interested. He had been asked yesterday to do that job and now he understood why Tony Burton was not yet back from lunch. He always seemed to be the one who was picked for unpleasant interviews.

"Thanks," he said, and he took the memorandum. "Burt J. Selig," he read, "is part owner of the Teddy Club and the La Casita night club, owns real estate at . . . and also in Miami . . . was indicted for income-tax fraud but indictment was quashed . . ."

There was no use going any farther, because everything had been decided. It seemed to Charles that there was no reason for a personal interview and that the matter might have been settled as well by letter, except that Tony Burton had disapproved of anything as permanent as a letter.

Charles' desk had just been cleared except for a pile of Moody reports when he saw Joe moving from the door accompanied by a thin, dark man who wore a bluish-purple overcoat and a lightweight gray felt hat. Except for the shimmering sheen of the overcoat and the violently brilliant polish of his shoes, Mr. Selig was quietly dressed. When he took off his hat, as he did when he approached the desk, Charles saw that his forehead was high and that his close-cropped dark hair was receding from his temples. His eyes were gray, his jaw was heavy, but there was nothing heavy about his step.

"This is our Mr. Gray," Joe said.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Made Ready to Receive Him

By Catherine Ames Clinedinst

What if one walked the midnight ways
And saw once more the wide sky blaze
With heaven's doorways all ajar . . .
Once more the heart-compelling Star?

What if tonight They came again,
Commending the Lord God to men?
Of so great love is Christmas made.
Hush, then, and hearken, unafraid.

The little bells are hung heart-high
To swell the Christ Child's lullaby.
At Mary's feet, beneath the fir,
The third king lays his gift of myrrh.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mr. Selig held out a carefully manicured hand. "I'm happy to meet Mr. Gray. My name's Selig, Burt Selig."

"Yes, I know," Charles said. "Mr. Burton asked me to see you and I have all the details. Won't you sit down, Mr, Selig?"

"A nice little place you have here," Mr. Selig said.

"It's just a small bank."

"Yes," Mr. Selig said. "That's what draws me to it, Mr. Gray, particularly for Mrs. Selig. I know some lovely people banking here, some of my best friends. My friend Alf Fieldstone banks here. Do you know Alf?"

"Yes, I've met him."

"A very nice fellow, Alf. He likes La Casita. Have you been to La Casita, Mr. Gray?"

"I tried once, but there was a long line waiting."

"Well, any time," Mr. Selig said, and he smiled.

"Thanks," Charles said.

"Well," Mr. Selig said, "I suppose you've looked me over. What's the story? Do you want my account or don't you?"

Many people believed that banking was a matter of dull routine, but whatever it might be to the boys in back, up front you could never count on monotony or even on a restful moment. Suddenly, with hardly any time to prepare, Charles had to change from book values to diplomacy and to draw smoothly on a store of conventional phrases, which were deceitful but which had to stick.

"Our officers have been over that question very carefully," Charles said. "We would value your account in a great many ways, Mr. Selig, but we really feel that you will be better off in another bank. You said yourself this is a small bank, and smallness has its difficulties." Charles smiled at Mr. Selig. "I hope you'll understand, Mr. Selig, sorry as we are to turn away profitable business." Charles smiled again. "Mr. Burton asked me to tell you personally that this is a purely business decision."

"So the answer is no, is it?"

"I'm afraid so," Charles said, "for the time being. We're very sorry."

Something made Charles sit up straighter and something made him feel that it would be unwise to shift his glance from Mr. Selig, for a film had seemed to drop over Mr. Selig's eyes. It was as though Mr. Selig had tried to suppress an impulse which he had been unable to conceal, and for a second Charles had a sense of something close to physical danger.

"So I'm not a nice enough guy to play with you, is that it?"

Charles spoke slowly and very carefully. "There's nothing personal intended. We often find the needs of some depositors are better filled by other banks."

"I'm not used to being given the runaround. Why didn't they say that the first time I came in?"

"I'm sorry you put it that way," Charles said. "Mr. Burton was very impressed by your references. We never like to disappoint our friends, Mr. Selig."

"So you're fronting for the crowd, are you?" Mr. Selig asked. "How much do they pay you for doing it? Ten grand a year?"

"That hasn't anything to do with your account, has it?" Charles asked. Still, he was fronting for the crowd. He liked the expression "fronting for the crowd." Mr. Selig was looking at him with a new sort of interest.

"Guys like you fascinate me," Mr. Selig said. "I don't see why you do it, for that money."

"I suppose I think I'm underpaid," Charles said. "It's human nature."

Mr. Selig lowered his voice. "How would you like twenty-five grand a year?"

"What for?"

"For what you're doing here. Fronting for the crowd."

It was something, after all it was something. At least it meant that he had not done his job badly. "Thanks," Charles said. "I'm afraid I couldn't use it, but I appreciate your asking."

"You guys fascinate me," Mr. Selig said. "Money everywhere and you don't want money. Well, no hard feelings."

They both stood up and shook hands.

"Oh, no," Charles said. "Not at all. We're very sorry, Mr. Selig."

There was no flagging in the bank's activity, but Charles was conscious of a ripple of excitement, of curious glances from the cashiers' cages and the smaller desks. They were all like good little boys and girls who had witnessed one of their number having it out in the schoolyard with a naughty boy from the street.

Then Roger Blakesley asked whether Mr. Selig was mad, but Charles had no time to answer. Mike Cavanaugh had stiffened to attention and Charles saw that Mr. Burton had come in.

"Has Selig called?" Tony Burton asked.

"He's just left," Charles told him.

"Well, I'm glad I missed him. How did he take it?"

"His feelings were hurt, but then mine would have been. I wouldn't say he was angry at me personally."

"There aren't any complications, then?"

"No," Charles said, "I don't think so."

Tony Burton began to move away to the coatroom.

"Oh, Mr. Burton," Roger Blakesley said, "have you got time to see me for a minute?"

"Yes," Mr. Burton said. "If it's only for a minute."

Charles had rung for Miss Marble and Miss Marble was bringing back the trust folders. He was careful to show no undue anxiety, but such a request of Roger's, at such a time, might have implications. Ordi-

(Continued on Page 132)

1. "Paris"-fragranced Pair . . .
Toilet Water and Face Powder
Also in L'Origan, L'Aimant, Emeraude 3.25

2. Lovely L'Aimant Duette . . . Perfume and Vanity
Also in L'Origan and Emeraude 3.50

3. "Paris" Make-up in beautiful new decor
Also in L'Aimant, Emeraude, L'Origan 5.50

4. Her favorite perfume in a sparkling crystal ball
L'Aimant, L'Origan, Emeraude, "Paris" 3.50

5. Coty Make-up Ensemble with flacon of her favorite perfume
—L'Aimant, Emeraude, "Paris" or L'Origan 4.50

6. Brilliant Emeraude Ensemble, including purse-size perfume flacon
Also L'Origan, "Paris", L'Aimant 5.00

7. The "Carillon" rings out Merry Christmas with beloved Coty perfumes 5.00

All prices plus tax

8. Gay L'Origan Make-up Trio, including "tandem clip"
Also in L'Aimant, Emeraude, "Paris" 2.75

Dress by Traina-Norell
Compounded and Copyrighted by Coty, Inc. in U. S. A.

WE GOT SEVEN CHRISTMAS PRESENTS WITH OUR NEW EASY SPINDRIER!

1 THE FIRST AND BEST present from our new Easy is a younger, happier me! Those two speedy tubs save so much work, I have more time for Joe and the kids.

2 AN EASIER WASHDAY! No more set tub rinsing! Rinses automatically in 3 minutes . . . with just 3 gallons of warm water!

3 WHITER, BRIGHTER WASH! Just turn a tap! A geyser of fresh water needle-sprays, super-rinses entire load in spinning basket!

4 FASTER WASHING! A week's wash done in less than an hour! One tub washes while the other rinses then spins a full load damp dry!

5 FASTER DRYING AND IRONING! Spins out up to 25% more water than a wringer! Clothes dry faster, are lighter. No deep creases to slow up ironing.

6 ALL-AROUND CONVENIENCE! Portable! No set tubs! Wheel it to any sink. No waiting for a fixed washing cycle.

7 REAL SAVINGS! Saves soap and hot water. Does "extras" like slipcovers safely at home. Compare Easy with any washer at any price. Easy Washing Machine Corp., Syracuse 1, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 130)

narily, either he or Roger Blakesley would have risen and walked over to the president's roll-top desk without asking for any sort of appointment. That request of Roger's meant that he wanted to see Tony Burton privately and perhaps about something personal.

Mr. Burton had left his coat and was settling down at his desk and Roger Blakesley had risen.

That sort of anxiety and self-inflicted suspense was useless and unprofitable, but there was nothing one could do. Charles was back in his personal world again, his little narrow world, and the trust accounts were facing him, but he could not keep his attention on the trust accounts. His thoughts kept wandering off in tangents.

Roger Blakesley was over by the front windows, his chair pulled close to the president's desk, talking very earnestly. He could not forget what Nancy had said that morning—that he could go to Tony Burton and put his cards on the table. Even though he dismissed it as just the thing a woman would suggest, still Nancy had good judgment. She understood as well as he did the routine and jealousies and discipline of an office, and besides there was the question of personal dignity. It was humiliating, considering his position, to sit, day after day, waiting for Tony Burton to tell him what was on his mind, when he had probably made his choice already. It was humiliating to have one's life and a good part of one's future depend on the eccentricity of one man's mind, but that was the way it always was.

It would obviously have ruined everything if Charles had endeavored to end the suspense by talking it over with Tony Burton. It was against all convention and Tony would instantly have put him in his place, but still it was possible to consider such an impossible scene. He could even frame what he would say.

Confidence in another man's virtue is no slight evidence of one's own.
—MONTAIGNE.

"Listen, Tony," he would say, "let's face the facts. Maybe you're removed from office politics, but everybody here in the bank knows that you are considering proposing either Blakesley or me for this vice-presidency. Maybe you don't know, but you ought to, that they're making bets on it in the washroom. It isn't dignified. It isn't fair to Roger or me to keep us waiting. We're both of us making monkeys of ourselves running around and polishing apples. You know everything about me, Tony. I've been around here long enough. Of course, I was out in the war, but you approved my going, or you said you did, and I'm about the same as I ever was in spite of it. I know it's hard to step on somebody's face, but this thing has been going on for months, ever since Arthur was killed, and I'm tired of staying awake at night, and Nancy's getting tired too. How about it, Tony?"

It was not a bad speech, either, even though it was out of his usual line and beyond the realms of discipline. In fact, the words were so vivid in his mind that he seemed to be saying them right now. But of course he would never say them. He was at his desk and out of the corner of his eye he saw that Roger Blakesley was back again, leafing through a pile of papers with his left hand while he scribbled with his right on a memorandum pad.

The shades on the front door were drawn already, showing that the bank was closed to depositors. If he had wished to have that talk with Tony Burton, now would have been the time, but he still sat at his desk with the trust accounts in front of him.

Just then his desk telephone rang. It was Miss Sumner, Tony Burton's secretary. "Mr. Gray," Miss Sumner said, "Mr. Burton wants to know if you can see him for a moment."

There were some reactions you could not control, and in spite of himself his heart was beating faster. He deliberately finished the page of his report before he rose, and when he was on his feet he looked at Roger Blakesley. Charles was sure that Roger knew exactly why Tony Burton wanted to see hi for a moment.

Tony Burton looked very fit, in spite o his white hair and his roll-top desk, whic both conspired to place him in another ge eration. For years Charles had accepted hi as a model willingly, even though he realize that everyone else above a certain salar rating used Tony Burton for a similar unit measure, and he was pretty sure that Ton himself was conscious of it. In fact, at one those annual dinners for officers and junio executives when everyone said a few word and got off a few local jokes about the bank Charles had brought the matter up when h had been called upon to speak. Speaking wa always an unpleasant ordeal with which h had finally learned to cope successfull largely from imitating Tony. He remembere standing up and waiting for silence, just a Tony waited, with the same faint smile an the same deliberate gaze.

"I SHOULD like to drink a toast," he had said, "not to our president but to everyone who tries to look like him. When I walk, I always walk like Tony, because Tony knows just how to walk; and when I talk, I always talk like Tony, because Tony knows just how to talk; and when I dress, I always dress like Tony, in a double-breasted suit. But no matter how I try, I cannot be like Tony. I can never make myself sufficiently astute."

That was the one time in the year, at that annual dinner, when you could let yourself go, within certain limits, and Tony Burton had loved it. That was back in 1941, but Tony Burton still had the same spring to his step, the same unlined, almost youthful face. He looked up now and smiled at Charles and waved his hand with the circular motion at the wrist that everyone had tried to imitate.

"Sit down, Charley," he said. "Have a cigarette and relax."

No matter how much you might pretend it was no time for relaxing and Charles shook his head when Tony Burton offered him a club cigarette from his gold case. There was the unwritten rule of no smoking on the banking floor—even though Tony Burton suggested it be broken.

"What's on your mind, Tony?" he asked.

"About that loan we were talking about this morning. That cordage company. You said you were born up there. What's the name of the place?"

"You mean Clyde?"

"Yes, that's it. Clyde. Somebody ought to see that company, and it occurred to me if you've lived up there and know the background, you'd better go up for the day and look things over. Talk to people. Find out from the bank. Nothing is secret about any business in a small town."

"No, sir," Charles said. "Everybody in Clyde knows about everything."

"Well, if you want to, take the midnight, or take the plane up to Boston tomorrow morning. Stay as long as you like and see if you can get some figures."

Charles nodded slowly. He did not want to speak for a moment. He was going up to Clyde and he could not help it. He was going back to where he had come from because Roger Blakesley had seen Mr. Burton for just a minute.

"Do you mind if I ask you a question, Tony?" he asked.

"Why, no, of course not, Charley."

"Did you think up this idea yourself?" It was dangerous, impertinent and out of order, but from the slight narrowing of Tony Burton's eyes and from a faint look of surprise he knew that Tony Burton understood, and that was all he wanted.

"Why, no. Now that you mention it, it wasn't entirely my idea."

At least Tony Burton understood, if he had not before, why Roger had suggested it. It was an opportunity to get Charles Gray away for a while, out of sight and out of mind in a crucial period.

"I suppose Roger ought to go," Tony Burton said. "It's his responsibility, but he doesn't know Clyde. How about riding back with me on the five-thirty?"

"I can't," Charles said. "The Whitakers want to see me at five. They're very short of money."

Tony Burton frowned. He was thinking, obviously, of dignity and convention. "Why can't they come down here like other people?"

"Mrs. Whitaker hasn't been well," Charles said, "and so I thought ——" They both knew the size of the Whitaker account.

"All right," Tony Burton said. "Let's see, you'll be back by Friday, won't you? Remember you're coming to dinner on Friday."

"I wouldn't miss it for the world," Charles said.

When their glances met, there was no doubt that Tony Burton knew what he meant. "Well, relax and have a good time, Charley," he said. "I'll see you Friday." Then his voice had a note of kindly promise in it. "Just you and Nancy are coming, and you and I'll have a good long talk about the whole situation here on Friday."

CHARLES was very conscious of the fact that he belonged in a different world whenever he entered the Whitakers' apartment. When he handed the butler his hat and coat, he knew that he understood the whole place very well, academically but not practically. It was an environment in which he could move gracefully, without tipping things over, but one in which he would never live.

It was obviously going to be another family conference, because the room at the end of the hall was set for it, a large room that looked small because of the piano and the Bouguereaus and Alma-Tademas on the wall, the Italian chairs, the overstuffed sofas, and the maze of silver-framed photographs on the tables. The family had all been waiting for him, although he was certain that he was there right on the dot of five. Mrs. Whitaker, in a dark tailored suit, was seated on a sofa in front of the fireplace. She was holding a tablet on her knee, with questions written on it. She always wrote down questions. Mr. Whitaker was standing near the fireplace, looking round and red and uncomfortable. Their son Albert, who had risen when Charles came in, looked more like his mother than his father. You could see that he had kept his figure by conscientious outdoor exercise, and he kept his hair, too, though it was gray at the temples.

Albert's wife, as usual, looked very bored. Though she and Charles had never exchanged more than a word of greeting, it always surprised him how clearly she could tell him what she was thinking without saying a word—not that she cared whether he knew or not. She was telling him simply by perching on the edge of one of the Italian chairs that she was bored by having to be there, that she was too young, too pretty, too blond to be there, that she hated the stuffy furniture and her family-in-law, and that she was bored by Albert too.

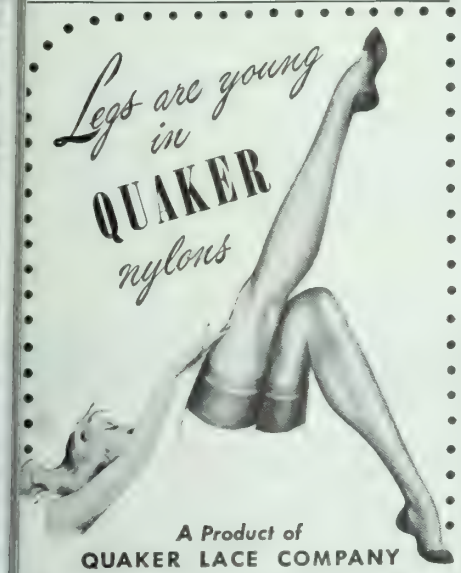
"I hope I'm not late," Charles said.

"Oh, no," said Mrs. Whitaker. "I know we can count on your never being late. Sit down here beside me, Mr. Gray, so we can read things together."

Charles sank down beside her on the sofa.

"Hewett," Mrs. Whitaker said, "perhaps Mr. Gray would like a Scotch and soda."

"Oh, no, thank you," Charles said.



"Well, I'd like one," Albert said. "Come on, dad. How about it, Dorothy?"

"Well," Dorothy said, and her voice was coldly sweet, "I might have one if Mother Whitaker doesn't mind."

"Of course I don't mind, darling," Mrs. Whitaker said. "Why on earth should I mind? Mr. Gray and I will have some tea when everything is over. Won't we, Mr. Gray?"

"Why, yes," Charles said. "That would be very nice." He saw Dorothy glance at him. She was telling him as plainly as though she had spoken to get on with it, and he hoped that he was telling her when he glanced back at her that he wanted to get on with it, that he didn't like sitting there any more than she did.

(Continued on Page 135)

TALL GALS
SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET
BUY DIRECT VIA MAIL
SHOECRAFT famous Fifth Avenue TALL GAL'S quality shoes in sizes 2½ to 13, AAAAA to C. Perfect fit or money back guarantee. A trial convinces. Send penny postal TODAY for FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET L2 Latest styles. EXTRA LONG NYLON Stockings only $1.95 pr.
Shoecraft Tall Gal's Fifth Avenue Shoes
603 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

The New Hoover Iron
makes a fine Christmas gift!

You give faster, easier ironing when you give the new Hoover Iron . . . and what a welcome gift it is. This is the iron that's designed and made from a woman's point of view by the makers of the famous Hoover Cleaners. This is the iron that gives fast, even heat in every inch of ironing surface. See the new Hoover Iron in the housewares section of your Hoover dealer's . . . then tell your own Santa Claus about it too.

$11.45 price includes excise tax

THE HOOVER COMPANY
North Canton, Ohio

GOWN BY PAULINE TRIGÈRE

Secret thought of a wife on Christmas Eve

"Perhaps tomorrow I'll own silverware as beautiful as Helen's! It's 1847 Rogers Bros.—the one gift I want most. It's the finest silverplate of all —like solid silver in its exquisite craftsmanship."

FEW GIFTS can bring such lasting pleasure as a complete set of 1847 Rogers Bros. silverplate.

The patterns with the yearmark "1847" reflect 100 years of expert silvermaking. They have a higher, deeper ornament—a perfect finish and balance usually found only in solid silver. And what a splendid value! The price has not gone up since 1945.

52-piece service for eight, $64.75; 76-piece service for twelve, $94.75; 101-piece service for eight, $118.75. (Prices include chests. No Federal tax.)

TUNE IN: "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," Sunday, 6:30 P.M., E.S.T., NBC.

COPR. 1948, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY, MERIDEN, CONN.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

For 101 years, America's Finest Silverplate

(Continued from Page 133)

"Now," said Mrs. Whitaker, "let's begin at the beginning. Let's begin by having you scold us, Mr. Gray, because we all need a good scolding."

"About what, Mrs. Whitaker?"

"About the ranch. I know how it must look with the world the way it is, but it's really for Albert's sinus. Albert and Dorothy are just back from Arizona. You can tell it by looking at them, can't you?"

Charles looked up at Dorothy and their glances met again.

"Albert," Dorothy said sweetly, "why don't you show him the photographs? That's what you brought them for, wasn't it?"

"Oh, yes," Albert said. "If you have to be out there, you might as well have some sort of place and not stay at a hotel. We saw this one fifty miles out of Tucson. These are just snapshots, but they'll give you an idea, and Dorothy's crazy about it. She needs some sort of place."

Curiously enough, he could feel their uncertainty as Albert handed him the photographs, and he knew that they were anxious for his approval. The photographs were mountain and desert views with low buildings of the Spanish-hacienda type in the foreground, corrals, patios, galleries, a swimming pool. They represented an exotic life pattern which the Whitakers must have known was entirely out of his experience, but still they wanted him to approve.

"If you really want it," Charles said gently, "I don't know why you shouldn't have it. Is a hundred thousand the asking price? If you really want it, you'd better give me the agent's name."

Tell a girl she is pretty and she will like it, but will not be sure you are in earnest; tell her she is prettier than some girl she knows is pretty and you have got her.

—ANONYMOUS.

"He does really want it," Mrs. Whitaker said. "If you could call up the agent it would be sweet of you, Mr. Gray. It would sound better than having Albert do it."

"Of course," Charles said, "you'll have to use a little capital, but I don't see why you shouldn't."

He was opening the brief case, taking out the folders. There was no earthly reason why they shouldn't, any more than there was no earthly reason why he should not have bought a three-dollar book if he had wanted it, or an overcoat if he really needed it, but it hardly mattered as much to them as a new overcoat would have mattered to him. He was speaking quickly, easily, just as though their problems were his own, dealing in millions just as though they belonged to him. He explained painstakingly item after item on the list.

"You make everything seem so reasonable, Mr. Gray," Mrs. Whitaker said. "I do hope they appreciate you at the bank as much as we do."

"I hope they do, too," Charles answered. He picked up some of the papers as a hint that he had been there for nearly an hour. He wanted very much to catch the six-thirty.

"Well," Albert said, "if everything's settled perhaps Dorothy and I had better be pushing off."

DOROTHY rose from the edge of her chair, gracefully, without pushing herself from it. "It stays light so long," she said, "that I keep forgetting what time it is."

But Mrs. Whitaker had picked up the pad from her knee. "I thought you told me that you didn't have any engagement until dinner, dear. Now that Mr. Gray's here, I did have a few other questions, but if you want to run along ——"

"Oh, no," Dorothy said. "We're really in no hurry." She smiled and sat down again and folded her hands carefully in her lap. She did it brightly and cheerfully, without a hint of resignation, but Charles was sure he knew what she was thinking.

Mrs. Whitaker's mind was always filled with unshaped, broad-gauge thoughts that mingled confusingly with little ones. There was still that matter of trying to settle a little more on Albert and of balancing the gift against inheritance taxes. She knew, as Charles had so often said, that these were really legal problems and she had nothing at all against Mr. Stone, who handled them, but she did value Mr. Gray's opinion and her father had always said that two minds were better than one. While they were having tea she would like to look over the security list with Albert. It was high time that someone gave it attention besides herself because she was tired of having everyone expect her to do everything alone.

"Nothing's been changed since last time," Charles said.

"I know," she said, "but I would like to look at it with Albert for a minute if you wouldn't mind waiting, Mr. Gray. Why don't you take your tea and talk with Dorothy?"

CHARLES rose and picked up his teacup. Dorothy had moved to a window with her highball glass in her hand. She stood there straight and beautiful, smelling faintly of Chanel 5.

"I'm sorry it's taken so long," Charles said.

"Why don't you take a drink? I would."

"Oh, no," Charles answered. "I don't believe you would."

"Well, maybe I wouldn't," she said, and she smiled again. She glanced toward the sofa where Mr. Whitaker and Albert stood looking over Mrs. Whitaker's shoulder.

"I didn't know," he heard Mrs. Whitaker saying, "that we had so many shares in Homestake Mine, Albert."

Dorothy had turned toward him again. Her beautifully molded, made-up face and the wind-blown look to her hair had an impermeable sort of completeness. It made him nervous that there was so little wrong about her. There was nothing wrong about her delicate hands and her pointed red fingernails, nothing wrong about her silk print dress or her diamond clip or her straight, lithe figure or her nylon stockings, but still there was something baffling.

"What do you do," she asked, "when you aren't doing this?"

"I go home," Charles said. "It looks as though I'm going to be late tonight."

"You make me curious because I can't picture you as doing anything but what I see you doing."

"Well," Charles answered, "now you mention it, I've been thinking about the same thing about you."

Her lips curved in that same faint smile. "That's because we're both doing what we do very well, but it takes a lot of trouble, doesn't it?"

"Well, sometimes—yes."

"Do you ever wonder whether it's worth it?"

"Yes," Charles said, "occasionally. I suppose everyone does."

"That's the question," she said. "Is it worth it? I'm glad you're curious about me. I didn't know you were. We ought to have a long talk sometime."

Charles squared his shoulders. He could not imagine how he had become involved in such a conversation and nothing would have been more unwise than having a long talk with Dorothy Whitaker sometime.

"I'm very glad you suggested it," Charles said. "It's an interesting idea."

"It would be a lot of fun." Her smile grew broader. "If we could sit in a bar some afternoon and get quietly tight and talk ——"

Charles found that he was laughing. The beauty of it was that it was so impossible that there was nothing at all to worry about.

"You see," she said, "I'd find out what you used to be and how you got the way you are."

"It wouldn't be worth it," Charles said. "I've always been about the same."

"Oh, no," she said, "nobody ever is. We can't help working on ourselves."

He had a momentary picture of her working on herself, sitting before her mirror with

(Continued on Page 137)

Plantation . . . the brilliant adaptation of the pineapple design to a complete new line of Heisey hand-wrought crystal. Because, for many years, the pineapple has symbolized hospitality at its highest, Heisey has selected this theme for your holiday entertaining . . . and for years to come! Amid much ceremony, the pineapple was first presented as a royal gift to Charles II of England in 1671. Today, exhibiting all the convivial charm of plantation living, PLANTATION is the summation of everything a hostess hopes to achieve. Ask your Heisey dealer to show you the complete line of PLANTATION stemware and crystal table accessories.

PLAN WITH PLANTATION . . . an informative little folder containing more complete information on this unusual, new pattern is available at no charge. Write Dept. LH, A. H. HEISEY & CO., NEWARK, OHIO

THE FINEST IN GLASSWARE—Made in America By Hand

SUCH A LOVELY GIFT...

lovely to get... lovely to give... marvelous Martex towels!
Inspired designs. Exquisite textures. Delectable colors. And famous Martex quality means long-lasting beauty and service. Luxurious-looking new gift boxes. Ensembles from about $4—now at your favorite store.

ABOVE:
Martex Rose Box packed with 1 bath towel, 2 guest, 2 face cloths in "Daytona" smart bordered design shown in Blue. About $4.50.

RIGHT:
Sport Men's Gift Box packed with a sport towel (with a handsome wide border) and face cloth in plain color. About $4.

Choose from more-than-a-dozen boxed gifts by Martex:

ABOVE: Martex Pine Bough Box packed with 2 bath towels, 2 guest towels, 2 face cloths, and 1 bath mat in "Berkshire," a magnificent jacquard pattern shown in Rose. About $14.

Martex®

THEY DO WEAR LONGER

Martex Towels—A product of WEST POINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY • WELLINGTON SEARS COMPANY • Selling Agents • 65 Worth Street, New York 13, N.Y.

(Continued from Page 135)

ıer lipstick and her powder base, and brushng back her hair. "Not on ourselves," he aid. "Everyone works on us. Everyone vears us down."

"If you're tough enough, you don't have o be worn down."

Charles found himself laughing again. "All ight," he said, "what did you use to be?"

She shook her head slowly and her smile ıad gone. "Nicer," she said, "quite a good leal nicer."

"Oh, Mr. Gray," Mrs. Whitaker was calling, "could you come over here for a minute?"

"Good-by," she said. "Good luck."

"I see you have a question mark in pencil after Smith Chemical," Mrs. Whitaker was saying.

The six-thirty from the upper level of the Grand Central was a good train, express to Port Chester and never crowded. Charles laid his brief case on the vacant seat beside him and took out the book, Yankee Persepolis, that Malcolm Bryant had given him. He laid it on top of his brief case and then looked at the headlines on the front page of the New York World-Telegram. The headlines had the same disturbing quality as his personal thoughts, for it seemed that nothing was in order that day with himself or with anything else.

The people he had seen that day and the things that he and they had said had no disturbing connotation in themselves. Taken separately, they were all elements that he might encounter in any working day. The trust conference, the interlude of lunch, the activities of Roger Blakesley, his words with Mr. Selig, his talk with Tony Burton and his conference with the Whitakers were manifestations that he had encountered often in slightly different forms, yet taken all together they achieved a different stature. Even the question of competition, of his having been outmaneuvered, though he was keenly conscious of it, was not what disturbed him. There was something more in the sum of all of it that lay within himself.

Lots of times you have to pretend to join a parade in which you're not interested, in order to get where you're going.

—CHRISTOPHER MORLEY: Kitty Foyle (Copyright, 1939, published by J. B. Lippincott Company).

For some reason Clyde kept coming into it, and for some reason he kept seeing events in terms of Clyde. When he had stood by that window watching Dorothy Whitaker's tapering fingers with their brightly polished red nails as she held her half-empty glass, he might again have been calling on Jessica Lovell at the Lovell house in Clyde. Granted that Jessica was a wholly different person, there was that same indirect involvement. It was true that if you weren't tough enough, contact with other people wore you down.

"Tickets," the conductor was saying. He had not noticed the conductor walking through the car. Then he remembered that he had used up the last of his commutation ticket that morning.

"I'll have to pay you," Charles said. He could not remember when he had last forgotten a ticket.

Since he was late, he had to take a taxi. "Sycamore Park," Charles said, and the starter called out his words above the rumbling of the train that was leaving.

"Sycamore Park. Anyone else going to Sycamore Park?"

The night air was fresher and it smelled of spring, and there was a vacancy of sound after the train had left. The train seemed to have carried away everything that Charles had been thinking. He was going home again, and no one else was going to Sycamore Park. He was returning to the basic reason for everything for which he had been working.

When he paid the driver and the car had driven off, he stood for a while at the end of the flagstone path that led to the light green front door. The light from the ground-floor windows showed the outlines of the ell and roof, and his imagination enabled him to put the rest of it together in the dark—the yard, the lawn and trees, the garage and the flagstone terrace by the windows of the library. There was too much of him connected with the house ever to view it objectively. He was thinking of the copper gutters and of the way the conductors drained over a part of the lawn. It would be necessary to have a dry well dug for the conductors. And then there was the broken latch on the garage door, and the oil burner needed a new lining of firebrick. Those were the sort of thoughts that came over him as he stood by the door, and they were a relief after everything else.

The hall, when Charles entered, seemed what the architect had called gracious and welcoming. At the left came the dining room; the living room was opposite, then the stairs, and the pine-paneled library at the end of the hall. Once he had thought this ground plan was entirely original until, to his amazement, he found it repeated in all the other houses at Sycamore Park.

It was strange the way a family developed habits. For instance, no one seemed to use the living room much, although it was the largest and most comfortable room in the house. The children, as usual, were in the library listening to the radio. Bill was sprawled on the sofa in a manner which he must have copied from some older boys. He was wearing a pull-over sweater and his gray flannel trousers had worked halfway up to his knees, showing stretches of bare shin. His face seemed to have outgrown itself, like his body, so that his nose looked too big for his eyes, and his hair was done in a crew cut which was very unbecoming.

Evelyn sat sideways in an armchair. Instead of being nervous, petulant and slender, as she had been when she was seven and eight, Evelyn was almost fat. He could imagine she would be pretty someday, for she had Nancy's tranquil features and Nancy's chin and mouth, yet it was hard to think that Nancy, when she was twelve, could have looked like Evelyn, that Nancy could have worn a little girl's plaid dress or that Nancy's light brown braids were ever so untidy.

When they saw him they both jumped up, clumsily yet with a puzzling sort of coordination. Evelyn still kissed him like a little girl, winding her arms tight around his neck, but Bill simply stood there grinning at him, with his wrists dangling out of the sleeves of his sweater.

"Hello," Charles said. "How about turning that thing off?"

"It's going to be over in a minute, daddy," Evelyn said, "and then there's going to be Eddie Duchin."

"Well, never mind Eddie Duchin," Charles said. "Turn it off. I'm tired."

Bill switched it off and there was a silence that was almost embarrassing to Charles. It was obviously incredible to both Bill and Evelyn that anyone could exist who could bear to miss Duchin.

"Where's mother?" Charles asked.

"She's gone to the club," Bill answered. "The Martins took her and she left the car. She said for you to go up there when you've had supper."

"It's in the oven," Evelyn told him, "but I'll get it."

"Why do you have to go out?" Bill asked. "Why don't you just stay here?"

"Because he's on the committee," Evelyn said. "And don't forget to shave." She sounded just like Nancy when she said it.

"Don't worry," Charles answered. "I'll put on a black tie and everything."

"Mother laid your clothes out," Evelyn told him. "Daddy, why don't you use lotion?"

"What?"

"After-shaving lotion. Don't you want to be like other people?"

Charles started to laugh, but a desperate, tragic note in her voice stopped him. "Do you really think that would help?" he asked,

(Continued on Page 139)

Pieces from the open-stock Touraine Group— Brittany finish

IN ROMANTIC TOURAINE

Capture the charm of an Eighteenth Century French Chateau with Touraine, by Drexel . . . Find new glamour for your bedroom in the precious Brittany fruitwood finish, new color-scheme possibilities in its soft honey hue, and new delight for your eye in the lovely design.

The Touraine Group brings to your home all the charm of scrolled cabriole legs and exquisite serpentine fronts, and the luxury of rich hand-carving, so well-loved by the courtiers of Louis XV.

Look for more than surface beauty in Touraine by Drexel. Look for all the cabinet-maker details that make furniture by Drexel the finest that craftsmanship can build — dovetailed, center-guided drawers which open with a finger-touch, sturdy, three-ply dustproofing, and gleaming, hand-rubbed finish.

See Touraine, by Drexel, at leading department and furniture stores. Look for the "by Drexel" brandmark — your proof of superior craftsmanship.

Write today for booklets: "Traditional"— 26 pages —10c in coin only; "Precedent" —27 pages in full color of Drexel's new modern furniture—25c in coin only. Address: 272 Huffman Road, Drexel, N. C.

Drexel Furniture Company

DREXEL · NORTH CAROLINA

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

Which room in your house needs a beautiful new carpet?

IN ALMOST EVERY HOUSE, there's a room that's only half as attractive as it could be if it had the perfect carpet.

How about your house? Haven't you a room . . . or even two . . . that needs the "beauty treatment" of a wonderful new Bigelow Carpet?

Whether you live in a mansion or a cottage bought for a song and a G.I. loan, there's a just-perfect Bigelow Carpet for every square yard of it.

But read the facts below . . . and then don't wait another day to see your Bigelow dealer!

1. A wide, handsome choice of colors and patterns!
So many inviting colors, textures, and patterns it's hard (but wonderfully exciting) to choose your Bigelow.

2. A price range designed to suit everyone!
Pay a little or pay a lot. Bigelow doesn't price-tag taste. You'll get a truly distinguished carpet for anywhere from $6 to $18* per square yard.

3. Top-grade wools for lasting beauty, richness!
Imported wools are carefully blended to give each Bigelow Carpet rugged strength combined with luxurious texture.

4. "Lively" wool makes your carpet live longer!
Bigelow's manufacturing methods guard the natural springiness of the wool. That's why Bigelow beauties stay beautiful.

For name of your local Bigelow dealer, call Western Union by number. Ask for operator 25.

For luxurious living—the superb Serenade #6910-97. Note the interesting light-and-shadow texture of its rich surface. About $14.50* a sq. yd.

For gracious dining—the fresh new leaf-motif, Beauvais #1814. It's charming for living rooms too, of course. (Many other patterns also in Beauvais.) Around $9.50* a sq. yd.

For a bedroom, or any room—Cassandra, a decorator's favorite, loved for its look of luxury, its soft, deep texture, and the way it goes with almost any furniture. About $13.50* a sq. yd.

*Slightly higher in the West.

LIVELY WOOL SPRINGS BACK UNDERFOOT

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see . . . quality you can trust . . . since 1825

(Continued from Page 137)

nd she nodded without speaking. "All ight," Charles said, "I'll tell you what I'll o. If you really think so, I'll buy some to- orrow."

It must have been worrying her, because he smiled the triumphant smile of someone who has been through a considerable ordeal nd who has been brave enough to speak ank thoughts. "Oh, daddy," Evelyn said, you don't have to do it if you don't want ."

That expansive mood was still with harles as he sat in the dining room eating armed-over corned-beef hash and string eans and drinking a cup of bitter, warmed- ver coffee. Now that it was spring, he found imself saying, they would take the car some aturday soon and drive away out in Con- ecticut for a picnic. It would be a cooking icnic, if they could find a place somewhere ear a brook where they could light a fire. When he was their age, he was saying, they ften went for picnics down on the beach and hey always built a fire of driftwood because here was always a lot of dry wood on a each. Bill was saying that he wished they ad a sailboat, but Evelyn was saying that of ourse they couldn't afford a sailboat, and Charles said that perhaps they could some- ime. Then Bill was saying that he had been vith some of the boys to the airport that fternoon watching the Piper Cubs, and Charles said that maybe Bill could take fly- ng lessons sometime, if he wanted, when he was seventeen or eighteen. This brought the conversation around to the war, and Charles was tell- ng them again, as he had before, that he had not done anything much in the war and that a great many people in the Air Force were on the ground all the time, repairing the planes and briefing the crews who were going on missions. Then Bill was asking him if he had ever been on a mission, and Charles said that he had been, twice, but not do- ing anything, just there to see what it was like.

"What was it like?" Bill asked.

Charles pushed his plate away. He would never be able to tell Bill what it was like, even if he wanted to. "It was cold," he said. "If I'm going to the club, I've got to get dressed. It's all over, anyway, Bill. All of it's all over."

He must have spoken sharply without having intended to, because they were quiet when he stood up, but Bill followed him to the stairs.

"Do you mind if I come up with you?" he asked.

"No," Charles said, "of course not, as long as we talk about something else." His brother Sam had been old enough to go to the last war.

While he was putting his studs in his shirt, he kept looking at Bill, who sat on the edge of the bed, and wondering whether he could ever have looked like Bill when he was fifteen.

"I don't want you sitting around wishing you'd been in that war," Charles said.

"Well, just the same, I do."

"It doesn't do any good to wish," Charles said. "I kept wishing I'd been to the first one and that's why I went to this one and it wasn't a very good idea."

"Why wasn't it a good idea?"

"It didn't help anything."

"How do you mean," Bill asked, "it didn't help anything?"

"Never mind," Charles said. "It didn't. It was a luxury."

"A luxury?" Bill repeated.

The subject was not worth discussing. Bill was too young to understand him. "When you do something that you don't have to do, it's generally a luxury," Charles said. "You've got a lot of other things to think about, Bill. I want you to go to college. I want you to have more opportunities than I've had. I'd like you to have some sort of profession, something you'll be proud and happy doing."

"Aren't you happy working in the bank?"

"Yes, but that hasn't anything to do with you. What do you want more than anything else?"

"I want to go to Exeter," Bill said.

Charles did not answer. It was an anti-climax, but he could understand it. It meant that Bill was like himself. When he was that age, he too had usually wanted something small and definite.

"Dad, is there any chance of sending me to Exeter?"

"Why, yes," Charles said, and he put on his coat. "I think so, Bill. I think there's a pretty good chance, if everything turns out all right. Do you know where the keys to the car are? I ought to be going now."

Not since he had left Clyde had Charles ever felt so identified with any community as he had after he had been asked to join the Oak Knoll Country Club. Charles was frank enough to admit that the Oak Knoll Club was not so good as the older country club at Hawthorne Hill. Charles' knowledge of people in the bank and his acquaintance with Hawthorne Hill clients had taught him that the Oak Knoll Club was intended for a definite sort of person, either one who could not afford the Hawthorne Hill dues or one who had not had the edges polished off.

It was reassuring to Charles to recall that several members of Hawthorne Hill had spoken to him casually about joining it someday. Cliff Dunbarton, who kept his polo ponies and his hunters at the stable at Hawthorne Hill and who had come to Charles several times at the bank to ask him about investments, had said that any time Charles wanted to get into Hawthorne to let him know. Tony Burton himself, who was a member, had said only last year that it might be a good idea for Charles to think about getting into Hawthorne Hill, as long as Charles was a confidential adviser to so many of its members. It might even be a good thing for the bank to have him in there. When Charles had pointed out that he could not possibly afford the initiation fee or the purchase of the necessary share of stock, Tony Burton had said that there might be some way to wangle it. But either it had gone out of Tony's mind or there had not been any way, for the subject had not been brought up again.

> Man is the only animal that laughs and weeps: for he is the only animal that is struck with the difference between what things are and what they ought to be.
>
> —WILLIAM HAZLITT.

It was true that in some sections of the town Oak Knoll was referred to as the "Monkey Cage," and now that Charles was a member of the House Committee he could see what was meant, but at the same time they all enjoyed themselves at Oak Knoll, and even some of the Hawthorne Hill crowd still kept their memberships.

When Charles was hanging up his hat and coat in the men's coatroom, the first person he saw was Cliff Dunbarton, who looked more relaxed than usual.

"Why, hello," he said. "If it isn't Mr. Gray."

"That's right," Charles said. "The name's Gray," and he was tempted to add, "Fancy seeing you here," but he did not know Cliff Dunbarton well enough to be familiar.

"Margie's away," Cliff Dunbarton said, and Charles realized that he must be referring to Mrs. Dunbarton. "She never can stand this place. Margie isn't what you'd call democratic, but this is quite a party."

"I wouldn't know," Charles said. "I just got here. But it must be if you say so."

"I've always kept my membership here," Cliff Dunbarton said, "out of community spirit. I'm having a wonderful time. How about having a drink, Charley?"

"I'd like to a little later, but not right now," Charles said. Obviously Cliff Dunbarton was quite tight or he would not have called him Charley.

"Have you got a pencil and a piece of paper?" Cliff Dunbarton went on. "There's a little number I was dancing with out there and I want to write her name down before I forget it."

the LESTER Concert Grand

matchless Christmas gift

Here is the Christmas gift supreme . . . the gift that assures lasting musical pleasure . . . that pays constant tribute to your appreciation of the finest.

Famed for magnificent tone . . . the Lester Grand is a quality instrument built with infinite care of only the best materials.

Choose your favorite from the popular 4 foot, 7 inch model to the full 9 foot Concert Grand pictured . . . each one is a lifetime investment in musical excellence.

Your dealer will also be happy to show you the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet . . . made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc.

Foreign Sales Representatives
H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street New York 5 N. Y.

a beautiful piano with a magnificent tone

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

ONE name quality price

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____

Zone No. ____ State_____ J-3J

You'll always love your Sweetheart

ROOS Sweetheart CEDAR CHESTS

On your Courtship Days for its promise of things to come

On your Wedding Day for its expression of hopes fulfilled

HERE is a chest of dreams holding all the gay things of star-wishing days, the treasured things of wedding-bell time. With each anniversary it becomes more cherished, more important as a symbol of achievement and happy living.

A moth-proof, red cedar chest to keep lovely woolens and linens always safe.

On your Anniversaries for its treasure of cherished memories

A No. 5009—Modern Genuine Walnut Chest with Utility Tray

B No. 8037—Modern Walnut Waterfall Chest with DeLuxe Tray

C No. 4004—18th Century Mahogany Hi-Boy Chest

Descriptive booklet free on request

ROOS Sweetheart Cedar Chests

ED ROOS COMPANY OF FOREST PARK 2, ILLINOIS

Charles took a fountain pen from his inside pocket and tore a leaf from the back of his small black notebook.

"She's a very nice little number," Cliff Dunbarton said. "Her name is Sherrill or Merrill or something, and I never would have met her if I hadn't come here. She lives in that new development. What is it? Something about a tree."

"Every new development is something about a tree," Charles said.

Cliff Dunbarton placed the notebook page against the wall and began writing slowly. "Bea Merrill. She asked me to call her Bea. I wish I knew what her husband's name was. She lives in that new, young-executive development. I remember the name now. Sycamore Park."

"That's right," Charles said. "She's Mrs. Tom Merrill."

"How do you know?"

"Because I live there. I live in Sycamore Park."

"That's right. Of course you do. You're the only person I've ever heard of who lives there."

"Except Bea," Charles said.

"Except Bea." Cliff Dunbarton began to laugh. "Well, thanks for the pen, Charley, and don't let the sycamores fall on you."

When Charles stepped out of the coatroom, though he felt tired he knew he ought to dance, being a member of the House Committee. His ear for music was bad, and in spite of having gone once furtively for a course of lessons at the Arthur Murray studio, he had never developed an interesting technique, nor had he ever entirely mastered that basic Arthur Murray step, and he always had a feeling that he was back at his senior-high-school dance at Clyde or at a Dartmouth prom. Nevertheless, he could see it was a good Tuesday-night party, with a big enough crowd to make it more than break even financially. The tables had been cleared away from the big room, and Sol Blatz and His Orchestra, from Stamford, were playing in one corner.

The world is not unkind, and reprobates are worse than their reputations.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: Afterthoughts (Harcourt, Brace & Co., Inc.).

He saw Mr. Forbush dancing with Dotty Jack—the Jacks who had bought the stucco house, the one that had been hard to sell, near the entrance to Sycamore Park. Then he saw Nancy. She was dancing with Cyril Renard, who sold life insurance downtown. Charles edged his way carefully across the floor and Nancy saw him and smiled.

"Hello, Cyril," Charles said. "I'm going to take Nancy off your hands."

"Don't put it that way," Cyril said. "Nancy and I were talking about you and education. Where's Bill going to college?"

CHARLES knew that Cyril was thinking of one of those educational policies which would both send the children to a proper school and you to a hospital if you needed it.

"Charley, you and I ought to have a long talk sometime," Cyril said.

"All right," Charles answered. "Sometime, Cyril." He put his arm hastily around Nancy and began to dance.

"Thank goodness you've come. I've been dancing with him for ages," Nancy said, and then she gave him a little squeeze. "Is there any news?"

"Nothing much," Charles said. "I can't talk about it here, Nancy."

"What have you been doing all day?"

"I was stuck in the Whitakers' apartment."

"Oh," Nancy said, "the Whitakers. Did anything else happen?"

He knew he would have to tell her about Clyde and that he was going away tomorrow, but he did not want to tell her then, to the sound of Mr. Blatz and the saxophone.

"Did you say anything to Tony Burton?" Nancy asked.

"No," Charles said, "not exactly."

"How do you mean, not exactly?"

"What I say. Not exactly."

"Roger Blakesley's here tonight. Have you seen him?"

"No, but I've seen him all day."

"He looks exuberant."

"Oh," Charles said, "does he?"

"You look a little tired, darling."

"Well, I am tired."

"Did the children get you your supper?"

There was no time to answer. Someone had clapped him on the shoulder and they separated. It was Christopher DeMille, who lived two doors away from them and who wrote advertising copy.

"Hello, beautiful," Christopher said. "Are you two quarreling?"

"No," Nancy said. "We're having a second honeymoon."

"You ought to see Bess and me," Christopher said. "Bess and I always get fighting here on Tuesday nights. There's something in the atmosphere."

Charles moved away carefully across the dance floor. He could not imagine why anyone would think that he and Nancy had been quarreling.

THEN Charles danced with Bea Merrill. Even though he did not enjoy dancing, this was always something of an adventure—not that it was not expected of him and other husbands, because of poor Tom Merrill. Charles had observed that everyone was beginning to refer to Bea's husband as "poor Tom," and this had no reference to his financial status, because he was doing very well. Instead it must have arisen from the rumor that the Merrills were not getting on, and of course this was Bea's fault and not poor Tom's. Other wives were beginning to check over afterward whose husbands had danced with Bea—not that anyone was told not to dance with her, as Bea was part of the crowd and no one wanted to hurt poor Tom. Besides, most of those stories about Bea, other wives said when they got together, were spiteful stories invented by jealous people, and certainly they were not jealous of poor Bea. Why should anyone be jealous of a kind-hearted, restless little thing with a high voice who did not know what she wanted? It was true there was a story about Bea and a man, a house guest of the Kendricks', from New York, in poor Tom's coupé at the Labor Day dance, but no one was quite sure whether it had been Bea or that girl who had come from Old Lyme who looked like Bea. There was also the story about Bea diving into the swimming pool without a stitch on, not a stitch, but Bea herself had said that it had just been a hot summer night and she had just taken off her dress and nothing else—she was more covered than if she had worn a two-piece bathing suit. She hadn't even taken off her nylons. Still, it was always an adventure, a slight step into the unknown, to dance with Bea.

"Hello, darling," Bea said. "Have you read any good books lately?"

"I'm trying to read one called Peace of Mind," Charles said, "but I don't seem to be getting very far with it."

"You're just like Tom." Then the music stopped. "Let's get out of here. Let's go outside."

This was not desirable, because everyone always noticed who Bea's partner was when she left the dance floor. True, it was too cool outside to sit down and there were other couples on the terrace, too, but when Bea took his arm he knew that everyone was looking.

"Where's Tom keeping himself tonight?" Charles asked.

"Where he usually is. In the office, working late, darling."

"I was late too."

"Yes. Well, here we are." Charles did not answer. It was obvious that they were out on the terrace. "Darling, are you bored?" Bea asked.

"Why, no," Charles said, "of course I'm not."

"Well, I am."

"Never mind," Charles said, and he laughed. "In just a minute or two the music will be going around again."

(Continued on Page 142)

PEPPERELL
COLORED MUSLIN SHEETS

At this low price, you can afford to give several sets. She'll bless you every time she uses these pretty, long-wearing muslins!

XURY MUSLINS
*Colored sheets, about $3.89 ea.—pillowcases $1.00
ILITY MUSLINS
*Colored sheets, about $2.98 ea.—pillowcases $.80

PEPPERELL
WHITE MUSLIN SHEETS

The finest textured muslins you can buy . . . soft, sturdy, closely woven for comfort with long wear. Truly an outstanding gift value!

LUXURY MUSLINS
*White sheets, about $3.19 ea.—pillowcases $.80
UTILITY MUSLINS
*White sheets, about $2.69 ea.—pillowcases $.69

PEPPERELL PEERESS PERCALE SHEETS

The luxury sheets. Finest "trousseau" ture, 204 threads of full-combed yarn square inch. We believe you can't buy exquisite American percales!

White sheets, about $4.95 ea.—pi
Colored, scalloped, 42 x 2 [illegible] about $

These Lovely Pepperell Sheets in White AND Five "Personality Colors"

PEPPERELL PERCALE SHEETS

Just what she wants! Next best to Peere cale, these lovely real percales are closely for delightful smoothness and durability

White sheets, about $3.39 ea.—pillowcases $.89
Colored sheets, about $3.98 ea.—pillowcases $1.

ASK YOUR FAVORITE Christmas Store FOR PEPPERELLS...THE BEAUTIFUL SHEETS WITH THE WEAR WOVEN I

PEPPERELL CRIB BLANKETS

Every baby needs one! And Pepperell, one of the largest manufacturers of crib blankets, offers you a delightful selection of designs, materials, prices. about $.49 to $4.95

PEPPERELL PEERESS PILLOWCASES

So new, so charming! Pillowcases woven of exquisite all-combed yarns—white, bordered with her favorite "personality color."

*2 pillowcases, colored hems, boxed, about $2.98

*Approximate prices for popular sizes—slightly higher in various localities

PEPPERELL GLOLON AND WARMLON BLANKET

Luxurious, extra-warm blankets—50% 50% virgin wool. Bound in acetate rayo Blue, dusty rose, green, cedar, peach, white—and wonderful values at this thrift

Size [illegible] about $8.95

PEPPERELL Sheets and Blankets

this new kind of vacuum that has

FILTER QUEEN

America's Bagless Cleaner

empties like a wastebasket

No bag on a stick! No bag in a tank! No bag at all! Just a simple disposable paper filter that traps dirt in the large metal container! It's new! It's wonderful! See it at your dealers!

cleans easier... faster... helps safeguard health!

More powerful to help you clean easier . . faster. Write for full details.

ACCEPTED BY EXPERTS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Advertised in American Medical Association Publications

Tested and Commended Parents' Magazine

FREE

HEALTH-MOR, INC.
203 N. Wabash Ave.
Chicago 1, Ill

Send me your picture story of the amazing new FILTER QUEEN vacuum and the name of my nearest dealer.

NAME _____

Address _____

State _____

(Continued from Page 140)

"And it bores me to think of it," Bea said. "Everything goes around, right back to the same thing. Why can't you and I talk to each other like two sensible people? I don't mean about sex. You don't have that effect on me." Her voice had a rasping quality that could carry into out-of-the-way corners, and tomorrow they would be saying that he and Bea Merrill had been talking about sex while poor Tom was working late.

"All right, Bea," he said. "Just remember I didn't bring it up."

Then Bea began to laugh. "I don't have to remember. Darling, I don't suppose you've noticed, I don't suppose you've ever seen, the efforts I've made for years to make you bring it up."

That was why it was an adventure to dance with Bea Merrill. He could not very well help thinking of Bea Merrill in the coupé on Labor Day and of Bea Merrill in the pool.

"Why, Bea," he said, "don't give up. Please try again sometime."

"For years and years," Bea said. "You're completely unassailable, darling, but then it wouldn't work anyway, would it? Our loving friends here surround us with chastity."

"What?" Charles said. "How do you mean, with chastity?"

"You know what I mean," Bea answered. Her voice carried perfectly and he noticed that couples around them had stopped to listen unobtrusively. "This is the chastest place I know, but that isn't what I'm talking about."

"Well, what are you talking about?"

"I'm talking about you and me. Do we really know each other?"

It was one of those conversations to which Bea was growing addicted lately, and he wished that the music would start. "Why, you and Tom and Nancy and I have seen quite a lot of each other," he said.

"But do we know each other? Does anybody around here really know anybody else? I don't know Tom. I don't know Tom at all."

Charles began to feel very much like Tom. "Listen, Bea," he said, "perhaps you're expecting too much, perhaps nobody does know anyone else so very well."

"But, darling," Bea said, "didn't there use to be a time ——"

The music started and Charles was very glad of it, and he was glad, too, that Cliff Dunbarton had seen them and was hurrying toward them.

"Have you two about finished?" Cliff asked.

"Why, yes," Charles said. "We were talking about knowing people, and chastity."

"Well, let's dance," Cliff said, "in a chaste way."

CHARLES watched them move toward the dance floor. It was true, what she had said, that they all knew a lot about one another, yet very few of them really knew one another.

He would have to dance at least once more. Considering everything, it would be advisable to dance with Molly Blakesley. There would be no brisk innuendoes about sex when he danced with Molly, no disturbing mental pictures.

Roger had wooed and won Molly in Cambridge, Massachusetts, while he was a student at the Harvard School of Business Administration. She was the daughter of a Harvard Business School professor, had gone to a Cambridge progressive school, and was finishing her junior year at Radcliffe. She had been interested in the New Deal in those days and was writing a thesis on the Tennessee Valley Authority, a preparation which did not help her at those parties at Oak Knoll. Charles had thought of her first only as a plump, earnest girl with glasses, and once he had made a particular effort to be kind to her, but now kindness was no longer necessary. Instead it seemed to him that of late Molly was the one who was being kind to him. Molly had made what she herself would have called a beautiful adjustment. She had given up long ago going to Boston for her clothes, and Henri in New York looked after her hair, and she wore her glasses now only for reading. She specialized in Japanese iris and columbines in her little back garden at Sycamore Park, but she did not call them iris and columbine. To Molly they were I. kaempferi and Aquilegia.

The trouble with dancing with Molly Blakesley was that they each knew too well what the other was thinking.

"Charley," Molly said, "do you know what Roger was saying the other night, when we were just alone in the kitchen? We were talking about you and Nancy, and Roger was saying how fond everyone is of you at the bank, and he was saying how wonderful it was that we were all such good friends and he hoped we always would stay friends, no matter what happens. You know what I mean. It's so embarrassing, isn't it?"

"It needn't be embarrassing," Charles said. "Roger and I are grown up. We can handle anything that happens."

"You know"—Molly spoke more quickly—"I think the war did you a lot of good, Charley. Roger thinks so too."

Charles did not answer. It was kind of her to say it, but he wished that he was not always searching for hidden meanings when he listened to Molly Blakesley.

"How lovely Nancy looks," Molly said. "She always looks lovely in the simplest dress. That's what Roger always says. How are the children, Charley?"

"Why, they're pretty well," Charles answered, "except they keep turning on the radio."

"Do you know what Roger said the other day? He's so sentimental, sometimes. He said he wished they'd call him Uncle Roger."

He was balancing Molly's kindness against the possibility that she had heard something which he had not heard about the bank, and Owen Martin cut in before he could answer. Neighbors always had to dance with neighbors' wives.

"I'll see you later, Charley," Molly called. "Perhaps we can do something Sunday. Roger would love it if we could."

It was late enough so that no one would say they were leaving early, and it was early enough so that no one would say the Grays were always up late at parties. It was, in fact, the right psychological moment for going home, and Nancy was waiting for him, because, as Nancy often said, she had been a working girl herself. It did not take Nancy half a minute to get her wraps on, and she was even waiting at the steps of the club when he drove there from the parking space.

"Move over. I'll drive," Nancy said. All he had to do was to thank her and to feel pleased that she not only knew he was tired but cared about it.

"These parties," he said, "sometimes they're good and sometimes they're bad. Did you have a good time, Nance?"

"Well, yes, in a sort of long-term way."

"How do you mean, a long-term way?"

"You know. It's what I've told you before. I like feeling we belong somewhere. You know it's what I've always wanted."

"Well, so do I. So does everyone."

Nancy knew every turn on the road home, and she took each turn as unconsciously as a taxi driver.

"What did you do all day?" Charles asked.

There was a slight pause before she answered. "I've had a good day, but you wouldn't understand why. It's partly being a woman. I took the car to the Acme place and got the choke fixed. Do you notice the engine goes better?"

"That's right. I notice now."

"THEN I went to the supermarket and bought some corned beef. Then I left Bill's shoes at that place below the drugstore, that new Italian place. Then I left that book of yours at the lending library. Then I came back and did the breakfast dishes. Then the man came to fix the unit in the stove, and while he was doing it the men came to wax the floor in the living room. I had to be there to see that they put everything back right. Then I went upstairs and made the beds and counted the laundry. Then I went over and had lunch with Polly Martin and helped her run up some new curtains, because she's going to lend me her sewing machine. I don't know why Polly wants everything in chintz—curtains, dresses, everything. Then I came back and worked on the bills."

"How were they?"

"They were terrible. There were two mistakes again on the Thaxter bill—always plus mistakes, never minus. I called him up about it, and then Bill and I glued the back of your old chair in the hall and then I read to Evelyn for a while."

"What did you read her?"

"You'd be surprised. I read her Plutarch. Then there was their supper, and the Martins called and we all went over to the club. I knew it wouldn't sound like much if I tried to tell it, but it was a very nice day."

"I'm glad you liked it," Charles said, "but I don't see why."

They had passed through the gates of Sycamore Park, up the blue gravel of their own short drive, and the car had stopped.

"I'll tell you why;" Nancy said. "Because I'm married to a damn nice man. That's the only possible reason I can think of. Now get out and open the garage door and don't jerk at it."

That door had never worked well in wet weather. Charles opened it carefully and

(Continued on Page 144)

"Three lamb chops, please—and wrap it as a gift."

WHERE IS THE MAN (OR WOMAN) WHO WOULDN'T PAY 1½¢ FOR LUXURY REST TONIGHT?

1. Wouldn't it be wonderful to stretch out your tired body tonight and feel the day's tension unravel . . . feel every weary bone and muscle almost murmur "Thanks!"

Many, many people get this luxury rest every night with Beautyrest.

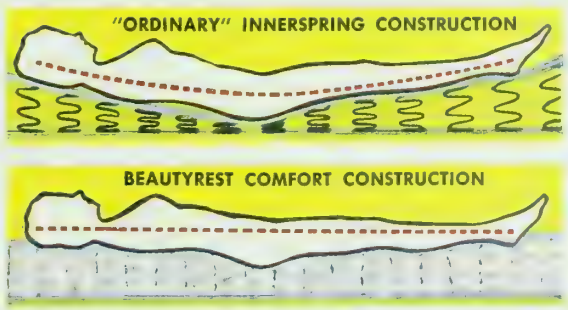
And it doesn't cost them a "luxury price!"



Beautyrest, you know, is guaranteed for ten years.

Price: $59.50. That's only a tiny fraction more than 1½¢ a night.

Why not start your first ten years of Beautyrest luxury rest tonight—or some night soon!

2. Beautyrest's secret. See how each Beautyrest spring is individually pocketed. Glass of water stays upright, as hand presses surrounding springs. That's because each spring acts independently. Can't pull each other out of position. Can't form hollows.

3. Here's Proof that Beautyrest gives better support than "ordinary" innerspring mattresses. Top picture: Notice sag as wired-together springs pull each other down. Bottom picture: See how Beautyrest's 837 coil springs "give" in all the right places!

Lasts over twice as long as the next best mattress tested. Every month, the United States Testing Co., Inc. Laboratories test mattresses for durability. Note this: Beautyrest took 740,774 more poundings than any other mattress tested.

• • •

No-sag edges and pre-built borders will last for the life of your Beautyrest. Springs extend to edge and are attached to border, giving you mid-mattress comfort right out to the edges. Sturdiest fabrics. Hand-tailoring. 8 ventilators for fresher, cleaner interior. Turn only once or twice a season.

• • •

Give a Beautyrest this Christmas! And you give ten wonderful years of "luxury rest" to that important someone on your Christmas list. Your dealer has Simmons gift certificates. P.S.: A Beautyrest box spring is the perfect companion gift for a Beautyrest mattress.

Only SIMMONS makes BEAUTYREST*

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS—the greatest name in bedding: Hide-A-Bed—the sofa that doubles as an "extra bedroom." Electronic Blanket—a good defense against colds. Deepsleep Mattress—a fine Simmons mattress at a lower price. Babybeauty Crib Mattress—made to doctors' specifications. Ace Spring—the modern spring for the modern mattress.

*TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE ©1948 SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART CHICAGO, ILL.

(Continued from Page 142)

stood holding it so that it would not swing to while Nancy drove the car inside, close to the garden tools, and shut off the lights. Then she was beside him in the dark.

"And now you can give me a kiss," she said.

Only the light at the top of the stairs was lighted, but the switch was just beside the door. There was a smell of fresh floor wax from the living room, and a moist smell in the dining room from Nancy's potted plants.

"Darling," Nancy said, "isn't it a lovely house?"

"Yes, it's a swell house," Charles said.

Nancy had taken off her evening wrap and was straightening her hair by the mirror. "And now come in and look at the living-room floor," she said. "Do you want a glass of milk before you go to bed?"

The last thing he wanted was a glass of milk, but then Nancy had known that he had taken a drink after dinner. The living room was always too neat for him ever to feel at home in it. The logs in the fireplace had a little paper fan beneath them, ready for a match, but the fire was too beautifully constructed for him to want to disturb the logs by lighting them. Everything was dusted, every ornament on the tables was exactly where it should be.

"We ought to use this room more, shouldn't we?" Nancy said. "I wonder why we don't."

"That's easy," Charles said. "Because we're afraid of it."

"Well, let's not be afraid of it. Charley, take off your coat and sit down on the sofa." Nancy kicked off her slippers. "Don't say we're afraid of this room. I don't like it."

"Why not?" Charles asked.

"Because I don't like being afraid." She looked as though she were startled by those last words. She had a blank, embarrassed, provoked expression and she caught herself up quickly before he had a chance to answer. "I don't mean that I'm afraid of anything. I only mean I don't like the idea. You know what I mean."

Every word only made a top-heavy structure destined eventually for a clumsy fall. It was like the match game so popular before the war, that late-evening pastime in which you laid a match over the mouth of the bottle and then your opponent laid one beside it, and so it went until there was a structure of matches rising in the air. The loser was the one who put on the last match and tipped it over. Nancy had put on the last match. Now that the truth was there, now that the thing was there in the living room—the thing of which neither of them had spoken—it was a relief, in a way.

"Nance," Charles said, "we didn't use to be afraid."

SHE was sitting opposite him, very straight on one of those small upholstered chairs, just the way she had been sitting the day he had first seen her. "Oh, are you afraid too?" she asked, and though his instinct was already preparing him to answer that of course he was not, he found himself nodding slowly. "Well, you might have told me," Nancy said.

"It's all relative, you know, Nance," he said.

"What's relative?" She spoke impatiently.

"The more you get, the more afraid you get. That's all I mean. Maybe fear's what makes the world go round."

"Not love?" Nancy said, and she tilted her head sideways. "I used to hear that it was love."

It reminded him of the first night he had taken Nancy anywhere, when they were both obviously trying to impress each other. It was almost like falling in love, an unfamiliar sensation now—but they were talking about fear.

"Of course," Charles said. "Everyone's afraid of something—afraid of living, afraid of dying. Maybe it's better than being afraid of losing money. That's what the boys are afraid of downtown. Do you know what I wish?"

"What?"

"I wish we weren't always being pushed around. I'd like for once in my life to be able to tell someone to go to hell."

She was smiling at him as he had seen her smile at Bill when he had asked for an impossible Christmas present. "Darling," she said, "basically you have the most expensive tastes. You'd better just tell me to go to hell, if you want to, and let it go at that."

"All right, but it isn't the same thing, is it?"

"Maybe it isn't, but I'm awfully glad we're afraid of the same thing. It's healthy to have things in common. I'm awfully glad we're in the same boat, darling."

"There's something else I've got to tell you. I'm taking the plane to Boston first thing in the morning. I'm going up to Clyde for a day or two on business for the bank."

HE saw Nancy's lips tighten. "How did Clyde get into it?" she asked.

"It's funny the way things happen," he began. "When I got up this morning it was raining, do you remember? I looked out the window at the trees. They reminded me of Clyde. When I came to the bank, a man came in to see me and who do you think it was? I didn't recognize him at first. It was Malcolm Bryant."

"Oh," Nancy said. "You used to talk about him quite a lot once."

"That's the one. He wanted to marry Jessica Lovell once," Charles told her.

"Oh," Nancy said. "I always thought you were the one who wanted to marry Jessica Lovell." She said it in a very slow, disinterested way, as though Jessica Lovell bored her.

Charles spoke more loudly so that Nancy could not interrupt. "Then I went to the morning meeting, in the depositors' room downstairs by the vault."

At last he was back where he wanted to be, telling her the details of that meeting and about the collateral on the loan and the stock in that company in Clyde. Then he told about Tony Burton's having called him later, and it was a relief to go into it fully. He never should have mentioned Jessica Lovell. Nancy was sitting up straight again, following every word.

"So you've got to go away for a day or two right now?" she asked. "At just this time?"

"Yes, it looks that way."

"Roger Blakesley fixed it, didn't he?" Nancy asked.

"Yes, it looks that way."

"Why didn't you do anything about it? Why didn't you ask them to send someone else?"

"I thought of it, but I think that anything I might have said would have made it worse. You'd have thought so too."

"If I'd been there, I'd have done something," Nancy said. "Something. Anything."

"No," Charles told her, "you just think so because you're here. If you'd been there, you'd have let it go. Besides"—he stopped and stared at the design on the Islamic rug, no animals, nothing but symbols—"I don't think it makes much difference. I think Tony Burton's about made up his mind which of us he wants."

Nancy sighed. "Charley, what'll you do if he takes Roger?"

"Let's not think about it now." But of course both of them were thinking about it now.

"Charley," Nancy said, "if you'd ever done something about investing for yourself instead of for other people ——"

"Nance, you know very well," he answered, "you don't do that when you're working for a bank."

Nancy stood up. "Well," she said, "I guess we'd better go to bed."

Charles stood up too. "You go ahead. I'll be up in a few minutes. Good night, Nance."

Character may be manifested in the great moments, but it is made in the small ones. —PHILLIPS BROOKS.

(Continued on Page 147)

Oh so PRETTY... oh what a PITY!

Somebody's gotten a cotton that shrinks . . .

Which is an absurd, ridiculous, practically prehistoric thing to do in the age of the "Sanforized" trade-mark.

And it is equally absurd, ridiculous, etc., ever to take anybody's word that it's a "Sanforized" dress unless you see that "Sanforized" trade-mark on the label with your own two eyes!

Make sure you see that trade-mark before you buy. It's your safe, certain, utterly unquestionable guide to washables that just can't lose their looks to shrinkage in a century of soap-and-water Mondays.

The style will never shrink away from the dress with "Sanforized" on the label!

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ® MARK

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

"WHOA! HERE'S WHERE WE DO OUR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING!"

Make the SINGER SEWING CENTER your shopping center! Handsome SINGER* Sewing Machines, electrical appliances, sewing boxes, scissor sets, and other wonderful gifts!

Year-round usefuls—both made by SINGER! Room Heater circulates warm air or cool at the flick of a switch. Ribbonaire no-draft Fan is safe, silent, vibrationless.

Last word in vacuum cleaners—new SINGER upright! A beauty with automatic cord wind, midway carrying handle. Hangs in closet. Brush adjusts automatically to rug. Twin fans give extra power. Also: SINGER* Hand Cleaner for upholstery and dusting.

SINGER* Electric Irons are stan outs under the tree! New automat model cuts ironing time. Has Fab Dial, stay-cool handle. Folding iron perfect for fine pieces and travel.

Sewing cabinet with style! Keeps a lady's notions neat and handy. Doubles as night stand or end table, too. SINGER also has other fine period and modern designs.

Always the best gift of all—a beautiful SINGER Sewing Machine! De luxe desk model has matching stool. Many other fine styles also available. Select yours now! Remember: SINGER sells its Sewing Machines and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window.

SINGER Featherweight Portable, an 11-pound wonder that does work of a full-size machine! Stitches forward or backward. Has handy carrying case. Always a favorite, so order well in advance.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U. S. A. 1948, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

(Continued from Page 144)

Then after he had kissed her, she buried r head on his shoulder. She made no sound, ut he knew she was crying and it always ve him a completely helpless feeling when e cried.

"Don't, Nance," he said. "The show isn't er."

"I'm sorry, Charley. I'm all right now. ou always hated having me cry, didn't ou?"

"Yes. Go on up to bed, Nance. I'll be up just a minute."

"Are you sorry you married me?"

"No, of course not," he told her. "It's een swell."

"I suppose I sort of made you marry me," Nancy said.

"Why, Nance. I never noticed that you id."

"Are you sorry we had the children?"

"No, of course I'm not."

"They were my idea more than yours. Are ou sorry we bought the house?"

"Listen, Nance, it happened, like the chil- ren. Now go on up and go to sleep. I'll be p in just a minute."

"What are you going to do? Are you going o sit here and worry?"

"No, I'm not. I'm not sleepy. I'm going to ead for a little while."

"Don't be long," Nancy said. "I won't be ible to get to sleep till you come up."

Yankee Persepolis, A Social Survey was ying just where he had left it on the table in he hall. As Nancy went upstairs, he picked t up because it occurred to him that, con- sidering his mood, something absolutely new was better to read than something he had ead before.

All he could do was recognize his present state of mind as a definite malady like a cold or a fever and to tell himself that it would pass. He knew the symptoms well enough. It was also time to consider the dangers of in- heritance, and to remember his father.

"Charley," he could hear his mother say- ing, "don't bother him. He's in one of his spells again."

Charles himself had never particularly no- ticed his father's spells until the summer of 1916, but they must have been chronic be- cause Sam spoke of them as though they had been going on a long time.

There was always a brittle atmosphere in the house on those occasions. His father was usually in his room with his books on the sec- ond floor and the door would be locked. His mother and Dorothea would be talking in whispers in the kitchen. There used to be a tradition that everyone should ignore those periods of dejection and all the family did, except Sam when he was alive. Sam never had any patience with them.

"We all know what the Old Man was do- ing up in Boston," Sam had told him once, "and now he wants us to be sorry for him. He ought to have a good shoot in the tail."

Sam was the only one who said such things, and Charles believed him and he still could not escape that old impression that Sam had been a great man, although Sam could have been only about seventeen at the time.

"You can always tell when it's coming," Sam used to say. "It goes in a circle. It starts as soon as he gets a check."

Their Aunt Mathilda Gray's estate was being settled in 1916, and whenever a parcel of her real estate was sold, John Gray would get a check in the mail from Mr. Blashfield, the executor. First he would open the letter and look at the check, and then he would go down to the bank and deposit it in his special account, and then for a while a pleasant wave of prosperity descended on the house- hold. He would come home each evening with a copy of the Boston Evening Transcript and everyone would watch him as he sat in the parlor after supper reading the Tran- script's financial page. Perhaps a week later he would say that he was going to take a day off and go up to Boston.

When he came back from the day in Bos- ton, he was invariably exuberant. He usually returned with a box of candy and some mag- azines, and generally he smelled strongly of bay rum, showing that he had been to the barbershop at the Parker House. Then he would begin to discuss scholarly subjects, especially the London of Samuel Johnson. You could never say that John Gray was not industrious or erudite. He could quote pages of Boswell, fitting them aptly into every oc- casion.

"The Old Man's off again," Sam used to say. "You can tell it as soon as he starts on Mrs. Thrale."

But it was not always a bad time at all when the Old Man was off again. It was a cultivated household for a while, after John Gray got back from Boston. There was no doubt that he was a delightful man.

"Your father might have been anything," his mother used to say, "anything."

The next week he would take another day off and go to Boston. This time he would return with a box of cigars and a few French novels. It was ridiculous for Malcolm Bryant to have placed them in the lower-upper class. He should have seen John Gray when his brown mustache, usually dejected and drooping, was clipped like a British colonel's and when he had a new suit from Dunn's.

THE MEMORY LINGERS ON

A jolly good way to remember your friends and relatives this Christmas is to send them JOURNAL gift subscriptions. They are easy to order. They keep on reminding. You can send a full year of genuine pleasure for only $3. And each gift will be announced over your name with a rich, attractively colored card, timed to arrive in the Christmas mail.

A handy order form is in nearly every copy of this issue.

Sam used to say, "Now he's upstairs jug- gling figures. He must be doing pretty well. Why doesn't the damn fool ever stop?"

But of course he never stopped. There would always be the last trip in the cycle, when John Gray came home from Boston with nothing to say at all. There would be a discreet silence in the house. There was noth- ing in the world quite like those silences. . . .

The library where Charles was sitting gave him that sense of not belonging any- where. His mouth felt dry and his forehead felt moist and he was terribly alone.

"Charley." It was Nancy calling softly from the top of the stairs so as not to wake the children. "Charley, aren't you coming up to bed?"

"Yes, in just a little while, Nance." He opened the book he was holding.

Malcolm Bryant and his father had taken to each other from the very beginning and when Malcolm began dropping in at Spruce Street in the evenings years ago, Charles' mother was delighted. It was so good for father, she said, to talk with an intelligent young man who could share father's inter- ests.

But now when he ran through the pages of Yankee Persepolis, he began to understand why Malcolm had been a Johnson addict and he understood at last what Malcolm had seen in his father. Malcolm had been at- tracted to John Gray not as an individual but as a social entity, an odd piece which he was trying to fit into the social puzzle of Clyde, which had produced and toler- ated him.

All at once it occurred to Charles that he was doing right now what his father had often succeeded in doing so magnificently. He was trying to forget the present by im- mersing himself in something else, by striv- ing to identify himself with someone else. Instead of Samuel Johnson, he was using Malcolm Bryant. He did not care about Malcolm's ideas or his social worker's patter in themselves, except in so far as they took him away from his own ideas.

He was examining a chapter heading, "The Concepts Behind This Survey." The words were as heavy as Johnson's words, without any of their waxy Chippendale polish.

"Typical of a lower-upper family," Charles read again, "are the Henry Smiths— father, mother, son and daughter. Like other lower-upper families, they dwell on a side street ('side streeters'), yet are received on Mason Street. Mr. Smith, with investment interests in Boston ——"

"Charley." It was Nancy calling again from the top of the stairs. "Aren't you ever coming to bed?"

"All right," Charles called back. "I'll be up in just a minute."

"What are you doing down there?"

"I'm reading."

His voice and Nancy's were only like the voices in a chorus. The interruption had not disturbed him.

"An upper-upper class family," he was reading as he spoke, "may be typified by the Johnsons, who live on the upper side of Mason Street in one of those fine, three- storied Federalist houses, capped by the deli- cate balustrade of the widow's or captain's walk. Mr. Johnson, a widower, suave and gracious, descendant of shipowners in the late eighteenth century, is a fitting head for the Johnson clan. Jacinth, his lovely only daughter, assisted by a maiden aunt, Miss Johnson, is eminently suited to give the family ritual an added charm. Her vivacity never quite conceals her seriousness or the impact of her social personality."

Yes, Malcolm Bryant had felt the impact of Jessica Lovell's social personality. He had called her Jacinth instead of Mary or Molly or Miss X. In Malcolm's memory, Jessica was still there in the hallway, looking him straight in the eyes. She would never be Des- demona again and Malcolm would never be Othello, speaking of the habits of the Aus- tralian blackfellows and the Zambesis or about that trip he would take someday to the Orinoco.

"In the rear of the house," Charles was reading, "on a gentle slope rises the hundred- and-fifty-year-old Johnson formal garden, a verdant shrine of ancestor worship in itself, crowned by a delicate latticed summerhouse known as a gazebo."

Malcolm Bryant would never sit in that gazebo again, but then neither would Charles Gray. The words were grotesque, the adjec- tives were horrible, but they expressed a sentiment.

"Charley." It was Nancy again. She was standing in the doorway in her quilted-silk wrapper. "It's two o'clock." Her tone was definite, telling him that really this nonsense must stop, and he was very glad that she was there.

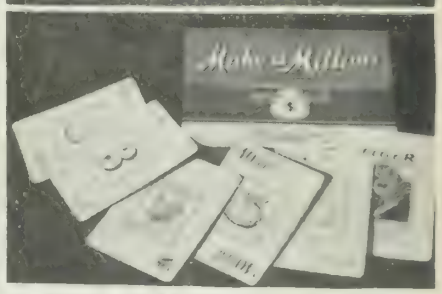
"All right," he said. "All right, Nance."

"Come on," Nance said, "put out the light."

When he pulled off the light by the chair everything was pitch black for a second and then he saw her shadow against the dim light from the hall.

"The Martins will think we've been hav- ing a fight," Nancy said, "with a light on downstairs at two in the morning."

"All right, Nance," he said, and he put his arm around her and she raised her hand and touched his cheek.



"You shaved before the dance, didn't you? At least you won't need to shave again in the morning. If you're going to take that plane, I'll drive you to LaGuardia."

"It's a pretty long way," Charles said.

"That's all right," Nancy said. "I'm going to miss you."

(To be Continued)

FAMOUS PARKER GAMES

MAKE-A-MILLION — A surprising, unique game with quick climaxes and exciting play from beginning to end. Thousands of families consider MAKE-A-MILLION the most thrilling of card games. Everybody likes it! Christmas stocks are low, order today! 75c

POPEYE'S GAME — NEW 1948 — A gay party game which amuses all ages especial- ly the youngsters. Quick action throughout featuring the favorites Popeye, Olive Oyl, Wimpy and Swee' Pea. Merry fun! $2.00

MONOPOLY — Most popular of the great Standard Board games. A world wide favorite! Special attention is called to the famous White Box Set with Grand Hotels, removable Bank Tray, etc. $3.50

SORRY — One of the best of board games. Delightfully intriguing. $2.00

CAMELOT — A far better game than Checkers. Easily learned, exciting. Gray- box set $1.50; Sets with ivoroid playing pieces $5.00.

By the makers of ROOK, FLINCH, POLLYANNA, CHILDREN'S HOUR, PIT, FINANCE, DIG, PLAZA (NEW), RUDOLPH (NEW), TOURING, RICH UNCLE, WITS END (NEW), PROFITY, ETC.

AT ALL DEALERS or by mail from Salem

PARKER BROTHERS INC.
SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK • CHICAGO • LONDON

Jiminy Christmas! What a gift!

THE GENERAL ELECTRIC SPACE MAKER REFRIGERATOR

Model NF-8 illustrated. Features include butter conditioner, extra-deep meat drawer and two vegetable drawers, large freezer compartment, utility basket.

SOME MEN may think a refrigerator is a prosaic and unsentimental gift for a wife to get at Christmas time.

But don't you believe it! You haven't seen how a woman's eyes light up the first time she sees a General Electric Space Maker actually in place in her own kitchen!

You haven't seen her gloat over the amazing amount of room inside . . . over all the many conveniences and advantages of this really great refrigerator!

And, when you give a General Electric Space Maker, you can count on your wife's thankfulness for choosing a refrigerator she knows she can count on for years and years of faithful service.

For General Electric refrigerators have set a really remarkable record for dependability over the years.

They're equipped with the famous sealed-in G-E refrigerating system. Airtight and oiltight, this superb mechanism is unsurpassed for reliable, economical operation.

See these magnificent, new Space Makers today at your General Electric retailer's. He has both 8-cubic-foot and 10-cubic-foot models for you to choose from. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

More than 1,700,000 refrigerators in service 10 years or longer

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Maine Pioneers

The Stanley Crawfords, of Old Town: Meet a roving, rambunctious family with sky-high dreams who've settled down to earth in a log cabin.

by SARA LAMPORT

After pitching tents and parking trailers, following the good war jobs from coast to coast, Stan, Pat and her mother work out a budget for stability.

PAT CRAWFORD, at 28, is the kind of mother who copes lightheartedly with five youngsters and a brand-new baby in a chilly log cabin lost in the Maine woods. The family is minus plumbing, a decent stove, hot water, a bathtub, a car that works, a phone, steam heat, help, a regular grocery allowance. There isn't an ounce of self-pity to the seven-member clan, however. "I guess it's the kids who are important," Pat says.

Since their marriage, nine years ago, Stan, an insulation salesman, and Pat Crawford have uprooted thirty-two times, and produced six little flaxen-haired girls. Their family has slept in trailer parks, tents in the field, winterized summer bungalows, farms, rooming houses, above a vegetable store, and in an undertaker's Packard. The only constant, if you traced the cross-country treks of the Crawfords, was Medford, Massachusetts, and the rooming house Pat's mother owns there.

Mrs. Golda Harris, Pat's mother, looks like a radiant prototype of the movie grandmother: gleaming white curls piled high, a buoyant manner, a contagious smile. Time and again she has sheltered the Crawford brood, a cheerful obbligato in their nomad life.

"We always wound up at mum's," Pat recalls, "for every child, and sometimes in between."

"That's all I hold a roof for," says Mrs. Harris, who manages to room eleven, feed five, sleeps herself in "whatever happens to be free," and is a stalwart pillar of her Baptist community. She has raised four sons, besides Pat. After twenty-eight years of bleak marriage, she was divorced five years ago. Mrs. Harris is one reason that what started as a shiftless family caravan, with a robust taste for adventure, is now turning into a solid homestead. Stan's home-insulation business is picking up. And last year the Crawfords earned $3850, and proudly took title to their log-cabin home and fifty wooded acres six miles from Old Town, Maine.

The afternoon I came up was typical of the genial hurly-burly at the Crawfords'. The bare pine floor of the five-room log cabin was teeming with blond small fry. All afternoon little girls bobbled around, helping one another with mittens and galoshes; they were perched on window sills, stringing beads; mauling rag dolls, sweeping floors, brandishing

PHOTOGRAPHS BY KOSTI RUOHOMAA

Five good reasons (a new sixth in her crib) for a happy home even if there's no plumbing and no steam heat.

"Air of our own to breathe on land of our own": the Crawfords have it. Their 50 wooded acres, 5-room cabin and 7 other small buildings cost $1800 which Stan is paying off with a mortgage.

"Being able to take what's hande dustpans, whispering to kittens, crowing over Princess, a tawny German-shepherd dog, and Prince, her huge, complacent consort. Their grandmother, Mrs. Harris, up for a visit, measured the quintet for new dresses. A young Episcopalian minister came in to see about their collective christening. Pat's best friend dropped over with her rambunctious son, aged three. Stan, in his lumberjack's violently red-checked shirt, trekked down the snowy slope to the dug well, for the family's daily two pails of cold water. A little later, all the kids trailed out over the ice-rutted road to the barn, where a neighboring blacksmith with a gnarled face was shoeing two huge farm horses. The country butcher rattled up the road in his Ford to sell the family its meat quota. And outside, a yellow cat slept unperturbed all afternoon on the icicled roof.

Pat and Stan's story is the case history of two adventurous youngsters who both erupted out of families broken by divorce, where they felt pressured rather than loved. Both were thwarted in their ambitions, and in their schooling. They met at the height of their rebellion, Stan 26, Pat 19, and were drawn together by mutual insecurity. Perhaps because of this negative start, today they prize family harmony above all things, are insatiable about kids, and share a deep craving for the freedom of the out-of-doors. But occasionally there are still outcroppings of their torn backgrounds.

Stan was born in Fort Kent, Maine, of English and French-Canadian stock, thirty-five years ago. His grandfather was a river chief on the Penobscot, who rode the logs down from the lumber camps to the sawmills. Those were the wild days when mothers kept their daughters indoors when the bearded lumbermen converged on Old Town and Bangor, each spring, to get a shave, a load on and blow their winter's pay in a week of riotous living.

Three generations of fashion know-how tackle problems of the new lo

"I've sold everything from cosmetics to bottled gas," says Stan, who has his own business now, insulating homes. The average job takes 3 days and brings in about $500. Working with his father and 2 helpers, he hopes to clear $5000 next year.

The Crawfords' description of Home 33 is "long on beauty and short on convenience." Lack of bathroom, running water means hundred-yard trek to outhouse through hip-deep snow in winter.

ut to us—that's what counts."

Stan's father, a criminal lawyer, was bent on training the boy to take over his practice. But there was an opposite tug: his mother begged him to enter the priesthood. Stan resisted both. When he was 13, his parents were divorced, after years of conflict. The next year, he yielded to his mother's pressure, and switched to a parochial high school in Van Buren, Maine. He spent two years training for the priesthood. Then, at 17, he was badly thrown off when his mother died. "We used to cut the rug up a little," he recalls, with understatement. "We used to drink a little liquor." He veered toward his father next, and studied law from 17 to 19, but ducked out two months before the bar exam. His father remarried.

Stan had always wanted to be a doctor, but there was never any money for schooling. To earn money for medical school, at 19, Stan began selling cosmetics, and found selling came tantalizingly easy. He's been at it ever since.

At his most unstable period, at 26, then a foot-loose salesman of new and used cars, Stan met Pat Harris, an idyllic-looking girl who was slinging hash in a Rockland, Maine, restaurant. At 19, she had just run away from home for the third time. Back home in Medford, Massachusetts, Pat had felt suffocated and unwanted as long as she could remember. Her father was an austere bank-credit man, often jobless, who favored the four boys in the family. There was no allowance for Pat—that was for the boys. There was a constant tug of war between her parents, who were finally divorced five years ago. A brace of great-aunts underwrote her education, and wanted to push her into teaching. Her one continual chore was to take care of her "three little shadows"—her younger brothers, Billy, Bob and Dick. And she didn't seem to be getting anywhere on her life's ambitions. "Part of me wanted to be a nurse, part an actress," she wistfully recalls.

gest event of the girls' winter was their five-in-a-row christening.

"Why not burn a candle at both ends?" Even after days of cooking for 8 (on a wood stove), canning (350 quarts a summer) or sewing (30 outfits for the girls last year), Pat still likes to "energize" her evenings writing stories and studying French and Italian.

Recipe for raising six: lots of love and muscle.

Family good angel: Pat's mother, Mrs. Harris, runs rooming house in Medford.

It never seemed to matter to her aunts that she was offered free voice and acting lessons, or took school prizes in singing, swimming, posture, and wound up "class beauty" and "class actress." At home, she says, she "felt like a bone between dogs"—with everyone tugging. Her mother was often out on some day job or other, to supplement the flickering family income.

At 14, lugging a carton of canned food, Pat lit out from Medford one night on a freight car. It didn't go. Ignominiously, she crept back. At 17, she boarded a bus to Florida. A lady from the Travelers Aid Society collected her and lectured about returning to school. "Did you have a good time, honey?" Mrs. Harris asked, without rancor, when she reclaimed Pat at the Medford bus terminal. At home, things were as thwarting as ever. The aunts held out for business school, which Pat grimly finished. She did a stint as secretary to a doctor. Her mother, she recalls, was "trying to sell me on the idea of mixing money with love" in marriage. At 19, Pat "felt her whole world crashing down." She made off "for the highest point I could think of in the U. S.," with her best friend, Bobbie.

In Northern Maine, when the money ran out, Pat and Bobbie answered an ad in a local paper. They took a train to Rockland to get jobs as waitresses. Sent to the station to meet them by the restaurant manager was Stan Crawford, the easygoing car salesman by trade, and woodsman by heritage. His manner was courteous, his interest evident. He looked like a bobby-soxer's blond dream, a kind of less sullen Montgomery Clift.

Boy, with a few squares, he'd be something, Pat thought. Trimmed down a pound or so, she'd be something, Stan speculated.

Two days before the wedding, three weeks later, they made for the Canadian border in one of Stan's rental cars, to meet his family. The roads were rich and loamy that rain-swept spring. Pat was at the wheel, one night, when they careened into an unlighted truck. "I folded that car up and brought it home in a basket," Pat airily exclaims. Stan lost his job. But they were married on schedule, Stan with a broken nose and two dollars borrowed for the license, Pat limping, carrying wild flowers, her white sharkskin bridal dress covering the welts on her body.

Meanwhile, in Medford, Mrs. Harris hadn't heard from Pat for weeks. Finally, a Mother's Day wire came one morning. "Well, thank God she's all right. Now I can eat my breakfast," Mrs. Harris exclaimed. She put a tracer on the wire. From a clerk in the Maine Western Union office, she checked the route of a girl who sounded mighty like Pat. She was seen, accompanied by a young man, in a doctor's office. Mrs. Harris guessed there had been an accident. But the couple had come into the office to send the wire—she concluded her daughter was well. Within a few days, Pat wrote her mother a letter with the return address "General Delivery, Old Town, Maine," announcing her marriage to Stan Crawford, a Catholic.

Mrs. Harris mollified the outraged Methodist Episcopal great-aunts, when the news leaked out, and stood by her daughter. In an ancient Plymouth, she and her youngest son plowed up to Old Town. Arriving unannounced one evening, she rang doorbells until she traced the couple. They were honeymooning in a dreary rooming house. Stan, she discovered, was lean, likable and unemployed. (He was 6 feet, 2 inches, and weighed 156 pounds then. Now, he weighs 210.) Stan sized up his mother-in-law as the "cozy, white-haired type. But after I'd watched her for a few minutes, I thought, 'Well, I guess we've got a little bantam rooster here.'"

(Continued on Page 154)

"Whenever we have a crisis or a baby, mum's on hand." Mrs. Harris and Terry do dish duty to spell Pat before birth of three-month-old Laurell.

Terry, 8; an A student in the second grade, her first love is "anything on four feet"—including wildcat Smoky, her new kittens, and 11 family goats.

Mother or dancer? Patty, 7, can't decide which to be. Meanwhile, she'll use young sisters for domestic practice, try piano lessons with Stan.

A soft-drink cooler makes a handy tub for "dunk nights." When the well dries up or freezes, Pat has to do all washing on a water ration of two buckets a day.

"Mischief and Sharry, 6, go together like raisins and rice pudding." Pat thinks her gift for mimicry spurred Hollywood offer to put girls in pictures.

Christy, 4, is family gourmet, with spaghetti a favorite dish. Stan's hunting and her garden help Pat hold the food costs to low $25 weekly.

Maintenance of health is Crawfords' biggest budget headache. The year delicate Wendy, 2½, had bronchial pneumonia, bills ran over $1000.

"We'd do it again." Pat met Stan when she was 19, slinging hash to earn a runaway from home. Minus jobs or savings, they eloped in 3 weeks.

Freedom and the know-how to choose their own future.

(Continued from Page 152) Motherly but militant, Mrs. Harris "shanghaied" the newlyweds back to Medford, to tide them over. Since then, between jobs and at critical times, Medford has been the haven they trouped back to. At other times, pride has kept the Crawfords from returning.

Stan has roamed the country from Maine to California, these last years, pulling up family stakes with each job shift. He has sold everything from bottled gas, furs and cosmetics to Singer sewing machines and insulation. He has held defense jobs from coast to coast, ranging from radar testing and gyroscope manufacturing to airplane-motor making and tool-and-die work. Why all the moves? Unbridled and carefree, Stan was lured by successive better-paying war jobs. (Highest pay was $150 a week, testing machine-gun barrels for Colt firearms, in 1942.) At Massachusetts Institute of Technology, his section was cited for excellence in radar work, in 1945. He switched jobs when Pat's health involved a drier climate, that year. And he pulled out whenever intractability or adventure got the upper hand. But children cut the Crawford mobility at last, and brought roots. "With six kids, I can't be anything but steady," Stan, now a sturdier character, says.

Mrs. Harris, to help anchor the couple down, borrowed against her future earnings as a landlady to lend them $300 of the original $600 down payment Stan made last year, (Continued on Page 174)

How to keep a big family happy: "Mutual consideration," says Pat. Girls help about the house, make own beds and tidy own room. "But otherwise, I don't believe in telling them what do to—just because I happen to think so."

Where there's Coca-Cola there's Hospitality

"When you come back, be sure that bag's full of
FELS-NAPTHA SOAP"

THE GOLDEN BAR WITH THE CLEAN NAPTHA ODOR

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

"Broken Homes Nearly Wrecked Our Lives"

By LESLIE B. HOHMAN, M. D.

Professor of Neuropsychiatry, Duke University School of Medicine

HAVE you battled against the background and tragedy of a broken home? Have you found it hard to settle down and lead a stable life because you got a bad start in life from parents who could not submerge their personal unhappinesses and accept the greater satisfaction of building a normal family background for their children?

If you have, perhaps you can be helped by the story of Stan and Pat Crawford's mistakes, their struggles and their successes. If you could have visited them on their run-down farm near Old Town, Maine, as I did, you would have found a happy, handsome, bubbling group of seven people—two grownups and five very blond, very pretty, very pink-pajamaed little girls. The grown-ups were Stan Crawford, tall, proud father of thirty-five years, and his attractive, intelligent, pregnant wife, Pat, twenty-eight. The kids were making paper dolls and paper ships while convalescing from, or awaiting the coming of, chicken pox. A better behaved and friendlier crew of youngsters you could not meet in many a day. Stan and Pat were busy as bees, and sandwiched the story of their lives between many layers of work—she cooking, cleaning and tending children, and he tending his growing herd of goats, fetching food and water, and seeing customers for his insulation business.

The atmosphere of the home was loving and all seven were having a wonderful time in spite of the fact that living conditions were truly rugged—inadequate water, no bathing and washing facilities, poor stove, poor sink, no indoor toilet. One got the sense of great calm, quiet happiness and family stability.

But this would have been hard to predict from the background and past performance of this couple. Both Stan and Pat came out of broken and disrupted homes. They were both long-standing rebels against the established order of settling down. Rebels against learning a job or trade; against living in one place; and establishing security of income. Each had talents that might have made for great success if they had stayed put, but each has shifted over and over. Now they are just starting to try to build a stable life on a dilapidated farm.

This family again has a golden opportunity for success—probably not for large money earning, but the chance to give their well-started, healthy children the good stability their own lives lacked. Both Stan and Pat say they now have what they really want—outdoor living in the bracing climate of Maine, and the wholesomeness of farm life for the children. Since the University of Maine is only a stone's throw from their gate, good educational facilities are at hand.

But the question is how fully they will accept this opportunity. Let's look at the record of this talented pair and sum up their assets and defects. Stan tried in rapid succession education for three professional careers—the priesthood, law and medicine. He gave them up for salesmanship and then began shifting jobs innumerable times. He had the familiar, but not adequate, excuse of bettering himself.

Pat had talent for singing, acting and dancing, and had training in all of them. She even had training in the more down-to-earth job of stenography. And yet something always seemed to happen to stop her forward progress: family interference or dissatisfied restlessness which drove her to run away from home. In one of her runaways, she landed in the arms of the equally restless Stan and their marriage united two roving souls.

In this marriage of real love, they joined their doubtfully good talent for adventure and their urgent desires to see what was on the other side of the mountains. Then began a career of happy-go-lucky, interesting traveling; plus the inevitable financial struggle and hardships that come with frequent moves and changes of work.

This is the freely and frankly admitted story of Stan and Pat, not of their parents. We must, however, take an honest look at their family roots if we are to help this couple to understand their problems and the solutions of their problems.

Pat's mother, from all accounts, is a charming and talented woman, but restless and constantly yearning for more than she had or should have wanted. Pat always felt she was in competition with her beautiful mother, and there is reason to believe that jealousy between the two prevented Pat from successfully concluding any of her art-career beginnings. Unfortunately, her mother also was always making starts in careers, also shifting constantly. This conflict between mother and daughter could have been resolved by Pat, but instead she still runs home when there's trouble, and I'm afraid is still attracted by her mother's philosophy of miraculous success around the next corner. One can only speculate about the disagreement of Pat's parents, but one fact is clear—Pat's mother could not accept the reasonable limitations of her husband's income as a bank clerk. Her need of funds for the "better things of life"—a more luxurious way of living—may have beaten down his courage and self-esteem. At any rate, the family quarreling made Pat feel caught in the middle. It was bad enough to have to be at odds with one parent or the other, but when her mother's easily chilled enthusiasm thwarted each of the glamorous plans she made for Pat, despairing unhappiness intervened and, unable to meet or to change reality, Pat would run away.

THIS is the past history of Pat, and its faults cannot be undone. The future, however, is an open road, and Pat should be able to turn a clear understanding of her past into a corrective guide for her future. She is coming to understand the role her mother played in her life, but is finding it difficult to free herself from the habit of letting her mother run and dominate her.

I was disturbed over two attitudes that Pat expressed. First, she was afraid she was not giving her children their best opportunities. Her family and friends said it was terrible to keep her children away from the good things that city life could furnish. Two, she wondered what she should do if Hollywood offers should come to her children. She said it would be a hard decision because movies would offer financial security for the family and make it possible for the children to express their talents for dancing, singing and acting. She has said that she knows what she wants for the family—healthful, outdoor farm life. Yet these doubts already plague her.

I suggest two rules that she, and others like her, would do well to follow:

1. After you have made up your mind what you think is the best life for yourself and your children, do not listen to the friends and family. Stick resolutely to your philosophy of living until unmistakable events prove you were wrong.

2. Distinguish between attraction to a parent and the wisdom of the parent's advice.

Pat, although now aware of its faults, is still following her mother's pattern in her own life and is still attracted to the glamorous way of living rather than to the stable.

In nearly all homes that are "broken," the children suffer from several sources. Not only do the children develop a sense of the impending disaster that they may have to give up one or the other parent by divorce, but each parent is apt to make an active, if not frantic, effort to win the children to his or her side. The ordinary parental exercise of authority and firm guidance that the child needs so much is not used. Each parent feels that it might drive the child to the other more lenient one. Children, in the temporary unhappiness that comes when conduct must be controlled, often take advantage of the divided feeling of the parents and play one against the other. A child usually wants his own way, and when he gets it so easily in this parental struggle for the child's affection he readily establishes the pattern of believing that consistently following his own desires is the most satisfactory way of behaving.

In Stan's case, this is exactly what happened. He can remember vividly his delight in each of his parents and the good times each furnished him. He has no insecurity memories of not being loved. On the contrary, he can remember only a sense of being greatly loved by both parents. When his father occasionally kidnaped him from his mother, he remembers the excitement and pleasure of their trips.

Again we must speculate about Stan's unsteadiness in his selection of a life's work. Since his parents were divided in feeling, neither was prepared to accept the onus of being the one to say, "You must finish a job you've started. If you want to change after your study is finished, well and good." Instead, he was allowed to shift according to his own will or whim.

All this is now past history for Stan, and for him, also, the future is an open road. But once you have established the pattern of job changing, it is hard to persuade yourself that it is wrong. The use of excuses is so ingrained that you find it easy to accept most unconvincing reasons of "no more interest," "bettering myself" and "not getting a fair deal from the boss."

I would therefore lay down a third rule for the children of parents who allowed them to learn the habit of shifting jobs:

3. Stop, look and reflect before you persuade yourself to change jobs or professions. You may only be following the unwise pattern of doing what you want when you want, as your parents unmeaningly trained you to do. The world is not so anxious to reward you as your unhappy parents were.

Stan and Pat found in each other not only true love, but a kindredship of desire—the desire to see new places and to pull up stakes whenever they got bored with one place or one job. If two people like the Crawfords had remained childless, this adventuring might have turned out all right. But children alter the picture and children have a right to a fixed base for continuous schooling, friendship making, and freedom from unnecessary financial pinch. The Crawfords, I suspect, too easily understood each other's restlessness, and continue to justify each other, just as their parents had done earlier. They wanted six children, but they were not prepared to limit themselves to give these children what they need and should have.

I would lay down as a fourth rule:

4. Make a choice, whether you want wandering or children. If you choose children, then you must give up whimsical adventuring.

I have the strong feeling that both the Crawfords have not been ready to make such a choice. They told me in a joking way that now that they've seen California, their next project is a trip to Alaska. They hasten to add that that will be only when Stan has made enough money to warrant a true vacation. I have hopes that no special show of favor from circumstances will tempt them to take off on a Northwest jaunt. I am hopeful also that one or the other will be able to say, "We won't both get 'itchy' feet at the same time."

At any rate, I can suggest another rule that might help:

5. Before you accept the beckoning nod of "new horizons," put off the decision for a year. Perhaps by that time you can see that your own pasture is greener than you thought.

In fairness to divorced or separated parents, I think it necessary to say that not all responsibility for children's unsteadiness in adult life can be put on parental doorsteps. Seeds must fall on fertile soil to grow, and bad environmental circumstances can influence children only if they are ready to make the most, or the worst, of their background influences.

Stan and his wife are fundamentally good people. They are intelligent, and they have a lot of good stuff in them as well as a lot that they must battle against valiantly. They have in their favor a deep and passionate love for each other, and they love and adore their children. Both these forces are mighty allies in their struggle to overcome broken-home influences, and their own wandering, restless spirits. THE END

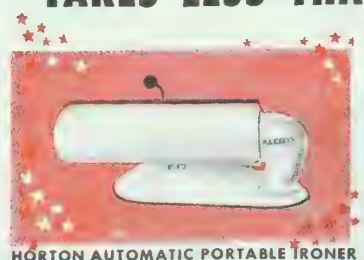
"If you say you had ham for lunch I'll scream."

For Husbands Only!

FOR A SMALL DOWN PAYMENT
—you can make a real hit with the wife this Christmas—put a HORTON IRONER under the Christmas Tree!

"MY HORTON IRONER is the most wonderful gift I ever received!"

. . . says Mrs. Charles S. Booz of Evanston, Illinois.



"When my husband surprised me with a new Horton Ironer, I didn't believe ironing could be fun—but now I know it is! No more standing and pushing a hot hand iron around . . . I sit comfortably and let the ironer whisk through the work—and I do mean whisk!"

Here's the ironing Mrs. Booz did twice . . . 56 pieces by actual count!

1. IN 6 HOURS 33 MIN. WITH A HAND IRON
2. IN 2 HOURS 41 MIN. WITH HER BRAND-NEW HORTON

"TAKES LESS THAN HALF THE TIME"

HORTON AUTOMATIC PORTABLE IRONER

THE HORTON AUTOMATIC CONSOLE IRONER

"I made an actual test for the Horton people with my brand-new ironer, after I had used it just once. I did the same ironing twice—once with a hand iron and again, after redampening, with my Horton. And the Horton ironing took less than half as long! Less than half the energy, too—because there was no pushing, no pressing, no lifting—just a nudge on the knee control. Only think what I'll be able to do with practice!"

For Christmas, ask your Santa Claus for the gift that means years of happier ironing days ahead—the gift that does the ironing for you—a Horton Ironer. There's one to fit every purse, every house—and the dealer who displays the sign below will be glad to arrange a free demonstration for you and Santa, right in your own home.

P.S. A gift of a Horton Ironer will really take you off your feet!

Authorized DEALER HORTON IRONERS WASHERS

HORTON MANUFACTURING CO., Fort Wayne 1, Ind.

Makers of America's finest washers and ironers for more than three generations. In Canada, the trade name HORTON ELECTROHOME distinguishes products manufactured and sold by Horton's affiliate, Dominion Electrohome Industries, Ltd., of Kitchener, Ontario.

To delight your lady fair give her Jewelite for her hair!

Brushes and Sets by PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC

A FAVORITE Jewelite Brush and Comb combination. The smart, modern brush has an "easy grip" handle and six rows of wide-flared Prolon bristles. $3.00

NEW GLAMOUR FOR HER BOUDOIR! The beautiful Lady's Dresser Set, above, includes the Jewelite Professional Style Hair Brush, a Comb, and double-faced Mirror. $10.00

The lovely transparent dome container is typical of all Jewelite gift packaging. Its base is a useful plastic dresser tray. Look for the name Jewelite on the box.

Made by the makers of the famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush, Jewelite comes in sparkling jewel colors . . . crystal, ruby, or sapphire for women . . . crystal or garnet for men. All brushes are bristled with Prolon.

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH COMPANY, Florence, Mass.

AMERICA'S MOST FAMOUS Brush and Comb combination is this unique Roll-Wave Set. The Roll-Wave Brush has Prolon bristles, trimmed in a curve to "fit" the scalp. $4.50

JUNIOR ROLL-WAVE Brush and Comb for teen-ager or traveler. $2.50

A CHARMING GIFT FOR BABY is this beautiful Baby Brush and Comb Set in the new "Swirltwist" pattern. The Brush has extra-fine, extra-gentle Prolon bristles. $2.50

To Delight HIM, too!

DO HIM PROUD with this sturdy, modern Military Set which includes two handsome Military Brushes and a matching Comb. $7.00

A BRUSH AND COMB SET MEN LIKE! Smart, rugged Club Brush has extra-long Prolon bristles and a large handle. A gift favorite! $4.50

Jewelite is also available in Canada at slightly different prices

To Mother with Love

Mothers, above all people, measure the gifts they receive by love, not cost. For the wee members of the family here's a present for a penny. Take a post card showing some favorite scene of mother's. Write your message on the card; then cut it into your own jigsaw puzzle. Jumble the pieces together, tie them up in colored tissue to hang on the tree—and keep mother guessing until she's worked the puzzle out! For fifty cents—more or less: why don't you . . . Tie together on a single ribbon two bottles of nail polish, a bottle of remover, a lipstick and sachet to dangle from a branch of the Christmas tree? . . . Fill a bright bathroom tumbler with a face cloth, a box of colored "marbles" to make a bubble bath, a toothbrush, and a cake of sweet-smelling soap? . . . Tie up six pink powder puffs with a ribbon mother can wear in her hair or use for slip straps later on? . . . Make a morning's worth of surprises by distributing pint-size presents around the house in places mother's sure to look: in the percolator, coffee cups, closets—even in the refrigerator!

Gifts from teen-agers for five dollars—more or less: why don't you . . . Trim part of the Christmas tree with colored balls of yarn, needles at angles? . . . Make her three sachets (you can buy the sachet powder) with loops underneath for ribbons to go through to tie around her lingerie? . . . Give her one of the new long lip pencils to insure a smoother make-up job? . . . Glamorize a box of hankies by securing the ribbon on top of the box with a pretty new pin or brooch? Make an enchanting package by tying up the box with a yard of veiling and matching ribbon to be worn later. . . . Give a bottle of cologne or toilet water in mother's favorite floral scent, all wrapped up with a matching scarf and flower on top? If she likes the scent of violet, the scarf is in that color, too; then a bunch of real or make-believe violets adds the final touch. . . . Embroider her initials on a pair of soft slippers. . . . find her favorite tune in a musical powder box so she can listen to it whenever she wishes. . . . Decorate two plain white tiles by pasting on her initials (cut from a Christmas card) or by using decalcomanias?

PHOTOGRAPH BY DI PIETRO

"If you give mommy the powder puffs, I'll give the lipstick." Overheard from the five little Crawford girls' Christmas conference concerning some gifts for their mother!

Grown-up gifts—at any price: One man, who has a gift for giving, gave his wife a handbag—when she opened it she had the surprise of her life! Inside there was a gift for each compartment—a pair of earrings, a lace-trimmed handkerchief, a pair of kid gloves and a silk scarf! . . . Another man had this philosophy concerning Christmas presents: "It's the one time of the year when I want to find her something she thinks she looks wonderful in! It can be fur ski boots or a spangled evening hood. Anything to make her happy . . . even if I don't agree."

Christmas is the time when any husband can use his ingenuity to find just the gift to compliment as well as delight his wife. Daughters can make suggestions as well as help pretty up the packages on the outside.

Does she like surprises? Why don't you help trim the tree with a lipstick encased in a spangled decoration . . . or a miniature manicure set which comes in a pretty shell? . . . Or tuck a round red Santa holding cologne amongst her packages? . . . Whatever your gift, add your own personal touch to brighten mother's holidays! • By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

QUAKER OATS HELPS GROW

"Stars of the Future"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition!

Your youngsters get more growth, more endurance—your grownups get more energy, more stamina from nourishing oatmeal than any other whole-grain cereal! That's why Quaker Oats is recommended for a better breakfast! According to a recent survey, only 1 school child in 5 gets the kind of breakfast he should have. So doctors say, the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! Help your children be a success by serving Quaker Oats!

A GIANT in Value!

Delicious Quaker Oats helps keep grocery bills down. Saves precious time in the morning, too, because Quick Quaker Oats cooks in 2½ minutes!

A GIANT in Flavor!

People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Tempting recipes on the package. Remember to buy delicious Quaker Oats.

Still Less than 1¢ a Serving!

QUAKER OATS

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

There's warmth and good feeling inside the Crawford cabin—particularly when there's a big tureen of fragrant and hearty stew for supper.

Hearty and Hot For a Hungry Family

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

RICH stews that will simmer along on the back of the stove, and oven casserole dishes that won't be ruined if the wood burns out—these are the substance of the Crawfords' meals; and good substance, I'd say, for anybody's table.

A stew is a proud dish and will be just what you make it. Tend it with care, give thought to its seasoning, and no man or boy will pass up a second helping. This goes for casserole dishes too. Here is a collection of some of our favorites.

Sausage, Yam and Apple Casserole

Peel, core and slice 3 large cooking apples. Cook, peel and slice 2 pounds yams. Brown 1 pound bulk pork sausage in skillet. Arrange potatoes, apples and sausage in layers in casserole, sprinkling each layer with salt and brown sugar—using ½ teaspoon salt and ⅔ cup brown sugar in all. If the apples are not juicy, add a little water. Bake, covered, in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 minutes. Remove cover and bake an additional half hour until apples are soft. Serves 8.

Lamb-and-Rice Pilaf

Cut 2 pounds lean shoulder of lamb into pieces and brown in a little hot shortening. Drain off excess fat. Add 1 No. 2 can tomatoes, 1 green pepper, chopped, ¾ cup chopped onions, 1 tablespoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ⅛ teaspoon basil. Cook, covered, over low heat 1 hour or until lamb is tender. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Rub the inside of a casserole dish with garlic. Have ready 2½ cups cooked rice. Arrange alternate layers of rice and the lamb and gravy. Bake about ¾ hour in moderate oven, 350° F., until rice has absorbed the juices. It shouldn't be dry—or soupy either. Serves 6.

Veal Stew with Dumplings

Have 2½ pounds rump, shoulder or shank of veal boned. Cut it into 1½-inch pieces. Cover with 1½ quarts water. Add ½ cup chopped onion, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ bay leaf. Cover and simmer slowly until meat is tender. Reseason broth to taste with salt and pepper. Remove bay leaf. Heat the stew to a boil and drop dumplings by spoonfuls on top of the meat. Cover tightly and cook over moderate heat 15 minutes without removing the lid. Peek and your dumplings won't be light and fluffy. Lift out dumplings gently onto hot platter with 2 forks. Thicken gravy. Pour meat and gravy around dumplings. Serves 8.

Dumplings: Sift 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon salt and 3 teaspoons baking powder. Work in 1 tablespoon shortening finely. A pastry blender makes it easy. Add 1 cup milk all at once. Mix together just enough to blend—with as few strokes as possible. Drop into the stew by spoonfuls.

Sunday-Night Casserole

Dice 1 can pork luncheon meat in ½-inch cubes. Hard-cook and slice 4 eggs. Dice enough cold cooked potatoes to make 3 cups. Grate enough Cheddar cheese to make 1 cup. Now make a cream sauce, using 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, 4 tablespoons flour, 3 cups milk, 1 tablespoon salt, ¼ teaspoon dry mustard and a dash of pepper. Add luncheon meat, potatoes, eggs and cheese. Mix well and pour into 2-quart casserole. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., until bubbly and brown, 30 minutes. Serves 8.

Barbecued Lima Beans

Soak 1 pound dried Lima beans in water to cover. Drain. Save soaking water and add enough more water to make 6 cups. Add beans and 2 teaspoons salt. Cook with 1 clove garlic, minced, until beans are almost tender. Then add 2 pieces bacon cut into small pieces, ¼ cup chopped celery, ¼ cup chopped green pepper, ¼ cup chopped onion, ¼ cup chili sauce, a pinch of mace, a pinch of basil, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 eight-ounce can tomato sauce and 1 can cocktail frankfurters with tomato sauce. Add 1 cup more water. Reseason to taste and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 1 hour or until beans are tender. Serves 8.

Beef-and-Kidney Stew

Have 1 pound stewing beef cut into 1½-inch cubes. Cut 2 beef kidneys into thin slices. Cut out the white membrane in each slice with scissors. Simmer kidneys in water 10 minutes. Strain stock and save. Brown the beef on all sides in a heavy pot, using 2 tablespoons shortening or salad oil. Let it get really nice and brown. Add the kidneys, 2 cups kidney stock and water, 1 tablespoon salt, ¼ cup chopped parsley, ¼ cup chopped celery, 1 large onion, chopped, 1 clove garlic, chopped, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 bay leaf, crushed, and a pinch of thyme. Cover and simmer about 2 hours or until beef is tender—the kidneys will be by time beef is. Then add 12 small whole peeled onions, 3 cups diced potatoes, ¼ teaspoon more salt, 1½ cups water and some pepper. Cover and simmer until potatoes and onions are tender. Taste and reseason, if needed. Thicken with a little flour blended to a thin smooth paste with cold water. Cook until thickened, stirring as you cook. Serve garnished with chopped parsley. Carrots are good with this stew but not in it. Serves 8–10. Variations: Canned or fresh mushrooms may be added with the vegetables and you might omit potatoes, decrease the water and add a little sherry at end of cooking, if you like the flavor.

Corned-Beef-and-Cabbage Casserole

Break up 1 can corned-beef hash with a fork. Prepare 3 cups medium-thick cream sauce, using 3 cups milk, 6 tablespoons butter or margarine, 2 teaspoons salt, dash of pepper, 1 tablespoon grated onion, ¼ cup dry bread crumbs mixed with 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine. Remove core from 1 medium head cabbage. Shred cabbage fine. Cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and combine with cream sauce. Reseason to taste. Arrange cabbage and corned-beef hash in layers in the casserole. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 minutes. Serves 8.

Rabbit Stew

Joint 2 young rabbits. Season with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Cut 3 slices bacon into pieces. Fry until crisp. Remove bacon. Add 3 tablespoons shortening. Sauté the rabbit in the hot shortening until nicely browned. Add 4 onions, sliced, 1 clove garlic, minced, 3 cups water, ⅛ teaspoon marjoram, 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Cover and simmer until tender. Add 2 cups diced potatoes, 1½ cups diced carrots, the bacon and additional water. Cook until vegetables are tender. Add 1 teaspoon paprika and 1 cup sour cream, reseasoning to taste. Heat. Serves 8.

PHOTOS BY KOSTI RUOHOMAA

All five of the little Crawford girls have good appetites. It keeps their mother and grandmother busy filling them up at mealtime.

Try this . . .

Easy, Budget Meal

Quick 'n Tasty

FRANKFURTERS and VEG-ALL

MEAL PLAN

Frankfurters
and Veg-All
Shoe-String Potatoes
Rolls Pickles
Fruit Sauce
Beverage

Split 6 frankfurters lengthwise. Broil until lightly browned. Heat 2 cans Veg-All in its own liquid. Drain. (Save liquid for soup or gravy). Add 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon onion juice, 3 drops Tabasco sauce, ¾ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Heat over low fire, stirring. Arrange on hot platter with frankfurters. Serve with mustard and catsup. Serves 5-6.

For Easy, Thrifty Meals Enjoy Veg-All with Hamburger, Stews, Fricassees . . . or with Eggs. Good!

VEG-ALL . . . A NUTRITIOUS COMBINATION OF GREEN AND YELLOW VEGETABLES FOR SOUPS . . . SALADS . . . DINNER VEGETABLES

VEG-ALL

America's Most Popular MIXED VEGETABLES

FREE!

Send Coupon for Recipes

THE LARSEN COMPANY
Dept. J1248, Green Bay, Wis.
Please send Free
☐ Star Recipes by America's Cooking Stars
☐ Make Salads at the Table
Name.....
Address.....
City.....State.....

PHOTO BY J. DI PIETRO

WENDY CHRISTY SHARRY PATTY TERRY

Five of a Kind . . .

Pixy hood buttoning under the chin; matching mittens have the same two stripes. Knitting instructions, 2536.

Sewing and knitting for five pretty daughters sounds like a full-time job, but Pat Crawford does it in her spare time. What she makes for one, she makes for all. This past summer she made FORTY dresses for the girls to wear back to school. Her current undertaking is making red corduroy robes and cotton flannelette nighties for her fivesome. Warm little hoods and mittens, ribbed panties, socks and stocking caps are all quick and easy to make. Sweaters with names delight the children and avoid confusion . . . perfect for school with box-pleated plaid skirts. Sew and knit for your children as a hobby . . . start with small things and work up gradually to more complicated patterns. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY Sweaters identify each child by name. Instructions, 2537. Skirts, "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 2445, 3 to 12, 35c.

Back Views and Prices are on Page 164.

Stocking cap, socks and panties in well-fitting ribbed stitch. Designed to stay in place! Cap and socks, 2538; panties, 2539.

Red corduroy robes. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 2473, 1 to 8, 35c. Flannelette nighties, "Easy-to-Make" No. 2456, 3 to 10, 35c.

© VOGUE

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada ... Dundas Square, Toronto, Ont. *Connecticut residents, please add sales tax. ★ For knitting instructions send 15c for each number to Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

"Don't forget NOMA* LIGHTS"

OH BOY! SEPARATE NOMA BUBBLE-LITES† FOR SPARES AND STRINGS YOU ALREADY HAVE...SERIES OR MULTIPLE.

A WHOLE TREE OF NOMA BUBBLE-LITES! BEAUTIFUL, BUBBLING, COLOR LIGHTS. GREEN TREE OR WHITE. PUSH BUTTON SWITCH...EASY TO TURN ON OR OFF.

LOOK! NOMA BUBBLE-LITE OUTFITS! ALIVE WITH COLORFUL ACTION. 9 LIGHTS TO A SET... AND EACH LAMP WITH METAL CLIP TO HOLD LAMP UPRIGHT ON TREE.

#503G

TRIMMING OUTDOORS? GET NOMA 7-LAMP WEATHER-PROOF STRINGS. ADD-ON PLUG. EACH LAMP BURNS INDEPENDENTLY.

LOOK AT THESE NOMA LIGHTS! ROUND! SPARKLING! COLORFUL! YOU'LL LOVE 'EM ON YOUR TREE.

#509

#3017

#3005

EASY TO KEEP YOUR TREE IN WATER WITH THIS NOMA HOLDER. 8 SERIES LIGHTS. ADD-ON PLUG.

FOR AN 8-LAMP SERIES SET, HERE'S A HONEY... BY NOMA

#176

THE TREE TRIMMER'S FRIEND! IS LIGHTS IN THIS NOMA STRING. NO HUNTING FOR BURNED-OUT BULBS.

#198

#110

#3415

PUT A CHRISTMAS LIGHT IN YOUR WINDOW ...WITH A NOMA HALO-EFFECT CANDOLIER.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
†Trademark

NOMA

ELECTRIC CORPORATION • 55 West Thirteenth St., New York 11, N. Y.

59¢-43¢
25¢ and 10¢

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, reamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can se the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this afe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration etter. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for a free jar.

THE INCANTATION

(Continued from Page 49)

Bigs were housed, into the larger offices sacred to Mr. Pruett, Mr. Barton, Mr. Burt, even Mr. Caruthers. It seemed incredible that in an office as full of men as this office, there would not be one man—one surely wasn't much to ask!—who was interesting.

"Interesting" is not married, old enough but not too old, tall enough so that you can wear shoes, nicely groomed, and—well—interesting. It would be interesting to be invited out to dinner, or even to a movie. Little did they think, Gail mused bitterly, when they came to New York, little did they think it would be so utterly, so completely uninteresting.

"Uninteresting" is married, old, fat, untidy—oh, what difference does it make? "Uninteresting" is married. You could just stop there.

Of course, there was one interesting man in the office. The trouble was, he was too interesting. He was Mr. Caruthers' son, who had started there two days ago. He was tall, and lean, and tweedy, and just out of college, and even the pipe he smoked looked interesting, though not in the special sense in which Gail usually meant the word. It was a very becoming pipe. Mr. Caruthers' son, first name unknown, seemed bored, and looked utterly, completely terrific, and you might as well expect Van Johnson to date you, as hope that he would.

Life, she thought profoundly, was flowing past her like a river of oatmeal: sluggish, thick, wholesome and revolting.

And then she heard her name mentioned. The voice sounded disparaging. "Oh, that one—that little blond one. She's Gail Thompson." It was Frank, the twirpy little office boy who should have been sitting, minding his own business, right outside Mr. Pruett's office. A lot she cared what he had to say! I straining hard, she could just hear him. very sour type. If you ask me, a very so type."

Gail's mouth dropped open.

"I thought at first, that's for me!" It w the new office boy.

The sour type balled a small fist and look at it thoughtfully. I'd like to walk quiet around the corner of this cabinet, pal, and co nect this to your chi A brief, triumphant v sion of Frank, kayoe slipping to the floo as she murmured, a low refined voic "That's for you Junior!" appeared an faded.

"Trouble is, no smi in the eyes," Fran explained kindly. " always tell myself, n smile in the eyes, boy skip 'em."

The other seeme to be in agreement "Yeah," he said. "Th smile—the look—that's what counts even more than the . . what you might say physical geography It's that look that says 'Darling, you're won derful! I love you! Know what I do when I see that look?"

"Um," said Frank coldly. "I know. You sit through the whole feature picture, all over again!" There was a sound of scuffling.

"A very sour type. . . . No smile in the eyes. . . . Darling, you're wonderful! I love you!" Those boys wouldn't know it, of course, but you are not supposed to go around giggling in a city like New York. You have to be dignified—or something. A pair of droops is all they are, and nothing that they say is worth listening to. ("Darling, you're wonderful. I love you!")

As she methodically filed the letters where they would never, under ordinary circumstances, be seen again, she began thinking about eyes. There were the unsmiling, le-

(Continued on Page 166)

During frontier days, there lived in Tennessee a shrewd horse trader named Sam Flynn, who picked up an easy living by traveling from place to place and racing his nags against local horses. Flynn's best racer was a coal-black stallion called Dusky Pete. Frequently, when nearing a town, Flynn would mount Dusky Pete and ride him in as though he were only a saddle horse.

One day he rode Pete into a county seat where a race was scheduled in connection with the fair. He entered the stallion, then proceeded to cover bets of citizens who backed local favorites heavily.

Just before the start of the race, an old judge, famous for his knowledge of the track, joined the crowd. He was told of the folly of the stranger who had placed so much money on his saddle horse. The judge looked over the crowd and recognized Dusky Pete.

"Gentlemen," he said, "there's a dark horse in this race that will make some of you sick!"

Needless to say, the black stallion did win the race, and his fame spread through the racing world. From the track, the term "dark horse" was soon applied to political unknowns likely to be elected.

— WEBB B. GARRISON.

Back Views and Prices of Patterns on Pages 58 and 59, and 162

Vogue Design No. 2473. "Easy-to-Make" child's bathrobe, 1 to 8. 35c.

Vogue Design No. 2456. "Easy-to-Make" nightgown, 3 to 10. 35c.

Vogue Design No. 2445. "Easy-to-Make" skirt, with or without shoulder straps, 3 to 12. 35c.

Vogue Design No. 6639. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4883. One-piece dress and slip; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.

Vogue Design No. 6513. "Easy-to-Make" blouse and cummerbund; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6609. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.

Vogue Design No. S-4915. One-piece dress and slip; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.

Vogue Design No. S-4937. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. $1.

Vogue Design No. S-4892. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.

"It's the loveliest cream for dry skin I've ever used."
MRS. JOHN A. ROOSEVELT

"Perfect for softening—it is so rich and creamy."
RAFAELLE, DUCHESS OF LEINSTER

"At last, a really rich cream that isn't sticky."
MRS. NICHOLAS R. DU PONT

If you are over 25

Beware of Dry Skin

FROM ABOUT 25 ON many women find that the natural oil, that keeps their skin soft, smooth and young-looking, gradually decreases. If you have a tendency to dry skin, you may lose as much as 20% of this natural skin oil before you are 40.

Replacement help is right at your fingertips when you use Pond's Dry Skin Cream. This cream is very rich in lanolin—the oil that is most like your own skin oil. It is homogenized—to help it soak in better. And it has a special emulsifier for extra softening.

Arrests Dry Skin Two Ways

Lanolin-Softens by Night—after your regular cleansing, work plenty of rich-in-lanolin Pond's Dry Skin Cream over face and throat. Leave a few minutes—then wipe off lightly, so a soft film is left to help your skin all night. Your dry skin seems to "drink up" this rich cream. See how tiny dry lines are smoothed so they don't show.

Lanolin-Protects by Day—smooth on a very light touch of Pond's Dry Skin Cream before you make-up. It protects your skin against dryness all day. Keeps your skin soft, smooth-looking.

You will feel the softening results of this cream the very first time you use it. Day-by-day you'll see your skin look fresher, smoother, younger.

Get this truly remarkable dry skin corrector—today! You'll find lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream never leaves skin sticky. Instead—it smooths on with a delicious softening feeling. Use this cream generously every day for a week. Then, look at your face carefully. See if this isn't the finest help for correcting dry skin you've ever used. Get your jar of lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream today.

"I find this rich cream almost a necessity for dry skin."
THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND

"I'm never without this rich, softening cream."
MRS. ELLEN TUCK ASTOR

"may I ask just one question please?

What do YOU want most when you travel?"

Almost everyone has a different answer! If your reply is like any of those below, you're sure to save considerable money and enjoy yourself more on any out-of-town trip—when you GO GREYHOUND.

Whatever you may especially want when traveling, it's my guess that you'll get it in fullest measure in Greyhound SuperCoaches. Next time you plan a trip—anywhere in America—just phone or see your Greyhound agent—for travel as you like it!

"Everything's so high these days—I want to save money!"

Lady, you'll save real money on every Greyhound trip! Fares are lower than any other form of transportation—much less than driving your own car.

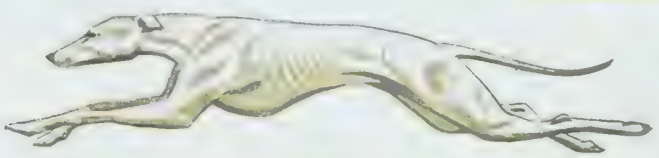
"Who, me? I want lots of schedules... and prompt arrivals..."

Then Greyhound's for you! There are many departures daily, timed at most convenient hours—and they will save you a lot of time.

"I like to see things... meet interesting people... have a good time."

It's truly more fun traveling Greyhound—you meet so many congenial people—see America's beauty spots close-up, by highway.

"I'm interested in getting home from school on week-ends."



Then go Greyhound! It serves hundreds of schools and colleges in all 48 states—very often stops right at campus gates.

"I'm 'way past 50—just give me comfort, relaxation."

There's real riding ease in deeply-cushioned chairs that recline to any desired angle. Drivers are world-famous for safe operation, courtesy.

GREYHOUND

(Continued from Page 164)

thargic subway eyes. There were the absent-minded-looking eyes of people crossing streets. There were the remote, dull eyes of people standing in lines to buy tickets to sparkling comedies. And the disillusioned eyes of people eating in restaurants. No smile, surely, in any of those eyes.

Purely for her own satisfaction, she decided to check on her own eyes.

The mirror in the ladies' room was efficiently lighted. Um, no smile. Just eyes. She turned up the corners of her mouth into a passable smile. Above the neat lipstick job, the eyes remained solemn. More smile. Still not in the eyes. "No smile in the eyes—skip 'em." And was she ever skipped! She tried again, catching her lower lip archly with her little white teeth. Eyes still wary. The more earnestly she smiled, the grimmer she looked.

"Ah-a-a-a-ah!" she said disgustedly. Except for herself, the whole place was empty. Throwing caution and common sense to the winds, Gail said to herself in the glass, with utmost intensity, "Darling! You're wonderful! I love you!"

We-ell. So that's how you do it! Just six easy words! Hm'm.

Little lights appeared and danced in her eyes. She looked enthusiastic, she looked terrific, she looked alive. She looked admiring; and on her, admiration looked good. As she analyzed, the smile faded. She tried the six words again, and again it worked.

"Well," said Gail mildly. "This is something to know."

A few minutes' experiment showed that you could get the same effect by thinking it, rather than saying it aloud, if you thought it—Gail groped for the right word—warmly enough.

At this point, the door of the ladies' room popped open. "Miss Moran's gunning for you!" It was Miss Boyd.

She'd show 'em, thought Gail, she'd show 'em. She abandoned the thought of the short right to Frank's jaw. She was not sure how good the short right might be, but she felt she definitely had something here. She could hardly wait to try it on someone, anyone.

She did not have long to wait. At her d was Mr. Acker, a very short, very cross ch acter. When he was just irritable, he v bright pink. This changed to deep red as became furious. Mr. Acker was now a r purple.

"Consolidated! Consolidated! I saw y put it in my Incoming!" puffed Mr. Ack (Darling! You're wonderful! I love yo

"Yes, Mr. Acker. But I took it back; M Pruett wanted it for the conference, th whole file on Consolidated ——"

Mr. Pruett, being Mr. Pruett, could ha taken the incoming basket and the desk, t if he had wanted them. Both she and M Acker knew that perfectly well. But normal that would not have stopped him from gou ing small bits out of her desk with the point his pencil, and exploding all over the plac Now, however, Mr. Acker stopped in mi puff, and placed his hand flat down on t desk.

"Er, ah, uh," said he, skidding to a sto "That was quite right. Yes. Do you know Miss Thompson, you have remarkable eye Yes, quite right. Thank you."

He looked at her as if he were about t say more. But then, clearing his throat an pulling rather thoughtfully at his lapel, h straightened up, hesitated a moment, an went back to his own cubicle.

"Well, the marines landed," said Mis Moran, behind her. "A chance to blow h top, and he skipped it. Is he coming dow with something or have you taken up jud Gail?"

"I charmed him," said Gail absently. Sh was still a little awed at her new power. Mis Moran laughed, rather excessively, but Ga ignored that. She sat up straight and sauc at her desk and watched for Frank, tha skunk.

Not that she would date Frank, who prob ably wasn't a day over seventeen. Sh wouldn't date him if he were the last man o the whole eighth floor. But she just had a lit tle something she wanted to show Frank. N small boy with a flower that squirted ink eve waited more eagerly for a victim than Gail with her incantation, waited for Frank.

"I'm feeling like a million dollars—American, of course."

THE FRAGRANCE OF YOUTH...

April Showers

au de Toilette
2.00, $1.25
us tax

by CHERAMY perfumer

When he came, it was so easy that it wasn't any fun. Gail made a mental note to use only the first three words of the thing on minors, as she watched him zoom off to buy her a chocolate bar. Out of the side of her eye she saw her boss watching her speculatively. Oops, thought Gail, absently laying out the 3 x 5 cards she was supposed to be filing.

The door to the conference room flew open. Mr. Pruett dashed out. He glared around and his eye fell upon Miss Moran, who rose as if mesmerized. He summoned her with a long, imperative finger. Someone, it seemed, had to take this portfolio up to Radio City at once. Miss Moran offered her entire department on a silver salver.

Gail was considering Mr. Pruett. No, she decided, not the very first day. Maybe never. One would have to work up to Mr. Pruett. For the Mr. Pruetts of this world, perhaps, stronger incantations were needed.

"This one busy?" asked Mr. Pruett. "This one" was Gail. In about three minutes she found herself in the elevator, with the portfolio under one arm, taxi money in her hand, the haziest notion of where to go when she got there, and a firm impression that the portfolio had been overdue two minutes ago. That was life! You mow a person down and he runs an errand for you, and you end up running one for him, simply because he isn't where he ought to be!

On the sidewalk, she stood as far forward as she could without actually drowning, and fixed oncoming Broadway traffic with a commanding eye. Every taxi was full of dry, comfortable passengers. Precious, irreplaceable time passed. A tall man in a raincoat flashed out and stood waiting for a taxi too. He looked very interesting. Gail felt invisible beside him, he was so tall and so hurried. She was sure he would simply climb into the next empty taxi that came, without ever realizing she was trying to get one too. So sure was she that she gave a defeatist half-wave when the empty cab did show up. It swooped to the curb and a man sprang up from nowhere at all, popped into it and slammed the door triumphantly.

"THAT was your taxi!" The tall man spoke accusingly. "If it hadn't been, I'd have gone after it myself."

"I waved at him," she began indignantly. She looked up at him. (Darling, you're wonderful. I love you.) "I hardly wanted to blow kisses at him," she ended seriously.

The tall man was thoughtful, attentive. "No," he said pleasantly. "No, of course you didn't. Relax! I'll get you a taxi!"

It was easy as that. Gail slid into the cab when he opened the door and ignored his hopeful glance. She felt she needed to be alone, just for a few minutes. "Radio City, please," she said quite primly. The car slid out into traffic. "The offices, you know, not the movies."

They stopped at a red light. The driver half turned and fixed her with a fishy eye. "Whaddayamean, offices?" he asked.

(Darling, you're wonderful ——) "I mean offices, just offices," she said in a small voice.

"All right, sis, we'll find you some offices. There's three blocks of Radio City, and we ought to find you some nice offices in all that." He was grinning amiably.

Could Edison have felt any better when he discovered electric lights? Gail doubted it.

There was a spot of indecision at Radio City. The driver did not seem to have his mind on his work. Three times he hesitated, three times a police whistle blew him on. Blow by blow, they approached an entrance.

"I dunno is this what you want," he remarked anxiously.

She paid him with Mr. Pruett's money and dashed for the shelter of the building. A blasé (Darling!) but very pleasant, really, starter told her about the escalator down and go all the way to the end of the hall, and take an escalator up, and turn to the right.... She said she was sure she understood.

"Just come back to me if you get into trouble," he implored her.

As she approached the escalator down something made her glance up, and outside the door, arms on window, pensively watching

(Continued on Page 169)

LITTLE LULU

"Humph—KLEENEX pops up without all that fuss!"*

Little Lulu says... Only Kleenex has the Serv-a-Tissue Box—pull just one double tissue—up pops another! Compare tissues, compare boxes—you'll see why Kleenex is America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Stepping out?
Don't take along acid indigestion
Take TUMS

Any time late hours and overindulgence bring on a spell of acid indigestion, try Tums for sweet relief. Taken like candy mints, Tums neutralize excess acid and settle upset stomach almost instantly. You feel better fast! No baking soda (bicarbonate) in Tums. No danger of overalkalizing; no acid rebound. Get Tums today!

Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS FOR THE TUMMY!

STOMACH DISTRESS 12 TUMS 10¢ EAT LIKE CANDY

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

QUICK RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION

LOOK ... 3 TIMES EASIER TO READ

BY stopwatch test, a Taylor Binoc Thermometer is 3 times easier to read than ordinary fever thermometers. Tells you accurately when fever warns of sickness. Should be in every medicine cabinet. Triple lens construction makes mercury stand out clearly. Special flat shape is easy to grip in natural reading position. Easier to shake down, can't roll, less apt to break. In both oral and rectal types at $2.00 and $2.50. At your drug store, or write Taylor Instrument Companies, Rochester, New York, or Toronto, Canada. Taylor Instruments Mean Accuracy First.

TAYLOR BINOC FEVER THERMOMETER TELLS WHEN TO CALL THE DOCTOR

LAVORIS
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE
REG U.S. PAT OFF.
A PRODUCT OF MERIT
FOR NEARLY 50 YEARS...
Often imitated—never duplicated
DETACHES AND REMOVES GERM-HARBORING FILM FROM MOUTH AND THROAT
Tangy Cinnamon - Clove Flavor
IT TASTES GOOD—IT'S GOOD TASTE

KNITTING YARNS
Finest Quality Yarns at Low Prices
Send 10¢ for Sample Folder to cover mailing cost
SUNRAY YARN HOUSE, Dept. J12
349 Grand St., New York 2, N. Y.

FREE! Maternity Dress FASHION CATALOG
Wonderful new styles ... morning, street, and afternoon fashions that slim your figure cleverly and comfortably, keep you looking trim and pretty. Plan your maternity wardrobe. Free catalog sent by return mail. WRITE TODAY!
VIVI FASHIONS, 136 Liberty St., New York 6, N.Y., Dept. P.

Beautiful Snow Scene

Christmas Cards by Rust Craft

All the rare enchantment of a snow covered countryside...now brought to you on these beautiful Snow Scene Christmas Cards by Rust Craft. Everybody loves a White Christmas...and your friends will be delighted to receive your greetings on these lovely cards. They are reproduced in their natural colors from original paintings by members of the Rust Craft Artists' Guild.

LOOK FOR...ASK FOR...
25 Beautiful Snow Scenes . . . $1 THE BOX

Available only at stores where Rust Craft Cards are sold

RUST CRAFT
Greeting Cards of Character
BOSTON • TORONTO

(Continued from Page 167)

he doorway like a devoted, motorized St. Bernard dog, was her taxi man. She ran over and waved reassuringly to him. He drove off.

"My," said Gail dreamily, riding downward. For the first time since the family had moved from Little Teacup, Pennsylvania, she felt as if she had friends all over town. And so much more scope than back home!

It was one o'clock when she got back to the offices of Caruthers, Burt, Barton and Pruett. She would tell them all was well, she decided, and then go to lunch. It had been a delightful trip, she was thinking irrationally, quite as if she had been abroad for a month, rather than uptown for something over an hour. November was, or could be, a beautiful month. Any month, it began to appear, could be.

Beclouded in her musings, she stepped inattentively out of the elevator into the very arms of Mr. Pruett, for whom elevators always went whichever way he happened to be going at the moment. Bouncing off Mr. Pruett, she caromed into the tweed arms of young Caruthers, whose arms were very much more receptive.

Of course, this sort of thing is bound to make a girl nervous. Gail gulped and reached desperately for her incantation. "Darling——" she heard herself saying—aloud!—in a warm little voice. She turned scarlet and clapped her hands over her mouth, raising agonized eyes to those of young Mr. Caruthers, who was still holding her in his arms, and who was not looking bored at all.

For one shattering instant, time stood still. The echoes of "Darling!" rolled around the hall. The elevator man was turned to salt, and simply held the car door open. Mr. Pruett had suffered the same fate and was transfixed with one foot raised to step into the elevator, his head turned to where his assistant file clerk stood in the embrace of the senior partner's son. If it were ever going to work, her wonderful, wonderful incantation, now would be a perfectly ducky time for it to do so.

Gail took a step toward Mr. Pruett. This had the added advantage of getting her out of young Caruthers' arms. Darling, you're wonderful. I love you! she said very firmly, but this time only in her inmost depths. Aloud she said, "The portfolio reached them in plenty of time for the checkup before broadcast, Mr. Pruett."

"Thank you, Miss Uh. Thank you." Mr. Pruett's voice was approving and mildly paternal. "Coming, Jerome?" He stepped into the elevator.

"No," said Jerry Caruthers, firmly but politely. The elevator door, closing, erased from sight Mr. Pruett's raised eyebrows, and the two of them stood in the momentarily deserted hall, Jerome Caruthers with a quizzical, alert, very interesting expression, and Gail Thompson with an incantation that was going to take her a long, long way. THE END

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

WHETHER or not you believe in a single standard, your children are bound to be influenced by social forces which separate boys and girls in many areas. That's often necessary, and good—but not always. Very young boys can benefit greatly from "typically girlish" activities. And little girls can gain a lot from "tomboy" play. Early drives as widely varied as the expression of affection and the need to exercise the large muscles are exactly the same for both sexes. So when a small boy plays with a doll, far from being a "sissy," he's just showing he's human. And when a girl hits back, it doesn't mean she won't grow up ladylike. As they grow older, they'll both be governed more by cultural attitudes towards their respective sexes. However, their social relationships later in life will be healthier if they aren't forced into a rigid pattern of differentiation in their early years.

"Aren't you glad we're not little girls, daddy? You could never have any fun with us."

somebody on your gift list is hoping you'll see this page

EARLY AMERICAN Old Spice

... and think of her

EARLY AMERICAN Friendship's Garden

... and think of him

EARLY AMERICAN Old Spice FOR MEN

Shulton Rockefeller Center, New York

ALL PRICES PLUS FEDERAL TAX EXCEPT SHAVE MUG

the Gift that lives in the heart of a home,
– and in the heart of a Woman . . .

TOWLE'S OLD COLONIAL

TOWLE
STERLING

A gift of Towle solid silver, whether a single piece or a place setting, is not expensive.

© 1948, Towle Mfg. Co.

1¾ yards of velvet ribbon goes all the way around your head, to tie in a bow beneath your ear. Tuck flowers into bowknot.

Gather each end of 1 yard 18-inch veiling to a point. Take two ¾-yard lengths of ribbon, tie in half-bows covering the gathered ends.

Festivity A-head

BY LEONE SEASTROM

Crisp veiling, colorful ribbon and gay ball fringe quickly turn into feminine hair accessories. With scissors, needle and thread make these new hair trimmings in colors of your own imagination for a pretty holiday look.

Use ½ yard 18-inch veiling, ½ yard 3-inch ribbon. Place ribbon lengthwise on top veiling 9 inches from one side; fold other side over ribbon. Gather ends together with velvet bows.

Take ⅝ yard of 2-inch velvet ribbon. Loop each side 4 inches above end. Tack on ball fringe in matching color as in sketch. Fasten with bobby pins.

Take 26 inches of veiling, turn back 4 inches on either end. Fold lengthwise.

TO SPARKLE CHRISTMAS GIVING

When the Christmas spirit starts to tingle, you can be choosy without jumping your budget. Give American, handmade by skilled American craftsmen. It's one of Fostoria's favorite patterns: the prismatic rhythm catches the eye . . . a friendly colonial beauty, impressive in every setting. So durable, so ideal for everyday use . . . and cheerful for cozy hospitality. And so complete; over 180 open-stock pieces for your selection in the better stores everywhere.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY • • • MOUNDSVILLE • WEST VIRGINIA

QUICK AND EASY FOR TWO

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

DURING the weeks just before and after Christmas, each day has its own excitement. All of it's fun: the shopping; the secret sessions with wrappings and ribbons; decorating the house; baking cookies. There will be parties to go to, parties to give. You'll want quick, easy dinners during the rush period for non-party nights. Keep these menus handy.

Homemade Décor

Stuffed Lamb Patties
Curried Pineapple
Broiled Potato Slices Peas
Fig, Orange and Cheese Salad
Coffee

You've shopped for wreaths. They are too expensive—and you need several. Why not make your own? All the shops that sell Christmas trees have cut evergreen branches that you can buy for next to nothing. It's as easy as this little meal.

STUFFED LAMB PATTIES

Season ¾ pound ground raw lamb with salt and pepper, working into it 1 tablespoon soft butter or margarine. Sauté ½ cup chopped mushrooms and 1 onion, chopped, in 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Make 4 very thin patties of the lamb. Put each 2 together, sandwich fashion, with the sautéed-mushroom-and-onion business in between. Mound the filling in center, not too close to the edges. Press the edges together so stuffing won't come out. Broil 3 minutes on each side, baste with the pan juices when you turn them.

BROILED POTATO SLICES

Cut cold boiled potatoes into ¼—⅓-inch slices. Brush with butter or margarine, sprinkle with salt and broil with lamb, turning once.

CURRIED PINEAPPLE

Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, blend in 1 teaspoon curry powder. Add ⅔ cup crushed pineapple. Cook over moderate heat 5 minutes to blend. Serve with lamb.

FIG, ORANGE AND CHEESE SALAD

Drain canned figs. Split open and stuff with softened cream cheese. Arrange on salad greens with sliced oranges. Serve with French dressing.

After dinner get busy on the wreaths. For frames, bend wire coat hangers into circlets—leaving the hooks as they are. This will make wreaths easy to hang. With thin spool wire—you can buy it in any stationery or hardware store—weave sprays of greens onto the hangers, overlapping greens as you go, so the wire won't show. Ten-inch pieces of wire are easiest to handle. Cones and bright berries may be wired in here and there. Wrap the hook with red or green ribbon. A bow tied at the top will hide the hook.

Shoppers' Luck

Chile in the Snow
Pepper Beans
Celery and Olives
Pears with Marmalade Sauce
Coffee

Even though your husband trusts your taste, there are some Christmas presents for members of his family you'd like him to choose himself. He hates to shop, but agrees to go along with you some evening when the stores are open. Unless you plan to dine out, a quick dinner is called for. If you aren't in a tinsel mood, it's a good quick dinner for any time.

CHILE IN THE SNOW

Add ¼ cup canned tomato sauce to 1 can chile con carne. Heat together and serve in fluffy nests of mashed potatoes.

PEPPER BEANS

Cut off top and remove seeds from 1 green pepper. Cut pepper in strips. Add to 1 package frozen green beans and cook in small quantity of boiling salted water until both are tender—10–12 minutes. Drain. Add 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Season with salt and pepper.

PEARS WITH MARMALADE SAUCE

To ½ cup orange marmalade add 1½ tablespoons lemon juice and the grated rind of ½ lemon. Stir in ¼ cup chopped nuts and thin with 2 tablespoons canned-pear sirup. Arrange drained canned-pear halves in dessert dishes, curved side up. Pour the sauce over the pears and serve.

Cooky Business

Chicken-and-Oyster Stew
Hot Buttered Crackers
Mincemeat Squares
Coffee

…u weren't going to bother to bake Christ-…s cookies this year—but you've had so …ny hints from friends hoping there'd be …ooky box from you coming their way, …u get into it anyway. For several evenings …u've been making up different doughs …t could be chilled and kept ready to …ke. You've devoted this evening to bak-…. It's going to be fun. So that you'll be …e to keep a cool head over a hot oven, …ve just a quick chicken-and-oyster stew … supper with a few of your hot cookies …m the first batch for dessert. Mincemeat …ares are easy to make and can be put in …e oven to bake while you're getting sup-…r. Don't eat too many—there'll be fewer … the boxes. Remember to pack soft and …sp cookies separately.

CHICKEN-AND-OYSTER STEW

…elt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in …eepan. Add 1 pint oysters and ⅔ cup …uor. Let cook just until edges curl. Heat …an cream of chicken soup with ½ cup …lk. Combine oysters with the milk and …icken soup. Season with 1 teaspoon lemon …ce, salt, pepper and a dash of Tabasco; …ve in deep bowls with hot buttered …ackers.

MINCEMEAT SQUARES

…easure ½ cup shortening, 1 cup brown …gar, 1¼ cups flour, ½ teaspoon baking …da, ½ teaspoon salt into a bowl. Work …ixture together with tips of your fingers, a …rk or a pastry blender until mixture is …umbly. Add 1¼ cups quick-cooling rolled …ts. Put half the mixture into a square …allow pan. Pat down. Spread this layer …th 1½ cups canned mincemeat. Sprinkle …th the remaining crumbly mixture. Bake … a 9 x 9 x 2″ pan in a moderate oven, …0° F., 30 minutes. While still warm, cut … squares, and remove from pan when …ol.

Very Important Person

Hot Onion Canapés
Tomato Juice
Shrimps and Rice, Charleston
Your Best Salad
Cheese Crackers Fruit
Coffee

…ou are having an unexpected guest you …ave never met—a very important person, …our husband says. There are shades of …pinion as to what is fitting fare for an im-…romptu guest meal. You don't have time …o prepare an elaborate dinner—you can't …fford to splurge anyway. You've been in a …ackage-wrapping panic all week long. Un-…er these circumstances, my guess is that …our meal will go over just as well if you …hoose a simple-to-make main dish—but …ne that is distinctive. Don't bother with …egetables, but make the very best green …alad that you can make. Precede the meal …with a quick hot canapé and tomato juice—…n the living room for swish. One kind of …really superb natural cheese with toasted …crackers and fresh fruits is just the right …dessert. You don't know this guest's tastes, but with this simple ending you can't go wrong. Serve your little meal with grace. The mood you set for your dinner has much to do with its success.

SHRIMPS AND RICE, CHARLESTON

Buy 1½ pounds fresh shrimps. Peel off shells with your fingers. Remove the black vein along the back of each shrimp. Pour milk over shrimps and let stand 10 minutes. Drain and roll shrimps in flour. Fry the shrimps in 5 tablespoons hot butter or margarine, seasoning well with salt and pepper. Push shrimps to one side of skillet. Add 3 tablespoons flour to the dripping and let brown to a light tan, stirring well with a spoon as it browns. Turn off heat and add 1½ cups water, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, ¾ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon finely minced onion, a dash of Tabasco sauce, a pinch of crumbled bay leaf, a pinch of thyme and one of marjoram and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Reseason with salt and pepper until it tastes just right. Serve on platter with a border of freshly cooked rice and a garnish of parsley. It takes about 1¼ cups raw rice to make enough for 3.

HOT ONION CANAPÉS

Mix 3 tablespoons finely chopped onion with 3 tablespoons mayonnaise. Season with salt, pepper, 2 drops Tabasco sauce and ½ teaspoon paprika. Spread on salted crackers and brown under low broiler heat just a few seconds until mixture bubbles. Makes 10–12.

A Little After Christmas

Cold Turkey
Cumberland Sauce
Celery-and-Mushroom Casserole
Green Salad
Canned-Fig Pudding
Hard Sauce or Lemon Sauce
Coffee

You and yours had Christmas dinner at mother's this year—you usually do. When it came time to leave, you found a neat package of cold sliced turkey tucked in among your Christmas plunder. You'll have it tonight with a wonderful cold sauce and a hot casserole. Steamed canned-fig pudding with hard sauce or lemon sauce will be your dessert—your bow to the season—unless you rated two pieces of mince pie along with the turkey.

CUMBERLAND SAUCE

Put ⅓ cup currant jelly, the juice of ½ lemon and the grated rind of 1 orange in a saucepan. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar, ½ teaspoon ginger and ½ teaspoon paprika. Heat until jelly melts and blends. Cool. Serve with cold sliced turkey, ham or roast lamb.

CELERY-AND-MUSHROOM CASSEROLE

Cut enough outside stalks of celery into ½-inch pieces to make 3 cups. Cook in salted water until tender—this takes only a few minutes. Drain. Add ½ can undiluted condensed mushroom soup and 1 small can peas, drained. Grease a small casserole. Pour in half of celery mixture. Cover with ¼ cup grated American cheese. Pour in rest of celery mixture. Cover with another ¼ cup grated cheese. Top with buttered cracker crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., until bubbly and brown. (If you have them on hand, sauté ¼ cup sliced fresh or canned mushrooms and add to the celery before combining with the soup.)

Canapé "Creations" anyone can make:

Olive pimiento cheese spread — Smoky cheese spread and bacon
Relish cheese spread — RITZ CRACKERS

. . . they're so easy! Just use prepared spreads and RITZ CRACKERS —then be fanciful as you please with the garnish! How pretty your "creations" are . . . and how tasty! For RITZ CRACKERS give a crisp-and-tangy base . . . bring a richer satisfaction to the spreads! Serve your canapes with clam and tomato juice, half and half . . . or any beverage you wish. Your guests will say appetizers never were so appetizing! However you serve RITZ CRACKERS, spread or plain, they have a delicious flavor no other cracker can match!

NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS RITZ — BUT RITZ!

NEW-EASY OVEN-TOASTED RECIPE "FRENCH FRIED" ALMONDS

Favorite munching delicacy of California motorists

CALIFORNIA STYLE

Blue Diamond Almonds
Butter or Salad Oil
Salt

IF YOU have ever motored the highways of California, then you've gone back home yearning for more of those delicious and crisp "French fried" almonds you bought at roadside stands. Now you can proudly (and easily) make "French fried" almonds in your home to the delight of your family and your friends.

Place the Blue Diamond Almonds in shallow baking pan with 1 teaspoon butter or salad oil per cup of almonds. For the real "California style" flavor, use them unblanched. Roast in slow oven (300° F.) 25 to 30 min., stirring occasionally. Spread on paper to cool. Sprinkle with salt while hot.

But just be sure to insist on Blue Diamond Almonds. Then you know you are getting California's very finest almonds selected for plumpness and flavor; and the Blue Diamond Brand cellophane bag protects their crunchy crispiness, and keeps the almonds sweet and fresh.

BLUE DIAMOND ALMONDS BRAND

From the Valleys of California

Sold in cellophane bags: shelled and unshelled

California Almond Growers Exchange
Sacramento, California

FOR EASIER BAKING

WAXTEX
HEAVY WAXED PAPER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MARATHON CORPORATION
MENASHA, WISCONSIN

KNITTING YARNS

POSTAGE FREE! MONEY BACK GUARANTEE! Direct from our own great factories.
YARN HEADQUARTERS, Dept. 'L'
718 CHESTNUT ST., PHILA. 6, PA.

SEND TODAY FOR NEW FREE SAMPLE BOOKLET

"I'm CHORE GIRL—the original knitted copper pot cleaner. I don't rust... splinter... rough-up hands. BUT, I do whisk messy, crusty pots and pans sparkling clean in a jiffy! I'm 10¢ at dealers everywhere. Look for my picture on the tag."

Chore Girl

Metal Textile Corp., Roselle 11, N. J.

P.S. "GOLDEN FLEECE is back. If your dealer says 'NO,' send 12c and his name and address for an 'emergency ration' till I see him" C.G.

When it comes to making gravy!

Do it the easy thrifty way

Taste tells!

GRAVY MASTER makes it taste and look good too
GET A BOTTLE—TRY IT—COMPARE

MAINE PIONEERS

(Continued from Page 154)

on his $1800 Old Town land. She considered it a vital investment in their security. Unprecedented in the annals of son-and-mother-in-law relations is the fact that Stan once embraced Mrs. Harris so effusively he broke three ribs.

It seems that Pat is cast in the same heroic maternal mold. In the cabin, her day starts at six. Usually she wears a printed-cotton dress, or a raggedy pair of slacks. Tall, well-built, clear-eyed, she has luminous skin, auburn hair curled shoulder-length, and a dreamy, aristocratic look. She is like some fragile high-born British beauty who looks regal in Edwardian décolleté. Pat never wears make-up; she never has had to. But by now she looks as if a rest might help.

On Stan's rolling wooded property there are a pond, the big cedar-and-pine log cabin, a barn, an outhouse, a triple garage, a run-down icehouse, a woodshed, the cement-lined well that alternately freezes and runs dry, and three tiny cottages. There's enough wood to heat the cabins "for the next two generations," according to Stan, and there's "meat running all over the place." The family can trap beaver on its pond, and figure-eight there winters. The Crawfords don't do any farming; the keystone of their homestead is Stan's business, insulating Maine homes with rock wool.

In one of the Crawford cottages lives Stan's father, who long since drifted out of the law, worked at a variety of desultory jobs, and now makes 20 per cent of whatever insulation he sells for his son. He averages around $50 a week in commissions. In the two other cabins are Jerry, Stan's assistant, and half brother, Jack. The three men often eat over at Pat's. This she resents as another drain on the uncertain family income, and it is the only hint of friction between the Crawfords.

Mornings, while Pat starts breakfast over her minute gasoline camp stove, the children tumble out of bed and dress, with much chortling, and joint assistance to Wendy, aged 2½. They hang up their pajamas, and haul their dusty bedding back into shape. Terry (Terrayne Leigh), 8, is the soft, responsible eldest. She helps put the coffee on. Breakfast for the children includes fruit, cereal, bacon and eggs, toast and milk, consumed out of miscellaneous crockery, such as mixing bowls and baking dishes. And there's strong coffee for the men.

BEFORE the school bus comes, at 7:40 A.M., there is general inspection and "detoying" in the cabin. Whereupon the three eldest girls grab lunch sandwiches and dash off. They are Terry, Patty (Patricia Anne), 7, roguish, agile and engaging, and Sharry (Charleine Stanley), 6 and pixyish, with a wide forehead and round eyes, who looks like a serene Botticelli beauty.

Pat is a little concerned about the country school—she's afraid the girls aren't learning fast enough. She'd love to have time to teach them herself, supplementing schooling with the Calvert home-education system missionaries use.

After the eldest are gone, there's a pause for another round of coffee before Stan and the men rumble off to work in his truck, a 1937 bottle-green Reo. Then its "turn on the radio loud and grab the broom," and the five rooms, with their spare wooden furniture, are swept relatively clean, the dishes washed with scant well water heated in a teakettle, the potbellied wood stove stoked, the trash buried. Of minor assistance are the two smallest—except for the new baby—Christy (Christine Carol), 4, big-eyed and mournful, who had rheumatic fever once, and Wendy (Wendalyn Louise), who is all brown eyelashes, fumbling gestures and glances by turn coy and petulant. After housework, these two are bundled out into the snow to play.

THOUGH Pat has a washing machine, there was no water to run it last winter. So she farmed out the huge family wash to a kind but noncommunicative neighbor, Bertha, for $3 a week. But when Bertha got sick and the well froze and the temperature stuck around zero, the laundry lay dismally stacked up on the back porch for weeks. And Pat made do with her two pails of freezing well water (twenty-two quarts) a day for dishes, cooking, drinking and baths—and the kids looked considerably short of well starched.

Dishing up meals for what varies between seven and ten takes almost all day, for Pat. Mealtimes mostly hinge on the state of repair of the truck, and when Stan gets home with the groceries. He picks them up on his way home, buying at a friend's store, where he can get credit. But Pat wishes they could manage the chain stores, where she could save five to six dollars a week. And she'll do the marketing herself, when they get their ancient undertaker's Packard registered. "We got the car the only year we didn't have a baby," she reminisced.

As it is, groceries for feeding up to ten come to about $30 a week. "The budget took a nose dive years ago," Pat remarked.

Around six, when Stan gets home evenings, he may lug in some firewood, or he'll stalk down to the flooded basement in hip boots and haul out some vegetables for dinner—Pat canned 350 quarts of beets, carrots, corn, applesauce, jellies and jams last summer.

The men wash their hands in the communal basin. The children sit down to grace, and dinner is on. "The kids are crazy about anything they can slurp down," says Pat—"soup, or stew, or spaghetti—anything swimming in sauce." They have their own cookbook, and dish up creditable cookies, dropped eggs on toast, and fudge. Stan has a wild woodsman's taste in food. With practically no provocation, he will elaborate on how to cook "beanhole beans," partridge "à la clay," hulled corn, or porcupine liver.

After dinner, if it's Saturday night, the girls get their curls pinned up, and have a raucous bath in the kitchen. As there's no tub, it's in an old soft-drink cooler with a galvanized-tin lining. Other nights the girls listen to the family favorites, Lone Ranger or Blondie, before bedtime and prayers.

Evenings, Pat and Stan will sit around the wood stove and rehash the day's doings, in the wide-open West—that's for the Harry Schwartzes, of Sheridan, Wyoming. Although Harry's income, as a young lawyer, is only $3300 a year, he can immediately realize dreams for his profession and his family that, in a big city, might take years to achieve.

(Continued on Page 177)

Sheridan's way of living keeps the cost of living low. On a G. I. loan, he bought his ranch-style home for $7500—in the East it would have cost at least $20,000. His wife, unworried by dictates of fashion, can hold the clothes budget to $200 a year. There are a good climate for health, good schools for his two children, and the Big Horn Mountains provide a vacation paradise—right at the Schwartzes' back door.

To meet a man and a town going places together, read—

BY STRUTHERS BURT

How America Lives
The January JOURNAL

If you like to keep guests guessing...

How does she make such elegant desserts?

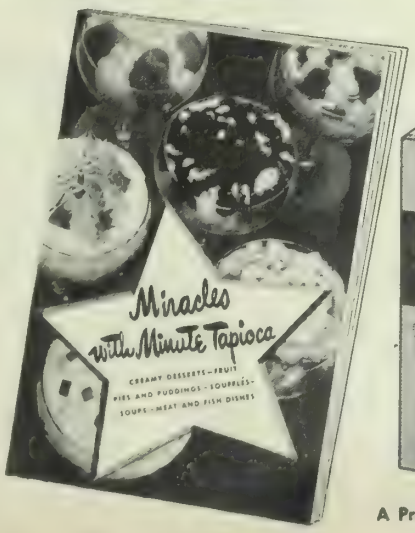
Yes, just watch guests sit up and take notice when they see and taste your glorious Minute Tapioca creations!

Glamorous TAPIOCA CREAMS—the real old-fashioned kind that made dessert-at-Grandma's an extra-special treat! Shimmering FRUITED TAPIOCAS—luscious jewels of puddings that look like pampered darlings—but are actually so easy to fix! Thrifty, too! Scrumptious BAKED TAPIOCA Desserts—the fabulous favorites that make guests ask, "How do you do it?"

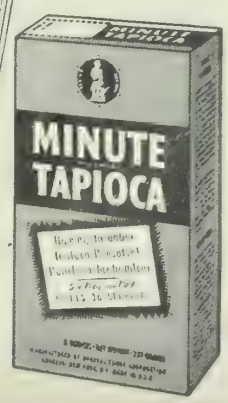
You'll find page after page of these inspired desserts in the wonderful, new, free Recipe Book, "Miracles With Minute Tapioca."

How does she keep her fruit pies from running?

You bet eyebrows will raise and lips smack when your well-behaved fruit pies appear. For everyone knows it takes a miracle to keep the juice where it belongs—in the pie. And you'll know the miracle is Minute Tapioca when you follow the recipes in the superb, new, free book offered below!



How does she keep her omelettes and soufflés from falling?



For years cooks have wondered what miracle it takes to keep omelettes and soufflés from sitting down before the guests. The miracle is Minute Tapioca! For the highest, widest, most delicious omelettes and soufflés that ever won a compliment—see the recipes in this new, free book!

How does she keep her meat loaves from crumbling?

Guests will think you have the gift of magic when they see how beautifully your juicy meat loaves slice without crumbling! And they'll wonder how you get such smooth, flavor-blended stews, soups, and casseroles. But you'll know Minute Tapioca is the answer to all these culinary feats when you use this new, free recipe book!

Get your FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca"

Veteran Cooks! And Rookie Cooks! Here's the recipe book you've been looking for!

24 pages of tempting new ideas for Desserts—Pies—Meat Loaves and Fish Dishes—Egg Dishes—Soups—Casseroles—and so many other luscious dishes. Never before have you seen such a collection of wonderful things to eat!

Send for your FREE copy of this gorgeously illustrated book today . . . "Miracles with Minute Tapioca." See how Minute Tapioca can help build your reputation as an ultra-special cook!

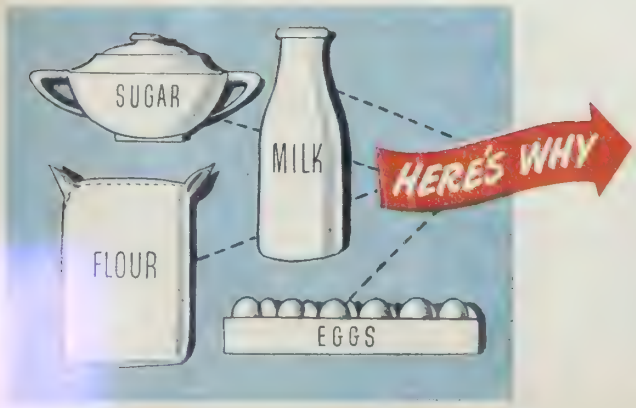
A Product of General Foods

QUICK! SEND FOR YOUR FREE BOOK TODAY!

I.D

MINUTE TAPIOCA
Department S
Battle Creek, Michigan.

Please send me a FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca."



Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Offer expires June 1, 1949. Good only in U.S.A.

YOU NEED SOMETHING THAT A BAKER MAKES TO MAKE EACH MEAL COMPLETE

NO OTHER FOOD gives you such a wholesome combination of good foods as do the things your baker bakes.

The milk and eggs and flour and sugar and other good things they're made with, make delicious bakery foods mighty good for you as well as wonderfully good eating.

That's why you need something that a baker makes to make each meal complete: completely satisfying, completely nourishing.

THE BAKERS OF AMERICA

. . . who do your baking for you with the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

Buy it Baked!

Copyright, American Bakers Association, 1948, Chicago

(Continued from Page 174)

ead, thumb over the mail-order catalogue, tune in on an occasional sermon on he air. Reading favorites: anything by Clarence Budington Kelland and Margaret Landon's novel, Anna and the King of Siam. The kids are on Alice in Wonderland in their Book of Knowledge. Pat will knit, sew (she made thirty small dresses last year), darn, or type a letter (her writing is as spirited as her language). Pat's sewing for the girls supplements Mrs Harris' unending stream of clothing for the children. Her own clothes Pat makes over, and clings to some high-school-vintage things, and wears Mrs. Harris' hand-me-downs (Mrs. Harris buys one size larger, for eventual relay to Pat). Stan will lounge in his blue jeans (he hasn't had a new suit for five years) and his beloved Indian moccasins. He smoked a pipe till he "lost his pipe tooth." They'll talk a little politics (both are self-styled "liberals"—for Maine). Once a month, about, they'll get Bertha to baby-sit while they take in a movie. They'll discuss game prospects, and plot out vacations—Canada this year, with camping out for the girls, and Alaska next.

But when Mrs. Harris is up, they'll usually chew over the finances.

Last year, Stan's income was $3850, and with his six female dependents, he was exempted from any income tax. There are no savings yet. Home-improvement and insulation jobs gross Stan about $500 for three days' work. Operating costs, his crew of three, truck repair and materials eat up all but about $40. The big struggle is for Stan to stay in business by himself, with his name on the truck, and not be swallowed up by the concern from which he leases the truck, as a contractor. He hopes to buy it, but that would take $2100. And to complete payments on his land, Stan must manage $400 a year for three more years, plus 6 per cent.

Last year, Mrs. Harris managed to lend the Crawfords $1100—$300 toward the first down payment on the cabins, $700 toward owning the truck, and $100 for Stan's first purchase of his rock-wool materials. To do it, she had to borrow against her future earnings: she got $1500 from a local bank, ostensibly to improve her rooming house, and then lent most of the money to the kids. She is repaying the bank at the slow rate of $47.91 a month, and figures it will take two more years. From boarders and roomers she collects some $200 a month, and supplements occasionally by running out on a lucrative baby-nursing job, while her sons deal with the roomers.

Mrs. Harris considers her loan to the Crawfords part of what she might have spent for Pat's "college money." Stan has already repaid part. He plans, reciprocally, to drive down to Medford and insulate the boardinghouse. Mrs. Harris says she never keeps tabs on what Stan owes. She knows he's the kind of salesman who chronically has more jobs than he can handle. "Mum's always there with the pocketbook," Pat puts it.

Here's about the way a year's spending goes in the Crawford family:

Food (for roughly seven) Bills averaged only $25 a week, because of Pat's canning	$1300.00
Car Upkeep—including gas, oil and repairs, at about $10 a week. Truck isn't counted in, as it is leased	520.00
House Mortgage and Interest (rent) Stan must pay $400 a year, plus 6 per cent of the unpaid balance, to complete payment on his $1800 land, in three years.	472.00
Car Mortgage, annual (Stan borrowed $400 on the car in 1947.)	312.00
Medical and Dental—eventually, they want a group-health plan	200.00
Taxes—car, hunting, poll, property and livestock	106.00
Installments—washing machine is paid up, but refrigerator payments start at same rate of $10 a month	120.00
Clothes—for all the Crawfords. Mrs. Harris makes most of the children's	100.00
Insurance—Life—Stan has a $1500 policy, and pays $3.36 a month	40.00
Car—fire and theft	70.00
Property — the Crawfords can't insure it for the full $1800 value until it has more improvements—now it's worth $1200	20.00
Recreation—at $2 a week	104.00
Magazines, papers, books.	62.00
Phone—just installed, now wired in	50.00
Gas (bottled)	96.00
Fuel—two annual cords of wood, as Stan doesn't have time to cut all he needs	30.00
Electricity	48.00
Children's Allowances—covers kickback for their ice cream, movies, crayons. They keep half.	65.00
Contributions—Red Cross, Community Chest, etc.	25.00
Miscellaneous, hardware, etc.	90.00
Total.	$3830.00

Twin Fawns

BY ETHEL JACOBSON

Motionless there in the road they stood
Profiled against the cottonwood,
Heads turned toward us in grave surprise,
All velvet ears, all wild dark eyes.
Then with a bouncing pogo lope
One soared incredibly up the slope,
Stopping to view from a rocky height
The menace below, then he skipped from sight.

The other fawn paused a heartbeat more
For the promptings of inborn bitter lore
Until, though no movement stirred the air,
Even as we watched—he wasn't there.
The road was empty. But under the tree,
Where we pretended we couldn't see,
In the scanty thicket two shadows froze—
The fawn's crouched close to the guarding doe's.
They watched the menace until we passed
And the road was clean of our taint at last,
And safely once more gentleness stood
And was comforted under the cottonwood.

Maybe evenings, the family will reminisce about their gypsy past, and the bucolic days when they camped along Maine streams and potato fields, and Stan sold bottled gas, and the minister came to dinner, and a cow smacked into their tent.

And then there was the memorable journey to California, in 1946, when Wendy was three weeks old. A doctor had warned Pat about a shadow on her lung—so Stan headed west for a drier climate, and a radar job. Mrs. Harris tagged along for the ride, and to cure her arthritis. There were five carsick children, two parents, a grandmother and one cat in an undertaker's Packard, dragging a debilitated half-ton rented luggage trailer. They weathered road washouts and eight blowouts. Across the desert, Wendy's milk soured. She survived, swigging Pepsi-Cola. So did the dehydrated cat. Everywhere people turned them down for shelter—too many children—so they slept in the car. Money ran out in California, and Mrs. Harris stayed on and took a child-nursing job (at $50 a week) to help out with ready cash. Meanwhile, her 16-year-old son Dicky was managing the roomers.

An informal tally of the jobs Mrs. Harris has had, during her 56 years, includes, at 6, tending neighbors' children, at fifty cents a week; making dolls, in Boston, at 9, to pay for her music lessons; selling ribbons made by a blind lady; collecting stray dogs and cats for the Animal Rescue League, for an extra meal; trimming hats; department-store purchasing and advertising; making household furniture; door-to-door selling fudge, cakes, electric washers and aprons to make enough to clothe her children; managing an underwear concern; child nursing; night scrubbing and cleaning; house-paint jobs; light laundry; fancy dressmaking; demonstrating kitchenware; running a Comptometer; renting rooms; first aid during World War I; radar work in World War II; teaching basketwork; wallpapering and improving her boardinghouse; and now, between church work and feeding five at Medford, clothing the Crawford grandchildren. And at 56, she's intrigued by an offer of free lessons to act in television.

"I struggled to keep my home and have things nice because I never had them," Mrs. Harris explains today. Once, when her house was almost under the auctioneer's hammer, she threw the auctioneer out of her front hall, "folding tables, auctioneer's flags and all," and she and her four sons saved $75 a month to avert foreclosure. As a little girl, she says, "I never remember having a room of my own. I slept on trunks, couches, the floor, chairs, and on top of a piano the night mother died—so she wouldn't be alone." Toward her children today, Mrs. Harris' attitude is protective—to "shield them from the kind of life I had."

Stan and Pat realize Mrs. Harris' impulse to live vicariously, and energize other people's lives, is a product of her own loneliness. "Mom has hated to see things get away from her," Stan explains. Mother and daughter are both independent, tender and impulsive by turns; Stan says they tend to "build bridges with skyhooks." Pat is the prouder. Occasionally they quarrel. "Her words hurt, but her deeds heal," Pat puts it. But progressively, as their problems parallel, Pat and her mother grow more together. "I didn't know how much mum meant to me till last year," Pat now acknowledges.

Golda Harris' Amazonian fortitude comes out most when she's talking about childbirth. She says she had Pat quietly, by herself, when the doctor was delayed by a storm. "I just closed the door and had the baby," she explains. The doctor arrived an hour later. "I was getting ready to cut the cord myself. There I was, sitting in a corner of the bed, laughing like the dickens," she chuckles. She adds that she's never been sick with a child, never had an anesthetic. Years later, when Pat was having her first in a cabin by the road in Saco, Maine, Mrs. Harris was on hand. Again, the doctor wasn't on the spot. "Well, honey, there's just three of us here, you, God and me," she told Pat. "I took the sheet and tied it to the top of the bed so she'd have something to pull on. I smothered her with ether when the time came, and delivered a nine and a half pound girl—Terry."

Perhaps Pat's most conspicuous success as a mother is the harmony of her children. "Considerateness" was what Pat most valued in sizing up Stan as a husband, and he liked her "protective" quality—though she squirms at that.

"No matter what happens to that guy, he lands on his feet somehow," Pat wrote her mother one grim time last year. "After this winter I think Stan could hit me with a paddle every day and I'd still think he was wonderful. I have never in my life seen such patience. Everyone is on his neck hollering for money and he just bows politely and says

Cooking rice is not an art, Known only to Chinese,

Our bright girls buy RIVER BRAND, And serve it up with ease!

Many meals and many kinds of meals out of every package. Soup, main course and dessert dishes—all are easy to prepare and delicious.

HOW TO COOK RICE RIGHT

save time and fuss . . . retain nutrients
. . . use this simple, tested recipe

1 cup RIVER BRAND or CAROLINA BRAND Rice, 1 tsp. salt, 1½ cups cold water. Wash thoroughly in 5 or 6 waters and place in 3 qt. pot with tight fitting cover. Place over moderate flame and bring to vigorous boil. This should take 8-10 minutes. When steam and foam begin to escape, turn flame down lower and cook the rice until tender—about 20 minutes. All water should be absorbed. Keep in warm place until ready to serve. Serves 5 to 6.

This tested recipe and 6 others on every package of River Brand and Carolina Brand Rice.

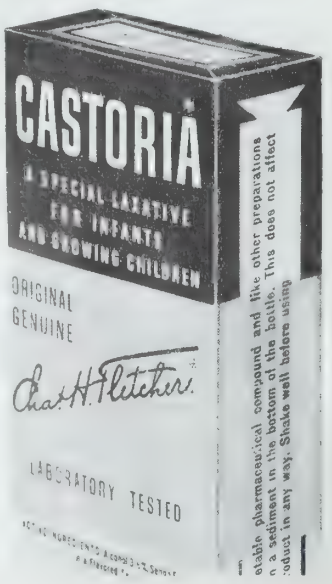
The wonderful new rice you've been hearing about.

RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.

When baby's upset because of "Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your baby frets and fusses ...when she's upset because of "Childhood Constipation" ... it's wise to know what to do. Give her Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drugstore today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

when he gets it they will, that's all he can promise. God love him and give him a break soon. Don't worry about my praying, darling. The Lord and I have always been on speaking terms. He sees to it that we all stay alive and able to take what's handed out to us, and that, after all, is what counts. Being able to hold your head up no matter who wants to push it down."

The children are luminous examples of this reciprocal tenderness. Pat never raises her voice, never fails to return a smile. "Discipline with love" is her creed. There's no pairing off among the girls, no "gimme" about toys and clothes. When they go downtown on an occasional shoe foray, the clerk in the dry-goods store which has served three generations of Crawfords calls them "perfect ladies." They all shared anticipation of the child to come—they just knew she'd be a girl. When Wendy was born, they converged on the infant to do the diaper changing, and "couldn't wait till she wet" to snatch the old one off. "Sharry, you should so pick up the papers, mommy can't, you know why," Patty scolded. "You never saw such consideration," Pat wrote her mother. The girls are even interested in the procreative possibilities of Smoky, the wildcat.

But they're normal, raucous girls. Patty will crow with glee about "new shoes tomorrow"; Christy is vain about her curls; Terry will sound shocked if they call names at school, but come home with some mildly ribald couplets; Sharry learns coquetry from the boy next to her on the school bus; Wendy will exult over a new dustpan.

The children have had a steady flow of croupy coughs and fevers, in the subzero Maine winter. All have had scarlet fever but Wendy, who had mumps twice and bronchial pneumonia; and Christy, who had rheumatic fever. Last winter, Pat kept them all out of school several weeks for a heart check. Pat's sleep is fitful, and she always "has one ear open" for a sneeze.

Talking to the Crawfords about their future plans is like talking to a Soviet commissar about prospects for his village—the present and the future intermingle. Glibly, Pat will discuss a larger bedroom for six girls, with a bureau and cupboard for each. Stan and Pat's priorities include an indoor toilet, a fireplace, an artesian well, a modern kitchen, an orchard, a garden, sun porches, a home freezer, maybe a tennis court. Pat has blueprinted in her mind and crayoned on paper a three-year garden plan, with prices and growing seasons of items like black Tartarian cherries, mock orange and scabiosa. Stan's priorities involve "paying for the truck and the place in a hurry," general repair, insulating Mrs. Harris' home, some sheep, chickens and a milk cow. They got goats last spring, which promised to lop $10 off the weekly milk bill.

Then, there's the dream. Eventually, Stan expects to switch from insulation to home design and manufacture of children's toys. He'll build a Puritan log stockade out front for his children—a regular playland. And, still using wood from the place, he'll make toys for sale, some mechanical, some wood, and supplement them with basketwork of the Indians in the Old Town Penobscot reservation.

"With selling, you're on edge all the time," Stan figures, and a good permanent balance is to live in the woods. "There's no quieter place than here. Every once in a while I get sick of breathing everyone else's air, got to get some of my own." Pat, too, likes the idea that the children can "get to see the very beginnings of life, from the first green sprig. When we were little," she recalls, "we always hung around the railroad station."

I asked Pat what she'd choose if someone gave her a vacation—bright lights? clothes? the sophisticated life?

"My idea of a vacation," she answered without batting an eyelash, "is to hire a log cabin somewhere with a maid who didn't speak English. She would get my meals prepared for me—I wouldn't want to see her at all. And I'd want plenty of time to swim, fish, ride, play the piano and ride horses, and no one to bother me." THE END

DIAPERS that are KNITTED TO FIT YOUR BABY

PANT-EASE diapers stay in place on the most active infant and the elasticity of this specially knitted cotton fabric keeps your baby comfortable at all times

No Folding—No Seams—No Loose Ends to slip, hang down or become bunched where they do not belong - - - -

EVEN DADDY CAN CHANGE
Pant-Ease diapers

Highly absorbent—Easy to launder and the double thickness with open ends, permits hanging so the air can circulate through each garment and — DRY IN LESS TIME

Pant-ease
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
DIAPERS
are used and approved by Doctors, Nurses and thousands of modern Mothers
See Pant-ease at Department Stores and Shops or Send for FREE LITERATURE
SAMPLE GARMENT 25¢
PANT-EASE INFANT WEAR CO. DEPT. 515 ARCADE, N.Y.

BABY COMING ?

Start right with this improved, easy-to-clean, Hygeia nursing unit. Fewer parts—just nipple, bottle, and cap. Prepare full day's formula at one time. Only necessary to remove cap when feeding. Cap keeps nipples germ-free. Handy for out-of-home feeding. Useful as container for baby's other foods. Famous breast-shaped nipple has patented airvent to reduce "windsucking." Sold at your druggist's complete as illustrated or parts separately.

Also Available in 4 oz. Size

Hygeia
NURSING BOTTLES NIPPLES WITH CAPS

CONSULT YOUR DOCTOR REGULARLY

A lovable pony looking real enough to whinny. Three brilliantly-colored horses on the drum give the galloping movement of merry-go-round steeds to the music of a hidden chime. Pony Chime and 16 other Fisher-Price Toys with their gay colors and unique action all endear themselves to little owners.

Ask for Fisher-Price Toys at your favorite toy department

FISHER-PRICE TOYS, Inc., East Aurora, N. Y.

FREE- Colorful folder showing 17 Fisher-Price Toys with catchy rhymes. Or enclose 10c for our big 16-page catalog showing the toys in full color. It's worth more than this purely as a picture book.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____ L12

FISHER-PRICE TOYS

PHOTO BY ROBERT S. BROWN

It is difficult to tell the symptoms of beginning pneumonia from those of a cold. Take no chances, call a doctor.

Pneumonia: Still a Challenge to Mothers

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

A FEW weeks ago, the seven-year-old son in a family I know was ill for several days with a severe cold. Then, on a Friday afternoon, the sick boy developed a cough and complained of pain in his chest. His fever shot up to 104°.

Saturday morning, the doctor found evidence of congestion in the child's lungs, and he was taken to the hospital. When the diagnosis of lobar pneumonia was confirmed, penicillin was given immediately and continued all day and all night—an injection every three or four hours.

On Sunday morning the child's temperature was normal, the pain was gone, and only a trace of the cough remained. As a safeguard, the penicillin injections were continued for another two or three days, and the child was kept in the hospital for five days. But the first day told the story: In most cases today, pneumonia that is diagnosed early can be knocked out completely within a few hours!

Nevertheless, the exceptions are frequent and serious enough to make constant watchfulness against pneumonia a necessity still. Take the case of another family I know about: This time it was the young husband and father who became ill. Cold, cough, chest pains, chills and fever followed one another in the typical pneumonia fashion. As soon as the lungs were definitely involved, the young man was taken to a hospital.

From here on the story is tragically different. In this case, penicillin had no effect on the course of the disease, which became steadily worse. Sulfonamides, streptomycin, oxygen and other measures were tried—all without result. A week after he was admitted to the hospital, the young man died. Post-mortem examination showed both lungs filled with infected fluid as a result of the disease. The pneumonia organisms in this case, for no reason that the doctors could determine, had resisted every method of treatment known to medical science. This happens in a certain number of cases—fortunately very few.

The fact that pneumonia deaths are rare today, where they were comparatively common only a few years ago, will not comfort the parents whose child gets pneumonia, if it proves to be one of the rare cases. Prevention is the mother's primary responsibility, and the first rule of prevention is to avoid excesses of all kinds. Anything that lowers resistance, such as exposure, chilling, fatigue, overexertion, lack GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

"Don't you want to hang up your stocking, Mom?"

BABY: What's the fuss, Mom? You said you'd like to lead a baby's life. Even with a stocking to hang up, you're complaining!

MOM: But I'm so uncomfortable! You've picked me up and put me down all day long. I've wiggled and twisted and squirmed. And my poor skin just can't take any more!

BABY: My skin feels the same way, Mom! Now you see why I want Santa to bring me some Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder!

MOM: I'll speak to Santa personally! But honey—why both?

BABY: It takes both to keep a baby smooth, Mom. Gentle Johnson's Baby Oil after my bath and at every diaper change, to help prevent what my doctor calls "urine irritation." Mm—I'll feel good!

And plenty of other times, I'll thank you for soothing sprinkles of Johnson's Baby Powder, to help chase chafes and prickles and keep me snuggly as a Christmas teddy bear!

MOM: Angel, from here in, you're a ★ Johnson's Baby!

BABY: That's the Christmas spirit, Mom. Let's get that stocking up where Santa can't miss it!

The gift to gladden a little girl's heart

This Christmas, give a little girl a real thrill—give one of these dainty, smartly-styled PEEWEE expansion bracelet and locket sets. Expertly made, with engraved or cloisonne lockets, each set comes in a handsome plastic pocketbook that resembles Mommy's . . . $8.95 plus tax, at leading jewelers. Bruner-Ritter, Inc., Fifth Avenue, New York.

Bretton
peewee
EXPANSION BRACELET and LOCKET SETS

PEEWEE—made by the makers of famous BRETTON watch bands

FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS Angel!

All the adorable "new look" loveliness, impeccable workmanship and perfect fit NANNETTE is known for highlight these captivating holiday Toddler Frocks. Just a pair from our joyous collection of dream originals—perfect for Christmas gifting. About $4.00.

Other Babe & Toddler Frocks, from 9 mos. to size 3. About $3.00. At better stores everywhere.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — COMMENDED by PARENTS MAGAZINE

© NANNETTE MFG. CO., INC., PHILA., PA

of proper rest or sleep, inadequate diet or a cold or other mild infection, may predispose the child to pneumonia when pneumococci, the germs that cause the disease, are present.

These germs, of which there are many different types, are easily communicated from person to person and may, in fact, be carried and transmitted to others by people who are not themselves ill. Doctors who are in public-health work have a saying about pneumonia: "Wherever there's a crowd, there are pneumococci!"

Nevertheless, it isn't sensible or fair for mothers to keep their children home from school, playground or properly ventilated movies on that account. Healthy, robust children are not often infected; the mother's duty is to protect her child by building health from within, rather than by isolating him in an attempt to protect against outside exposures.

In spite of all precautions, however, pneumonia may still come to the healthy baby or child. When the disease strikes, the success of treatment, even with today's miracle-working chemicals, depends directly on the promptness with which it is undertaken. It is difficult to tell the symptoms of beginning pneumonia from those of a cold. Under ordinary conditions pneumonia starts with fever, at first about 101°, but rapidly rising to 103° or more. There is usually coughing and the child may vomit. The breathing soon becomes more rapid than normal. If the attack is severe, there may be blueness of the lips and fingernails.

A cold does not start so suddenly as pneumonia, but it is not unusual for a child to have a temperature of 102° or 103°, particularly if there is infection of the tonsils or throat. However, a child with a cold may play normally and not look particularly ill; the child with pneumonia really looks sick and acts sick. If there is any question at all about the nature of the illness, let the doctor decide, and the sooner the better.

> Aul ov us complain ov the shortness ov life, yet we all waste more time than we uze. —JOSH BILLINGS.

When there is any chance of pneumonia, never wait to call the doctor!

Another form of the disease, bronchopneumonia, affects the upper part of the lungs and the bronchial passages, rather than the lobes. Bronchopneumonia is likely to be more gradual in its onset, and to last longer, even when treatment is early and successful, than the lobar type. Following bronchopneumonia, general body weakness and coughing may persist for three or four or even six weeks or more. This is a dangerous period, and I have often seen relapses to the more acute stage when mothers were careless about guarding against overexertion.

In either type of pneumonia, treatment in the hospital, where every needed facility is quickly available, is usually safer and generally preferable. However, when a hospital bed is not available or when the doctor decides it isn't needed, the mother who is nursing the sick child herself should remember that rest and comfort are the objectives of nursing care. The doctor will prescribe drugs to relieve pain and coughing and promote rest, as well as to combat the disease itself. Mother's task is to get organized so that the necessary washing, feeding (soups and bland foods at first), changing of linen and toilet care can be accomplished with a minimum of disturbance to the child.

Once convalescence starts, the goal is to rebuild strength as rapidly as possible. The convalescent youngster is likely to be irritable and restless, and ingenuity is needed to keep him within planned periods of rest and play that will allow adequate time for recuperation without strain. Plenty of milk, cereals, fresh vegetables and fruits and lean meat will help restore strength. All renewed activity should be checked carefully with the doctor, and the child recovering from pneumonia who shows any signs of fatigue or a returning cold should be put to bed at once. THE END

A Christmas Present Children Will Adore

What to give—toys? clothes? Here's a combination of both! Sweatshirts that children love to wear for play or school!

Their favorite heroes—Little Beaver, Gene Autry, Captain Marvel, Red Ryder or Dick Tracy are gaily printed on the front. These sweatshirts wash easily and need no ironing.

Sizes from 4 to 14. Little Beaver, 2 to 8. All are spring-needle knit for quality. In white or colors, about $1.25 at most chain and department stores. Or write—

J. T. FLAGG KNITTING CO., INC.
Makers of High-grade Knit Goods
Mills: Florence, Alabama
New York Office: 93 Worth Street

TUMBLE-PROOF For Precious Baby

BABEE-TENDA*
Safety Chair for Feeding or Play

Banish fear of falls. Your lively young squirmer is snugly secure in this sturdy low chair. Cushioned swing action seat, patented safety features. Folds for easy carrying. Converts to many-use junior table. Doctor-approved.

Grand Gift for New Mothers

GUARANTEED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Send for FREE FOLDER... See phone book for authorized agency or write today for illustrated folder and full details.

THE BABEE-TENDA CORP.
Dept. 5M, 750 Prospect Ave., Cleveland 15, Ohio
© 1948 *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

KNITTING YARNS
for over 40 years
WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CARD
Spun in own mill
WRITE DEPT. E-1 CLIVEDEN YARNS 711 ARCH ST. PHILA. 6, PA.

MARK EVERYTHING WITH
12 DOZ. $3.50 Cash's 6 DOZ. $2.40
WOVEN NAME TAPES
Order from your dealer, or write
CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG
Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon at low budget prices. Charming fashions with concealing lines for the mother-to-be. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie.
ADVANCE STYLES
CRAWFORD'S
DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE.
Kansas City 6, Mo.

EXTRA PAY DAY can be yours each week. Thousands of men and women earn up to $1.50 an hour by accepting subscriptions to Curtis publications and other popular magazines. Write to
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 803 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna

VISITING NURSES

(Continued from Page 23)

omes in low-income areas and comfortable esidential areas alike—still drawing upon olunteers to make much of its work posible.

Reaching patients through New Haven's cial agencies, hospitals, doctors and the y health department, the V.N.A. answers very call for help, follows through "where e care is needed most."

Because they treat patients in their homes, siting nurses must be prepared to meet spicions, superstitions and fears.

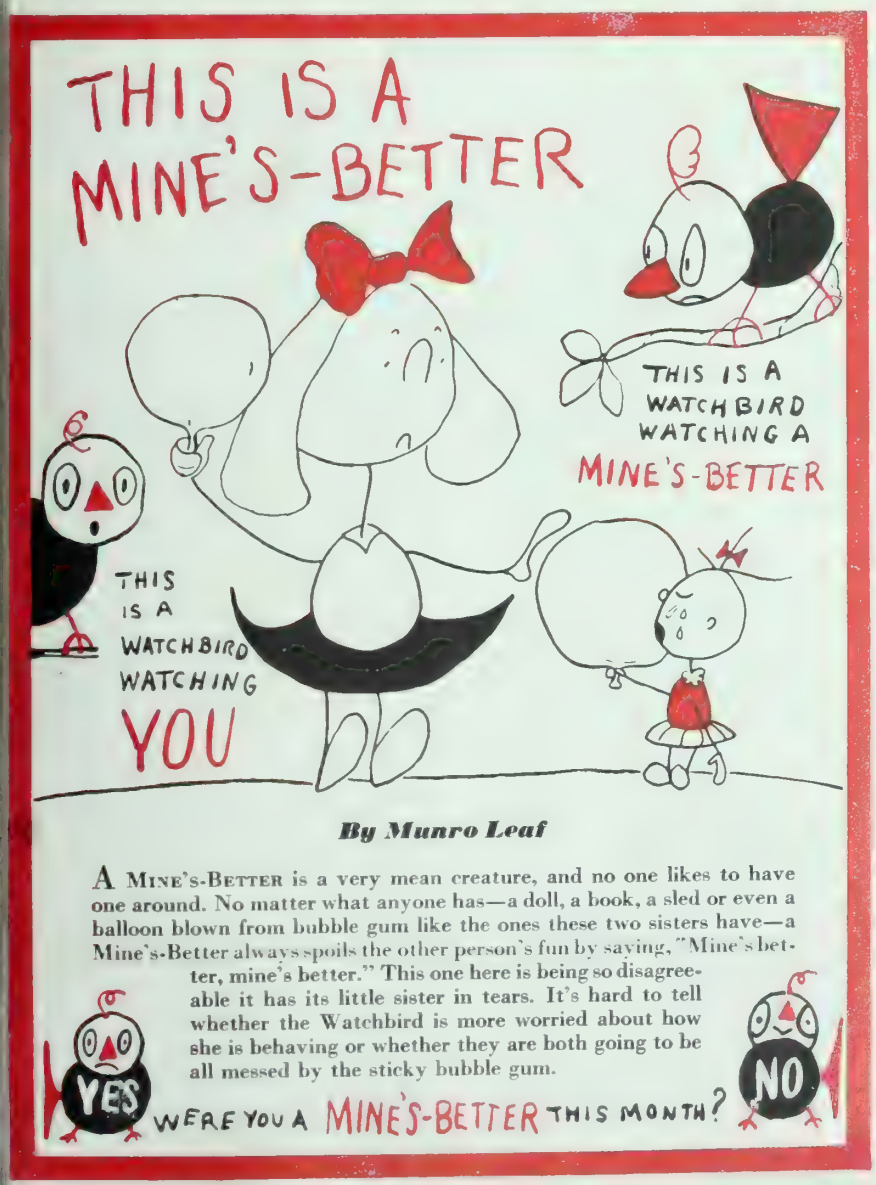
"It's a subtle thing, this nurse-patient-mily relationship," says Elizabeth Fox, rd-working director of the association. Many times the nurse's most valuable conibution turns out to be emotional rather an physical."

Spend the morning with Visiting Nurse arrett. Her first stop is Mr. Van Wie, a thin tle man in his early sixties who recently disvered that he has diabetes. Mr. Van Wie ves alone in an upstairs room, has no one to ve him his daily injection, is afraid to do it mself. Each morning when Miss Barrett rives, he puts water to boil on his tiny ectric plate. While she prepares the shot, d makes a urinalysis, the nurse asks hat he's been eating, helps him form the ay's menu. Mr. Van Wie cannot read or rite. Without Miss Barrett's help, it would e almost impossible for him to stick to any nd of diabetic diet.

Most diabetics learn from the visiting urse how to do these things themselves. /ith patients like Mr. Van Wie, who feel secure and afraid, the nurse continues to me. Bolstering a patient's faith in himself as much a part of her job as giving actual hysical help.

The next stop is Mrs. Curtis, bedridden a ear following a cerebral hemorrhage. Mrs. urtis needs a nurse for several reasons. She too heavy for an untrained person to give her a bath and linen change. Her legs and arms must be massaged. Now occasionally, as she gradually regains use of her left leg, which was partially paralyzed, she can get up. This is the high light of the nurse's visit for Mrs. Curtis—when the nurse and her daughter ease her out of bed, let her lean heavily on them as she walks, haltingly, to the far window in her bedroom and back again to the bed.

The Curtises give the association $2 a week for the nurse's three visits, are proud that "we're holding our own." Each home visit costs the association $1.99. Patients who are able pay up to $2 a visit. Some are unable to pay at all. But if the need is there, the care goes on.



Mr. Johnson, Miss Barrett's last morning call, is waiting for a bed in one of Connecticut's overcrowded sanatoria for tuberculous. Mr. Johnson is not used to being ill. He worries about his wife and daughter, and who will support them. Miss Barrett remembers funny little stories to tell him, and reminds him that his daughter has found a well-paying job and is willing to take care of her mother.

"We tell him that, too," says Mrs. Johnson, "but somehow, it seems to mean more to him when it comes from the nurse. He worries so."

When Miss Barrett arrives, a large pot of water is boiling on the wood stove. Twice a week she checks on Mr. Johnson's condition, bathes him and changes the sheets. While she works, Miss Barrett quietly checks other details. Does Mrs. Johnson remember to wear a self-protecting apron and keep the patient's dishes separate? Does Mr. Johnson cover his mouth with a tissue when he coughs and immediately put the tissue in a paper bag?

Baby care and child guidance are another important part of the V.N.A.'s work. In a

I do think he's the most wonderful baby in the world!

"And my doctor says I'm right in thinking so. When I show my baby how much I love him, it makes his spirit grow, the way the right care helps his body to develop soundly."

Since you know that nothing in the way of love and care is too good for your baby, be sure to give him the Vitamin D he needs to build sound bones and teeth. Choose a dependable source—Squibb Cod Liver Oil. With Squibb you can be sure that he will get important Vitamin D to help build a well-shaped head, a straight, strong back, fine, full chest and straight legs.

Not a concentrate

Squibb Cod Liver Oil is a wholly natural source of Vitamin D, preferred by many physicians. Because it supplies the important vitamins as they occur in nature, Squibb also gives your baby protective, growth-promoting Vitamin A. Start him on this time-proven, reliable source of both vitamins. Get Squibb Cod Liver Oil now, and give it regularly every day.

Need extra Vitamins A and D yourself? Try Squibb's pleasant Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil. Thousands of grown-ups take it day in and day out all winter. Older children also like the pleasant taste, and it gives them the extra Vitamins A and D they so urgently need while they're growing. Ask for Squibb Cod Liver Oil, Plain or Mint-Flavored, today.

SQUIBB cod liver oil

preferred by more mothers than any other cod liver oil

YOU CAN BE SURE..
IF IT'S Westinghouse

NOW..it's the ELECTRIC SHEET

- Sensational, New, Practical Bedcovering
- Safe, Automatic Warmth Without Weight
- Use it With Your Favorite Blanket or Quilt
- Easily Carried on Trips; Plugs in any AC Outlet
- Comfort Beyond Words, at a Startling Low Price

Tops for Christmas Giving! Here's the latest in Electric Bedcoverings . . . at a price so low you'll want one for every bed. It's practical, comfort-giving, completely different and new! Just spread the Electric Sheet over the regular top sheet, then any blanket, quilt or comforter you have can be used as a top cover. You get automatically controlled warmth without weight. Simply set dial—the Automatic Watchman Control maintains the warmth you select. Packs easily into overnight bag. Fits double or twin beds. Approved by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc. See the new Electric Sheet at your Westinghouse retailer's now. It's the big news . . . and the favorite gift . . . of the year!

ONLY $29.95

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • APPLIANCE DIVISION • MANSFIELD • OHIO

EVERY HOUSE NEEDS
Westinghouse Electric Sheets

TUNE IN TED MALONE . . . EVERY MORNING, MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY . . . ABC NETWORK series of ten weekly lessons, the prospective mother learns everything from prenatal care of herself to postnatal care of her child when it arrives—everything which will help her become confident and secure in handling her baby.

Near Yale University's Quonset hut section for veterans, the Mothers' Class meets in a parish house on Friday afternoons. Most class members are young and expecting their first child; others want to know how to prepare an older child for the baby. They listen intently to discussions of diet, labor, layettes, bath and child guidance, participate eagerly in a question period after the formal class.

Graduates like Mrs. Stillson, a former visiting nurse, do volunteer clerical work, explain uses of the tiny garments on display, while their own babies are "small enough to stay put."

Many mothers agree with Mrs. Conrad, who found the classes "boring at first," got so interested that "I almost came over again." Mrs. Stanford, worried about taking care of her first baby, said with a sigh, "They saved my life!"

Many of the 500 mothers-to-be contacted in Mothers' Classes are visited in their homes, too, before the child is born. Nurses help diminish the parents' special fears and assist in their plans, as well as checking the mother's pulse, blood pressure and urine. On a follow-up visit, the nurse helps the mother bathe and feed the baby on his first day home from the hospital, keeps in touch with her for five or six weeks until she feels able to take over alone.

Many mothers who have attended Mothers' Classes show up a few weeks later, with their new babies, at the child-health conferences held weekly throughout the city in hospitals, housing projects and libraries. Last year the conferences gave physical examinations and immunization shots to more than 3500 well babies and preschool children—costing their parents only $3 a year. The visiting nurse answers the mother's questions—what to do for Betsy's heat rash, how to handle Jimmy's temper tantrums—and refers more serious questions to the doctor.

VOLUNTEERS here play a vital service—"Without them we would have to deploy nurses from home visits, or reach fewer families," says Miss Fox. Taking over every possible nonprofessional job to relieve nurses for their trained work, 70 women today work a total of 400 hours per month, saving the V.N.A. as much as $5000 yearly.

Volunteers register babies at the door, weigh and measure them, handle all the clerical and desk work, and keep older children busy with wooden toys and blackboards while their mothers confer with the doctor. One older woman mends the nurses' supply bags; two others clean and repack them once a week.

One of the volunteer's most importa jobs is making sure that the parents' exp riences in the conference are pleasant an satisfying. She must be able to meet peopl in a friendly, kindly way, to make them fe at home. The play volunteer must sho special skill in handling children.

And it's fun. Volunteers like their work Mrs. Strong, who substituted ten years ag has been going ever since "because the wor is so rewarding. You see the results befor your eyes. You watch the children grow, s their new brothers and sisters." Mrs. Ray mond, who brought her own four children helps out regularly, prefers working wit little children "now that my own are grow up." And Betsy Barnet, studying psychology and writing at Smith College, spends part o every vacation registering babies at the St Raphael conference—"In school we learn about the problems a nurse must cope with here we meet them face to face."

SHORTAGES of two things—money and nurses—have kept the V.N.A. from developing, as they plan someday, into a much more personalized service. As a quasi-public service for the people, supported by the people, the association last year spent $176,595. Of this yearly budget, an endowment fund of half a million netted $24,352; the Community Chest gave $86,000; the city of New Haven, $19,800; the town of West Haven, $5000. Fees from insurance companies amounted to $26,155—and the remainder came from a variety of sources.

"We are anxious to develop our protective service," says Miss Fox, "to see that everyone has the opportunity to learn and practice healthy ways. And we are particularly interested in strengthening our contribution to mental health. The most potent protection against mental illness later is seeing that youngsters start out life in good physical and mental condition."

Parents' classes—which last year reached 300 mothers and fathers—show that parents, too, are vitally interested in giving their children the right start. The great majority of their questions deal with behavior problems—why Jimmy sulks, why Susie won't play with the rest of the children, how to handle an overactive child. Unable to help each parent individually, as psychologists recommend, the association does its best in formal classes, with question periods following, hopes someday to work much more closely with pediatricians and child psychologists.

One thing seems clear. The V.N.A., already an invaluable part of the New Haven community, is alive to its responsibilities, eager to extend them wherever it finds the need. The people who support it, the people it serves, agree with Dr. Howard Colwell, of the New Haven Medical Society, when he says with conviction, "We wouldn't know how to get along without the visiting nurses."

THE END

"My wife insisted upon a sunken living room."

"BLUE" DAYS CAN BE BRIGHT DAYS

MIDOL

RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL PERIODIC PAIN

CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

MIDOL
RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"

DAINTY BEAUTY CREAM DISPENSER
for your favorite Face or Hand Cream

Holds your favorite cream always ready for use. A light finger pressure and up comes the cream in the exact amount you want. No waste, no fussing with lids or jars. Made of durable plastic. White, yellow, pink, green and blue.

At your favorite Dealer or Order Direct $1.00 Each Postpaid State Color

I-ODORAL, INC.
282 Corliss St., Pittsburgh 20, Pa.

Reveals Sweetheart's Name

"Yes, I'm practically engaged," says glamorous model, Allene Meacham. "My sweetheart is the greatest little wonder-worker in the world. It's Hopper White Clay Pack. Nothing like it to give a drab, faded complexion that smooth, young, dreamy look a 'close-up' demands." Ladies, you'll be crazy about White Clay Pack — and the thrilling difference it makes in 8 short minutes. When the day's tired lines leave you with that wearied older look, just pat on this luscious white clay. Thrill to its tingling, tightening action — to the way it smooths out tired lines, lifts weary sag, and sparks your skin with radiant, refreshing glow! Get Hopper White Clay Pack today. And for everyday care, use Edna Wallace Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. At cosmetic counters.

HAND KNITTING
Yarns SAVE!!! BUY FROM MANUFACTURERS
WORSTED • SPORT YARN
HEATHERS • CASHMERE
INSTRUCTIONS WITH ORDER
FREE SAMPLE CARD
PETER PAN YARNS • 363 GRAND ST., N. Y. 2, N. Y.

OUR READERS WRITE US

(Continued from Page 8)

monopolist who controls the single paper in that town. The one-newspaper city, if it is large enough to support another, lives in an unhealthy climate for a free press.

In the end, says Miss Thompson, it is only the readers who can insist on factually accurate newspapers, free and courageous, dedicated to high ideals of news presentation. This is the publishers' favorite cliché, since it conveniently shifts the responsibility from their shoulders. Another variety of buck passing is the assumption on the part of some newspapers that their responsibility is discharged because they print the views of columnists who do not agree with them. Thus a conservative publisher fancies he has made an independent forum of his paper because he prints the opinions of Walter Winchell. If the Daily Worker did not take itself with such orthodox seriousness, it could achieve the same kind of reputation by printing Mark Sullivan's column.

Occasionally even this sorry illusion does not rest easily on a conservative publisher's conscience, as in the case of a New York City daily which is forever editing the views of its liberal Washington columnist, or disavowing his ideas in the editorial columns, or simply omitting him altogether when there appears to be no other plausible recourse.

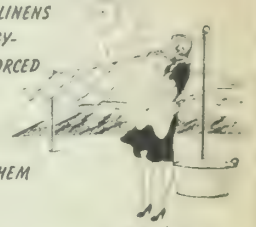
But the newspaper reader cannot escape his responsibility for the shortcomings of our press, any more than can the publisher. Public-opinion polls have shown time and again that people do not read newspapers to find out, to exercise their inalienable right to know, but simply to be entertained. They are appallingly uninformed about such vital matters as the Marshall Plan, for example, which are spread on the front pages day after day, but most of them can parrot the opinions of columnists good and bad, and they have an explicit knowledge of the lives of comic-strip characters.

Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of The New York Times, speaking recently before a convention of the New York State Publishers Association, advised his audience that newspapers were becoming mere entertainment media. There was and should be, he said, no room in newspapers today for anything except news and information.

But even if newspaper readers did read the news, how would they go about interpreting it? Here is the reader in the one-paper town; he has nothing with which to compare. Here is the reader in the three-paper town, often confronted with three different versions of the same story. How does he know which paper is trying to come near the truth? Not all Americans, unfortunately, are able to read The New York Times and the Herald Tribune, or the dozen or so other papers which make a continuous effort toward the ideal, however impossible, of a completely objective newspaper.

Final responsibility, therefore, appears to rest on the shoulders of the publishers. It is not enough for the truly honest publishers to stand upon the excellence of their newspapers. Through their publishers' organizations, they should set up criteria, as the ASNE once did, and then continuously strive to make the membership live up to them, instead of abandoning the whole idea as unenforceable, which the ASNE also did.

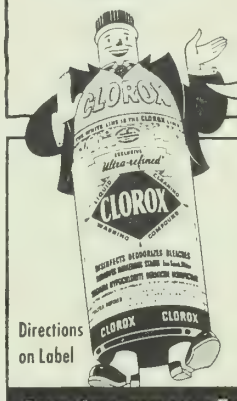
Will the publishers make any real effort to do this? They will not, I predict. The honest and the dishonest (intellectually) will unite in combating criticism of the press. They will blame such criticism on communists and New Dealers, and they will continue to insist, as Miss Thompson does, that they give the readers what they want, and that newspapers are only what the readers make them.



For their part, the readers—unless some considerable body of them, like the American housewife, wakes up to what is going on—will continue to read the comic strips and the columns and the sports pages, and never know, or apparently care, whether their free newspapers are giving them the fullest exercise of their right to know, or are selling them a party line in the news columns.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN TEBBEL.

Give your indoor laundry that "spring breeze" freshness!



1. YOUR WHITE COTTONS AND LINENS NEEDN'T BE MUSTY OR DINGY-LOOKING BECAUSE YOU'RE FORCED TO DRY THEM INDOORS.

2. IT'S EASY TO MAKE THEM SNOWY-WHITE... AND AS FRESH-SMELLING AS IF THEY'D DRIED ON A SUNNY, WIND-WHIPPED MOUNTAIN TOP!

3. THE SECRET? LAUNDER WITH CLOROX! FOR CLOROX NOT ONLY BLEACHES WHITE COTTONS AND LINENS SNOWY-WHITE (BRIGHTENS FAST COLORS) AND REMOVES STAINS...IT DEODORIZES, MAKES LAUNDRY FRESH AS A SPRING BREEZE...SANITARY, TOO! AND BECAUSE CLOROX BLEACHES EXTRA-GENTLY AND LESSENS RUBBING, IT PROLONGS THE LIFE OF FABRICS...SAVES YOU MONEY!

Directions on Label

CLOROX...FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

GENTLER Bleaching Action... Longer Life for Linens!
There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

GREATER Disinfecting Efficiency ...Added Health Protection!
Because Clorox is caustic-free, it works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS
There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

Save time, money, effort with BOON... the ready-to-use liquid household cleaner made by the makers of Clorox. BOON wipes away dirt and grease from washable surfaces like magic.

LIKE TO BOWL?
Write us and we will tell you how you can earn your own nationally advertised Black Mineralite Ball.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 802 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

sleep on SYLCON QUILTED MATTRESS
AWARDED CERTIFICATE OF MERIT NEW YORK MUSEUM OF SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY

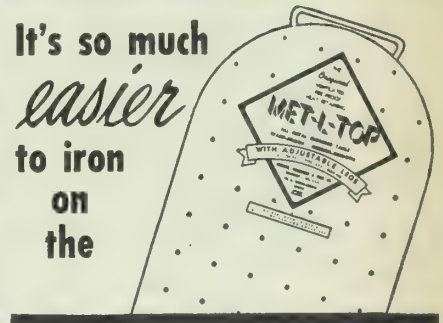
Aristo-mats THE IDEAL PRACTICAL CHRISTMAS GIFT

For a brighter Christmas and a brighter kitchen, give Aristo-Mats and you give the finest all-purpose stove and utility mats. On Sale at Better Stores Everywhere.
PHOENIX TABLE MAT COMPANY, Chicago 7

COLDS

*Quicker more thorough RELIEF

and miseries of CHEST COLDS, COUGHS, SORE THROAT, ACHES, PAINS



YOU can't afford to let a cold get you down — not when it's so easy to get blessed relief. At the first symptom of a cold, apply FAST-ACTION Rub A-535 to chest, throat and back. Almost instantly the special medicaments begin to stimulate surface circulation and bring soothing warmth to your affected areas. Breathe deeply and you'll feel the soothing vapors penetrate to the upper bronchial tract. Won't soil clothes —Rub A-535 is Greaseless and Stainless.

Antiphlogistine Rub A-535

*Take a tip from more than 2,000 other sufferers. Use FAST-ACTION Rub A-535! 8 out of 10 of them wrote us that they liked Rub A-535 BETTER than the rubs, liniments, balms or analgesics they formerly used.

It's so much easier to iron on the

MET-L-TOP
ADJUSTABLE HEIGHT IRONING TABLE

ADJUSTABLE LEGS

In a recent survey among thousands of women, the feature stressed as most important was adjustable height. MET-L-TOP legs are easily adjustable to 7 different heights, for a short, medium or tall woman. Proved to be a big factor in reducing back strain, arm strain and ironing fatigue. MET-L-TOP is the original all-metal ironing table... fire-proof... warp-proof... ventilated, white enameled top... sturdy Protecto-Rest, protects pad when table is set on end... or makes convenient hanger. Investigate the Adjustable Height MET-L-TOP now.

See your dealer

For best results use MET-L-TOP pad and cover set. Tailored to fit.

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

Open Season

. . . in a 1949 FRAZER CONVERTIBLE

Tuck her in next to you . . . touch a button and watch the FRAZER top slide away automatically . . . be off with the wind to your own wooded wonderland! And if the rest of the crowd must come along, both the front and rear seats are wide, wide, wide—with lots of leg room. For you're driving the new 1949 FRAZER Convertible—the only full-size four-door convertible on the road! Big, handsome—a dream of a car! Yours in more colors than a pastel rainbow . . . yours in practically any fabric or leather-type interior you could imagine. You provide the girl . . . the nearest KAISER-FRAZER dealer will have the new 1949 FRAZER Convertible soon!

Kaiser-Frazer Corporation, Willow Run, Michigan.

See it today—and drive it away! The new 1949 FRAZER with 100 new features, improvements and refinements—at your dealer's NOW!

"THE BEAUTY AND DISTINCTION OF CUSTOM CAR STYLING"

Man takes a deep joy in conflict with Nature's worst hours, and feels the glory of surviving when snow piles up and the winds of December howl.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

NOW we country folk get out the snow tires and put them on, and hang the summer tires in the barn. I never had heard of snow tires until we moved to the country, but they are a great comfort. Their tread makes a strange sound on bare pavement, but a good one in soft snow. You don't need chains with snow tires, some people say, and some people say you don't need chains with snow in any case, they do no good. This is a subject for much converse as we scan the graying winter skies. Chains just skid, says one. Can't make it without 'em, says another.

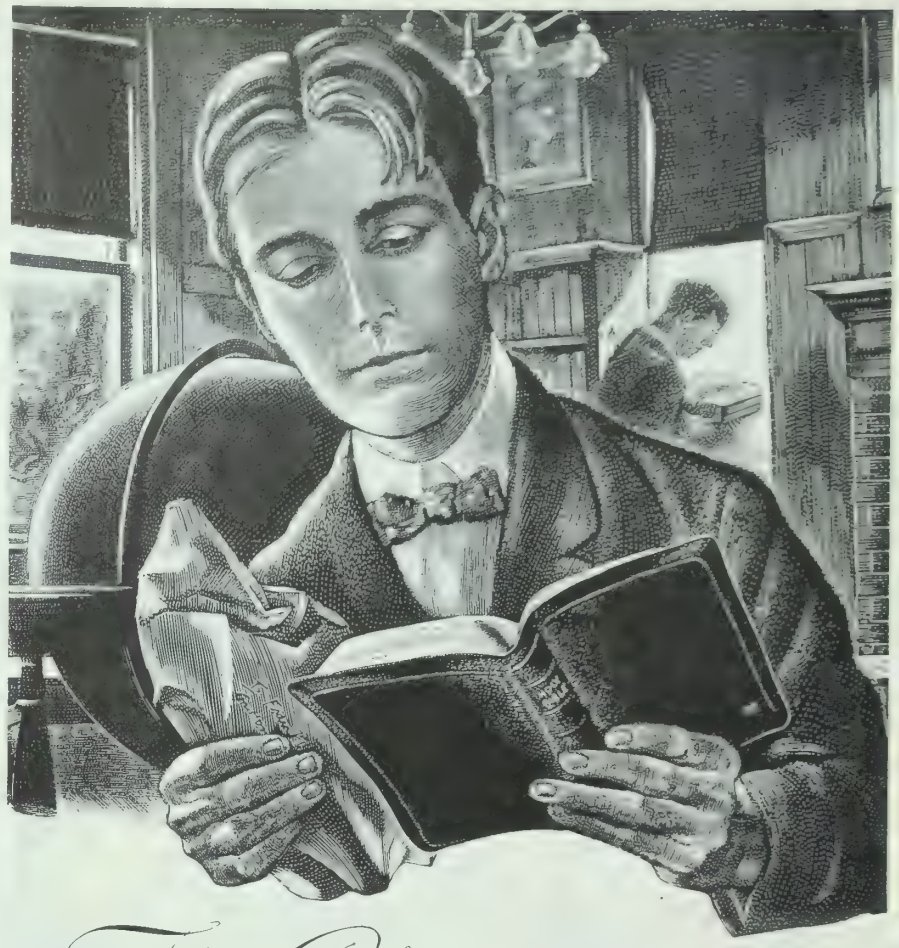
Last winter, the great winter, we couldn't make it with anything short of skis or snowshoes. And here is a curious thing about the powers of Nature. All during that terrible winter everyone complained and suffered, but as soon as it was over, a faint pride crept into our voices as we mentioned it. By June, the winter had become a wondrous thing, as indeed it was, and by this fall everyone says proudly, "That was a winter hard to beat!"

I believe man takes a deep joy in the conflict with Nature's worst hours, probably because we feel the glory of surviving no matter how the winds howl and the snow piles up, or when the long drought sets in and water is as precious as a diamond drop.

There are plenty of places on this old rolling earth where man never has to battle Nature, she is bland and amiable, and one might think all mankind would rush to these places and live there. But they don't. Instead, when the flood waters roll back, the refugees return and begin shoveling the silt and muck away. They plant their next year's tomatoes in the same plot, and they still keep the grand piano or the radio on the lower floor! In the hurricane sections, the families emerge from the storm cellar and go out to the cornfields again.

My friend Ethel, who grew up in a district in the Midwest where tornadoes seem to nest, said once, "I spent half my life in the storm cellar, but we never thought too much about it."

It is good to think about the simple bravery of plain ordinary men and women; there is much good in us, I think, that nobody puts in newspaper headlines.



With regard to newspapers and news hours, there are times in winter when we do not get our paper and the electric current is off. There is, then, a little time in which our world is only the snowy valley and the deep sky and our own concerns with cockers and cats and keeping the pipes thawed. We have a big apple-wood fire in the fireplace and eat hot chowder for supper, and it is wonderfully peaceful.

In the early days, when the only news came by horseback once a week, people were fortunate in a way. The shot heard round the world at Concord took quite a time getting itself heard! Today the echo has not died in an outpost of Arabia before we have it on our radio, sandwiched neatly between an ad for wine and a threat to our falling hair.

There are many delights in winter, and eating in front of the fire is one of them. I love soup, and soup belongs to winter primarily, though the cold soup is all very well in August. We simmer a soup bone and add almost any vegetables left over, plus rice or noodles, so the soup du jour is never the same. My favorite trick is to turn into our soup a can of some different kind as an added fillip.

Last summer, for instance, I used up the last tomatoes in a soup, with celery leaves, onion, green pepper and a clove of garlic. I simmered this a long time, put it through a food mill and had a rich condensed tomato stock which I canned. Now we have this with a can of condensed chicken soup added and it is a superb winter-night soup.

FOR a quick company supper, the emergency shelf provides plenty. Sea food à la king is delicious. I use a cup each of lobster and shrimp, a cup of salmon, half a cup of crab meat, one cup sliced mushrooms and one third cup mayonnaise. I make a cream sauce, fairly thick, then add mayonnaise, the sea food (flaked and mixed) and the mushrooms which are sautéed in butter unless they are the broiled canned ones. I like this served in shells, and run under the broiler at the last minute with a little crumbs and butter or margarine to brown. When I use canned mushrooms, I add the juice to the cream sauce as part of the liquid, or I save it for soup.

This Christmas...

give your child the Bible

Sara Delano Roosevelt gave her son

A BEAUTIFUL OXFORD BIBLE

Some day, you have promised yourself, you will give your child a fine Bible. There is no better day than Christmas, no Bible so fine as an Oxford.

In 1896, when Sara Delano Roosevelt gave her young son a handsome Oxford Bible, she was following the tradition of centuries. Generations of parents have set a seal upon the love they bear their children with the gift of Oxford Bibles.

Your child's Oxford Bible

The Oxford Bible you give your child this Christmas will be a masterwork of bookmaking. You will marvel at the rich strong binding . . . the clean clear Oxford type . . . the ultra-thin India Paper exclusive with Oxford. This is the world's most beautiful paper . . . so thin that over 2000 pages make a book only an inch thick . . . yet so opaque that no print shows through from one side of a page to the other.

Your bookseller will show you an assortment of Oxford Bibles, variously priced, including the "Scofield," Oxford's great reference edition. (Over two million "Scofields" have already been sold.)

The indispensable gift

A fine Bible is the rightful inheritance of every young American. As the Pilgrims drew from it their dream that this nation might be founded in freedom . . . and Roosevelt his dream of the Four Freedoms for all the nations of the world . . . so from its pages today's young leaders will build tomorrow. Your child will march among them through your gift of an Oxford Bible.

March 1933

This historic signature and date, in Franklin D. Roosevelt's own handwriting, appear in the Oxford Bible he took with him to the White House. A beautiful and enduring Oxford Bible, with your son's or daughter's name stamped on the cover in gold, will become the cherished companion of a lifetime.

OXFORD America's gift Bible since 1675

Winter evenings are fine for women who can sew. I decided a year ago that I would try to make a luncheon set. My theory was that when we were sitting and visiting, I could be accomplishing something at the same time. Going on the second winter, I am still putting red crabs and lobsters on yellow mats.

All I know how to do is cross stitch, so it is a cross-stitch pattern. I think I learned this difficult stitch in eighth grade.

Last week we were spending the evening with some friends, one of whom is an accomplished artist at all kinds of handcrafts, from stenciling to rug hooking. I was bending happily over a crab when she looked at my rumpled bunch of material. "It is nice to embroider," she said thoughtfully. "I used to do a lot of it. Of course it isn't worth the effort unless you make your own designs, and use your own color schemes."

My needle paused in mid-air over my crab, and I sighed. I could not design a plain ivy leaf, let alone anything intricate. Well, I thought, whacking my needle through again, it is a perfectly sweet crab anyway. I hope to have the set finished by Christmas. I think a buffet supper with sea food à la king served in the blue Leeds, with my lively red seafolk tastefully lying underneath, will be very satisfying. To me, anyhow.

But oh, how I love to look at the table coverings in the big shops in the city! If I could really sew, I, too, would have those pale cinnamon-brown organdy cloths with the edgings of delicate green, or the faint gold ones with appliquéd leaves and flowers of organdy on them. I would be very careful not to hang them on the line when the puppies were out too!

There is nothing so much fun for a puppy as swinging on the washing. And almost any time in summer, you can look out and see Maeve picking off an unstable sock and whipping away with it. When she has it down she lets two cockers play tug of war with it.

A pessimist is a man who thinks everybody as nasty as himself, and hates them for it. —GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

We have a little trouble with the cockers these days, for a whole kennel of house dogs complicates the snow-and-mud problem. We are always resolving to alternate them, two by two, but Melody will look so sad when she goes in the kennel that Jill lets her in, and I am always sneaking out to rescue Little Sister, so that by the time we are ready for bed, all of a sudden Jill says, "I didn't realize we had seven in tonight."

"We didn't have at the beginning," I say. "But honestly, they are so good!"

If I ever built a house, which I am sure is highly unlikely, I would attach the kennel right to it with a nice arched passageway between. Jill says why not just build the kennel large enough for the family to move in there too?

By the middle of the month, the house is filled with Christmas. And everything about Christmas is exciting to me. I love the smells—the pine branches we bring in from the woods, snowy and cold, give forth the most heavenly fragrance, and there is the smell of freshly baked Christmas cookies and fruitcake, and a whiff of spring from the apple logs in the fire.

The sounds are fine sounds too. Tissue paper is mysterious when it crisps under the blue and scarlet ribbons; the cracking of nuts has a good sound; even the tinkle of a blue Christmas ball on the floor is a holiday note.

We are never beforehand with the wrapping or the Christmas cards. I did plan to get everything done this year—but so many things keep popping up that here I am in the usual unfinished state. One friend of ours put up a card table in her cellar one steaming August night and addressed all her Christmas cards! Wrote appropriate messages on them too. I admired the feat, but I just never could compose Christmas greetings in the cellar in August.

The color of Christmas is lovely. The deep shining green, and the scarlet and blue, the flame color of the candles in the windows, the rosy glow of the baked ham—there are many enchanting colors. The color of Christmas is dramatic, triumphant.

But the best thing of all is that it is a time of friends remembering one another, families gathering together, a time when people open their hearts. It is a time when one can be sentimental and not hide it.

Perhaps the real significance of Christmas is that we need it so much. Now there are people who say they feel it is purely commercialized, it has lost its real spirit. But this is not so. All the expensive gadgets in the world of shops, if stood in a heap, would not really hide the real spirit of Christmas in the heart of one single buyer who timidly hopes to afford something special for a girl with gray eyes. Anyone who scoffs at Christmas should stand on a snowy evening and look in the faces of the shoppers, tired, maybe, harassed, upset because Aunt Mary just has everything. And there comes that look of love suddenly easing the lines of fatigue when they think of how happy someone will be with something they did dream up!

No matter in what state our world is, Christmas comes round again to renew our belief in brotherhood and peace, and give us hope.

We usually have a deep snowfall for Christmas, the first really imperative fall of snow. And Christmas Eve all the houses in our valley are lighted with the tall candles. The old doorways are decorated and Christmas lights dazzle the night from living pines in the square.

We never open a gift until morning—so Christmas Eve is the moment of suspense with the packages piled under the tree, the Christmas turkey resting comfortably in the oven attended closely by the two cats. Apples and nuts and popcorn and mugs of mulled cider are at hand, and Christmas candy and cookies, just in case anyone feels a touch of hunger after a slight supper of oyster soufflé, hot nut muffins and tossed salad.

Christmas ribbon candy is back, and I am so glad to see it. Oh, those lovely big barrels of it that always stood by the grocery door in our childhood! The delicious red and green and gold and white loops, which you break off slowly and savor to the last chip!

And on the tree are the old glass icicles, the pink wax angel, and the Santa Claus in his sleigh, along with the new colored balls and tinsel and the candy canes. I favor Christmas cookies on the tree, too, for it certainly does no harm to have something to snip off and eat along with all the beauty.

We usually cut our tree the week before, and spend a week hunting the tree stand, which is always lost. It finally turns up in a box of old rubbers. Like many of the neighbors, we are concerned with reforestation and helping the natural wild life, so we have planted a slope with five hundred baby Christmas trees—and that was no small task either! Somehow I don't think any of those trees will be cut, except when they need thinning, for a woodland of Christmas trees will be beautiful with the snow on the deep green branches.

George manages the Yule log, just big enough to make the old hearth bulge. He made a wreath last year for his own house door with the help of a carpenter named Olson, and it was lovelier than any I saw made by the garden-club members. It was shaded green with different evergreens and woven intricately with bunches of bright red berries.

When the moon comes up over the snow on Christmas Eve, I think the world was never so beautiful. The yard is ribboned with long delft-blue shadows and patterned by flying cocker paws. The house has every window lighted extravagantly—for Christmas comes but once a year.

And the sound of the best carols lifts the heart again:

"God rest you merry, gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay ——" THE END

Baker's Coconut Quickie #5

…rated orange rind Baker's Coconut
…weetened whipped cream Baked apple

…dd luscious, moist Baker's Coconut and a …nall amount of grated orange rind to …weetened whipped cream. Delectable as top…ing for baked apples, apple sauce, other …tewed fruits. Keep Baker's Coconut handy …it glorifies so many things quickly. Just …prinkle it on puddings, breakfast cereals, …read n'butter sandwiches, etc. Your grocer …as both Baker's Premium Shred and spe…ially moist Baker's Southern Style.

BAKER'S COCONUT

—SECRET OF 100 GLAMOUR TRICKS

Products of General Foods

SEND! New Recipe Book. "Coconut Glamour Desserts"—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut, Box 38, Battle Creek, Mich.

BEST! bar none!

It's Gebhardt's CHILI CON CARNE

REAL Mexican flavor
TRUE American quality

MADE IN SAN ANTONIO, HOME OF CHILI CON CARNE AND TAMALES

MERRY CHRISTMAS ALL DAY LONG

(Continued from Page 61)

unimportant but eagerly awaited toys that were especially designed to appease young appetites until the tree. Up they arise at the crack of dawn, when the morning star has but lately withdrawn from the sky. No matter that mom and pop are sleeping away, probably unaware that there are things to do, trumpets and the drums of fate awaiting, so you might as well arise. Throw off the comforter, close the window, turn on the heat and head into the tempest. It's Christmas all day long!

So here's breakfast. By hook and devious means get the family to the table. Wear ear muffs—or there's absorbent cotton for the ears—and smile, smile, smile. And this is breakfast on Christmas morning.

How about grapefruit flavored with the crumbs and broken bits from the peppermint-candy canes? Good, too, with sugar and little colored fruit drops that look so good and melt in the mouth and are fun.

Cereals with sugar—maple or brown—and cream are a warming thing on a cold and frosty Christmas morn. Their name is legion. It's up to you.

Eggs, bacon, hot bread; why, we're fortified for anything—and anything may happen. Don't forget to tuck a gingerbread toy in the napkin for the children. It's Christmas.

COTTAGE EGGS

Beat 6 eggs slightly. Blend 2 tablespoons cream with ½ cup cottage cheese. Mix with the eggs and season with ¾ teaspoon salt, and pepper to taste. Pour into hot buttered skillet and cook as for scrambled eggs. Serve with broiled canned-peach halves and bacon curls.

The bun—cinnamon one. Hot breads smell so good, look so good, almost good enough to hang on the Christmas tree. This one is just a little different.

CINNAMON-BISCUIT RING

Use a double receipt of biscuit mix, or 4 cups of mix. Follow the directions for mixing given on the package. Roll out to ½-inch thickness on a lightly floured pastry cloth or board. Cut into circles 1¾ inches wide. Brush the biscuits on both sides with melted butter or margarine and dip each in a mixture of ½ cup sugar and 2 teaspoons cinnamon. Arrange them side by side in a well-greased ring mold so that the sugared sides touch each other. Bake in a hot oven, 450° F., 20–25 minutes. Let it stand in the pan 5 minutes. Before turning out, run a spatula around the sides to loosen the ring. Put a plate over the ring. Turn upside down—shake and tap the mold gently and it will come out perfectly.

Open house at your house? For those of you whose children are in their teens, the holiday festivities may center around an open-house party in the afternoon. For this you will need the sandwiches, appetizers and sweets that are fun to make at any time, but more fun at Christmastime. Here's a collection for this or any other occasion.

TRIANGLE SANDWICHES

Slice 1 loaf of bread very thin. Spread 1 slice with softened water-cress filling. Cover with another slice of bread and spread with softened butter or margarine and the chili-sauce filling. Cover with a third slice of bread. Trim off the crusts, making a square double-deck sandwich. Cut diagonally from corner to corner, making small triangle sandwiches. Or make whatever pattern you like. I don't like counting out this and that on such things. Let yourself go. This way lies imagination—and fun!

Water-Cress Filling: Cream 1 3-oz. package cream cheese. Add 2 teaspoons lemon juice, ½ teaspoon salt, a touch of Worcestershire sauce and ½ cup chopped water cress. Mix to a spreadlike way of life. Let the green have a chance. So mix well—but well.

Chili-Sauce Filling: Cream 1 3-oz. package cream cheese. Add ⅓ cup chili sauce. Beat it. (Red's pretty, don't you think?)

THE GREATEST THING THAT EVER HAPPENED TO RICE

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc.

NEW UNCLE BEN'S RICE RECIPE

Pineapple Rice Pudding

- 1¼ cups cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
- 2 eggs
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ cup sugar
- 2 cups evaporated milk
- 1 cup crushed, drained pineapple

Beat eggs and add to cooked rice. Stir in salt and add sugar. Add milk, then pineapple, stirring to blend. Turn into a buttered quart baking dish and bake in a pan of hot water in a slow oven, 300° F., for one hour. Serve with crushed pineapple or cream. Serves 6.

New scientific discovery, exclusive in this country with Uncle Ben's, gives extra food value to rice

The revolutionary and exclusive process used in Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice seals into polished rice grains B vitamins that used to be polished off.

That's not all. The grains all stand apart, white and fluffy.

Uncle Ben's Rice never gets sticky or gummy, whether hot or cold. Keeps perfectly on the shelf or in overseas packages—every grain is weevilproof. These advantages are not to be found in rice of any other brand at any price.

If your grocer doesn't have Uncle Ben's, ask him to get it for you.

© CONVERTED RICE, INC., Houston, Texas

Converted Rice, Inc., Dept. LHJ2
P. O. Box 1752, Houston, Texas
Please send me your new Rice Recipe Booklet. Enclosed is top from package of Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice.
NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____

IT'S A GIFT!

EXTRA CREAM
EXTRA FOOD VALUE

For every penny you spend, GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk gives you the greatest food value on the market today! And it's so good! Fine cattle have been bred for hundreds of years to produce a milk that is creamier and contains more body-building food solids below the cream line. The rich yellow color shows the presence of carotene, an important source of Vitamin A. Added to all this is that extra delicious GOLDEN GUERNSEY flavor—so appetizing—so satisfying. Give your family the milk they will love.

Ask your milkman for GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk. Or write us for the name of a nearby distributor. GOLDEN GUERNSEY, Inc., Peterborough, New Hampshire.

GURGLE! GURGLE! HOW I LOVE MY GOLDEN GUERNSEY MILK

FINE CATTLE PRODUCE FINE MILK

GOLDEN GUERNSEY

THAT SPECIAL MILK

CHEESE DAISIES

Cream ¾ cup shortening with 1½ cups grated sharp cheese and ¼ cup grated Italian Parmesan cheese. Sift together 1½ cups flour with ¾ teaspoon paprika and 1 teaspoon salt. Add to creamed mixture and stir well. Put the dough in a cooky press. Press out on cooky sheets, in shapes to your fancy. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 12 minutes. Like all such dainties, if you must keep them, keep them in a tin box with a good tight lid. (Try to keep them! This is an aside.) If no cooky press showed up among the tin-wedding presents, shape, roll—and you know the rest.

HUNGARIAN NUT STICKS

Cream 1 cup butter or margarine, and ½ cup sugar thoroughly. Add 1 egg and beat well. Sift together 2¼ cups flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, and add a part at a time to creamed mixture, mixing well after each addition. Flavor with ½ teaspoon vanilla. Spread this mixture out evenly in a jelly-roll pan. It will make a very thin layer—but spread it clear to the corners. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 15 minutes. While it is baking, put the following ingredients in a heavy saucepan: 2¼ cups finely chopped pecans, 1 cup sugar, 1½ teaspoons cinnamon and ½ cup egg whites (about 4). Mix well and cook over low heat, stirring constantly until the sugar is dissolved—then put up the heat to moderate and stir until the mixture thickens and comes away from the sides of the pan. O Hungary! Cooking once meant a lot in that old country, and these nut sticks will show you. Do not overcook. It should be so you can spread it. Not dry—just spreadable. Spread out evenly over the partially baked layer of cooky dough. This amount will cover the entire surface of the pastry. Bake 15 minutes more. Cool slightly. Cut into strips.

CHOCOLATE-MINT WAFERS

Sift 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon baking soda, ½ teaspoon salt and ¾ cup cocoa. Cream ⅔ cup shortening. Add 1 cup sugar, and cream until light and fluffy. Add 1 well-beaten egg and beat hard—hard. Add the sifted dry ingredients alternately to the creamed mixture with ¼ cup milk. Mix thoroughly. Chill until the dough can be handled. Form into rolls 1 inch in diameter. Wrap each in wax paper. Chill overnight. Cut into ⅛-inch slices. Bake on ungreased baking sheets in a slow oven, 325° F., 10–12 minutes or until done. Remove from baking sheets while warm. When cool, put cookies together in pairs with mint filling. This is a highly recommended use for mint. Also—there are others. I'll be right here—if you need me.

Mint Filling: Add ⅛ teaspoon salt to 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar. Add 3 tablespoons light cream gradually, stirring until smooth. Add ¼ teaspoon peppermint extract and a few drops of green vegetable coloring.

SULTANA CAKE

Sift together 3 times 2¼ cups cake flour, ½ teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Take out 3 or 4 tablespoons of the flour mixture and mix with 1 cup chopped walnuts and 1 package Sultana raisins. Cream 1 cup butter or margarine. Add 1 cup sugar gradually, creaming until really creamy. Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice, ½ teaspoon vanilla and the yolks of 5 eggs beaten until very, very thick and lemon-colored. Beat the whites of 5 eggs. Fold carefully into the batter, then fold in the sifted dry ingredients. Last, stir in the floured nuts and raisins. Mix well and pour into a greased and floured fluted mold. Bake in a slow oven, 325° F., 1 to 1¼ hours. Serve unfrosted. This keeps well for at least a week if properly stored. The best way to store it is within. Although this old and treasured receipt calls for Sultanas, if Sultanas aren't just around the corner, other raisins are, and pretty tasty they are, too, if I'm the back-fence adviser I think I am.

ORANGE-NUT BALLS

Peel large oranges—enough to make ½ pound of peel. You'll find a use for the oranges—good one, too, I'll bet. Soak the peel in cold water for 24 hours. Drain. Put in a deep saucepan. Cover with cold water. Bring to a boil. Cook about 10 minutes or until soft. Drain again. Chop the peel very fine. Mix with 2 cups sugar. Cook slowly over low heat about 25 minutes or until the mixture is very thick and when a little is cooled on a plate, it will stick together-

NABISCO PARTY NEWS

Gelatin becomes a "DRESS-UP DESSERT" circled with

OREO CREME SANDWICH

ORANGE MOLD

Packaged gelatin Whipped cream
OREO CREME SANDWICH

Half fill mold with orange gelatin and let it set. Meanwhile, make another batch and, when this begins to thicken, whip with an egg beater until frothy. When cool, pour on top of first batch in mold and chill. Turn out on plate, garnish with whipped cream—and ring with OREO SANDWICH . . . picture-pretty and elegant to eat! OREO, chocolate-rich with creamy filling, high-lights any dessert—satisfies between-meal "hungries". Always look for the red NABISCO seal!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Charming Gift

A Lovely Ceramic Pitcher filled with Supreme Quality PURE VERMONT Maple Syrup

We think so highly of our Maple Syrup that we send it to you in a charming pitcher of permanent value. This Fancy Grade 100% pure Maple Syrup is made by our family, friends and neighbors to be the finest-flavored you've ever tasted. Send for this delicious Green Mountain nectar today.

15 full fluid ounces in handsome pitcher $3.00
Grade A—slightly darker—$2.50
Send check or money order to

DEER RIDGE FARMS
R.F.D. #4, Brattleboro, Vermont
Sugar House #13

At Better Stores Everywhere

For PERFECT POPPING!
Tender • Nutritious • Tasty
Sun-Cured • Fun to Pop

T-N-T POPCORN

KVP PIE TAPE

tir only occasionally while cooking. Add 1 easpoon vanilla. Remove from the range. Cool. Shape into balls. Roll the balls in nely chopped nuts then in sugar and have hem small.

CRANBERRY PUNCH

For 5 quarts punch use 2½ cups cranberry uice, 2 cups strong cold tea, 3 cups orange nd 1½ cups lemon juice, strained, 2 cups grape juice and 1 quart ginger ale. Have everything cold, pour into chilled punch owl and add ice cubes or block of ice. Add arbonated water, if desired.

For cranberry juice, use 6 cups cranberries, 4 cups water, 1 cup light corn sirup nd 1 cup sugar. Cook until berries are soft. Strain through double cheesecloth. Cool.

Stand or sit—find your place. Besides children home from school and all the litter and fuss of Christmas (I still can't account for the ribbon I've lost), comfort and cheer do come from the queerest places, and one of those is an oystershell. Oysters charm and beguile the hardest to please, and the seasoned sophisticate can sit back and "breathe easy," for infinite variety is another name for oyster. I am putting this in because you'll find these secretive oysters in a feature role, just a little later. Hold on, we're coming through.

For evening—for luncheon—what you will. That means a buffet, that movable feast that includes anything and everything favored by guests, no matter what has come before or is to come afterward. So stand, help yourself, sit and get waited on, you can't lose, and I hope this Christmas spread will be to you like a long breath after a hard run—and it's all as simple and good-looking and eatable as any Christmas hostess could ever wish.

SPICED GLAZED BAKED HAM

Bake a ham according to the regular baking directions for the ham you buy. I bake my hams at 15 minutes per pound in a slow oven, 300° F. Skin it and score it. Now "score" means baseball and Joe DiMaggio to some, but this has to do with a sharp knife and a little imagination as you cut the ham fat crisscross. Stud with cloves and candied or maraschino cherries. Prepare the following glaze—it gives a flavor that goes well with ham and is a lovely color: Mix 1 cup honey, ½ cup double-strength coffee, 1 teaspoon cinnamon and ¼ teaspoon clove. Simmer 15 minutes over low heat. Baste the ham with the glaze every 15 minutes for 1 hour of baking time in a slow oven, 300° F. (And you can use the same glaze for candying sweet potatoes. That'll cheer you—or won't it?)

HORSE-RADISH RELISH

Mince fine enough celery to make 2 cups. Mix with 1 cup mayonnaise and 2½ tablespoons grated horse-radish. Season with a little salt. Drain canned pimiento cups (the kind packed in sugar and vinegar) and fill them with the relish.

OYSTERS TETRAZZINI

Thaw 2 packages frozen oysters, or use 1 quart fresh oysters. Drain them, but don't lose any juice. Cook one 8-ounce package spaghetti according to the directions on the package. Also make 4 cups medium-thin cream sauce, using ½ milk and ½ cream. Add 2 tablespoons prepared mustard, ½ cup of the oyster liquor, and season well with salt and pepper. Now sprinkle the drained oysters with salt, pepper, paprika and chopped parsley. Add a dash of Tabasco to each. Wrap the oysters in raw bacon strips. Hitch them with toothpicks. It takes about a pound of bacon. Arrange on the broiler pan rack and bake in a moderately slow oven, 325° F., until the bacon is crisp. Never overcook an oyster. Makes it furious. Remove toothpicks. Grate enough sharp cheese to make 1½ cups. Now to put the casserole together. Put a layer of spaghetti in a large casserole. Next comes a layer of oysters. Pour part of the sauce over the oysters. Sprinkle with part of the cheese. Repeat with more spaghetti, oysters, sauce and cheese, until the ingredients are all used. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 30 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

HOLIDAY SALAD

This is a two-layer job. The first layer is tomato aspic. Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water or tomato juice (better use the juice and don't dilute). Heat 2 cups tomato juice with a few celery leaves, 1 tablespoon grated onion, ½ bay leaf, 1 tablespoon vinegar, ½ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon sugar. Simmer a few minutes. Strain and add the softened gelatin. Stir until it is dissolved. Fill twelve ½-cup individual gelatin molds half full with the mixture. Let it almost set. While this is setting, make the next layer as follows: Add ¾ cup hot water to 1 package lime-flavored gelatin. Add a dash of salt and stir until dissolved. Add 1 No. 2 can crushed pineapple and the juice of ½ lemon. Cool until it begins to thicken and add ½ cup sliced drained pickled onions and ⅓ cup slivered blanched almonds. Pour into the molds after tomato layer has set. Chill until firm—overnight—which can be and is all right by you. Turn out of the molds and serve on lettuce with a favorite dressing, Russian or mayonnaise. You know.

MOCHA TORTE

You'll need a large 9½-inch angel cake for this—homemade or bakery bought. (Now, you go ahead and do your stuff.) Slice the cake so that you'll have 3 slices. If you make the cake yourself, bake it 2 days before the party—put together with filling the day before the party and chill overnight in the refrigerator. (Is that all clear? I guess it is.) Here's how you make the—— Mocha Filling: Cream ½ pound butter or margarine. Gradually add 1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar and cream together well. Add a pinch of salt, 1 teaspoon vanilla and 2 egg yolks. Beat it thoroughly and add 2 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted, and 6 tablespoons double-strength coffee. Then fold in 2 egg whites beaten stiff, and spread between the layers of angel cake.

Chill overnight in the refrigerator. The next day, frost with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with vanilla. Garnish with candied cherries and citron. Chill in the refrigerator until serving time.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Winter Love

By Eleanor Graham Vance

I said the world was still the same,
I lied, my love, I lied!
For nothing knows its former name,
And all that was before you came
Has changed, or died.

I used to dread the winter's cold,
But now I do not care;
For I am warm and I am bold,
And all the things that can't be told
I think, and dare.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Until next Christmas. Christmas begins right after Christmas. And try to tie that one for a paradox or whatever. What I want to say is that the day after all the excitement is over and you're figuring how you may exchange and swap and otherwise dispose of the twenty-four ash trays and striped table mats, etc., etc., you should start. You should begin on next Christmas and keep it up month after month until next Christmas finds you as ready and equipped as August finds me on that card business I told you about.

And—should you coldly and heartlessly plan on giving Cousin Bessie the bridge-table cover Aunt Jessie made for you (so as to be economical and all that), take care. Don't get your cards mixed. I speak from experience, long and sad. Those girls aren't going to will you grandpa's Apostle clock, and don't fool yourselves. That will go to the local museum. And you know what I mean—as well as I do. Merry Christmas!

THE END

Iron out your gift problems with triple-purpose

WARING STEAM IRON

EASIER: Make her life easier with the gift of this gleaming, streamlined treasure —the feather-touch Waring Steam Iron. It's easier to iron delicate fabrics with a sheath of steam that smooths out wrinkles like magic. It's easier to press velvets, woolens. Toss out the damp rag—steam does the work, professionally. It's easier to switch to dry ironing, with NO LOSS OF STEAM WHATEVER. And the Waring Steam Iron is so much easier to fill—no funnel, no cap to unscrew and tighten.

FASTER: Imagine, full steam in 60 seconds! No waiting for a "boiler" tank to heat up. You speed through ironing with the perfectly balanced Waring Steam Iron, selecting low, medium or high volume steam with a fingertip control. And you never lose a wisp of steam—the Waring Steam Iron automatically shuts off the supply when you tip the iron back. You work faster—no frequent stops to replenish the water—with a full half hour of steam ironing from each filling.

SAFER: Anyone can use the Waring Steam Iron safely. Revolutionary new Waring principle vaporizes the water, drop by drop. No tank to heat up—no water under pressure. Safe temperature controls —dial a wide range of heats.

At better appliance departments, $19.95.

Waring

Triple-purpose

WARING STEAM IRON

... Products Corp. • New York • Makers of that wonderful WARING BLENDOR

Gifts to

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

"What gift for your homelife has pleased you a lot, perhaps out of all proportion to its cost?" we asked some of the JOURNAL Homemakers. "And what would you like this Christmas? Be reasonable about the price, please!" We thought perhaps our "bests" and "wish I hads" might be good clues to the kinds of gifts your friends would enjoy receiving for their homes. . . .

1 At least once, and sometimes three times a day, says coffee lover B. B. G., she mentally thanks the donor of her beautiful modern glass coffee maker "because it does a superlative job every time, and it's so easy to clean!" (Coffee maker, $6.00)

2 H. W., the Workshop's newest bride, would like to receive her precious hard-working pressure pan's natural affinity, a chef clock that rings when cooking time is up. And now that nested aluminum measuring cups are back, she hopes to find a set tucked in her Christmas stocking. (Timer, $3.00; cups, 65c a set)

3 A really inspired friend recently gave A. B. a household keyrack, with a neat plastic identification tag for each key. The same smart friend presented a coin holder (filled!) to be placed near the back door ready for the paper boy, and another for her car, ready for toll. (Keyrack, $1.50; coin holders, 39c)

4 M. B. was so delighted with a tiny pastel plastic flashlight to guide her way into her small son's nursery at night, that she plans to give one to everyone she knows for her night table. And because she loves new gadgets, especially when they really work and help, she wants one of the new automatic needle threaders. (Needle threader, $2.95; flashlight, $1.00)

5 A husky, really capable jar and can opener received an almost unanimous vote from both males and females as a sure-fire gift for any home! (Wall-type jar and can opener, $5.95)

6 D. S., our favorite bachelor, would like a new bathroom ash tray he saw in his favorite shop. Designed to be secured between the tiles in a bathroom, it's unbreakable, for the sake of sleepy smokers-while-shaving. (Chromium bathroom ash tray, $2.00)

7 J. S. is going to give a workmanlike "carver's assistant," which holds that precious roast firmly on the platter, to each of her good-cook friends, thus insuring plenty of invitations to dinner! (Carving holder, $2.95)

8 Perfect gift for your favorite couple, says L. P. B., is a big-enough-for-two tray, complete with its own stand, or used on a luggage rack. "Breakfasts on the porch, suppers by the fireside," sighs Mrs. B. romantically. (Large tray, $5.95; luggage rack, $5.95)

te Remember

king enthusiast A.C. yearns professional cake-decorating th lots of patterns. And L.S., oves to collect new food ac- ies, thinks a big pepper mill polished wood would look ght on a buffet table with her te wooden salad bowl. (Cake .50; Pepper mill, $5.95)

One of my favorite gift pearls le price," says A.B., "was a f cream-treated work gloves, rful for any woman who or gardens or chauffeurs." s, $2.00) st now, a timely gift of in- al steak knives holds a high in her affections. "Thanks to , we can eat cheaper, tougher of meat and like them!" es. $2.95 each)

. D.'s hoping someone will re- ber that she loves desk acces- , and see the chunky little pad, complete with its own , that she spotted recently. pad, $3.00) er most appreciated gift, a brass stamp dispenser for usy, bill-paying, letter-writing This was happily accom- d by a fat roll of stamps. mp dispenser, $3.50) gift of rosy-patterned rose s has made G.T. happy hun- of times over, for she's justly l of her way with flowers, and flowery, gardeny gifts. And she'd like a new flower holder heard about, made of clear ic with a suction cup to an- it firmly where it's placed in lower arrangement. (Holder, ; Rose shears, $2.00)

.N.G., who has a new and very ctive kitchen, is gently hint- for lots of gaily striped dish ls, with a slide-out rack to them conveniently. Favorite up to now, a set of good- ing matched kitchen tools, ging neatly on their own wall , and matched kitchen cutlery ts own sheath case. (Linen towels, 39c to 45c each; Slide- rack, $3.95)

.B.D.'s best ever, next to a cer- spaniel pup, was a family-plot- affair, all the fixings to make a nour closet. Garment bag from hatbox and shoe bag from her (all matching, of course), a roll of harmonizing ready- ed wallpaper, to say nothing of ted lacquer for hangers and eau drawers! (Scented lacquer, 0)

And as for good father J. di P., ays that what he'd really like n Santa this year is an eight- n house, but the best gift ever the shoeshine kit his children e him, and help him to keep y! (Leather shoeshine kit, $5.00) ecdn't cost a fortune to hit the t gift spot, it seems. . . . Hope e given you some Santa Claus s, and hope you have the Mer- t of Christmases!

Pattern for happiness

It takes more than love to make a marriage happy. It needs good friends, shared experiences, pride in your home. Lovely Reed & Barton Sterling is one of the things that will kindle that pride. Use it every day, let its gleaming beauty welcome guests to your table. It will be an important contribution to your way of gracious living.

HELPFUL HOSTESS HINTS: For fascinating and valuable booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess", send 10 cents to Reed & Barton, Box 990, Department L, Taunton, Massachusetts.

IT'S SMART TO CHOOSE THE FINEST STERLING

Reed & Barton
STERLING

MARLBOROUGH
STERLING
SILVER

GEORGIAN ROSE
POINTED ANTIQUE
FRANCIS FIRST
FRENCH RENAISSANCE

A Group of the World's Most Beautiful Sterling Patterns

SECURITY

(Continued from Page 44)

see that no one was riding his tail and applied the brakes. They worked smoothly and Ed opened her up.

The little cabin behind the station was swell. Two rooms and a pretty complete kitchen. It was a lot better than any room Ed could have rented, and it would do for Ed and Ellen until they'd saved enough and could afford a real apartment or even a small house.

The thought of Ellen warmed Ed, but it brought with it a reminder of what he had to do that evening and his hands got clammy on the smooth wheel. He said, "So what? I guess every guy has to go through it some time or other."

The big car purred. Ed thought, We'll have one like this someday. Me and Ellen.

He was up on the hill, among the pleasant houses set back from tree-lined streets, with lawns still green and late roses and chrysanthemums making bright spots of color.

Doctor Mostyn's house was white, with a car port at the side and a two-car garage beyond. Ed turned the keys over to the maid. He got the pad from the front seat, unhooked the motorcycle and started back. The colorful, dignified houses fled past and Ed said to himself, We'll have a house good as these one of these days. Maybe not till our kids are grown, but one of these days.

He was whistling cheerfully when he parked the motorcycle in the shop. It was just past six and John Froelick, working at the desk, looked up to nod. A car drew up at the tanks and John said, "Get that, will you, Eddie?"

Ed went out and serviced the sedan, checked the oil and water after he'd filled the tank. He made the change, an innovation he'd sold to John. People hated to wait while you went in and got change. Once they'd got the gas, had the windshield wiped, they wanted to push right off.

He rang up the sale, went out and around to the cabin. He opened the door and closed it behind him, switched on the lights. The bulbs sent a swift radiance to dispel the gloom of the fast-falling night. Ed went into the tiny bathroom, took off his clothes and stood in the shower while he made a good job on his hands. He was still whistling as he dried himself and, putting the towel about his lean, hard body, went into the bedroom.

IT had only an Army cot for a bed, a pretty cheap bureau and mirror and a lone chair, but that would be taken care of as soon as he and Ellen had settled things with her parents. As soon as they'd told them. There was a swell bedroom suite at Fothergil's. They'd talked it over. They had enough to swing the furniture they needed and it would be good stuff. Good enough for any place they might move into the next few years. They'd agreed on that. "When we get up in the chips," Ed had said earnestly, "we'll probably need new furniture. It'll be time anyhow. Five, even ten years." It didn't seem long when you stood looking in the window of Fothergil's with someone like Ellen small and lovely beside you, hugging your arm.

Ed dressed slowly. He got into the gray slacks, stuffed in the tails of his white shirt. He knotted the maroon tie, slipped on the white pull-over Ellen had given him on his birthday and got his gray jacket. He gave himself a critical glance in the mirror. His hair was slicked down. It didn't look natural, but when it dried it would curl up.

He locked the door behind him and went around to where his flivver was parked. John Froelick was still in the office and Ed frowned and then went in.

"I'm pushing off now," he said.

"O.K., kid." John glanced at the clock on the desk. "I told Mary I'd be home for dinner by now." He got up. "You beat it. I'll check the tanks and lock up." As Ed turned to the door John called, "You get started on the coupé in the morning, Eddie. I'll take care of the Broker sedan."

"Right," Ed said.

He got into the flivver, started her and rolled out into the street. It was six-thirty and he should be at the McKees' by now but he just couldn't push his foot down on the accelerator.

HE drove up Race, turned at Elm and crossed Marsten. It was the older residential section of Claremont. The houses were of clapboard siding and most of them were well taken care of. People appreciated whatever sort of house they had these days, Ed thought. When he crossed Chestnut he saw the McKee house halfway up the block. It had a white picket fence, white paint and green trim. It wasn't big, but it was a nice house.

Ed parked the car at the curb and Ellen came running down from the porch and out the gate.

As Ed saw her coming he felt as he always did. A queer mixture of pleasure and pride and wonder that a girl as pretty and smart as Ellen could care for a guy like himself. A guy who'd been brought up in an orphanage in the East, had finished high and served his eighteen months in the Army after the war was over, was good with his hands at things mechanical, and that was about all.

He'd always liked to fuss with cars. He'd liked the shop at the orphanage better than anything else, and when they'd drafted him he'd managed to get into the car pool after his MP replacement group had hit Japan. He'd learned a lot more there. When he got back and got out he'd worked at garages farther west. He hadn't stayed. He was footloose and eager for experience. The only reason he'd stayed at John Froelick's was that John had let him live in the cabin. He'd like that. Not a room, but a whole little house of his own.

Ed might have moved on if it hadn't been for Ellen. He'd met her at the station. She'd brought in the McKee sedan to be serviced. She was so pretty that Ed hadn't thought a girl like that could be interested in him.

She had inky-black hair and gray eyes. It was an odd combination. Ed had never met it in a girl before. He'd changed the oil and lubricated the car and he'd been aware of her walking about. Aware of her slim legs, her rounded young body. She'd crouched to look up as Ed handled the grease gun. She'd been interested, friendly.

After that, whenever she came in with the car, they'd chatted and finally Ed had got up courage enough to ask her to go to the movies with him. Ellen had said she'd like to. She'd asked him to come to the house and meet her family before they went. Ed had been grateful for that. It had made him feel that Ellen thought something of him. If she hadn't she wouldn't have asked him to meet her people.

He'd liked the McKees. Mr. McKee was a graying man in his middle forties. He was a

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Nostalgia

BY EARL CARTER

The palms are rustling in the wind tonight,
The breakers beat upon the shore,
While southern stars are clear and bright
Beyond the streets of Matamor.

And yet, how strange, before my eyes
I see my northland far away—
Bare trees beneath December skies
And snow-white fields where moonbeams play.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

erica's Most Distinguished Packaged Rice

ariety for variety ice for price

here is no better rice than

GULAR GRAIN
the blue and low package

NG GRAIN
the green and low package

ecipe for a Busy Woman

Tested by FLORA ADAMS
Home Economics Director

Savory Shrimp and WondeRice

3 tablespoons fat	1½ cups shrimp
1 onion, chopped	1 teaspoon salt
1 green pepper, chopped	1 small piece bay leaf
1 clove garlic, chopped	3 cups water or tomato juice
1 cup pimiento	1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 cup raw WondeRice
½ cup mushrooms

Melt fat in large frying pan. Add ingredients in order given. Cover, and when steam appears, turn heat very low and simmer for 40 minutes. Serves 6.

FREE
16 TESTED RECIPES —
SEND POSTCARD

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

WALTON RICE MILL, INC., STUTTGART, ARK.

PLEASE YOUR FAMILY AND FRIENDS . . . SERVE THE Original KAUKAUNA
★ KLUB ★
Cheese foods

• FOR COOKING, LUNCHES, PARTIES, SNACKS

Look for the blue, self-serving carton or the familiar crocks in the refrigerator of your favorite food store.

ive unequaled flavors

Cold-processed to preserve all the natural goodness of aged American cheese — made under the exclusive Kaukauna Klub formula.

- Kaukauna Klub in crocks or links. Aged cheddar with a hearty, mellow flavor.
- Kaukauna Klub-Hickory Smoked—Pungent, smoked flavor from genuine hickory wood.
- Kaukauna Klub Garlic—Just the right touch of garlic for added zest.
- Kaukauna Klub Appetizer—Onion and paprika adds delightful zip.
- Kaukauna Klub with Port Wine—The rare bouquet of select wine.

made ONLY by the SOUTH KAUKAUNA DAIRY CO.
KAUKAUNA, WIS.

The Nation's Cheese Treat from Wisconsin's Dairyland

real-estate salesman with the Momfort & Clark outfit. A man you could talk baseball and football and cars to. And Mrs. McKee was pretty swell. She didn't say much, but she smiled a lot and she was a swell cook. There were Ellen's brother Fred, and her sister Amy, but they were just kids.

After that first date at the movies they'd seen a lot of each other. Ellen had been born in Claremont, had gone to school and high school and she had a job now as stenographer in the Ames Mills on the west side of the Carlisle River. She had lots of friends. She'd got Ed invited to outings and parties and everyone had been swell to him. After a time, almost without saying a word, they knew they belonged together. Ed couldn't remember how it had happened, but they'd got to talking of a house and furniture and all that. It had accomplished itself.

Now they'd come to the end of all the talk. They'd said everything. They wanted to be married. They loved each other even if they hadn't put it into words. It was in the silences when they were together; in the way Ellen put up her face to be kissed before they said good night. A gesture that told Ed she was in no doubt. That she knew she was his girl and he her man.

Ellen opened the door of the car for him. Ed got out and looked down at her. Not far, either. She was eighteen, almost nineteen, and just three inches shorter than Ed. Just five-six. Just right, Ed thought.

That blue-black hair framed the oval of her face. Her gray eyes with their long, fringed lashes looked inquiringly at Ed. He grinned a bit uncertainly as he opened the gate and Ellen asked, her breath catching:

"Are you scared, Ed?"

"What do you think?" Ed asked. "This is something new to me."

"Don't be," Ellen said. "We—we just have to tell them."

"Yeah, just ——" Ed said and let his breath go.

It was warm and cozy inside the McKee house. There was the heartening odor of roasting meat; the kids were sitting on the floor of the living room, deep in comic books, and Mr. McKee was reading the evening paper. It was something Ed had never known, yet something he recognized for what it was—an atmosphere of people who liked being with one another. A cozy, nice feeling.

Mr. McKee said, "Just in time, Ed," and the kids looked up to say, "Hi." Ellen went into the kitchen to help her mother, the skirts of her blue dress swaying about her slim young legs, and Mr. McKee gestured to a chair. "Make yourself comfortable, boy. We'll have a bit of a wait still." He put down the paper. "How are things at the station?"

"Pretty good," Ed said, not quite knowing what to do with his hands. "We're kept busy with repair work."

"Good, steady man, Froelick," Mr. McKee said and Ed agreed:

"Yes, sir, the Sarge is O.K."

Mr. McKee frowned unaccountably. He seemed a little ill at ease. He said, "Glad to see we're building more this fall. But costs ——" He shook his head. "Tough to sell the average young married man a house. Even if he's willing to go into it, you hesitate to push him."

Ed said, "Yes, sir," though he wasn't quite sure just what Mr. McKee meant. He shifted, wondering if he should light a cigarette.

Ellen came to the door of the dining room. She gave Ed a quick, comforting smile. She said, "You kids go and wash. Dinner's ready."

The kids got up, still immersed in their comics, and went upstairs.

Mr. McKee asked, "You want to wash, Ed?" and Ed said:

"No, thank you, Mr. McKee."

Mr. McKee rose. "Let's go in, then."

The dining room was small, but the table looked nice with its colorful china and bright silverware. Company stuff, Ed knew, and it made him feel a little less unsure. The McKees must surely know by now that he and Ellen were more than just a girl and a boy who knew each other.

TAPPAN IS A Bride's Choice

And well it may be. Tappan is beautiful, modern and easy to keep clean. And for four generations Tappan ranges have been proving they give long, reliable service that brides of a day or a decade want. And today's Tappan Gas Range features the Tel-U-Set

Gown by Henri Bendel

only TAPPAN has the TEL·U·SET

A beautiful "controlled cooking" panel at the top of the range brings all the Tappan automatic features to your finger tips. It remembers so you may forget.

- Automatic Clock—to time your oven.
- Visiminder—signals by light and bell when cooking's done.
- "Oven-On" Signal—glows when oven is lighted.
- Timed Appliance Outlet—times your appliances.
- Visiguide—time and temperature chart.

Ask your dealer for a complete demonstration. Specially designed models for LP (bottled or tank) Gas. For illustrated folder, write The Tappan Stove Company, Dept. 34, Mansfield, Ohio.

Choose wisely...choose
TAPPAN
GAS RANGES

Your guide to best in modern automatic cooking

DIVIDED TOP • OVERSIZE CHROME VISUALITE OVEN • CLOCK CONTROL OF OVEN PYROGLAS TOP UNITS • VISIMINDER • VISIGUIDE • TIMED APPLIANCE OUTLET

Recipe

Pickled Peaches

e-spiced canned clings in fresh cranberry ring!

2½ can cling peach halves cup brown sugar (packed)
½ cup vinegar
2 3-inch sticks cinnamon
1 teaspoon whole cloves teaspoon whole allspice aches; add sugar, vinegar and spices and boil 5 minutes. Add peaches ner 5 minutes. Allow fruit to chill ng syrup overnight. Serve in jellied y ring.

rry ring: Boil 1 pound rinsed Eatmor cranberries in 2 cups water 5 minutes. Stir in 2 cups granulated sugar; boil 5 minutes longer. Soften 2 tablespoons Knox gelatine in ½ cup cold water; dissolve in hot cranberries. Pour into oiled 8-inch ring mold. Chill overnight before unmolding.

Speedy dessert (shown below): sweet, juicy-ripe cling peaches spooned right from the can! Instantly ready, definitely "company best." Thrifty to start with, canned cling peaches solve a dozen mealtime problems! * California-grown cling peaches are the finest in the land! * Plump, sun-ripened beauties full of rich flavor and color! * The most usable canned fruit your grocery money can buy! * Convenient, ready to serve, low in cost. Delicious right from the can! * Serve them often! America's favorites!

Check the label—Choose your favorite brand of nned Cling Peaches from California

Canned Halves · Canned Slices · Canned Fruit Cocktail · In tin or glass

Mrs. McKee came from the kitchen, her cheeks flushed. She was a tidy little woman in a green dress that suited her. She was nice-looking—she must have been almost as pretty as Ellen when she was Ellen's age.

The kids came noisily, subsided into their seats as Mr. McKee looked at them. Ellen brought in the roast leg of lamb and set it before her father while Mrs. McKee sat down at the foot of the table before the covered vegetable dishes. Ellen slipped into her chair next to Amy, across from Ed, and gave him the tiniest smile before she bowed her head as her father cleared his throat.

It was a swell meal. Just to be sitting there, eating food like this, that cost no more than what he ate usually at the diner, but tasted like something from a different world, made Ed dream of the days—not far ahead—when he would sit down to dinner with Ellen across from him. Just they two.

He ate and spoke and by the time they had finished their pie he felt very good. Even the ordeal before him seemed less formidable than it had. As Ellen had said, all they had to do was tell her parents, and Ed was sure that Mr. and Mrs. McKee knew, or at least suspected.

The kids went up to their beds almost as soon as Ed and Mr. McKee had settled again in the living room. Mrs. McKee and Ellen came from doing the dishes and Ellen took Fred and Amy upstairs while Mr. McKee put on a program he always listened to. Ed was glad of that. He didn't hear a thing the radio was giving out. He sat thinking of the future. Of when he and Ellen were married.

He had plans. He was a good mechanic, but he was sure he was more than that. John Froelick was cautious, even old-fashioned. Ed had a dozen ideas for stepping up the business. There was that new idea from the West—self-service. The motorist gassed up his own car. All you needed was someone to wipe windshields and make change. You could get any of a dozen kids for that. Even some of the pretty high-school girls who needed to make some after-school money as much as the boys who always hung around. Like Georgie Jones, the colored kid who was going to be an engineer if he could afford it. Or Wally Sorenson, the towheaded boy who played end for Claremont High and was as good with a set of tools as Ed had been at his age.

And other things. All automatic, so that Ed and John could work undisturbed on repairs and not have to knock off every few minutes to go out to the pumps. Cola machines and those new coffee machines you shoved a coin into and a hot cup of fresh-made coffee came right out. A decent display of cigarettes and candy bars. On the big side, that job of doing maintenance on the Riley trucks. There were only six, but Riley was fed up with undependable mechanics. He'd said he'd consider having Froelick's take over maintenance. He'd even asked Ed to find out what John would want as a base figure. Ed hadn't mentioned it yet to John Froelick. It would take some thinking. He wanted it all clear before he spoke to John about it. Because it would mean he'd want to share in the increased business. A percentage. He'd need it if he and Ellen were going to get on. And they were going to.

Ellen came from upstairs. Mr. McKee turned off the radio. He said, "That program's getting pretty thin," and Mrs. McKee said, "It always was."

There was a silence. Ellen looked at Ed. He rubbed his hands against his knees. His throat felt awful dry. He said, "Mr. McKee ——" and his voice stuck.

Mr. McKee looked at Ed with still blue eyes and then looked away.

Ed said, wishing his voice wouldn't quaver, "I—we . . . that is, Ellen and I have something to—to tell you and Mrs. McKee."

Mr. McKee looked at his wife. He said, "Well, look ——"

But Ed was started. He had to finish. He knew that, or he'd never be able to get it said. "We—we want to get married."

It was out. He felt as if a load had been taken from his chest. He looked at Ellen and her tremulous smile surprised him. He hadn't thought anyone but him could ha been so nervous about it.

Mrs. McKee didn't say anything. Mr. M Kee's frown was even deeper and Ed fel touch of coldness at his stomach.

He said, "I—well—you know all abo me. I'm an orphan and ——"

Mr. McKee gestured almost angri "That's of no importance. You're a good la Ed. Ellen's mother and I like you very muc If we didn't you wouldn't be as welcome he as you are. But ——" He paused. Ed swa lowed.

It was Ellen who said, her clear voice ri ing, "But what, dad?"

Mr. McKee said, "But I don't think yo should be thinking of getting married." H lifted his hand as Ellen half started from he chair and Ed sat upright, a queer tinglin sting at the end of his tongue. Mr. McKe said, "Your mother and I aren't blind, E len. We've seen the way things have been go ing between you and Ed. We—well—we'v talked it over time and again." He stoppec rubbing his chin.

Ed opened his mouth, but nothing came It was Ellen who said, "But if you haven' any objections to Ed; if—if you like him then why are you a-against us gettin married?"

Mr. Mckee looked at Ellen's mother. Then he looked at Ed, as if it were something that only Ed could understand and grasp. "We're not against you and Ellen getting married Ed. I want you to know that. It's just tha we feel you're still both pretty young and even more that we know you need some— some security before you go into marriage."

Ellen said, "Security, dad?"

"Security," Mr. McKee repeated firmly. He leaned forward, "Look, Ed, you're counting on your job with John Froelick, aren't you?"

Ed considered. "I guess so," he admitted. "but I could get a job easy ——"

He stopped and Mr. McKee said, "A young man on his own and a young man married are two different things." He said, "I know you've been counting on living in that cabin behind the station." He lifted his hand again. "What do you kids think? I told you I'm not blind or indifferent. It's my business to consider everything. I spoke to John Froelick about you, Ed, as soon as you started coming around a lot. John said you were a swell kid and a fine mechanic. He also said he wished there could be a future in the business for you, but he'd got his own son growing up; got plans for him. You've got a job there for the next few years if you want it, but that's all."

Ellen said, "Dad ——" but Ed turned and shook his head. "Let your dad talk," he said slowly.

Mr. McKee said, "You haven't got much money, have you, Ed?"

"About a thousand saved," Ed said softly and Mr. McKee nodded.

"That's a lot for a kid your age, but it won't go far these days. Not with furniture and—and things that will come up." He looked at his hands. "I'm not a rich man, Ed. I'm not even well off. Ellen has the money she's earned the year she's been working. I wish she could have more, but I've got Ellen's brother and sister and her mother to provide for. If anything went wrong I couldn't help you much, and I know you'd hate to have to come to me."

"We wouldn't," Ellen said fiercely.

Ed didn't speak and Mr. McKee said, "I may be wrong, but I don't think so, and Mrs. McKee agrees with me. These are tough times. You've got to have some little assurance of security. In a couple of years you'll be able to save a decent sum between you; Ed may be able to buy into a business or start one of his own. As it is, the first sickness, the first baby, and where would you be?"

Ed was aware that Ellen's gray eyes were on him, but he couldn't say anything against the things that worried, earnest voice was saying.

Mr. McKee said, "That's all I've got to say. I know that Ellen's of age—that if you kids want to you can tell me where to get off and go right on your way—but I've got to te you how we feel. If you want to be engaged, that's all right with us—but no marriage. Not until you're more secure—and your future a little more assured. You understand, Ed, don't you?"

Ed lifted his fair head, his blue eyes dark and unhappy. "I understand."

Ellen jumped up. Her voice broke. "But Ed——"

He looked at her, hoping that what Ellen could say would brush away the sense-making things Mr. McKee had said, but after a long moment Ellen turned her head to her mother. Mrs. McKee was sitting, her eyes downcast. She did not look up. She didn't say a word and Ellen suddenly burst into tears and ran from the room. Ed could hear the sound of her feet on the stairs.

He got up, his heart sore and heavy. "I guess I'll go."

Mr. McKee rose quickly. He said, "I'm sorry, Ed," and Ed said:

"No, don't you be, Mr. McKee. Don't you be. Tell Ellen I—I'll see her." He said, "Thank you, Mrs. McKee," and moved to the hall.

He opened the door and went out into the cool damp of the night. He got into the car and looked up at Ellen's window. There was a light there and he knew she was lying on the bed, crying, and he wished he could go to and comfort her. Tell her he loved her. Tell her that he would always love her and if they had to wait, it was all right with him. But when he had driven back to the dark station and parked the car and let himself into the cabin it seemed so empty, so lacking that he wanted to cry himself.

He lighted a cigarette and sat on his cot, thinking of everything Mr. McKee had said and seeing nothing in what Ellen's father had told him that did not make sense.

Everybody seems to know enough arithmetic to figure out what's coming to him.

He was working on the coupé when Mary Froelick drove John to the station the morning. Mrs. Froelick was a woman in her thirties. A pretty woman with soft brown hair. She came in to say hello to Ed while John was getting into his coveralls and to ask:

"When are you coming over to dinner again, Eddie?"

Ed rested his hands against the grimy motor of the car. "Whenever you say, Mrs. Froelick."

"Make it Friday," Mary said. "And bring your girl. She's nice, Eddie."

"Yeah," Ed said, "Ellen's swell. I'll ask her. It—it's kind of you."

He didn't look at Mary Froelick. He went back to his work, but he didn't whistle as he usually did. John came and got started on the sedan. Several times Ed went out to serve cars that stopped.

JUST before noon when he came back John asked, "Something eating you, kid?"

Ed looked up. "Nothing, Sarge."

John wiped his oily hands on a bit of waste. "There is. I figure I know what it is, Eddie. You been talking to Mr. McKee and he told you what I said."

Ed straightened, tapping the spanner he held against the engine block of the coupé. His voice was soft as he said, "So what? It's best to know what the score is."

John shook his head. "Eddie, you're pretty young. I guess Ellen's old man told you he wasn't in favor of you two kids getting married and I wish I could say he was wrong, but I can't. A guy who rushes into marriage these days without a good solid bank account and good prospects is giving himself one tough hurdle." He threw the waste into the empty drum that served as a collect-all. "I wish there was a future here for you, Eddie, but like I told Mr. McKee, I'll want Jack to go in with me when he's finished with high school. Three more years, Eddie. You could always have a job, I guess, but nothing more, and if things got bad it'd be you would have to go. You know that."

Ed did not answer.

John said, "I don't want to give you any advice, kid. If I did I'd just say keep working and socking it away and keep your eyes open for a chance to buy into something in this line. You're good at it."

Ed picked up the gasket he was going to use.

John said heavily, "You got to have some sort of security. Something to fall back on. You never know what's going to happen."

Ed said, because he knew John felt badly about it, "That's all right, Sarge. I guess you're right."

But he couldn't help thinking somehow that it wasn't right. There wasn't anything he could put his finger on. Everything John and Mr. McKee had said made sense. They were older men, experienced, married men, and Ed respected them, but somehow he couldn't help feeling that it wasn't so, that it wasn't wrong for him and Ellen to want to be married.

HE saw Ellen that night. It had turned quite warm and when Ed got to the McKee house Ellen was waiting on the porch. She came through the gate and got into the car. She said:

"Let's get away, Ed."

Ed drove up the street and down Chapel and out along the hill road along the river. He looked down at Ellen. She sat with her head against the worn cushions. The soft light of the moon outlined the beauty of her profile. Ed felt his heart turn over. He wanted to stop and tell her everything that was on his mind. To tell her it did not matter. That he would work and work until they had that security. That he would wait.

He said instead, "Want to go somewhere, Ellen? Maybe to Harvey's?"

Ellen's voice was low. "No. I don't feel like it, Ed."

She put her head against Ed's shoulder and Ed drove in silence until they came to the cliff. He turned in and parked the car at the edge of the trees and the river was a dark void below save where the moonpath was golden on the ripples.

Ed turned off the ignition. He sat back, feeling for Ellen's hand. Her fingers curled warm about his.

She said, "Oh, Ed, what are we going to do?"

"What can we do?" Ed asked miserably. "I guess they're right, Ellen. I guess we've got to wait until I'm better fixed."

Ellen sat up. "But I don't want to wait." The scent of her hair was a fragrance sweeter than any perfume. Her face was robbed of color by the moonlight as she faced him. "Ed, we love each other, don't we?"

He'd never said it before, but he said it now, deeply, steadily. "I love you, Ellen. You—you're all I want. Everything I want. I'll wait, Ellen."

She said again, brokenly, "I don't want to wait." She turned to him. Her arms went about him and her lips were hot and moist. Ed held her close. Her eyes were closed, the lashes sooty against her skin. She pressed to Ed with an urgency that woke fire in him; her mouth sought his with avid desperation.

It was Ed who sat up, gasping. He pushed her from him, still holding her soft body. Her wet-lashed eyes met his and Ed said, "No, Ellen. Look, Ellen . . . no——"

She began to cry. Ed drew her to him, put his hand on her soft hair, touched with the night's damp. Against his shoulder Ellen said, "I—I'm sorry, Ed," and Ed said fiercely:

"Don't you be. I want you to love me like that, Ellen, but with us it's got to be right, no matter how long we have to wait." He bent his head to look into her eyes. "You understand, Ellen?"

He felt the sigh that went through her, like a child's. "I understand," Ellen said and her voice was quiet. Her lips touched his cheek, breathed at his ear, "Oh, Ed, I love you so. I wish ——"

She didn't finish. They sat, their arms about each other, sadder than ever in the loveliness of the night that seemed like a farewell to the lost loveliness of summer.

HERE'S Betty Crocker's NEW

"Cake in a Box"

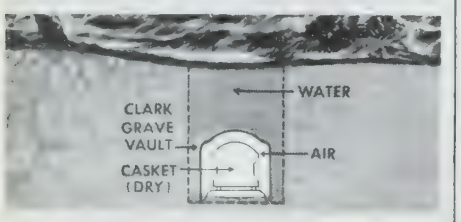
(And 19 Glamorous Serving Ideas)

JUST ADD WATER, MIX AND BAKE!

"and visions of sugar plums danced in their heads"

JOLLY SUGARPLUM CAKE

Follow directions on box for GingerCake. Flatten 9 marshmallows; place evenly on hot cake —3 each way. Top with 2 sizes of colored gumdrops. Cut cake into 9 squares and serve at once.



IT'S spicy-rich as gingerbread, tender-light as cake! Yes . . . because Betty Crocker GingerCake Mix is made—not from bread flour—but from silky-fine Softasilk Cake Flour!

And you get perfect results every time! You're bound to . . . with a Betty Crocker recipe all measured out. There's nothing for you to add but water. Get Betty Crocker GingerCake Mix today! Nineteen exciting serving ideas come with each package!

General Mills

"Betty Crocker" and "GingerCake" are reg. trade-marks of General Mills. Copr. 1948.

Placed over the casket, the Clark Metal Grave Vault is designed to use the pressure of air in the dome to keep seeping water from the rains and melting snows from reaching the casket.

Your funeral director will show you beautiful Clark Vaults within your means. All made of enduring metal instead of porous material. And available in styles armored with 25 to 35 lbs. of zinc to insure up to 2 to 5 times as long-lasting protection as the same vault uncoated.

THE FINEST TRIBUTE • THE MOST TRUSTED PROTECTION

CLARK GRAVE VAULTS

Write for FREE 28-page booklet, "My Duty." Tells what to do when you are asked to "take charge." Over a million copies distributed. The Clark Grave Vault Co., Dept. E-118, Columbus, O. Copyright 1947.

In the days that followed Ed did his work and his mind went this way and that like a trapped animal and found no way out—no answer but to wait.

He and Ellen went to the Froelicks'. John and Mary had a two-family house. They lived on the ground floor and rented the upper one. Their furniture was not new, but it was good. Jack Froelick was a nice kid, with good manners and a deep interest in planes and cars, and the twins, Grace and Edie, were clean-scrubbed, pretty girls of nine.

They had a fine dinner at the Froelicks', but they didn't say much as Ed drove Ellen home and he thought, It isn't much fun when you see how happy other people are and you've got to wait for your chance.

Ellen didn't say anything when she got out of the car. She leaned to kiss him, a short hard kiss. She opened the gate and it creaked as she let it go and Ed slipped in the clutch and drove back to the station. He didn't go into the cabin. He went over to the diner instead and had coffee and kept Joe Smithen company until some truckers came in to eat and it was time to sleep.

It got pretty tough. Ed saw Ellen two or three nights a week as usual, but it wasn't the same. They weren't comfortable at the McKees' and Ellen seemed to want to get away from the house, though her mother and father were just as swell to Ed as ever. And she wasn't demonstrative any more. She seemed afraid to kiss Ed or let him kiss her. They would go to the movies, but they wouldn't discuss the picture over their sodas at Sher's. Ed was glad of that, for most of the time he didn't even know what was going on in the picture. He was too occupied with the ache in his heart, with the way his mind still kept seeking some answer, some way to what they wanted against that wall of sense Mr. McKee and John Froelick had placed before them.

He might have picked up and gone away, let it all get behind him, if he had loved Ellen less. But it wasn't only that she was the prettiest and the nicest girl Ed had ever known. It was much more. It was the feeling that only here in Claremont could he find the home he had never had, and that only Ellen could make it complete. No one else.

The first snow came in a quick series of flurries and Thanksgiving loomed with papier-mâché pumpkins in the shopwindows and ice on the water can and cars to be serviced with antifreeze. And still there was nothing Ed could see but to wait, and he felt as Ellen did.

He didn't say it to her, but often at night, lonely for her, disheartened, he would think, I don't want to wait either. Why should we wait? There was an answer. He was sure of that, but he did not know what it was.

He did his work conscientiously, shoved most of his money, except for what he needed for food and cigarettes and the movies, into the bank. There was a little comfort in the mounting figures, but not much.

THE week before Thanksgiving Ed finished a valve job on a '38 convertible with Georgie Jones helping him. John was preparing to haul the engine block on a twelve-year-old eight-cylinder job. He only nodded when Ed said, "O.K. on the Mace, John. I'll take her over." It was then past five and Ed said to Georgie, "I'll give you a lift home. No use you staying. John won't need you and I'll get the pumps when I get back."

The boy attached the motorcycle while Ed brushed out the convertible. John had the pulley and chains in place as they drove away. When Ed had dropped Georgie at his home on Railroad he drove to Carlisle Place. He had the bill for the job in his pocket and he was deep in figuring how he could get a check without making Mr. Mace annoyed. The man was slow pay and John hated to press people.

Ed rang the bell of the Mace house. Mrs. Mace came to the door and Ed smiled and asked, "Mr. Mace home? I've brought the car. I thought he'd like to try her out and let me know if anything sounds off to him."

From inside the house Mr. Mace said, "Wait until I get my coat."

He came out, shrugging on his overcoat. A big, florid man. Ed unhooked the motorcycle and Mr. Mace got behind the wheel. It was almost dark; a chill damp day. Mr. Mace drove around the square twice. He stopped before the door.

"Good as new," he said pridefully and Ed said:

"You didn't get a lemon in this buggy, Mr. Mace." He opened the door to get out. Then he turned. "Look, Mr. Mace, you know that John. He'd mow me if he knew I asked you, but he needs money. He'd never ask you to pay until you're ready, but I know it doesn't mean anything to you and it does to John just now. Could you give me a check?"

Mr. Mace, his hands still affectionately on the wheel of his car, said, "Sure, Ed. Come on in. Glad to oblige."

The check was snug under Ed's leather jacket as he jounced back to the station. The lights were on, but John wasn't in the office. Ed parked the car in the service shop. He glanced over to where the work light burned in its wire cage over the eight-cylinder job. The pulley chains dangled.

* * * * * * * * *

Brook

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Pity the child who grows up knowing
No little brook's cool silver flowing
In and out of meadow grasses,
Flashing sun like looking glasses,
Or when in woods it slips between
Dim walls of leafy-smelling green.

Pity the child who grows up loving
No little brook's good-natured shoving
When laughing to itself it goes
Leaping over his barefoot toes,
Or its quiet moods of gentleness
To tender fern and water cress.

For all his life he'll feel the lack
Of what there is no getting back!

* * * * * * * * *

Ed gasped, the blood draining from his cheeks. He yelled, "John ——" and went running across the concrete.

John was lying at the far side of the car and the engine block was against the brick wall. Ed kneeled quickly. John's face was white, his teeth chattering. He stammered, "C-can't move. Back, I think."

Ed said quickly, "With you in a minute, John. Take it easy." He ran to the office, dialed and said, "Emergency. Service station at Maple and State Road. Ambulance—quick."

He racked the phone and ran back to John. He whipped off his jacket and put it around John's shoulders.

"Doc be here in a jiffy," he said to John's dazed eyes. He got a cigarette from his pack and lighted it, shoved it between John's lips, saying, "Don't talk. It's going to be all right, Sarge."

The police car came first. The clang of the ambulance brought a few people into the shop. The intern kneeled. Ed stood up to answer the patrolman's questions. He didn't see them carry John out. He heard the ambulance bell clang. The cop closed his book and said, "Tough luck. John's a swell guy."

Ed moved to the doors, shooing the curious out. He stood a moment, his mouth dry. He closed the big doors and went into the office. He dialed the McKee number. Ellen answered and Ed said, "Look, Ellen, I can't come over tonight. There—there's been an accident ——"

Her voice, frightened, cut across his words: "Ed, you're all right?"

"It's John," Ed said. "Mary doesn' know. I'm going to call her now. They' taken him to Memorial. Maybe if you'd over and stay with the kids —— They'll scared and Jack's only a kid himself."

"I'll go right now," Ellen said and h heard the click of the phone. He took a dee breath and dialed the Froelick house.

It was past eight when he had closed u washed and changed. He drove through tow and up the hill to the stone walls of the ho pital grounds. He found Mrs. Froelick in th waiting room. She was sitting still and pal Ed sat down beside her. It seemed to tak several seconds before her eyes focused o Ed.

He asked softly, "How is he?"

Mary Froelick moistened her lips. He voice was quiet, but her fingers moved, i tertwining in her lap. "He's in the operatin room still, I think. Ex—exploratory, th nurse said. X rays and such. They've give him morphine or something."

ED bent his head. "Yeah." He glanced a her white face. "He won't come out of it fo hours after they put him to bed. Don't yo think you'd better go home, Mrs. Froelick?"

The movement of her head was barely per ceptible. "I'll stay until they let me se John."

Ed said, "I sent Ellen over to your house She's with the kids."

She looked at him blankly and then sh said, "Thank you, Eddie. That—that's kin of Ellen."

She was silent; quiet once more. Ed go up. "I'll go over and see how things are. Tel John not to worry about the station. I'll kee things going until he's O.K. And he will be." Mary Froelick didn't answer and Ed said "Good night," and went out to the car.

Ellen opened the door of the Froelick house when he rang. She looked lovely in he green dress, silhouetted against the amber light in the hall. She put her finger to her lips. "They're asleep," she whispered.

From the dimness of the end of the hall Jack's voice asked, with an attempt at steadiness, "How's dad, Ed?"

Ed looked past Ellen, saw the shadowy pajamaed figure. "Going to be O.K., Jack. Engine block slipped and gave him a bad sock. But nothing that'll keep your old man down. He's not the kind."

"No," Jack said, his voice rising with quick-grasped relief. "Did mom come with you?"

"She's staying with John. He'll be O.K., but how about you and Georgie or Sorenson coming around after school and giving me a hand at the shop?"

"Can do," Jack said. "We'll be there 'Night, Ed. 'Night, Ellen."

They answered together, went into the living room. They sat down, alone in the room, almost alone, it seemed, in the house. Ed thought, Like we might be in our own house.

He met Ellen's wide gray eyes. He heard her whisper, "It—it could have been you, Ed."

He'd thought of that himself. He said, "It wasn't."

"But if ——"

Ed said softly, "Shut up, baby." He got up. "You going to stay? I don't think Mary's coming tonight."

"Yes," Ellen said. "I called home. Mom will come over in the morning and help while I'm at work."

"Swell," Ed said. He moved to the hall and Ellen went with him. At the door he turned and Ellen clung to him. "Oh, Ed, if ——"

He rested his cheek against her fragrant head. "Hey," he said, and put his fist against her cheek. He bent his head and her kiss was like a sigh.

It was two evenings later that Ed saw John Froelick. A period that had been work and thought, thought and work. He was spick-and-clean-scrubbed when he went into the semiprivate room. Mary was sitting at the far side of the bed. John, his ruddy face pale, was in the odd-looking, high bed, resting at an angle.

(Continued on Page 198)

Dramatic background for the bright beauty of your Heirloom* Sterling—linens that match your china. And fall leaves sparkling with sequins make dinner extra party ish!

"My economist husband says Heirloom Sterling is the better buy. You use it (and love it!) three times a day, every day, all your life. Because it's solid, beautiful silver . . . all the way through . . . it won't show wear. Not in a hundred years! In fact, the more you use Heirloom Sterling, the lovelier patina it gets. And seeing it always on your table tells your guests so much!"

You can possess this 6-piece Damask Rose place setting* for no more than one evening's entertainment might cost! Why not start with two newlywed place settings—add more later? Ask your jeweler, also, to show you Heiress*, Virginian*, and the new Mansion House* in Heirloom Sterling. Convenient payment terms, if you wish.

*Trade Mark. Copyright, 1948, Oneida, Ltd.

Heard about OUR "birth rate"?

Right next to the record number of new babies—put the record number of new telephones! We've added nine million to the total Bell "population" in the past three years alone.

That's nearly half the number of Bell telephones in use at the time we entered the war. And many of these new telephones belong to your friends, relatives, neighbors—to nurses, doctors, stores in your community.

That means more people you can call—more people who can call you. So there's a bigger world within reach of your telephone—one reason its value to you is bigger than ever.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES — BELL SYSTEM

(Continued from Page 196)

He said, "Hello, Ed. How—how's things?"

Ed stood beside the bed. "Swell." He took a paper from his pocket. "I made a report." He gave it to Mary. "You can read it to John later. We did all right."

John's eyes moved; his head moved and Mary said, "You've got to keep still, darling."

John said, "They're going to slap a cast on me, Eddie. They don't know how long I'll be in it, but I won't come out of it as good as before." His lips twisted. "I went out to gas a car. I forgot I hadn't finished checking the chains ——" He broke off. His hand moved and Mary's touched it. John's fingers tightened and some of the tenseness went from his face. He said, "I'll be no good ——"

Mary Froelick got up quickly. She leaned over. Her voice was fierce. "Don't you say that. You're you. No matter what, so long as you're with me it will be all right. You hear me?"

They seemed to have forgotten that Ed was in the room. It did not seem odd to him. It seemed right. He looked at them, his young face grave, and John said, "I won't be able to work. I'll have to sell the station, Mary."

Ed said, "Why, Sarge?" He spoke to them both. "I can keep it going until Jack's old enough and got know-how enough to run the business. Maybe you won't be able to get under and work on chassis and engines, but you can take care of the outside stuff and the paper work like you do." He said, "Here's how I see it, Sarge. The way we can make it bigger, make more money." He told them. Mary sat quietly, her eyes hardly ever leaving John's face.

John said, "It sounds good, Eddie. But where do you come in? You've got yourself to consider."

"Sure," Ed said. "I'll get my pay like now and I'll want half of the profit we make over what you made last year."

John said, "But if we don't ——"

"We will," Ed said. The confidence he felt was in his voice; the certainty. "We've got a swell spot. Riley's a shoo-in. I'll have to work; get the kids to help me, maybe get another mechanic, but I'm not afraid of work." He looked at Mary as he asked, "How about it, Sarge?"

Mary nodded, not taking her eyes from her husband, and John said, "You're a sucker, Ed, but thanks, kid. Thanks."

When the nurse came to turn them out Ed said, "I'll drive Mrs. Froelick home."

There were tiny, wet snowflakes touching their faces. Mary said nothing until they got to the house and Ellen opened the door. Then she spoke to Ellen. She said, "You've a good man, Ellen. As good almost as—as my John."

Ed told Ellen about it as he drove her to the McKees'. At the door he said, "I'm going in with you. I've something to say to your father."

Mr. McKee was beside the radio, his paper in his lap. Mrs. McKee was sewing. They both looked up as Ellen and Ed came in. Mrs. McKee asked, "How is he?" and Ed said:

"He'll be in a cast for a while, but he's going to be O.K." He felt very tired but very sure of himself, of what he had to say. "Mr. McKee, Ellen and I are going to be married."

Mr. McKee looked at him uncertainly, worried.

Ed said, "I know you're older, more experienced than I am. I respect you and the things you've said, but these last couple of days have made me see things from a different angle." He felt Ellen's warm hand steal into his and his clasp tightened, but he did not look at her. "Security," Ed said. "Security is something I guess everyone wants, but most people don't ever really have it and it's not what a guy like me needs, not when he's young like I am. It wouldn't do him any good. It would take away his ambition if he knew he didn't have to fight and work and—and sweat it out." He heard Ellen's indrawn breath. He said, "People like us have always had to fight for what we got, for what we want. Ellen and I are willing, but we want to do it together. Now. What happened to John might have happened to me. Anything could happen. It's the risk a guy takes by just being alive, but I want to take my risks with Ellen beside me. We hope it's all right with you and Mrs. McKee, but we're going to get married whether it is or not."

He stopped, trembling. Mr. McKee looked at Ed. There was a different look in his eyes. A sort of relief and respect.

It was Mrs. McKee who looked up from her sewing and spoke. She said, "Of course they are, Sam."

Mr. McKee got up. He came and put his hand on Ed's shoulder. He said, "I guess that's the best kind of security, after all, Ed. Knowing what you want and going after it. It's all right with me too. I'm glad it is."

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

ONE person in a house who is happy is worth several who try to make the rest happy.

My husband is really up against it; his daughters have grown into his shirts, his son into his pants.

Prices that once were appalling now seem appealing.

Acid test of a good husband: the alacrity with which he leaps to kill a moth.

It is easy in discipline to strike the note too hard.

A man Christmas-shops the way he drives into a gas station and says, "Fill her up!"

Praise a husband in public and he will live up to it in private.

Occasionally the Christmas spirit goes into reverse in our family when one of the children buys a gift for a friend and keeps it for himself.

Observation from a child: "I think it's perfectly wonderful that God put dogs together so they can wag their tails."

From the want ads: "Help! Future mother-in-law needs small, unfurnished apartment."

Do you ever catch yourself making more noise telling the children to be quiet than they were making in the first place?

A wife received the following alarming message from her husband, away on vacation: "Having fine time. Wish you were her."

Show me the child who has been taught to distinguish between caution and fear and I will show you a potentially well-balanced adult.

A lonely man is one who buys himself a necktie the day after Christmas.

It's the hustling, pickling, preserving, eternal-housekeeping kind of woman who often has a daughter that dreams over the dishes and hides a book under a dustcloth.

"The trouble with you" said a judge, fining an inveterate shoplifter, "is you take things seriously."

Rich man: one who can afford to have the lights turned on in only one room.

The melody of Christmas lingers long at our house. When other families begin to talk about putting in a garden we begin to talk about taking down the Christmas tree.

Jitterbugging: a dance that is foot-loose and fanny free.

Printed in U. S. A.